A provision that the insured should not transfer his interest in the property does not apply to a case in which the insured let the property for one year and continued himself to pay the premium on the policy. Ib.

Action by Policy-holder—Condition Precedent—Waiver by Course of Conduct.]—It was a condition of a fire insurance policy that the loss should not become payable until sixty days after notice, ascertainment, estimate, and satisfactory proof of the loss had been received by the company, and that a magistrate or notary public should, if the company required it, certify that he had examined the circumstances and believed the insured had honestly sustained the loss as appraised. The plaintiffs, having suffered losses by fire, served notice of a claim on the insurance company and appointed an adjuster with the assent of the company to ascertain the loss. A full report of the adjustment having been sent to the company, a long correspondence ensued, and ultimately the company asked to be supplied with a certificate of a magistrate or notary public, and, further, they said that if that information, in their opinion, was insufficient, they would require the loss to be ascertained by disinterested appraisers. In an action brought by the plaintiffs to recover their losses as ascertained by the adjuster :—Held, that the defendant company had by their conduct waived their right to insist on the above stipulations in the policy as a condition precedent to the plaintiffs' right of action. Toronto Railway v. National British and Irish Millers Insurance Co., 111 L. Mortgage—Premises Destroyed by Fire—Right to have Insurance Money Applied in Rebuilding.]—Section 83 of the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774, which authorises and requires insurance offices, upon the request of any person or persons interested in or entitled to any house which may be burnt down, to cause the insurance money to be laid out and expended towards rebuilding, reinstating, or repairing such house, is, notwithstanding the doubt expressed by Lord Watson in Westminster Fire Office v. Glasgow Provident Investment Society (13 App. Cas. 699, 716), of general as opposed to local application. Gorely, Ex parte; Barker, in re (34 L. The same section, notwithstanding the doubt expressed by Lord Selborne in Westminster Fire Office v. Glasgow Provident Investment Society (supra) applies as between mortgagor and mortgagee, and a mortgagee may, therefore, under the section, require the money to be spent in rebuilding, &c. Ib.

"Insurance effected under the mortgage deed."]—Where a mortgagor covenants in a mortgage deed to insure and keep insured the mortgaged property, and such property is already prior to the date of the mortgage insured by a yearly policy, and subsequent to the mortgage the mortgagor renews the policy in the ordinary course at the date when renewal becomes due, the policy is "an insurance effected under the mortgage deed" within the meaning of section 23, sub-section 3 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881. Ib.

I. GUARANTEE.

Fidelity—Policies Covering Loss by Defalcations of Employees—Two Policies—Loss—Contribution between Insurers.]—The plaintiffs, an American insurance company, issued a policy by which they covenanted to pay an American bank for any loss or damage occasioned by the dishonesty of any of the employees according to an amount appended to each name in a schedule. Among the employees guaranteed was one K., who was guaranteed up to 2,500 dollars. The bank also took out a policy at Lloyd's for 40,000*l.*, by which the underwriters were to be liable for loss caused by the dishonesty of employees, and also for loss sustained by the loss or destruction on the owners' premises of bonds, banknotes, &c., owing to fire or burglary. K.

made defalcations to the extent of 2,680 dollars, and the bank claimed from the plaintiffs the full amount of the insurance—namely, 2,500 dollars, leaving a balance of 180 dollars. The bank claimed 180 dollars on the Lloyd's policy, which was paid. The present action was brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant, who was one of the underwriters on the Lloyd's policy, for contribution in respect of the loss:—Held, first, that the case was governed by English law; and secondly, that the defendant was liable to pay a proportion of the whole loss of 2,680 dollars in the ratio of 2,680 to 2,500. American Surety Co. v. Wrightson, 103 L. —— Employee Insured "from issuance" of Policy.]—The plaintiffs, who carried on business in various towns, including Paris, requested the defendants to issue a bond guaranteeing the plaintiffs against loss through the dishonesty of L., their Paris manager. On the application form the plaintiffs, in answer to the question "From what date is it [the bond] to be in force and for what amount?" answered thus: "From issuance, 1,000*l*." On March 7, 1912, the rate of premium was arranged, and on March 8 the bond was drawn up and executed at the defendants' London office. It recited that in consideration of the premium paid to the defendants they agreed to reimburse the plaintiffs for any loss they might sustain by the larceny or embezzlement of L. "during the period from March 8, 1912, to March 7, 1913." The premium had not then been paid, nor by the terms of the bond was its payment a condition precedent to liability upon the bond. The bond was forwarded the same day to the defendants' French agents, who on March 9 sent it to the plaintiffs' Paris office; it was, however, returned to the agents with a request that they should deliver it at the plaintiffs' London office, and this was done on March 18, with a request for a cheque for the premium. The plaintiffs' London manager was then absent, and it was finally arranged that the matter should stand over till his return. On April 13 L. left his office in Paris, and by April 18 the plaintiffs were in a state of suspicion about him, although not sure that his absence was incapable of a satisfactory explanation. On that day the plaintiffs' London manager returned, and on being informed of the facts paid the premium to the defendants and obtained the bond from them. A few days later, the plaintiffs discovered defalcations by L., and made a claim on the bond, but the defendants repudiated liability on the ground that the contract was not complete till April 18, and that there had been concealment of material facts:—Held (A. T. Lawrence, J., dissenting), that at the date of L.'s defalcations the plaintiffs were not covered. Allis Chalmers Co. v. Fidelity and Deposit Co. of Maryland, 111 L. T. 327; 30 T. L. —— Liability to Reimburse Assured for Loss by Larceny or Embezzlement — Meaning of "embezzlement."]—By a fidelity policy the defendants undertook to reimburse the assured in respect of loss sustained by any act of larceny or embezzlement upon the part of their employee:—Held, that the word "embezzlement" in the policy is to be construed in the same way as it would be construed when used in an indictment. Debenhams, Lim. v. Excess Insurance Co., 28 T. Guarantee of Debenture Issue — Re-insurance of Risk — Suretyship — Indemnity — Liquidation of Insurer—Measure of Liability of Re-insurer—Whether Amount Proved for or Dividend Actually Paid in Liquidation.]—On the issue of debentures by a firm a contract in the form of a memorandum at the end of each debenture was entered into between the debenture-holders and an insurance society, by which the society guaranteed to the debenture-holders, in case the firm should make default, payment of the principal and interest to become due under the debentures, the events in which the society was to be liable to pay not being in all respects the same as those in which the firm was liable. Subsequently, a contract, also in the form of a memorandum added to each debenture, was entered into between the society and an insurance company which, in consideration of a premium, provided that the company guaranteed the society to the extent of two-elevenths of the risk assured by, and subject to the conditions of, the within policy of debenture insurance (meaning the contract first above mentioned), and also the like proportion of all costs and expenses incurred by the society, with the consent of the guarantors in respect of any claim under the within policy. The debentures of the firm became enforceable, and the risk which the society had guaranteed became a claim against the society. The society then went into liquidation, and a proof for the claim of the debenture-holders, so far as unsatisfied by the assets of the firm, was admitted:—Held, that, whether the above contracts were contracts of insurance or of indemnity, the company was liable to the liquidators of the society for two-elevenths of the entire claim for which the proof of the debenture-holders had been admitted in the liquidation, and not merely for two-elevenths of the dividend which the estate of the society would be able actually to pay to the debenture-holders. Held, further, that the above contracts were contracts of insurance rather than contracts of indemnity or guarantee. Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society, In re (No. 2), 84 L. Debentures — Liquidation of Guarantee Society — Re-insurance — Debenture-holder's Rights of Indemnity — Fiduciary Relationship.] — Where certain assets of a brewery company were mortgaged to a guarantee society as trustees for the debenture-holders, and the guarantee society re-insured the debentures with other companies, on an application by the debenture-holders for a declaration that they were entitled to the benefit of all the re-insurances,—Held, that the society were under no fiduciary relation to the debenture-holders in respect of the money resulting from the re-insurances, and that it accordingly formed part of the general assets of the society. Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society, In re; Godson's Claim, 84 L. Mortgage Insurance—Condition—Building Society — Liquidation — Assignment by Liquidator without Consent of Insurers — Transfer by Operation of Law.]—A building society, which was registered under the Building Societies Acts, lent a sum of money upon mortgage and insured repayment of the loan. The policy of insurance contained a clause providing that the policy should cease to be in force if the whole or any part of the interest of the insured in the mortgage debt or mortgaged property or any part thereof should pass from the insured otherwise than by will or operation of law, unless notice in writing should be given to the insurers, and the insurance should be declared to be continued to a successor in interest by a memorandum made on the policy by them; and the expression "the insured" was declared to include a successor in interest to whom the insurance should be so declared to be or be otherwise continued. The building society was ordered to be wound up by the Court, and the official receiver, as liquidator, gave notice to the insurers of his intention to assign the mortgage together with the policy; the insurers claimed the right to refuse their consent:—Held, that, upon the true construction of the condition referred to, the insurers could not withhold their consent to an assignment after receipt of notice thereof; and further, that the official receiver being under an obligation to assign, the policy would pass to the assignee by operation of law, and that therefore the consent of the insurers was not required. *Doe d. Insurance of Performance of Executory Contract—Release of Insurers by Failure to Notify Breaches of Contract.] — A firm of contractors were employed to lay certain water pipes, and, as required by their employers, they obtained from an insurance company a policy insuring the employers against loss arising out of failure duly to complete the work. The policy contained a clause declaring that it was executed "upon the following express conditions, which shall be conditions precedent to the right of the employer to recover hereunder." The first of these conditions was: "The surety shall be notified in writing of any non-performance or non-observance on the part of the contractors of any of the stipulations or provisions contained in the said contract, and on their part to be performed and observed, which may involve a loss for which the surety is responsible hereunder." The pipe-laying contract contained stipulations that the work should be commenced on a specified date, that a certain length of pipes should be laid each week, and that the whole work should be completed within eleven months. The contractors did not commence the work until long after the stipulated date, and during the progress of the work they fell more and more heavily behind the stipulated time-table, but no notices of these breaches of the provisions of the contract were sent to the insurance company. After working for twelve months only about half the contract was completed. Shortly afterwards the contractors became bankrupt, and the employers took over the work and completed it themselves at considerable loss. In an action by them against the insurance company for recovery of the sum so lost,—Held (The Lord President dissenting), that as the delays by the contractors were non-observance of stipulations of the contract which might reasonably involve the insurance company in loss, the employers were bound to give notice of them, and that, as they had failed to do so, they were in breach of a condition precedent to their right of recovery under the insurance policy. Held, therefore, that the defenders were not liable. Clydebank and District Water Trustees v. Fidelity and Deposit Co. of Maryland, [1915] S. Workmen's Compensation — Employee of Company — Company in Liquidation.] — An employee of a colliery company, which had taken out a policy indemnifying it against all sums payable under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, met with an accident permanently injuring him in a mine on August 28, 1910. On December 20, 1910, the assurance company went into liquidation. The colliery company went into liquidation in February, 1912. The employee claimed the value of an annuity of 46*l.* per annum, 979*l.* The liquidator admitted the claim as to 697*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.*, deducting 54*l.* paid by the colliery company before it went into liquidation from 751*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.* the value of the annuity after deducting 25 per cent. in accordance with the Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 49), s. 17, which enacts that where an assurance company is being wound up the value of the policy shall be estimated as provided by the Sixth Schedule, and in the Sixth Schedule (D) as respects employers' liability policies provides for the purchase of an annuity equal to 75 per cent. of the annual value of the weekly payment. The question was whether the workman was entitled to the full value of the annuity as from the date when the colliery company went into liquidation, or whether he was only entitled to 75 per cent. from the date the assurance company went into liquidation :—Held, that the liability of the assurance company must be ascertained at the date it went into liquidation, and that the deduction of 25 per cent. was right, but that the deduction of the 54*l.* was wrong. Law Car and General Insurance Corporation, In re, 110 L. —— Policy against Claims — Condition — Assured to Give Notice of Claims — Request for Arbitration.] — A policy of insurance against claims arising under the Workmen's Compensation Act provided that the assured should forward to the insurance company every notice of claim. A notice of claim accompanied by a request for arbitration was sent to the assured, who forwarded the notice of claim, but not the request for arbitration. The company resisted liability on the ground that the assured had not forwarded every notice of claim :—Held, that the request for arbitration was only a step in the proceedings to obtain an award and was not a notice of claim. Wilkinson and Car and General Insurance Corporation, In re, 110 L. T. 468; 58 S. J. 233—C.A.

II. PLATE GLASS.

Perils—"Civil commotion or rioting"—Windows Broken by Suffragists — Payment under Former Policy—Estoppel.]—The plaintiffs, a plate-glass insurance company, took out a policy of re-insurance with the defendants, who were underwriters at Lloyd's, by which the defendants bound themselves to make good to the plaintiffs such loss as the plaintiffs might sustain from damage to plate glass "caused directly by or arising from civil commotion or rioting." In the course of an agitation for obtaining the political franchise for women known as the militant suffragette movement some of the windows insured by the plaintiffs were broken, and the plaintiffs having paid for the damage to these windows brought an action against the defendants on the re-insurance policy. It was proved in evidence that some hundreds of women appeared simultaneously in various streets in London armed with hammers, and broke a large number of plate-glass windows, including those in question; that in each case a woman going alone and without assistance broke one or more windows; that a crowd then collected and looked at the window without taking any further part in the proceedings; that the woman was arrested without resistance or attempt at rescue, and was convicted only of doing malicious damage; and it was admitted that there might have been co-operation among the women in the sense that they had all agreed to break the windows at the same time. It was further proved that under a previous re-insurance policy in the same terms the defendants had paid the plaintiffs in respect of a loss similarly caused :—Held, first, that there was no evidence to go to the jury that the windows had been broken by "civil commotion" or "rioting" within the meaning of the policy; secondly, that proof of the payment under the previous policy was not evidence to shew that the defendants had intended that the expression "civil commotion" in the re-insurance policy sued on had a meaning sufficiently wide to include such a disturbance as that in question, or to estop the defendants from denying that they had intended that it should have such a meaning. London and Manchester Plate-Glass Insurance Co. v. Heath, 82 L. III. BURGLARY.

Exception—Theft by Member of Assured's Business Staff—Accessory before the Fact—Principal in the Second Degree.]—The plaintiffs effected a Lloyd's burglary insurance policy with the defendants, by which the plaintiffs were insured against loss by theft or robbery or burglary of the property therein specified. There was a proviso that there should be no claim on the policy for loss by theft by members of the assured's business staff. A porter in the plaintiff's employ, having, in pursuance of a previously concocted scheme, admitted a member of a gang of thieves into the premises, a quantity of jewellery belonging to the plaintiffs was stolen. The porter took no part in the actual robbery and was not present at the time, but he afterwards received a share of the proceeds :—Held, that the porter was a principal in the second degree, and not (as Walton, J., had held) an accessory before the fact to the theft, and that he was actually guilty of the substantive crime of theft under section 2 of the Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861, and that the case therefore fell within the terms of the proviso, and the defendants were not liable upon the policy. Cornwall's Case (2 Str. 881) applied. Saqui & Lawrence v. Stearns, 80 L. Banker's Policy — Construction — "Coin . . . in or upon their own premises . . . taken out of their possession or control by any fraudulent means"—Forged Promissory Notes Discounted for Customer — Money Realised Subsequently Drawn by Customer's Cheques.]—Under a policy dated March 16, 1913, a bank insured for twelve months against loss occasioned to them "by reason of any . . . currency, coin, or other similar securities . . . which during the said period of twelve months may be in or upon their own premises, . . . being (while so in or upon such premises . . .) lost, destroyed, or otherwise made away with by robbery, theft, fire, embezzlement, burglary or abstraction, or taken out of their possession or control by any fradulent means." A company having opened an account with the bank, the bank discounted five promissory notes for the company, on a representation that they were drawn by customers of the company in payment of amounts due to them, and credited the amount of the notes, less discount, to the company's current account. The whole amount was drawn out by the company by cheques on the account honoured by the bank. The bank subsequently discovered that the notes were forgeries and worthless :—Held, that the loss so occasioned to the bank was not recoverable, under the terms of the policy, from the underwriters. Century Bank of New York v. Young, 84 L. Motor Car—Refusal to Renew—Disclosure to Agent—Absence of Collusion—Validity of Policy.]—The plaintiff insured a motor car with an insurance company, but the company refused to renew the insurance, and he mentioned this fact to an agent of the defendants, another insurance company. The defendants' agent offered to propose him to the defendants, and the plaintiff, on receiving a proposal form, with the question whether any company had refused to renew his insurance, spoke about it to the defendants' agent, who replied that he would make it all right. The plaintiff did not fill in any answer to the question. The company accepted the proposal, and afterwards agreed that it should cover a new Vauxhall car. Subsequently the plaintiff insured a Siddeley car with the defendants, and they had notice that the plaintiff had had a previous insurance, but the spaces for answers to the questions on the proposal form were left blank. Accidents occurred to both cars, and the defendants refused to pay on the ground that the plaintiff had originally represented that no insurance company had refused to renew. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendants for a declaration that the policies on the Vauxhall and Siddeley cars were valid. There was no evidence of any collusion between the plaintiff and the defendants' agent :—Held, that, as the plaintiff had made full disclosure to the defendants' agent, and as there was no evidence of collusion, the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration. Thornton-Smith v. Motor Union Insurance Co., 30 T. War Risks Policy for Three Months—Loss of or Damage to Timber at Antwerp Caused "by war . . . military or usurped power"—Occupation of Antwerp by German Army during Currency of Policy—Assured Unable to Deal with Timber—Timber Intact at Expiration of Policy.] — The plaintiffs, who were a Japanese company carrying on business in London and also at Antwerp, were insured by a non-marine Lloyd's policy for a period of three months from August 4, 1914, "against loss of or damage to timber at Antwerp directly caused by . . . war . . . military or usurped power." The policy also provided that no claim was to attach for delay or loss of market. The city of Antwerp was occupied by the German Army on October 9, 1914, during the currency of the policy, and the plaintiffs were unable to deal with the timber or to sell it, and it remained under the custody and control of the plaintiffs' agent in the same warehouse at Antwerp as that in which it was stored when the policy was taken out. On November 3, 1914, when the policy expired, the timber was still intact, although there was considerable risk that the Germans might seize it for military purposes, giving receipts for it of doubtful value. The plaintiffs sued one of the underwriters on the policy, alleging that the timber had become a total and/or a constructive total loss, and that they had given notice of abandonment :—Held, that, although there cannot be a constructive loss under a policy which is not a policy of marine insurance, yet the Court, in considering whether there has been a loss under such a policy, will take into account considerations similar to those which would be taken into account in determining a question of constructive total loss under a policy of marine insurance. Mitsui & Co. v. Mumford, 84 L. J. K.B. 514; [1915] 2 K.B. 27; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 169; 112 L. T. 556; 20 Com. Cas. 107; 59 S. J. 189; 31 T. L. R. 144—Bailhache, J.

Held, further, that the fact that Antwerp had become alien territory through its occupation by the Germans, and that the plaintiffs were in consequence forbidden to have any business relations with people in Antwerp, did not constitute a loss of the timber within the policy, and that, as the timber had not in fact been seized by the Germans during the currency of the policy, the actions failed. Ib.

Re-insurance—Guarantee of Issue of Debentures—Nature of Risk—Default of Company—Deficiency in Security—Realisation at Discretion of Insurer.]—In 1903 the plaintiffs and defendants entered into a contract under which the defendants agreed to accept in re-insurance 50 per cent. of risks, which the plaintiffs agreed to re-insure, arising (among other things) under debenture guarantees given by the plaintiffs. The defendants' liability was to commence simultaneously with that of the plaintiffs and follow it in every case. In 1904 the plaintiffs guaranteed an issue of 4½ per cent. debentures made by R. & Co. The principal of the debentures was to become due on winding up. The plaintiffs guaranteed the payment of interest if R. & Co. made default, and also the principal. The debentures were secured by a trust deed, of which the plaintiffs were trustee. The security was to become enforceable on R. & Co.'s default in respect of principal or interest, or on their winding up. The security was then to be realised at the trustee's discretion, with a power to postpone realisation, the power to effect which was to be regarded as conferred not only for the benefit of the debenture-holders, but for the trustee's protection and benefit as guarantor of the debentures. The plaintiffs re-insured this risk as to two-thirteenths with the defendants. In 1909 the plaintiffs went into liquidation; and under a scheme of arrangement sanctioned by the Court the interest secured by the debentures was to be payable at the rate of 3 per cent. only; the securities for the debentures were to be realised under the direction of the Court; and the debenture-holders were placed in the position of secured creditors. In 1911 R. & Co. went into liquidation, and made default in payment of interest:—Held, that the risk insured by the plaintiffs was the default of R. & Co. in paying principal and interest under the debentures, and not a deficiency in the security for the debenture-holders; that the risk had therefore become a claim; and that there had been no such alteration of the risk by reason of the liquidation of the plaintiffs and the scheme of arrangement as to relieve the defendants from their liability as re-insurers, even if the risk had been a deficiency in the security. Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society v. Munich Re-insurance Co., 81 L. —— Whether Creating Fiduciary Relationship—What Risks Included—Liability of Re-insurers.]—In November, 1897, a guarantee society granted a policy of insurance of a mortgage on a public house. By a treaty of re-insurance made in June, 1898, between the guarantee society and a re-insurance company, and fixed to commence from May 16, 1898, the company agreed, subject to certain stipulations, to re-insure certain risks, including those under mortgage insurance policies. The liability of the company was to commence simultaneously with that of the society, provided that advice of the issue of fresh policies or cover notes was dispatched to the company within a certain time, it being, however, agreed that if through inadvertence re-insurance was omitted the company would, on certain conditions, hold the society covered for twelve months. Notification of re-insurances was to be forwarded to the company on a certain form at least once a week, and notification of renewals was to be forwarded to the company on a similar form. In November, 1901, the original mortgagors of the public house were released and a fresh mortgage to the same mortgagees was executed by a new mortgagor, there being several variations in the new as compared with the old mortgage, and a fresh policy of insurance of the new mortgage was granted by the society. Re-insurance of the new policy was effected by the society with the company, but all material facts relating to the risk were not disclosed by the society to the company. In 1908 the mortgagees called in their mortgage and the society became liable to make a payment under the policy. In the following year the company repudiated liability to the society:—Held, on a case stated in an arbitration between the society and the company, that the re-insurance treaty was a contract of indemnity only, and did not create a fiduciary relationship between the parties, that the right of the society to call for an indemnity did not include risks undertaken before the date fixed for the commencement of the contract, but that the substance of the insurance of November, 1901, was not the same as that of the insurance of November, 1897, and that therefore the company was liable under the treaty to pay their quota of the loss due from the society to the insured. Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society v. Munich Re-insurance Co., 31 T. I. CARRYING ON LIFE ASSURANCE BUSINESS.

Memorandum of Association—Life Assurance—Policies in Relation to Life Ultra Vires.]—A limited company, which, by its memorandum of association was prohibited from carrying on the business of life insurance, issued policies in two different forms. By one of these policies it undertook in consideration of a certain weekly premium to pay the policy-holder the respective sums of 6*l.*, 7*l.* 10*s.*, and 9*l.* at the end of five, ten, and fifteen years respectively; but, in the event of his death before the end of the fifteen years, all premiums paid since the last payment made by the company were to be returned to his personal representatives. By the second policy it undertook, in consideration of a certain premium, to pay the policy-holder a certain sum at the termination of a certain number of years; but, in the event of his death before the end of the term, a certain percentage of the premiums already actually paid was to be returned to his personal representatives:—Held, that policies made in either of these two forms were policies of life insurance, and therefore, as such, ultra vires the company. Joseph v. Law Integrity Insurance Co., 82 L. J. Ch. 187; [1912] 2 Ch. 581; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 337; 107 L. T. 538; 20 Manson, 85—C.A.

Industrial Society—Sums Payable to Members on Death—Proportion of Average Purchases—Life Assurance Business—"Policy of life assurance."] — The defendants, an industrial and provident society registered under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1876, in 1911 amended their rules so as to provide that they should have power to carry on the business of insurance under rule 14A, which empowered the committee of management to invest or appropriate out of investments or from the profits of the business "a fund for insuring the building, fixtures, and stock against losses by fire or otherwise, also for providing a sum to be paid on the death of a member, or the wife or husband of a member, such sum to be proportioned to one year's average purchases of the member from the society during the three years immediately preceding death." After the adoption of this rule the society advertised "free life insurance" and that it paid 4*s.* in the pound on the average twelve months' purchases on the death of a member or husband of a member, and 2*s.* in the pound on the death of a married woman member or wife of a member, and sums were in fact paid on the deaths of members and of the husbands and wives of members. The plaintiff, a member of the society, brought an action alleging that the society was carrying on life insurance business and was an assurance company within the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, and that the business was ultra vires, and in any case could not be carried on without a deposit of 20,000*l.* in accordance with the Act, and he asked for an injunction to restrain the society from so doing. Members of the society received share books, membership cards, purchase books, and copies of rules of the society: —Held (Phillimore, L.J., dissenting), that the society was not carrying on life assurance business within the Assurance Companies Act, 1909. The membership cards or other documents received by members did not constitute policies of assurance within the Act, which, by section 30 (a) provides that a "policy on human life" means "any instrument by which the payment of money is assured on death . . . or any instrument evidencing a contract which is subject to payment of premiums for a term dependent on human life." Hampton v. Torteth Co-operative Society, 84 L. J. Ch. 633; [1915] 1 Ch. 721; 113 L. T. 62; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 488; 59 S. J. 397; 31 T. L. R. 314—C.A.

II. TRANSFER OF BUSINESS.

Competency of Application for Sanction to Proposed Transfer.] — The directors of an insurance company, which was conducting (inter alia) an unprofitable life insurance business, and which had power under its memorandum and articles of association to sell or dispose of the business and property of the company or any part thereof in consideration of payments in cash, or such other considerations as the directors might deem proper, entered into an agreement with another company, of greater financial stability, in terms of which the life policies of the former company were to be cancelled and policies of the latter company, on terms generally similar to those of the cancelled policies, were to be issued in lieu thereof. Non-profit policies were to be issued in lieu of cancelled profit-bearing policies, but the holders of such policies had the option of obtaining profit-bearing policies of the new company at an increased premium, and an actuary reported that the future bonus prospects of such insured would be greatly improved under the new policies. None of the policy-holders objected to the proposed transfer. In a petition under section 13 of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, for sanction of this arrangement, presented in name of the company,—Held, first (dub. Lord Johnston), that the petition had been competently presented although it was in the name of the company and not of the directors; and secondly (diss. Lord Johnston), that the proposed arrangement, although it involved the cancelling of the old policies and the issuing of new policies, was a transfer of business within the meaning of section 13; and, further, that under the articles of the company it was within the powers of the directors to enter into such an arrangement. Empire Guarantee and Insurance Corporation, In re, [1911] S. C. 1296—Ct. of Sess.

Sale of Business of Insurance Company — Specific Performance — Failure to Deliver — Deposit under Assurance Companies Act, 1909.]—The respondent company agreed to sell their business to the appellant company, including a sum of 20,000*l.* deposited with the Paymaster-General under the provisions of section 2 of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, as a condition of carrying on employers' liability insurance business:—Held, that such deposit could only be transferred subject to the outstanding liabilities on policies issued by the respondents in respect of employers' liability insurance business, and that the respondents were entitled to specific performance of the contract, although they could not give a clean transfer of the 20,000*l.* deposit. United London and Scottish Insurance Co. v. Omnium Insurance Corporation, 84 L. J. Ch. 777—H.L. (E.)

Judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed. Ib.

Dispensing with Notice to Policy-holders.]—On an amalgamation or transfer under the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 13, the Court will, where the policies are very numerous and of small value, dispense with the statutory notice to small policy-holders, but this will only be done where other steps are taken to inform the policy-holders of the proposed arrangement, and to give them an opportunity of objecting to the same. Hearts of Oak Assurance Co., In re (No. 1), 58 S. J. 433—Eve, J.

Petition—Absence of Opposition—Duty of Court.]—Under section 13 of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, the Court has the duty of considering objections to the transfer of one assurance company to another, whether there is or is not any opposition to the petition for a transfer. Hearts of Oak Assurance Co., In re (No. 2), 30 T. L. R. 436—Eve, J.

"Subsidiary company."] — The fact that one assurance company has acquired a controlling interest in another assurance company by the purchase of shares in that other company, and that the two companies have entered into agreements for the guaranteeing of each other's policies and for mutual re-insurance, does not amount to a transfer of assurance business so as to constitute one company a subsidiary company and the other a principal company within section 16 of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909. Lancashire Plate-Glass Fire, and Burglary Insurance Co., In re, 81 L. J. Ch. 199; [1912] 1 Ch. 35; 105 L. T. 570; 19 Manson, 149; 56 S. J. 13—Swinfen Eady, J.

III. DEPOSIT.

Application for Payment of Dividends—Summons or Petition.]—An application for payment of dividends on the deposit paid into Court, under the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1909, and the Board of Trade Order, 1910, rules 2-4, may be made by summons under Order LV. rule 2 (3) of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, and need not be made by petition. Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation, In re ([1910] W. N. 211) not followed. New York Life Assurance, In re, 60 S. J. 106—Sargant, J.

IV. WINDING-UP.

Creditors—Policy-holder.]—A Scottish insurance company, carrying on employers' liability insurance and other classes of insurance business, entered into a contract of re-insurance with a Welsh insurance company whereby it undertook, in consideration of a percentage of the premiums, to relieve the Welsh company of claims arising under its employers' liability insurance policies. The Scottish company having gone into liquidation at a date when it was indebted, under the re-insurance contract, to the Welsh company in certain sums, the latter company claimed to be ranked in respect of these sums on the employers' liability fund of the Scottish company along with its direct policy-holders: —Held, first, that section 3 of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, did not give a preference on the separate fund of a particular class of business to the policy-holders over the ordinary creditors of the company having claims in connection with that class of business; and secondly, that the Welsh company as a creditor of the Scottish company in its employers' liability insurance business, was accordingly entitled to be ranked, along with the direct policy-holders, on that company's employers' liability fund. Glasgow Assurance Corporation (Liquidators) v. Welsh Insurance Corporation, [1914] S. C. 320—Ct. of Sess.

Whether the Welsh company was a "policyholder" of the Scottish company within the meaning of the Act, quære. Ib.

Employers' Liability Policies — Liabilities "requiring to be valued" — Date at which Valuation to be Ascertained.] — Employers were insured against workmen's compensation risks with an insurance company which went into liquidation. At the date of the liquidation the employers were making weekly payments to two of their workmen, who had been injured. After the date of the liquidation, but before they had lodged a claim for a ranking, they compromised these weekly payments for a lump sum. Thereafter they lodged a claim for a ranking for a sum made up according to the Rules in the Schedule to the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, for valuing weekly payments. That sum was greatly in excess of the amount actually paid by them to compromise the workman's claims. They maintained, however, that the valuation of the liability under the policy fell to be made as at the date of liquidation, and was unaffected by the subsequent compromise of the weekly payments. The Court rejected the claim, holding that the provisions of the Assurance Companies Act did not apply in respect that the date when the valuation fell to be made was the date of the claim, and that, as the value of the weekly payments had de facto been ascertained at that date, there was no liability "requiring to be valued." Empire Guarantee and Insurance Corporation (Liquidators) v. Owen & Sons, Lim., [1915] S. C. 985—Ct. of Sess.

Contributories—Mutual Insurance Policies — Fixed Premium Policies — Liabilities of Policy-holders.]—Held, on the construction of the P. Underwriting Association's memorandum, that the liability of holders of mutual insurance policies issued by the association was limited to 5*l.* in respect of each policy. Held, further, that the association could validly issue fixed-premium policies, but that the holders of these policies had not by taking them out thereby agreed to become members of the association, and therefore that they were not properly put on the list of contributories in the winding-up of the association. Corfield v. Buchanan, 29 T. L. R. 258—H.L. (E.)

Life Assurance Deposit—Priorities—Claim of Fire and Accident Policy-holders.]—In the winding-up of an insurance company transacting life assurance and other business,—Held, that the holders of fire and accident policies had no claim upon the statutory deposit of 20,000*l.* made in respect of the life assurance business in priority to the claims of general creditors. British Union and National Insurance Co., In re, 83 L. J. Ch. 596; [1914] 1 Ch. 724; 21 Manson, 297; 30 T. L. R. 290—Astbury, J.

Annuity Granted to Manager of Life Department in Compromise of Claim for Damages—Claim of Annuitant.]—The company by deed had agreed to pay an annuity to a former manager of their life department in satisfaction of a claim for breach of contract to employ:—Held, that the manager was an "annuitant" within the meaning of section 30 (b) of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, and could claim priority for his annuity out of the statutory deposit as a life policyholder over the general creditors. British Union and National Insurance Co., In re, 83 L. J. Ch. 596; [1914] 2 Ch. 77; 111 L. T. 357; 21 Manson, 297; 30 T. L. R. 520—C.A.

INTEREST.

Claim for Sum Certain—Set-off.]—A claim may be for a "sum certain" within the meaning of section 28 of the Civil Procedure Act, 1833, upon which interest may be claimed, notwithstanding that a set-off is pleaded which may cause a reduction in the amount which may finally be found due to the plaintiff. Alexandra Docks and Railway Co. v. Taff Vale Railway, 28 T. Indian Native Prince—Extra-territoriality—Status of Sovereign.]—The native princes of India, falling within the class referred to in section 18, sub-section 5 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, though not independent, but subject to the suzerainty of his Majesty, are reigning sovereigns to the extent that they are immune from the jurisdiction of an English Court. An Indian prince, coming within this category and sued as co-respondent in a suit for divorce, was on his application struck out of the proceedings. Statham v. Statham, 81 L. J. Diplomatic Privilege—Waiver.]—A foreign diplomatist is, by common law and statute, absolutely exempt from the jurisdiction of the English Courts. If the decision in Taylor v. Best (23 L. J. C.P. 89; 14 C. B. 487) can be maintained, and it is sought to shew that he has waived his privilege, the waiver must be strictly proved, and it must also be shewn that he had at the time of the alleged waiver a full knowledge of his privileged position and a desire to waive it. Further, the privilege being that of the sovereign State which he represents, it is doubtful if a diplomatist can waive his right to exemption and submit himself to the jurisdiction of the English Courts without first obtaining the sanction of his own Government. Republic of Bolivia Exploration Syndicate, Lim., In re (No. 1), 83 L. 1. Marriage.

English Suit for Restitution of Conjugal Rights—English Marriage—Parties Resident and Domiciled Abroad—Foreign Court—Decree of Nullity—Jurisdiction of English Court.]—Where a marriage has been celebrated in England between two persons, neither of whom has ever possessed a domicil or a residence in England, the English Court has no power, in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, to serve the citation and petition upon the respondent abroad or to grant a decree of restitution, or to entertain a suit for a declaration that the marriage is valid. De Gasquet James (Countess) v. Mecklenburg-Schwerin (Duke), 83 L. J. P. 40; [1914] P. 53; 110 L. T. 121; 58 S. J. 341; 30 T. L. R. 329—Evans, P.

The principle of the decision in De Gasquet James (Countess) v. Mecklenburg-Schwerin (Duke) (83 L. J. P. 40; [1914] P. 53), negativing power in the Court to order service of process out of the jurisdiction in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, is restricted to the case of a respondent not domiciled or resident in England at the time of the institution of the suit, or, semble, who had not a matrimonial home in England at the date when cohabitation ceased. Where it appears from the petition that the parties were domiciled in England at the time of the institution of the suit, or that they had a matrimonial home in England at the date when cohabitation ceased, or that they were both resident in England at the time of the institution of the suit, the petition and citation may be served either within or without His Majesty's dominions, and in any event a decree for restitution of conjugal rights may be so served if made in a suit which there was jurisdiction to entertain. Additional Divorce Rules 221 and 222 will regulate the practice so laid down. Perrin v. Perrin; Powell v. Powell, 83 L. J. P. 69; [1914] P. 135; 111 L. T. 335; 30 T. L. R. 497—Evans, P.

2. Marriage Settlement.

Scottish Law—Scottish Domicil—English Settlement — Husband's Contract as to Separate Property—After-acquired Property Clause—Jus Relicti and Legitim—Contract "Affected."]—An Englishwoman married to a domiciled Scotchman made a will by which she disposed, to the complete exclusion of her husband and their only child, of all her movable property, consisting of savings out of the income of movable property to which she was entitled for life for her separate use without power of anticipation—(a) under an antenuptial settlement made by her father in English form (her husband being a party and covenanting to settle in like manner her after-acquired property, with a trust for its conversion in common form), and (b) under the wills of third parties. The husband and child having claimed the jus relicti and legitim given to surviving husbands and children by sections 6 and 7 of the Married Women's Property (Scotland) Act, 1881,—Held, that the settlement, construed as it must be according to English law, amounted to a contract by the husband, binding on him and on the issue, that the wife should have a power (inter alia) of disposition by will—such being the effect of saying that the property should belong to her for her separate use; that this power was not lost by her acquiring on her marriage a Scottish domicil; that, seeing she had exercised the power, the rights given by the law of the domicil were subject thereto; that savings out of income were as much separate property as the income; that savings out of income derived under the wills were equally within the contract, and were not liable to conversion (the express wording of the trust excluding them) or affected by the restraint on anticipation—imposed, as this was held to be, by the settlement itself and not merely by third parties; and that even if the settlement were construed according to Scottish law the result would be the same, since the power of testamentary disposition was a par contractus, and, as such, was saved by section 8 of the Act from being "affected" by the two previous sections. Mackenzie, In re; Mackenzie v. Edwards Moss, 80 L. J. Ch. 443; [1911] 1 Ch. 578; 105 L. T. 154; 55 S. J. 406; 27 T. L. R. 337—Swinfen Eady, J.

Destination to "next-of-kin"—Marriage Contract Executed in Scotland — Spouses Dying Domiciled in England.]—An antenuptial contract of marriage was entered into between an Englishman residing in Scotland and a Scotswoman. The contract was prepared by a Scottish solicitor, was in Scottish form, and contained a provision that a fund provided by the wife should after her death, failing issue, belong to her "next-of-kin, excluding her husband." Some years after the marriage the parties moved from Scotland to England, and the wife died domiciled there: —Held (Lord Johnston dissenting), that it was the intention of the parties to the contract that the wife's next-of-kin entitled to succeed to the fund should be ascertained according to the law of Scotland, and accordingly that brothers and sisters of the half-blood were excluded. Lister's Judicial Factor v. Syme, [1914] S. C. 204—Ct. of Sess.

Scottish Settlement — Beneficiaries and Trustees Resident in England—Form.]—The marriage settlement of an Englishman and a lady of Scottish domicil, comprised both English property of the husband and an interest in reversion of the wife under a Scottish settlement made in Scottish form, in terms unknown to English law; the beneficiaries and the present trustees were now all resident in England, and the whole of the trust funds were now invested in English securities:—Held, that the settlement still remained a Scottish settlement, to be dealt with in accordance with Scottish law, and that the Public Trustee could not act as trustee of a Scottish or foreign settlement. Hewitt's Settlement, In re; Hewitt v. Hewitt, 84 L. J. Ch. 358; [1915] 1 Ch. 228; 112 L. T. 287; 59 S. J. 177; 31 T. L. R. 81—Eve, J.

3. Divorce.

Marriage in England between Englishwoman and Domiciled Mexican—Irregularity by Mexican Law.]—The petitioner, an Englishwoman, married in England a domiciled Mexican. By Mexican law a marriage is not valid in Mexico unless it is registered by one or other of the parties to it. The marriage of the petitioner and respondent had not been registered in Mexico. The petitioner, by registering the marriage in Mexico, could have obtained a judicial separation, a decree of divorce not being granted in that country. The petitioner having brought a suit for divorce in this country on the ground of the respondent's adultery, cruelty, and desertion, —Held, that as the respondent's domicil was Mexican, the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Ramos v. Ramos, 27 T. L. R. 515—Bargrave Deane, J.

Marriage Solemnised in England between Greek Subject and Domiciled Englishwoman —Decree of Nullity in Greece at Instance of Husband—Re-marriage of Husband—Suit by Wife for Divorce in England.]—The petitioner, a domiciled Englishwoman, was married in England to the respondent, who was a Greek subject domiciled in Greece. Subsequently the husband deserted the petitioner, and obtained from a Greek Court a decree of nullity of his marriage with the petitioner on the ground that it had not been celebrated in accordance with the rites of the Greek Church, in that no priest of that Church was present at the ceremony as required by Greek law. The respondent thereafter married another woman in Greece, with whom he was living. The petitioner filed a petition for divorce on the ground of the respondent's desertion and adultery:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed by the petitioner, inasmuch as the respondent having gone abroad and taken adverse advantage of his own domicil, the petitioner had reverted to her English domicil. Stathatos v. Stathatos, 82 L. J. P. 34; [1913] P. 46; 107 L. T. 592; 56 S. J. 114; 29 T. L. R. 54—Bargrave Deane, J.

English Marriage Annulled by Domestic Tribunal of Foreign Husband Domiciled Abroad — Wife Left in Country where Marriage Recognised as Valid—Wife Treated as having Domicil of her Own—Capacity of Wife to Sue in Court of her Domicil for Causes there Recognised.]—The rule that the domicil of the spouses, which is that of the husband, is the test of jurisdiction in cases of dissolution, is not without exception. In certain cases a wife may be treated as having a domicil in her own country, which is not that of the husband. The rule as to domicil assumes the existence of a marriage the validity of which is recognised in the country where the suit is brought and that both parties are domiciled there. If, however, the country of the husband's domicil refuses to recognise the marriage, and therefore will not entertain a suit for divorce against him, the justice of the rule as to domicil, which is international, ceases to be apparent, and the wife, having no right of suit against the husband in his country, and being left in the country of her original domicil, where the marriage was celebrated and is still recognised as binding upon both parties, is entitled to sue in the latter country for the dissolution of the tie, which is recognised therein, though not in her husband's country, in cases where the grounds of suit would be sufficient for a divorce if the husband had been domiciled in her country. De Montaigu v. De Montaigu, 82 L. J. P. 125; [1913] P. 154; 109 L. T. 79; 57 S. J. 703; 29 T. L. R. 654—Evans, P.

4. Other Matters.

General Power of Appointment under English Will — Exercise by Domiciled Foreigner—Operation of—Law of Domicil.]—A domiciled Dutchwoman having under an English will a general testamentary power of appointment over personal property, made a will in Dutch form, but executed and attested as required by English law, whereby she appointed her husband sole heir of all of which the law in force at the time of her death should allow her to dispose in his favour, and appointed him her executor. According to Dutch law the testatrix could not dispose of more than seven-eighths of her own estate in this way, the remaining one-eighth going to her mother:—Held (reversing Parker, J.), that, the effect of the will being to make the appointed property assets of the testatrix for all purposes, the disposition became subject to the law of the domicil, and that the husband was therefore beneficially entitled to no more than seven-eighths of the appointed property, the remaining one-eighth going to the mother. Hadley, In re; Johnson v. Hadley (78 L. J. Ch. 254; [1909] 1 Ch. 20), followed and applied. Pouey v. Hordern (69 L. J. Ch. 231; [1900] 1 Ch. 492), Mégret, In re; Tweedie v. Maunder (70 L. J. Ch. 451; [1901] 1 Ch. 547), and Bald, In re; Bald v. Bald (76 L. T. 462), considered. Pryce, In re; Lawford v. Pryce, 80 L. J. Ch. 525; [1911] 2 Ch. 286; 105 L. T. 51—C.A.

Will of Domiciled Foreigner—Restriction on Testamentary Capacity by Law of Domicil—Subsequent Acquisition of English Domicil—Extension of Power of Disposition—Effect on Provisions of Will.]—By her will made in 1868, in Dutch form, a domiciled Dutchwoman appointed her husband heir of her estate "with the reservation only of the legitimate portion or the lawful share coming to her relatives in a direct line." By Dutch law she could only dispose by will of one-fourth of her estate, the remaining three-fourths passing to her children. In 1889 she and her husband came to live in this country, and acquired an English domicil. She died in 1903, leaving her husband and several children surviving her:—Held, that on the true construction of the will the testatrix had not made a gift of three-fourths of her estate to her children, but had constituted her husband her universal legatee so far as she could so constitute him, while recognising the possibility that her children would become entitled to share in her estate, and that, her testamentary power of disposition having been extended to the whole of her estate by her acquisition of an English domicil, the whole of her residuary estate passed to her husband. Bridger, In re; Brompton Hospital v. Lewis (63 L. J. Ch. 186; [1894] 1 Ch. 297), applied. Groos, In re; Groos v. Groos, 84 L. J. Ch. 422; [1915] 1 Ch. 572; 112 L. T. 984; 59 S. J. 477—Sargant, J.

Foreign Parents Divorced Abroad—Decree of Foreign Court Regulating Access to Children.]—The marriage of two domiciled Danes was dissolved by decree under the law of Denmark. By this decree the custody of a son of the marriage was awarded to the father and access to the child by the mother was refused. Thereafter, both parents being resident in Scotland, the mother presented a petition to the Scottish Courts for access to the child "in respect of her natural rights as his mother":—Held, that the question of access having been determined by the Court of the parents' domicil, the Scottish Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain an application based on such grounds. Westergaard v. Westergaard, [1914] S. C. 977—Ct. of Sess.

Semble, the Scottish Courts have power to protect the children of foreign parents resident in Scotland, and may for this purpose intervene in an application brought in the interests of the children. Ib.

Married Woman Entitled to Judicial Separation—Separate Domicil.]—A married woman who had left her husband, a domiciled Scotchman, successfully defended a Scottish suit brought by him, on the ground of wilful non-adherence and desertion, for divorce a vinculo, the House of Lords expressing the opinion that she would be entitled to a decree for judicial separation. She did not claim such a decree, but lived apart till her death under circumstances evincing an intention to acquire an English domicil :—Held, on the authority of Dolphin v. Robins (29 L. J. P. 11; 7 H.L. C. 390), that she had no power to acquire a new domicil independent of that of her husband. Mackenzie, In re; Mackenzie v. Edwards-Moss, 80 L. J. Ch. 443; [1911] 1 Ch. 578; 105 L. T. 154; 55 S. Charity — Mortmain — Bequest — Testator Domiciled in England—Mortgages on Freeholds in Ontario—Movables or Immovables—Impure Personalty—Lex Rei Sitæ—Invalidity of Bequest.]—A testator, who died in 1888, domiciled in England, bequeathed property, which included mortgages on freeholds in Ontario, for charitable purposes. The mortgages contained covenants to pay the moneys thereby secured. At the date of the testator's death the Charitable Uses Act, 1735, then in force, extended to Ontario, and would admittedly have invalidated the bequest of the mortgages had the testator been domiciled there :—Held (Fletcher Moulton, L.J., doubting), that mortgages on land are deemed to be immovables and not movables, and governed by the lex rei sitæ, and that therefore the bequest of the mortgages was a gift of impure personalty and was invalid. Jeringham v. Herbert (6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 134; 4 Russ. 388) and Fitzgerald, In re; Surman v. Fitzgerald (73 L. J. Ch. 436; [1904] 1 Ch. 573), applied. Hoyles, In re; Row v. Jagg (No. 1), 80 L. J. Ch. 274; [1911] 1 Ch. 179; 103 L. T. 817; 55 S. J. 169; 27 T. L. R. 131—C.A.

The terms "movable" and "immovable" are not technical terms in English law, though they are often used, and conveniently used, in considering questions between English law and foreign systems which differ from that law. But where the two systems are identical, quære whether the terms are appropriate—per Cozens-Hardy, M.R. The division into movable and immovable property is no part of the law either of England or of Canada, and is only called into operation in England when the English Courts have to determine rights between domiciled Englishmen and persons domiciled in countries which do not adopt the English division into real and personal property—per Farwell, L.J. Ib.

Disposition by One Instrument of Real Estate in England and Scotland — Use of Technical Expressions Creating Estate Tail in England—Difference of Incidents of Estate in England and Scotland—Giving Effect to Estate as to English Realty according to English Law.]—M., being seised in fee-simple of real estate in England, and entitled to a disposable estate according to the law of Scotland in lands in Scotland, made a trust disposition and settlement in Scotch form whereby he directed his trustees to hold his heritable or real estate in Scotland, and the real estate in England, for behoof of his eldest son and the heirs male of his body in fee, whom failing his second son and the heirs male of his body in fee. By the law of Scotland this disposition did not create a strict entail, but gave the eldest son power to dispose of the property. The eldest son died without issue and without having disentailed, but leaving a trust disposition and settlement effectual, by Scotch law, to dispose of the property :—Held, that the words "heirs male of his body in fee" being technical and proper expressions for the creation of an estate in tail male in lands in England, that estate must take effect as to the English real estate according to the law of England, although the incidents of an estate tail in Scotland were different from its incidents in England. Foreign Lunatic not so Found—Provisional Administrator — Order of French Court — Securities in Hands of English Bailees—Refusal to Deliver without Order of the English Court.] — A domiciled Frenchman resident in Paris deposited securities for safe custody with the defendants in London. He afterwards became a person of unsound mind not so found, and a provisional administrator of his property was appointed by the French Court with express power to receive the securities in question. The defendants, however, when requested to do so, refused to act on the order of the French Court, and insisted on an action being brought in the English Court, in which they submitted to act as the Court should direct, but claimed to retain their costs of the action. There were no lunacy proceedings in England :—Held, that having regard to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Didisheim v. London and Westminster Bank (69 L. J. Ch. 443; [1900] 2 Ch. 15), the defendants, in refusing to act on the order of the French Court, had shewn an undue and unreasonable excess of caution, and ought to bear their own costs of the action. Pélégrin v. Coutts & Co.; Pélégrin v. Messel & Co., [1915] 1 Ch. 696; 113 L. Domiciled Foreigner — Italian Holograph Will—Gift of English Real Estate—Election.]—Certain real estate at D. in England was devised to A. by an Italian will by a testatrix domiciled in Italy at the date of her death. The testatrix also thereby nominated her daughter, who was her heiress-at-law, the residuary legatee of her real and personal estate of whatsoever nature, but the will was not executed so as to pass real estate according to English law :—Held, that the daughter was under no obligation by virtue of any actual or implied contract to give up to A. the real estate at D., nor was she, under the circumstances of the case, bound to elect between the personalty bequeathed to her and the real estate at D. Hearle v. Greenbank (3 Atk. 695, 715) followed. De Virte, In re; Vaiani v. De Virte, 84 L. V. CONTRACTS.

By what Law Governed — Minor with Foreign Domicil Contracting in Scotland.]—A minor, whose domicil was Irish and whose father resided in Ireland, took service as a labourer with a firm in Scotland. He was injured by an accident in the course of his employment, for which he agreed, without consulting his father, to accept compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. After compensation had been paid for some time he brought an action claiming damages at common law in respect of his injuries, contending (inter alia) that being a minor he was not bound by the agreement:—Held, that the pursuer's capacity as a minor to enter into the agreement fell to be determined not by the lex domicilii (Irish law), but by the lex loci contractus (Scots law). M'Feetridge v. Stewarts and Lloyds, [1913] S. C. 773—Ct. of Sess.

Contract made in England and in Accordance with Law thereof—Agreement to Submit to Arbitration — Proceedings Commenced in Foreign Court in Breach of Contract — Jurisdiction to Restrain.]—The Court has discretionary jurisdiction to restrain the prosecution of proceedings in a foreign Court by an English persou, if the bringing of those proceedings is in breach of a contract made in this country. Where, therefore, a contract provided that the same should be "construed and take effect as a contract made in England and in accordance with the law of England," and that the rights, duties, or liabilities of the parties thereto should be referred to arbitration in conformity with the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1889, the award of the arbitrators to be a condition precedent to any liability of either party, an injunction to restrain one of the parties from continuing or prosecuting (except under or in pursuance of an award under the contract) proceedings commenced by that party against the other in a foreign Court was held to be rightly granted. Hamlyn v. Talisker Distillery Co. ([1894] A.C. 202) applied. Pena Copper Mines v. Rio Tinto Co., 105 L. VI. FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

See also Vol. VIII. 323, 1720.

French Law — Prosecution for Criminal Offence — Intervention of Person Claiming Damages—Judgment Awarding Damages and Inflicting Penalties—Severability.]—By the law of France, where a prosecution is instituted for a criminal offence a person who has been damaged by the act constituting the criminal offence has the option, instead of instituting separate civil proceedings, of intervening in the prosecution and claiming damages from the accused, and the Court may award him damages and at the same time inflict a penalty for the criminal offence:—Held, that for the purpose of enforcing in this country the part of the judgment awarding damages, that part can be severed from the part inflicting the penalty, and that such enforcement is not a violation of the rule of international law that the Courts of one country will not enforce the penal laws of another. Raulin v. Fischer, 80 L. J. K.B. 811; [1911] 2 K.B. 93; 104 L. T. 849; 27 T. L. R. 220—Hamilton, J.

Rule of Foreign Law Excluding Evidence of Parties—Whether Contrary to Substantial Justice.] — The Court will not refuse to enforce a judgment obtained in an Italian Court merely because by Italian law neither party to a litigation can be called as a witness on his own behalf. The exclusion of such evidence cannot be said to be contrary to substantial justice within the meaning of the rule laid down by Lindley, M.R., in Pemberton v. Hughes (68 L. J. Ch., at pp. 285 et seq.; [1899] 1 Ch., at p. 790). Scarpetta v. Lowenfeld, 27 T. L. R. 509—A. T. Lawrence, J.

Exclusion of Evidence in Foreign Court—Whether Contrary to Natural Justice.]—Where a foreign judgment has been pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and the parties have been duly summoned and have had a hearing or an opportunity of being heard, an English Court will not refuse to enforce it as being contrary to natural justice merely because the foreign Court has excluded evidence tendered to shew that the written contract in respect of which the action was brought was induced by fraudulent verbal misrepresentation. Robinson v. Fenner, 83 L. J. K.B. 81; [1913] 3 K.B. 835; 106 L. T. 542—Channell, J.

Divorce Suit in India—Award of Damages against Co-respondent — Co-respondent not Resident in India where Suit Commenced or Pending — Action against Co-respondent on Indian Decree.] — The English Courts will recognise and enforce the judgments as to status of the Indian Courts in matters within their jurisdiction, and will also recognise and enforce the ancillary orders as to damages such as they themselves make in similar cases. Phillips v. Batho, 82 L. J. K.B. 882; [1913] 3 K.B. 25; 109 L. T. 315; 29 T. L. R. 600—Scrutton, J.

The plaintiff, who was domiciled in British India, obtained in the Bengal High Court a divorce from his wife on the ground of her adultery with the defendant, and an award of damages against the defendant, who was joined in the suit as co-respondent. The defendant, who was a British subject domiciled in England, had resided in India, but had left and returned to England before the divorce proceedings were commenced. He was served by registered post in England, but did not appear in the divorce proceedings. In an action against the defendant to recover the damages awarded against him in the divorce suit,—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, as the decree against the defendant in India, being ancillary to the decree of divorce, which was a judgment in rem, was enforceable in this country. Ib.

Judgment of Colonial Court — Defendant Native of Colony — Judgment Recovered in Defendant's Absence — Enforceability in English Court.]—The defendant was born in Victoria and lived at Melbourne for twenty-six years until 1890, when he came to reside in England. Since then he had lived chiefly in London, but had visited Victoria during certain periods down to 1906. The plaintiffs issued a writ against the defendant in the Supreme Court of Victoria to recover a sum of money alleged to be due from him on accounts stated. The writ was served upon the defendant in London, but he did not appear to it, and the plaintiffs signed judgment against him in the Supreme Court of Victoria. They subsequently brought an action against him in this country upon the judgment so recovered. The defendant pleaded that the Supreme Court of Victoria had no jurisdiction over him or the alleged cause of action:—Held, that the defendant was not under the circumstances domiciled in Victoria, and that the fact that he was born there did not constitute him a subject of the colony so as to make the judgment binding upon him in an English Court. Gibson & Co. v. Gibson, 82 L. J. K.B. 1315; [1913] 3 K.B. 379; 109 L. T. 445; 29 T. L. R. 665—Atkin, J.

Appearance of Defendant in Foreign Court Voluntary Appearance — Enforceability of Judgment in English Court.] — Proceedings were commenced by the plaintiff, who carried on business in Paris, in the Tribunal de Commerce de la Seine against the defendants, who were merchants in London, claiming damages for breach of contract. Notification of the proceedings was sent to the defendants, but they declined to take up the documents. Judgment by default was afterwards given by the Tribunal de Commerce, and notification was given to the defendants, who, however, took no steps in regard to it. The plaintiff thereupon obtained a saisie-arrêt, which is analogous to a garnishee order, attaching a small sum of money standing to the credit of the defendants at the Crédit Lyonnais. On being informed of this, the defendants entered an "opposition" in the Tribunal de Commerce asking to have the judgment by default set aside. The Tribunal de Commerce reheard the case, and gave judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff appealed, and the Court of Appeal in Paris reversed the judgment given for the defendants, and restored the judgment by default in favour of the plaintiff. In an action by the plaintiff upon the judgment of the Court of Appeal,—Held, that the judgment was enforceable against the defendants, as their appearance in the French proceedings must, under the circumstances, be taken to have been a voluntary one. Held, further, that the judgment sued upon was not a judgment by default, inasmuch as it derived its whole force and validity not from the original decision of the Tribunal de Commerce, but from that of the Court of Appeal. Guiard v. De Clermont, 83 L. J. K.B. 1407; [1914] 3 K.B. 145; 111 L. T. 293; 30 T. L. R. 511—A. T. Lawrence, J.

—— Conditional Appearance—Voluntary Appearance—Submission to Jurisdiction.]—The plaintiff, who was a domiciled Manxman, brought an action of criminal conversation in the High Court of the Isle of Man against the defendant, who was a domiciled Englishman residing in England. The action was commenced in accordance with the practice of the Manx Court by the filing of a statement of claim, and subsequently the plaintiff obtained leave to issue a writ for service out of the jurisdiction, and such writ was issued and duly served on the defendant in England. On the day on which the defendant was required by the writ to appear his advocate appeared in Court conditionally to set aside the writ, and an entry was made in the Court book to the effect that the defendant was to file a motion to set aside the writ, and on a later day a motion was accordingly filed by the defendant to set aside the writ on various grounds, and this motion was dismissed by the Court after hearing argument on both sides. The defendant taking no further part in the proceedings in the Manx Court, the plaintiff obtained interlocutory judgment in default and, after the damages had been assessed, final judgment for the amount so found and costs. In an action to enforce such judgment,—Held, that the defendant had so acted that he must be taken to have submitted to the jurisdiction of the Manx Court, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to enforce his judgment in this country. Harris v. Taylor, 84 L. Judgment by Consent—Subsequent Application for Interpleader Issue.]—The right to commence interpleader proceedings under Order LVII. is not without restriction as to the time within which such proceedings must be commenced. Right to Relief — Adverse Claims — Fire Insurance Company — Policy in Names of Lessor and Lessee — Notice by Lessor to Company to Lay out Insurance Money in Reinstatement—Claim by Lessee to Payment of Insurance Money—Insurance Company.]—In pursuance of a lessee's covenant to insure against fire a policy of insurance on the demised premises was effected in the names of the lessors and the lessee. A fire having occurred, the insurance money was adjusted at a certain sum. The lessors served notice on the insurance company under section 83 of the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774, requesting them to cause the insurance money to be laid out in rebuilding and reinstating the premises. The lessee began to do the work of rebuilding and reinstating himself, and informed the company that he would not ask for payment of the insurance money until the work was completed. The insurance company having taken out a summons for an order calling upon the lessee and the lessors to appear and maintain their respective claims, —Held, that the insurance company were not entitled to an interpleader order—per Vaughan Williams, L.J., because there were not "two or more parties making adverse claims" within the meaning of Order LVII. rule 1 (a), the lessee not having made any claim at all; per Buckley, L.J., and Kennedy, L.J., because, assuming that the lessee had made any claim at all, the lessors and the lessee were not "making adverse claims" with regard to any "debt, money, goods or chattels," but were making inconsistent claims as to the nature of the obligation owed by the company. Sun Insurance Office v. Galinsky, 83 L. Claim to Proceeds of Goods Taken in Execution and Sold—Claim by Assignee of Execution Creditor — Assignment of Debts Owing or to Become Owing—Absence of Title to Goods Themselves.]—A claimant in an interpleader summons issued under section 157 of the County Courts Act, 1888, to the proceeds of goods taken in execution and sold under the provisions of section 156 of the Act, must, in order to succeed, shew that he had a good title to the goods themselves. Therefore, where the claimant is the assignee of all the book and other debts of the execution creditor, and his real object is to enforce under the assignment his right to the particular judgment debt, a summons under section 157 is not his appropriate remedy. Plant v. Collins, 82 L. —— Proof of Part Ownership as Partner—Right to Succeed.]—On an interpleader issue in the County Court the question is whether the goods taken in execution are those of the claimant as against the execution creditors. The claimant gave notice that the goods were his. At the trial of the issue the jury found that they were not, but were the property of a partnership in which he and the execution debtor were the partners:—Held, that as between him and the execution creditors the issue should be determined in his favour. Wells v. Hughes (76 L. Appeal—Trial of Issue by Master—Order Determining Rights of Parties — Right of Appeal.]—Where an interpleader issue has, under Order LVII. rule 7, been ordered to be tried before a Master, and the Master makes an order which, in addition to determining the issue, finally disposes of the whole matter of the proceedings, an appeal will lie to a Divisional Court from so much of the order as determines the issue. Cox v. Bowen, 80 L. New On-licence — Conditions — Monopoly Value — Capital Value — Grant of Justices Licence for Annual Payments—Grant not "in accordance with" Act.]—By section 14, sub-section 1 of the Licensing Consolidation Act, 1910, "The licensing justices, on the grant of a new justices' on-licence, may attach to the grant of the licence such conditions . . . as they think proper in the interests of the public; subject as follows:—(a) Such conditions shall in any case be attached as . . . the justices think best adapted for securing to the public any monopoly value which is represented by the difference between the value which the premises will bear, in the opinion of the justices, when licensed, and the value of the same premises if they were not licensed." On the grant of a new on-licence the Justices ordered annual sums representing precentages of trade takings to be paid as monopoly value each year. The Excise collector refused to grant the licence holder an Excise licence:—Held, that "monopoly value" in section 14 means capital monopoly value, and is a lump sum to be definitely fixed upon the grant of the Justices' licence, to be paid as the Justices may direct; that the Justices' licence had not therefore been granted "in accordance with" the Act within section 1, and that the Excise licence had been rightly refused. Rex v. Sunderland Customs and Excise Commissioners, 83 L. "Beer"—Liquor made of Glucose and Hops containing 2 per cent. of Proof Spirit.]—The incorporation by sections 92 and 96, sub-section 3 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, of the laws relating to Excise duties or licences, together with the provision in the First Schedule to that Act under the heading "C. Retailers' Licences" as to the "licence to be taken out annually by a retailer of beer," imposes an obligation under the Act on a person who sells by retail intoxicating liquor to take out a licence. Where therefore a person sells by retail such liquor without a licence he is liable to the penalty provided in section 50, sub-section 3 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910. Fairhurst v. Price, 81 L. J. K.B. 320; [1912] 1 K.B. 404; 106 L. T. 97; 76 J. P. 110; 22 Cox C.C. 660; 28 T. L. R. 132—D.

The appellant was summoned under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, for having sold by retail beer, for the retail sale of which he was required to take out a licence under that Act, without having taken out such licence. The following advertisements were exhibited in the shop where the liquor was sold: "The ales and stouts which are offered to the public on these premises are manufactured at about the same strength as ordinary ales and stouts, guaranteed free from chemicals, and to contain no preservatives." "Finlay's ales and stouts brewed from the best malt and Kent and Worcester hops." On analysis the liquor in question had the ordinary gravity of beer and contained 2 per cent. of proof spirit. It was manufactured from liquid glucose and hops, and was fermented with yeast. In colour and appearance it was exactly like ordinary beer. The Justices held that the liquor so sold was "beer" within section 52 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910; that the clause in that section defining "beer" could be subdivided; and that it was necessary to have an Excise licence for the sale of such liquor. They accordingly convicted the appellant:—Held, that the Justices had properly construed the clause in section 52 defining "beer," and that they were entitled to hold on the evidence before them that the liquor sold by the appellant was "beer" within that section. Ib

B. LICENCE DUTY.

Annual Value of Premises—Conclusiveness of Valuation List as to Annual Value.]—The valuation list for the time being in force under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, is not conclusive evidence of the annual value of licensed premises for the purpose of determining the amount of the licence duties imposed by the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910. Wrigglesworth v. Regem, 104 L. T. 593; 75 J. P. 118; 9 L. G. R. 329; 27 T. L. R. 154—Channell, J.

—— Basis of Calculation—Ejusdem Generis—"Increased value arising from profits not derived from the sale of intoxicating liquor."]—In ascertaining the "annual licence value" of a licensed house, for the purposes of the register of annual licence value established by section 44, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, only the value arising from the increased profits derived from the sale of non-intoxicants owing to the fact that they are sold on licensed premises, and not all the profits derived from such sales, is to be excluded from consideration under the last paragraph of that sub-section. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Truman, Hanbury, Buxton & Co., 82 L. Free House—Licensed Premises held under Lease — "Grantor of the lease" — Claim against Person Receiving Rent for Proportion of Increased Duty.] — In section 2 of the Finance Act, 1912, the words "the grantor of the lease" mean the person who actually puts his signature and seal to the lease as lessor, and do not mean persons who for the time being are in receipt of the rent of the licensed premises. The lessee of licensed premises cannot, therefore, claim the relief in respect of increased licence duty given by section 2 of the Finance Act, 1912, from an assignee of the original grantor. Bodega Co. v. Read, 84 L. J. Ch. 36; [1914] 2 Ch. 757; 111 L. T. 884; 59 S. J. 58; 31 T. L. R. 17—C.A.

"Grantor of lease."]—Where the owners of licensed property contract to grant a lease and the premises are subsequently conveyed to a person absolutely as security for money advanced by him on the faith of the performance of such contract and the lender afterwards executes a lease in order to give effect to the contract, he is the "grantor of the lease" within the meaning of section 2 of the Finance Act, 1912, and the lessee is entitled under that section to recover from him so much of any increase of duty payable under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, as is proportionate to any increased rent payable in respect of the premises being let as licensed premises. Bodega Co. v. Martin, 85 L. J. Ch. 17; [1915] 2 Ch. 385; 60 S. J. 10; 31 T. L. R. 595—C.A.

Liability of Lessor to Pay Proportion of Increase — "Licensed premises held under lease."]—Section 2 of the Finance Act, 1912, which provides that "Where the licensed premises are held under a lease . . . made before the passing of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910. . . . the lessee under such lease . . . shall be entitled, . . . to recover . . . from . . . the grantor of such lease . . . so much of any increase of the duty payable in respect of the licence under the provisions of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, as may be agreed upon as proportionate to any increased rent or premium payable in respect of the premises being let as licensed premises," applies where the lessee is not himself the occupier of the premises, but has sub-let them and is not the holder of the licence. Watney, Combe, Reid & Co. v. Berners, 84 L. Licensed Premises not being a "tied house" — Lease — Increased Rent due to Licence — Proportionate Increase in Duty Recoverable by Lessee.]—By section 2 of the Finance Act, 1912, where licensed premises are held under a lease made before the passing of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, which does not contain any covenant on the part of the lessee to obtain a supply of intoxicating liquor from the lessor, the lessee shall be entitled to recover from the lessor so much of any increase of the licence duty payable under the Act of 1910 as is proportionate to any increased rent payable in respect of the premises being let as licensed premises:—Held, that in order to ascertain whether any, and what, increased rent is payable in respect of the premises being let as licensed premises, the question to be determined is what annual rent a tenant might be expected to give for the premises as they stand, but without a licence. It is necessary to compare the annual rent which could be obtained for the same premises if let for the same term without a licence, with the rent reserved by the lease for the premises licensed. The comparison should not be made upon the assumption that the premises are altered so as to secure the most profitable use of them by a lessee under a lease for a long term of years. Proctor v. Tarry, 84 L. Increased Licence Duty—Lease Made before Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 — Liability of Lessor to Contribute—Sums Spent in Rebuilding by Lessor Pursuant to Agreement for Lease — Surrender Value of Unexpired Lease — "Premium."] — Where, in pursuance of an agreement for a lease of licensed premises, a lessee has expended a sum of money in erecting new buildings on the premises, and has also surrendered a prior unexpired lease of the premises, and a new lease has been made before the passing of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, neither the sum so expended nor the surrender value of the old lease is a "rent or premium" within the meaning of section 2 of the Finance Act, 1912, and the lessor is not therefore under any liability, in respect of either amount, to bear a proportion of any increase of duty payable in respect of the licence under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910. King v. Cadogan (Earl), 84 L. Proportion Payable by Grantor of Lease—Issue as to Liability of Grantor to Pay—Jurisdiction of County Court.] — Under section 2 of the Finance Act, 1912, when the issue is raised as to the liability of the grantor of a lease to pay any proportion of the increase of licence duty, and is not merely as to the amount payable, the County Court has no jurisdiction to determine this issue, and the grantor is entitled to a writ of prohibition to the Judge from proceeding therein. Tratt v. Good, 84 L. Alteration in Premises without Consent of Justices — Exits — Premises Ill-conducted or Structurally Unsuitable.] — In 1896 licensed premises included two buildings, a hotel and a restaurant, and, with the consent of the licensing Justices, in 1903 part of the ground was excluded from the licensed area and various structures, including a theatre, were erected on the excluded portion. At the beginning of 1910 the construction of a stage door communicating between the theatre and the licensed area was commenced without the knowledge or consent of the licensing Justices, but there was no evidence that this door had been used. In June, 1909, application was made to the licensing Justices to exclude from the licensed area a further portion of the ground originally included therein, known as the kitchen garden, for the purpose of erecting a skating rink thereon. This application was refused by the Justices, but, notwithstanding such refusal, the appellant or certain lessees of the owners of the premises proceeded to build upon this portion of ground a skating rink. No intoxicating liquors have been sold or consumed thereon. Four exits from the skating rink into portions of the licensed area and a main entrance from a public street called P. Avenue to the skating rink were made without the knowledge and consent of the licensing Justices. There was no evidence that the exits had been used. The appellant or the owners of the premises, also without the permission and without the knowledge of the licensing Justices, leased with an option of purchase a portion of the ground forming part of the area originally included in the licensed area. The Justices at quarter sessions held that the matters set out made the premises ill-conducted within the meaning of section 1 of the Licensing Act, 1904. They also further held that, by reason of the hereinbefore mentioned alterations, the premises were not structurally suitable; and that the Justices of the licensing district had rightly refused the renewal of the licence :—Held, that there was evidence to support the finding of the Justices. Marshall v. Spicer, 103 L. Off-licence — Power to Attach Condition to Grant — Power to Demand Undertaking as Condition Precedent to Grant.] — Licensing Justices have no power to grant a licence for the sale of intoxicating liquor off the premises with a condition attached thereto; but they may demand from an applicant for the grant of such a licence, as a condition precedent to the grant, an undertaking as to matters relevant to the question whether the licence shall be granted or refused, although by such undertaking the licensee undertakes not to exercise some of the legal rights which the licence, when granted, will confer on him. Rex v. Birmingham Licensing Justices; Hodson Ex parte, 82 L. New On-licence — Conditions — Monopoly Value — Capital Value — Grant of Justices' Licence for Annual Payments—Grant not "in accordance with" Act — Refusal of Excise Licence.]—By section 14, sub-section 1 of the Licensing Consolidation Act, 1910, "The licensing justices, on the grant of a new justices' on-licence, may attach to the grant of the licence such conditions . . . as they think proper in the interests of the public; subject as follows :—(a) Such conditions shall in any case be attached as . . . the justices think best adapted for securing to the public any monopoly value which is represented by the difference between the value which the premises will bear, in the opinion of the justices, when licensed, and the value of the same premises if they were not licensed." On the grant of a new on-licence the Justices ordered annual sums representing percentages of trade takings to be paid as monopoly value each year. The Excise collector refused to grant the licence holder an Excise licence :—Held, that "monopoly value" in section 14 means capital monopoly value, and is a lump sum to be definitely fixed upon the grant of the Justices' licence, to be paid as the Justices may direct; that the Justices' licence had not therefore been granted "in accordance with" the Act within section 1, and that the Excise licence had been rightly refused. Rex v. Sunderland Customs and Excise Commissioners, 83 L. Beerhouse Licence Granted before 1904 — Grant of Licence to Sell Spirits — Full Licence.]—Where the holder of a beerhouse licence granted prior to 1904 applies to the Justices for a licence to sell spirits, the Justices, if they grant the licence, are not entitled to grant one purporting to authorise him to sell spirits only, but must grant a full publican's licence. Customs and Excise Commissioners v. Curtis, 83 L. J. K.B. 931; [1914] 2 K.B. 335; 110 L. T. 584; 78 J. P. 173; 30 T. L. R. 232—D.

—— Monopoly Value.]—The monopoly value which the holder of a beerhouse licence must pay on the grant of a new publican's licence, under section 14 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, is not merely the difference between the value of the premises with the new full licence and their value with the beerhouse licence, but the difference between the value of the premises when licensed with the new full licence and the value they would bear if not licensed at all. Ib.

Similar Licence already in Force — Monopoly Value—Reduction of.—Section 12, sub-section 1 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, provides that "for the purposes of this Act a new Justices' licence is a Justices' licence granted at a general annual licensing meeting otherwise than by way of renewal or transfer as defined by this Act." By section 16, sub-section 1. "the renewal of a Justices' licence means the grant of a Justices' licence at a general annual licensing meeting by way of renewal of a similar licence which is in force in respect of the premises at the date of the application":—Held, upon the above sections, that the words "a similar licence" in section 16 mean a licence to sell the same kind of intoxicating liquors as are being sold at premises already licensed, and that where a particular class of licence is in force the Justices have no jurisdiction to grant what purports to be a new licence of the same kind in respect of the same premises with the object of making an alteration of the monopoly values subject to which the existing licence was granted. Rex v. Taylor. Rex v. Amendt (No. 2), 84 L. a. Generally.

Old On-licence — Premises of Insufficient Value—"Disqualified premises"—Refusal to Renew — Mandamus.—Premises which by reason of insufficient annual value are not, under the provisions of section 37, sub-section 1 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, qualified to receive a Justices' on-licence for the sale of intoxicating liquor are "disqualified premises" within the meaning of sections 34 and 36, so as to make an on-licence granted in respect of them void; and the Court will not in such a case grant a mandamus to Justices to hear and determine an application for the renewal of the licence. Rex v. Hull Licensing Justices; Glossop & Bulay, Lim., Ex parte, 82 L. J. K.B. 946; [1913] 3 K.B. 425; 109 L. T. 184; 77 J. P. 303; 29 T. L. R. 500—D.

Appeal to Quarter Sessions—No Application by Appellant to Licensing Justices—Jurisdiction of Quarter Sessions to Grant Renewal to Appellant.—L., the licence holder of an old on-licence other than an old beerhouse licence, agreed to transfer it to P. The latter's application to the Justices for the transfer to him was adjourned to the general annual licensing meeting. At that meeting P. also applied for a renewal of the licence to himself. Notice of opposition to a renewal to them had been served on both L. and P., as to the former alleging grounds none of which were personal to him. At the general annual licensing meeting the Justices refused P.'s application for a transfer and also that for a renewal on the ground (inter alia) that the house was ill-conducted. No application in form was made by L. for a renewal to himself; but the Divisional Court held that the Justices' refusal to P. on the above ground amounted to a refusal to renew to anybody. L., P., and the brewers, the owners, appealed to quarter sessions, who found that there was no evidence that the house was ill-conducted, but that the Justices were right in refusing to grant a renewal to P.; and they then granted a renewal to L. On an appeal by the opponents of the renewal of the licence,—Held, that quarter sessions had jurisdiction to grant the renewal to L. under the powers conferred on them by section 29, sub-section 4 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, which provides that on an appeal they can grant the renewal of a licence in the same manner as the licensing Justices. Parkes v. Dudley Justices, 82 L. J. K.B. 337; [1913] 1 K.B. 1; 107 L. T. 855; 77 J. P. 51; 29 T. L. R. 31—D.

Two Convictions on Same Day—"Second offence" — Forfeiture of Licence.] — Two informations were preferred against the applicant, who was the holder of an off-licence for the sale of beer, under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, for having sold beer at places where he was not authorised by his licence to sell the same, and for having at the same time and places exposed beer for sale. The two cases were heard together, and the applicant was convicted and fined upon each information. At the next general annual licensing meeting the applicant applied for a renewal of his licence, but the licensing Justices refused the application on the ground that the applicant had been convicted of a "second offence" under section 3, and that therefore his licence had become forfeited:—Held, that a "second offence" under the section meant an offence committed after a conviction for a previous offence, and that the decision of the Justices was therefore wrong. Rex v. South Shields Licensing Justices, 80 L. J. K.B. 809; [1911] 2 K.B. 1; 105 L. T. 41; 75 J. P. 299; 22 Cox C.C. 431; 55 S. J. 386; 27 T. L. R. 330—D.

Annual Meeting of Licensing Justices — "Court in law or recognised by law" — Application for Renewal of Licence—Notice of Objection — Defamatory Statement.] — The rule of law that defamatory statements made in the course of proceedings before a Court of justice or a Court having similar attributes are absolutely privileged does not apply in the case of licensing Justices when dealing with an objection to the renewal of an old on-licence. They are not in such case a "Court in law or a Court recognised by law" within the meaning of the rule. Attwood v. Chapman, 83 L. J. K.B. 1666; [1914] 3 K.B. 275; 111 L. T. 726; 79 J. P. 65; 30 T. L. R. 596—Avory, J.

The plaintiff was the holder of an old on-licence of an inn, and applied for the renewal thereof at the general annual meeting of the licensing Justices. The defendant, a bookmaker, gave written notice of his intention to oppose the application, and alleged various grounds of objection to the effect that the plaintiff was not a fit and proper person to hold the licence. He served copies of this notice on the plaintiff, on the clerk to the licensing Justices, on the superintendent of police, and on a firm of brewers, owners of the inn. The plaintiff brought an action claiming damages for libel in respect of the statements contained in the notice, and the defendant pleaded that he was taking a necessary and proper step in a judicial proceeding in serving the notices, and that the publication thereof was absolutely privileged:—Held, first, that the licensing Justices were not a Court of law to which the privilege attached; secondly, that, assuming they were, the defendant, as objector, being neither a party nor a witness in the proceedings, was not a person on whose behalf the privilege could be claimed; and thirdly, that, assuming the defendant was such a person, the privilege did not extend to the notices served on the superintendent of police and on the brewers. Ib.

b. Referring Renewal to Compensation Authority.

Evidence of Comparison with other Licensed Premises—Power of Justices to Close House.]—Where the renewal of an old on-licence is referred by the licensing Justices to the compensation authority, and the compensation authority have evidence before them as to the number of the licensed houses in the district, the character and population of the locality, and the respective situations and accommodation of the various licensed houses in the district, they are entitled, in the exercise of their honest judgment upon such evidence, to hold that the particular licence referred to them is redundant and to refuse the renewal of such licence, notwithstanding that that particular house, on the evidence, compares favourably with other houses in the district. Colchester Brewery Co. v. Essex Licensing Justices, 84 L. J. K.B. 1500; [1915] 3 K.B. 48; 113 L. T. 460; 79 J. P. 428; 31 T. L. R. 439—D.

—— Award of Compensation — Reference to Inland Revenue Commissioners — Reference to County Court—Delay in Payment of Compensation—Refusal of Licensing Justices to Grant Further Provisional Renewal of Licence.]—By rule 41 of the Licensing Rules, 1910, it is provided that where, under section 19 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, the renewal authority refer the question of the renewal of a licence to the compensation authority, the renewal authority shall grant a provisional renewal of the licence. Rule 42 provides that if the compensation authority refuse the renewal of a licence, the renewal of which is provisional, the licence shall cease to have effect as from the expiration of the seventh day after the date fixed for the payment of the compensation money. Rule 43 provides that when compensation becomes payable in the case of a licence provisionally renewed, and it appears to the renewal authority at the next general annual licensing meeting after the licence has been provisionally renewed that the compensation money has not been paid and is not likely to be paid before the next 5th day of April, they shall, on a proper application being made for the purpose at that meeting, grant a further provisional renewal of the licence in accordance with the foregoing rules. The licensee of a beerhouse applied for the renewal of his licence to the licensing Justices, who in February, 1911, referred the question to the compensation authority, but granted him a provisional renewal of his licence. In July, 1911, the compensation authority refused the renewal, subject to the payment of compensation. In May, 1912, the compensation authority decided as to the parties entitled to the compensation money, but the amount of compensation not being agreed upon by them, the matter was referred to the Inland Revenue Commissioners, who in April, 1913, issued their award, and in May, 1913, referred the question as to the division of the amount awarded to the County Court. In January, 1914, the County Court Judge partly determined the question referred to him, but adjourned the case to a future date for further evidence. Meantime the licensing Justices again provisionally renewed the licence in February, 1912, and also in February, 1913. As the compensation money was not likely to be paid by April 5, 1914, the licensee applied in February, 1914, to the licensing Justices for a further provisional renewal of the licence, but they refused the application, being of opinion that the parties interested in the compensation money had unreasonably delayed the proceedings, and that but for the delay the compensation money would have been paid earlier and the application rendered unnecessary. The licensee thereupon obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus requiring the licensing Justices to hold a further meeting for the purpose of hearing and determining the application for a further provisional renewal:—Held, that rule 43 of the Licensing Rules does not limit the power to grant a provisional renewal to one further renewal after the first grant by the renewal authority, but empowers the grant of a provisional renewal as often as may be necessary until the licence is finally extinguished by payment of the compensation money. Held, also, that the rule nisi for a mandamus must be made absolute, on the ground (per Bray, J., and Rowlatt, J.) that, assuming there had been delay on the part of the persons interested in the compensation money, such delay did not entitle the Justices to refuse the grant of a provisional renewal, and (per Avory, J.) that there was no evidence that there had been any wilful delay by those persons. Rex v. Newington Licensing Justices; Makemson, Ex parte, 83 L. J. K.B. 1367; [1914] 2 K.B. 710; 111 L. T. 72; 78 J. P. 271; 30 T. L. R. 426—D.

Quære, whether misconduct by a licensee in carrying on his business on the licensed premises after the question of the renewal of his licence has been referred to the compensation authority entitles the licensing Justices to refuse the grant of a further provisional renewal. Ib.

Prohibition to Compensation Authority.]— Where licensing Justices have referred the matter of the renewal of an old on-licence to the compensation authority, together with their report thereon, under section 19 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, a writ of prohibition will not lie to the compensation authority to prohibit them from considering the report so made to them, inasmuch as sub-section 2 of section 19 provides that "the compensation authority shall consider all reports so made to them." Rex v. Chester Licensing Justices; Bennion, Ex parte, 83 L. J. K.B. 1259; [1914] 3 K.B. 349; 111 L. T. 575; 78 J. P. 447—D.

Evidence by Magistrate Sitting on Authority.] — A licensing committee referred a licence to the compensation authority on the ground that it was redundant. One of the Justices who sat on the licensing committee sat on the compensation authority, and this authority refused the licence, but subsequently re-opened the case and heard further evidence, including that of the magistrate above referred to, who, however, after the case had been re-opened, did not adjudicate. Ultimately the licence was again refused :— Held, that though there was no authority for saying that the evidence of the magistrate was not good legal evidence, he ought not to have combined the function of sitting on the compensation authority with that of a witness, but that as there was evidence to support the decision to refuse the licence the decision must be affirmed. Mitchell v. Croydon Justices, 111 L. T. 632; 78 J. P. 385; 30 T. L. R. 526—D.

c. Assessment and Division of Compensation for Non-renewal.

Assessment by Commissioners of Inland Revenue—Discretion of Court to Order Commissioners to Pay Costs of Appeal.] — The compensation payable under the Licensing Act, 1904, in respect of the non-renewal of a licence came to be determined by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under section 2 of that Act, and they fixed the amount. On appeal to the High Court by the persons interested, the amount fixed by the Commissioners was substantially increased, the Commissioners appearing on such appeal to support their decision in whole. A question as to the jurisdiction of the Judge to order the Commissioners to pay the appellant's costs having arisen, counsel for the Commissioners at the trial refused, though called upon, to give any evidence on the matter, or to produce any documents or reports which they had in reference to it, or to give the name of the person who would know what materials were before the Commissioners, what enquiries they had made, and what information they had obtained. The Judge being of opinion that the Commissioners in refusing to give this information had acted unreasonably, and that their conduct had led to the appeal, ordered them to pay the costs of the appeal :—Held, that there were proper materials before the Judge upon which in the exercise of his discretion he could hold that the Commissioners had acted unreasonably in reference to the appeal and could order them to pay the appellant's costs, and that being so the Court could not interfere with or review his decision. Hardy's Crown Brewery, In re (No. 2), 103 L. T. 520; 75 J. P. 1; 55 S. J. 11; 27 T. L. R. 25—C.A.

—— Compensation Authority — "Persons aggrieved" — Right of Appeal.]—Where the Inland Revenue Commissioners fix the amount of compensation payable upon a refusal to renew an old on-licence under section 20, sub-section 2 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, the compensation authority are not "persons aggrieved" by the decision of the Commissioners within the meaning of section 10, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, and have, therefore, no right of appeal from their determination. Liverpool Compensation Authority v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 82 L. J. K.B. 349; [1913] 1 K.B. 165; 108 L. T. 68; 29 T. L. R. 169—Horridge, J.

Costs Incurred by Compensation Authority in Performance of Duties — Compensation Authority Supporting Validity of their Decision for Non-renewal of Licence.]—An application for the renewal of a licence was referred by licensing Justices to the compensation authority, and when the matter came before that authority the renewal was refused subject to the payment of compensation. Thereafter, certain facts came to the knowledge of the applicant which caused him to apply for a mandamus to question the decision of the compensation authority on the ground that there was a probability of bias on the part of one of the members. A rule nisi for a mandamus was refused by the Divisional Court, but granted by the Court of Appeal. On the return to the rule the compensation authority appeared by counsel and shewed cause against the rule, which, however, was made absolute. The compensation authority thereafter passed a resolution that the costs incurred by them in shewing cause against the rule should be paid out of the compensation fund, and this was accordingly done. In an action to have it declared that such payment was illegal, and to have the amount so paid repaid to the compensation fund,—Held, that the action failed, as the costs were incurred in good faith and reasonably, and in the exercise by the compensation authority of their duties within section 21, sub-section 5 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910. Att.-Gen. v. Thomson, 82 L. J. K.B. 673; [1913] 3 K.B. 198; 109 L. T. 234; 77 J. P. 287; 29 T. L. R. 510—Scrutton, J.

Apportionment among Persons Interested — Alleged Erroneous Apportionment — Mandamus.]—Where a compensation authority has heard and determined an application for the apportionment of compensation money among the various parties interested, mandamus will only lie if the compensation authority have considered matters outside the ambit of their jurisdiction. Rex v. Monmouthshire Justices; Neville, Ex parte, 109 L. T. 788; 78 J. P. 9; 30 T. L. R. 26—C.A.

Where a compensation authority has heard and determined an application for the apportionment of compensation money among the various parties interested, mandamus will not lie directing them to hear the matter again merely because they may have come to an erroneous decision on the questions of law and fact submitted to them. Rex v. Cheshire Justices; Heaver, Ex parte, 108 L. T. 374; 77 J. P. 33; 29 T. L. R. 23—D.

"Persons interested in the licensed premises"—Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Capital Money.]—The tenant for life of a freehold public house forming part of a settled estate received the sum of 450*l.*, which was paid to her as lessor in respect of the extinction of the licence under the Licensing Act, 1904. Subsequently she died:—Held, that she must be taken to have received this sum as trustee for all the persons interested in the settled estate. Bladon, In re; Dando v. Porter, 81 L. J. Ch. 117; [1912] 1 Ch. 45; 105 L. T. 729; 28 T. L. R. 57—C.A.

Per Fletcher Moulton, L.J.: Quarter sessions ought to have apportioned the sum between the tenant for life and remainderman at the time when the compensation was granted. Ib.

—— Lord of Manor.]—The appellants were the lords of the manor of H., and the freehold of all the copyhold lands within the manor was vested in them. They were also entitled to all the manorial rights. The appellants and the respondents were entered as the registered owners of certain licensed premises within the manor in the register of licences kept pursuant to section 36 of the Licensing Act, 1872. The compensation authority having refused the renewal of the licence of the premises subject to compensation,—Held, that the appellants were owners of the licensed premises, and were therefore "persons interested" therein within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 of the Act of 1904, and that they were accordingly entitled to a share of the compensation money. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Page, 80 L. J. K.B. 1346; [1911] 2 K.B. 946; 105 L. T. 827; 75 J. P. 548—D.

Devise of Licensed Premises—Bequest of Business — Right of Legatee of Business to Participate.]—Where the owner of licensed premises devises them to A, and bequeaths the business there carried on to B, and the business is discontinued before compensation is awarded for non-renewal of the licence, B has no claim to participate in the compensation. Spurge, In re; Culver v. Collett, 104 L. d. Power of Compensation Authority to State Case.

A determination by a compensation authority under section 2, sub-section 2 of the Licensing Act, 1904, as to the division of compensation money amongst the persons interested in licensed premises is a judicial determination, and the compensation authority have therefore power to state a Case for the opinion of the High Court. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Page, 80 L. Ante-1869 Beerhouse Licence — Fit and Proper Person to Hold Licence—Consideration of Extraneous Matters by Justices—Business Relations between Tenant and Landlords.]—On an application for a transfer of an ante-1869 beerhouse licence the Justices are entitled to enquire whether the applicant is a fit and proper person to be the holder of such licence; but they cannot take into consideration the terms of the agreement of tenancy between the applicant and the brewers from whom the premises are taken unless such terms necessarily involve that the applicant will be unable to keep the premises within the prescriptions of the law. Rex v. Cooke (or Hyde Justices), 81 L. J. K.B. 363; [1912] 1 K.B. 645; 106 L. T. 152; 76 J. P. 117—D.

Refusal — Non-insertion in Agreement of Tenancy of Provision for Payment of Increased Licence Duty.] — The mere fact that an agreement by the landlords to pay the increased licence duty imposed by the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, has not been inserted in the agreement of tenancy of the licensed premises does not justify the licensing Justices refusing a transfer of an old on-licence. Rex v. Underwood; Beswick, Ex parte, 76 J. P. 154—D.

Grant Subject to Undertaking.]—In 1896 a licence holder, who was the owner of the licensed premises, consented that the licence should be held subject to an undertaking that the house should be a free and not a tied house. The licence holder died in 1907, and ultimately, in 1914, the house was sold to a firm of brewers, and they put in a tenant, who applied for a transfer. The Justices granted the transfer subject to the above undertaking:—Held, that since the passing of the Licensing Act, 1904, since re-enacted by the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, the Justices had no power to insist upon the undertaking as the licence was an on-licence which existed before 1904. Rex v. Crewe Licensing Justices; Bricker, Ex parte, 111 L. T. 1074; 79 J. P. 26; 30 T. L. R. 626—D.

Confirming Authority — Order Declaring District a "populous place" — Power to Revise Order—Power of Quarter Sessions to State Case.]—Schedule 6 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, provides that licensed premises in a populous place in Wales may remain open until 11 P.M., but in districts other than a populous place not later than 10 P.M. By special provision 2 of the schedule "populous place" means any area with a population of not less than 1,000, which by reason of the density of its population the confirming authority of the county by order determine to be a populous place. It provides that an order restrictive of a previous order shall not be made except on a revision after the publication of a census, and that as soon as may be after the publication of each census the confirming authority of the county shall, at a meeting to be specially convened for the purpose, revise orders then in force within their jurisdiction, and may alter or cancel any of those orders, or may make such further orders, if any, as they shall deem necessary to give effect to the provisions of the Act. A licensing district in Wales was some years ago declared to be a "populous place," and its population had, subsequent to such declaration, increased, but other adjacent districts had, owing to the opening of new collieries therein, increased in population to a still greater extent. In 1913 the confirming authority held that it was no longer a "populous place," and cancelled the previous order. An appeal from their decision by way of a Case stated by the confirming authority for the opinion of the High Court was made, and a preliminary objection taken that quarter sessions had no power to state the same :—Held, that quarter sessions were not dependent for their power to state a Case on the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and, although acting in an administrative capacity, could state the Case submitted. Rex v. Southampton Justices; Cardy, Ex parte (75 L. J. K.B. 295; [1906] 1 K.B. 446), followed. Nicholas v. Davies, 83 L. J. K.B. 1137; [1914] 2 K.B. 705; 111 L. T. 56; 78 J. P. 207; 30 T. L. R. 388—D.

Held also, on the merits, that it was open to the confirming authority to raise the standard of a "populous place," and that the Court would not consider whether their reasons for so doing were or were not adequate. Ib.

Jurisdiction of Quarter Sessions to Grant Renewal to Person other than Main Applicant to Justices.]—In October, 1911, an application was made to the licensing Justices for a transfer of a licence from the appellant L. to the appellant P., which application was adjourned to the general annual licensing meeting, 1912, a protection order being granted to P. till that meeting. In January, 1912, notice of opposition to a renewal was served on L. and also on P., and in February, 1912, the licensing Justices refused P.'s application for a renewal on the ground that the premises had been ill-conducted. L. and his solicitor were present, but made no application. On appeal by P., L., and the brewers against the refusal of a renewal to P., quarter sessions dismissed P.'s appeal, but granted a renewal to L. :—Held, that quarter sessions had jurisdiction to do so under section 29, sub-section 4 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910. Parkes v. Dudley Justices, 82 L. J. K.B. 337; [1913] 1 K.B. 1; 107 L. T. 855; 77 J. P. 51; 29 T. L. R. 31—D.

Renewal of Licence Refused — Appeal by Licensee and Owners of Premises—Death of Licensee before Hearing of Appeal—Termination of Licence—Right of Licensee's Representative and of Owner to Prosecute Appeal —"Any person . . . aggrieved."] — The licensee and the owners of certain licensed premises appealed to quarter sessions against the refusal of the licensing Justices to renew the licence of the house. Before the appeal was heard the licensee died, and the licence also came to an end by effluxion of time. Letters of administration were duly granted to the widow of the deceased licensee, who continued the appeal. The Court of quarter sessions dismissed the appeal on the ground that the licence had become extinct by the death of the licensee :—Held, that the widow of the deceased licensee was entitled to maintain the appeal, as the licence, for the purpose of enabling the representative of a deceased licensee to obtain its renewal, must be regarded as still in existence; and further, that the owners of the premises could also appeal against the refusal to renew the licence as being persons aggrieved by the refusal of the Justices to renew the licence within the meaning of section 29 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910. Cooke v. Bolton Justices or Cooper, 81 L. J. K.B. 648; [1912] 2 K.B. 248; 105 L. T. 818; 76 J. P. 67—D.

Objection by Licensing Justices to Hearing of Appeal—Special Case Stated by Quarter Sessions — Appeal Allowed and Licensing Justices Ordered to Pay Costs—Refusal by Quarter Sessions to make Indemnity Order in Favour of Licensing Justices—Mandamus.]—The renewal of a licence having been refused by licensing Justices, the licensee appealed to quarter sessions. When the appeal came on for hearing, counsel for the licensing Justices objected that, as since the notice of appeal was given the licensee had died, the licence had become extinct, and that therefore no appeal lay from the refusal to renew the licence, and that the owners had no right of appeal. Quarter sessions upheld this objection and dismissed the appeal subject to a Special Case stated by them for the opinion of the King's Bench Division. At the hearing of the Special Case the licensing Justices did not appear, and the King's Bench Division reversed the order of quarter sessions, remitted the Case for re-hearing, and ordered the licensing Justices to pay the costs of the appeal to the King's Bench Division. Subsequently the appeal was re-heard and determined by quarter sessions and dismissed with costs. An application was then made to quarter sessions under section 23 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, for an order on the treasurer of the borough for which the licensing Justices acted to pay to them the costs they had had to pay in the appeal by Special Case to the King's Bench Division. Quarter sessions having refused to make such order, the licensing Justices obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus requiring them to do so :—Held, that the licensing Justices were entitled under section 32 to the order asked for, and that the costs of the rule for the mandamus should be included with the other costs in the order to be made upon the borough treasurer. Rex v. Salford Hundred Justices; Bolton Justices, Ex parte, 81 L. J. K.B. 952; [1912] 2 K.B. 567; 107 L. T. 174; 76 J. P. 395; 23 Cox C.C. 110—D.

D. COMPENSATION FUND.

See also Vol. VIII. 1752.

Old On-licence—Forfeiture Prior to 1910—Grant of Licence at Special Sessions—Renewal Thereof—"Old on-licence renewed."]—By section 21, sub-section 1 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, the compensation authority shall impose charges for the purposes of the compensation fund in respect of all old on-licences renewed in respect of premises within their area. By Schedule II. Part I. an old on-licence is described as one in force on August 15, 1904, and as including renewals of such a licence whether it continues to be held by the same person or is or may be transferred to another person. In July, 1907, M., the holder of a licence of a public house which was in force on August 15, 1904, was convicted of felony, and the licence thereby became forfeited. In August, 1907, the owners, under section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1874, obtained authority for their representative, J., to carry on the business until the next special or transfer sessions. At those sessions, in September, J., under the above section 15, obtained a licence to remain in force until the following April, when M.'s licence, if not forfeited, would have expired in the ordinary course. At the general annual licensing meeting in February, 1909, the Justices renewed this licence to J., and henceforth it was renewed annually to successive occupiers, including, finally, the suppliant, the present holder:—Held, that the licence granted in September to J. was a transfer to him of the licence forfeited by M., and was therefore a licence granted to J. by way of renewal of a licence in force on August 15, 1904, and eventually transferred to the suppliant, within the meaning of Schedule II. Part I. of the Act of 1910, and was therefore an "old on-licence renewed" within the meaning of section 21, sub-section 1 of the Act, and that, consequently, the suppliant was liable to pay the charges leviable by the compensation authority under that sub-section. Wernham v. Regem, 83 L. J. K.B. 395; [1914] 1 K.B. 468; 110 L. T. 111; 78 J. P. 74—Bailhache, J.

Restaurant—Rate of Levy—What Evidence may be Required.]—It is in the discretion of the licensing Justices, when fixing the amount of the compensation levy on a restaurant, to require that the figures of the trade done by the restaurant should be given to them, including the gross receipts from the sale of alcohol and all other goods, and they are not bound to be satisfied with a statement shewing the proportion of the receipts for liquor to the gross receipts. Holborn and Frascati, Lim., Ex parte, 30 T. L. R. 614—D.

Deduction from Rent—Reversionary Lease to Commence on Determination of Lease—Interest of Lessee in Premises.—A brewery company who were by assignment underlessees of a licensed house also acquired by assignment the interest in two reversionary under-leases which were expressed to be extensions of the under-lease. The terms of years created by the two reversionary under-leases were to commence on the expiration of the under-lease and the first reversionary lease respectively, the second reversionary lease expiring in 1951. The reversionary under-leases were expressed to be subject to the like rent and conditions as were reserved and contained in the under-lease, and they also contained a proviso that if the terms granted by the under-lease and the first reversionary under-lease respectively should be determined under the proviso for re-entry, then the reversionary under-leases should be absolutely void. A compensation charge was imposed by quarter sessions in respect of the house under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1904, sub-section 3 of which allows such deductions as are set out in the Second Schedule to be made by a licence holder who pays the charge, and also by any person from whose rent a deduction is made in respect of the payment of such charge. The scale of deductions in the Second Schedule varies according to the length of the "unexpired term" of the person making the deduction:—Held, that the deduction must be calculated according to the unexpired term of the under-lease without taking into account the length of the two reversionary under-leases. Llangattock (Lord) v. Watney, Combe, Reid & Co. (79 L. J. K.B. 559; [1910] A.C. 394) followed. Knight v. City of London Brewery Co., 81 L. J. K.B. 194; [1912] 1 K.B. 10; 106 L. T. 564—A. T. Lawrence, J.

Proportion of Compensation Fund Payable to New Borough.]—A section of the Eastbourne Corporation Act, 1910, provided that "within six months after April 1, 1911, the Court of quarter sessions for the county shall pay to the Justices acting in and for the borough out of the compensation fund of the county established under the Licensing Act, 1904, such proportion of any sum standing to the credit of that fund on the said day, after deducting therefrom any sums due in respect of compensation awarded prior to that day, as the amount of the charges paid under that Act during the year ending March 31, 1911, in respect of premises situate within the area of the borough may bear to the whole amount of such charges paid during the same period in respect of premises within their area:—Held (Avory, J., dissenting), that the words "sum standing to the credit of that fund on the said day" meant the amount which ought to stand to the credit of the fund on that day, and therefore it included a sum which should have been collected by that day, but was in fact collected subsequently. Rex v. Sussex Justices; Langham, Ex parte, 76 J. Licensed Person Abroad.]—Where a publican is abroad, he ought to have on the

F. LICENSED PREMISES.

Business other than Sale of Intoxicating Liquors Carried on—Structural Separation.]—A sale of drink consists in the order for the drink and the delivery of the drink in pursuance of the order. Where a publican carries on upon the licensed premises a business other than that of the sale of intoxicating liquors, and that portion of the premises used for the sale of such liquors is divided from the portion used for the purposes of such other business by a separation of such a character that, notwithstanding its existence, an effective order for drink can be given by a person in the latter portion to, and be received by, a person in the former portion of the premises, and drink can be supplied in pursuance of that order, such separation is not a "structural" separation within section 2 of the Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Act, 1906. Beirne v. Duffy, [1914] 2 Ir. R. 68—K.B. D.

A separation between the bar of an hotel and a billiard room (which is not licensed, but which is owned by the hotel proprietor and used for the purposes of profit), if it contains a glass portion through which a signal for drink can be given and received, resulting in the delivery of the drink ordered, by taking out the drink from the bar to the billiard room through a yard, is not a "structural" separation within the section. Ib.

Betting—Connivance.]—The respondent G., the licensee of a public house, was charged with having unlawfully suffered the house to be used for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto. The magistrate found as a fact that on the material dates one T. used the bar of the public house in question for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto; that the prosecution had failed to prove that any one in the house knew as a fact that betting was being carried on therein; and that the respondent G. and his servants had ample opportunity of seeing and ought to have seen the passing of the betting slips and otherwise becoming aware of the betting which was going on, and had ample opportunity of seeing and ought to have seen enough to bring to their minds a reasonable suspicion that betting on horse racing was going on in the house. Upon these findings the magistrate dismissed the information:—Held, that the case should be remitted back to the magistrate with a direction to consider whether the respondent G. had connived at betting being carried on. Lee v. Taylor, 107 L. T. 682; 77 J. P. 66; 23 Cox C.C. 220; 29 T. L. R. 52—D.

Conviction of Bookmaker for Using Licensed Premises for Betting—Subsequent Proceedings against Licensee—Admissibility of Conviction of Bookmaker.]—On May 4, 1911, a bookmaker was convicted at petty sessions for having unlawfully used the bar parlour of the appellant's licensed premises on April 29, 1911, for betting with persons resorting thereto. On May 15, 1911, the appellant was summoned for having suffered his premises to be so used for betting on April 29, 1911. At the hearing of the charge against the appellant he desired to raise the question whether betting had in fact taken place on April 29, in addition to the question whether he had suffered betting to take place, but the Justices ruled that they were bound by the conviction of the bookmaker on May 4 to hold that betting had taken place on the premises on April 29, and that the appellant could not, in view of that conviction, seek to shew that no betting had taken place on that date. The Justices having convicted the appellant,—Held, that evidence of the conviction of the bookmaker on May 4 was wrongly admitted and that the conviction of the appellant must be quashed. Taylor v. Wilson, 106 L. T. 44; 76 J. P. 69; 22 Cox C.C. 647; 28 T. L. R. 97—D.

2. Permitting Drunkenness.

See also Vol. VIII. 449, 1756.

Reasonable Steps to Prevent Drunkenness on Premises.]—While two men, M. and P., were on the premises of the respondent, a licensed beerhouse keeper, P. handed to M. a bottle of whisky, and M. drank some of the contents without the knowledge or consent of the respondent. Shortly thereafter M. became helplessly drunk and utterly insensible. The respondent caused him to be carried into a back room and laid on a sofa, and provided him with tea in order to bring him to his senses. Later on the same evening, while M. was still in a dazed condition, he was conducted home by the respondent's daughter. The respondent being summoned for having permitted drunkenness on her licensed premises, the Justices dismissed the summons, being of opinion that the respondent had taken all reasonable steps for preventing drunkenness on the premises:—Held, that there was evidence upon which the Justices could so find. Townsend v. Arnold, 75 J. P. 423—D.

Two Drinks Ordered—Enquiry by Barman.]—Where a sober person orders on licensed premises two drinks at the same time it is a reasonable step for preventing drunkenness on the premises within the meaning of section 75 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, for the barman to ascertain whether the second drink is intended for consumption by a sober person. Radford v. Williams, 110 L. 3. Selling during Prohibited Hours.

See also Vol. VIII. 451, 1757.

Beer Ordered and Paid for on Sunday Night —Purchaser's Bottle Placed in Yard of Premises—Beer Taken Away by Purchaser on Monday during Prohibited Hours.]—A man went to a public house on Sunday about 8 P.M. and handed the publican a bottle, which he asked should be filled with beer and that night put in the stable yard, so that he could take it away the next morning before the house opened. The beer was paid for when it was ordered. The bottle was filled with beer by the publican, and placed the same evening in the stable yard, which was part of the licensed premises. The purchaser came and took away the bottle from the stable yard on the Monday morning during prohibited hours:—Held (Avory, J., dissenting), that the whole transaction of sale was complete during legitimate hours on the Sunday evening, and that there was no delivery on the Monday, and that therefore the Justices were right in dismissing an information preferred against the publican under the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 61, for keeping open his licensed premises during prohibited hours. Bristow v. Piper, 84 L. J. K.B. 607; [1915] 1 K.B. 271; 112 L. T. 426; 79 J. P. 177; 59 S. J. 178; 31 T. L. R. 80—D.

"Consumption" of Liquor during Prohibited Hours—Bona Fide Guests of Licensee.]—By an order made on February 5, 1915, under section 1, sub-section 1 of the Intoxicating Liquor (Temporary Restriction) Act, 1914, by the Licensing Justices for the City of Leeds, it was directed that "thereafter the sale or consumption of intoxicating liquor on all premises to which a retail intoxicating liquor licence is attached shall be suspended between 2.30 P.M. and 6 P.M. on Sunday." At 4 P.M. on Sunday, February 21, the police entered the premises of which the respondent was the licensee (which premises were duly closed according to law), and found the respondent and three other men at a table in the bar with glasses partly full of liquor before them. The three men were bona fide the guests of the respondent, and were being entertained by him at his own expense:—Held (Ridley, J., dubitante), that the consumption of the intoxicating liquor on the licensed premises in these circumstances did not constitute an offence under the order. Blakey v. Harrison, 84 L. 4. Selling at Unlicensed Place.

Sale by Brewer's Drayman—Liability of Employer—Aiding and Abetting.]—By the system in use in connection with the appellants' brewery business each of their draymen had a book called an "order and delivery book," which he took out each day, in which it was his duty to enter, when received, orders for beer, and hand in each evening to the appellants' clerk at their office. Each evening the drayman entered on a "load ticket" the orders for next day's delivery, which would be handed with the order and delivery book to the appellants' clerk. From these the loads for the next day's deliveries were made up, and it was the duty of a foreman and certain clerks to see that only a sufficient amount of beer was loaded to satisfy each day's orders. One of the appellants' draymen on May 1, 1908, gave in his order and delivery book, which contained the names of three persons, W., L., and F., the order for each being one crate of bottled beer. On May 2 the drayman went out with a horse and van containing crates and bottled beer of the appellants. None of the goods bore the name of any customer for whom the goods were intended, and there was no appropriation or identifying marks upon any of the bottles or crates. The drayman delivered a crate to F., two bottles to one B., one bottle to L., and one bottle to W. There was no entry in the book of a single bottle as the order of W. and L. The beer delivered was paid for on delivery and the money was duly accounted for to the appellants at the end of the day. Draymen were warned not to deliver beer unless an order had first been taken to the licensed premises. The drayman having been convicted of selling beer without being duly licensed, the appellants were subsequently charged with aiding and abetting him in committing the offence, and were convicted, the Justices coming to the conclusion that no sufficient appropriation of the bottles of beer had taken place before they left the licensed premises:—Held, that the conviction was right. Stansfeld v. Andrews, 100 L. T. 529; 73 J. P. 167; 22 Cox C.C. 84; 25 T. L. R. 259—D.

Two Convictions on Same Day—"Second offence"—Forfeiture of Licence.]—Two informations were preferred against the applicant, who was the holder of an off-licence for the sale of beer, under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, for having sold beer at places where he was not authorised by his licence to sell the same, and for having at the same time and places exposed beer for sale. The two cases were heard together, and the applicant was convicted and fined upon each information. At the next general annual licensing meeting the applicant applied for a renewal of his licence, but the licensing Justices refused the application on the ground that the applicant had been convicted of a "second offence" under section 3, and that therefore his licence had become forfeited:—Held, that a "second offence" under the section meant an offence committed after a conviction for a previous offence, and that the decision of the Justices was therefore wrong. Rex v. South Shields Licensing Justices, 80 L. 5. Selling without Licence.

"Beer"—Liquor Manufactured from Glucose and Hops—Liquor Containing 2 per cent. of Proof Spirit.]—The appellant was summoned under section 50, sub-section 3 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, for having sold by retail beer, for the retail sale of which he was required to take out a licence under that Act, without having taken out such licence. On the premises where the liquor was sold there were exhibited the following advertisements: "The ales and stouts which are offered to the public on these premises are manufactured at about the same strength as ordinary ales and stouts, guaranteed free from chemicals, and to contain no preservatives." "Finlay's ales and stouts brewed from the best malt and Kent and Worcester hops Ale 1½*d.* per pint, stout 2*d.* per pint, to be consumed on or off the premises." On analysis the liquor in question had the ordinary gravity of beer and contained 2 per cent. of proof spirit. It was manufactured from liquid glucose and hops, and was fermented with yeast. In colour and appearance it was exactly like ordinary beer. The Justices were of opinion that the liquor so sold was "beer" within section 52 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910; that the clause in that section defining "beer" could be subdivided; and that it was necessary to have an Excise licence for the sale of such liquor. They accordingly convicted the appellant:—Held, that the Justices had properly construed the clause in section 52 defining "beer," and that they were entitled to hold on the evidence before them that the liquor sold by the appellant was "beer" within that section. Fairhurst v. Price, 81 L. J. K.B. 320; [1912] 1 K.B. 404; 106 L. T. 97; 76 J. P. 110; 22 Cox C.C. 660; 28 T. L. R. 132—D.

Sale by Owners of Licensed Premises by their Manager — Manager Licensed — Owners not Licensed.]—The appellants, a firm of brewers, owners of licensed premises, put a manager on those premises, who held the licence, resided therein, personally conducted the sale of intoxicating liquor thereon, and was responsible for the management thereof. The intoxicating liquor on the premises was the property of the appellants, and they received the profits derived from their sale:—Held, that there had not been a sale by the appellants without a licence of intoxicating liquor within the meaning of section 65, sub-section 1 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910. Dunning v. Owen (76 L. J. K.B. 796; [1907] 2 K.B. 237) and Peckover v. Defries (71 J. P. 38) considered. Mellor v. Lydiate, 84 L. J. K.B. 8; [1914] 3 K.B. 1141; 111 L. T. 988; 79 J. P. 68; 24 Cox C.C. 443; 30 T. L. R. 704—D.

—— Aiding and Abetting.]—The appellant, a brewer, was in the habit of supplying three of his private customers, small cottagers, with beer for their own consumption. Shortly after war broke out between Great Britain and Germany a brigade of Territorials was quartered in a building whose principal entrance was directly opposite the three cottages, and the supply by the appellant of beer to the cottagers increased considerably—in one case from two gallons a week to twenty-five gallons a day. The appellant was told by his carman that these customers were selling beer to the soldiers, when he said that they must not do it, but that there was nothing to prevent the soldiers giving the cottagers something for their trouble in obtaining the beer. This remark was communicated by the carman to the cottagers, and the increased supply of beer continued. The cottagers were charged with, and pleaded guilty to, selling intoxicating liquors without a licence to the soldiers, and the appellant was charged with, and convicted of, aiding and abetting them:—Held, that there was evidence before the Justices which would support such conviction. Cook v. Stockwell, 84 L. J. K.B. 2187; 113 L. T. 426; 79 J. P. 394; 31 T. L. R. 426—D.

Passenger Vessel—Six-days Licence Held by Steward—Sale on Sunday.]—A licence was taken out in the name of the steward of a passenger vessel for the sale of liquor on board which was indorsed with a condition prohibiting the sale of liquor on Sunday. On a Sunday, when the steward was not on board, sales of liquor were made by waiters employed on the vessel. In an action against the owners for the recovery of penalties under section 50, sub-section 3 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910.—Held, that the sales were sales without licence by the owners, and not sales in breach of his licence by the steward, and accordingly that the owners were liable in the statutory penalties. Lord Advocate v. Nicol, [1915] S. C. 735—Ct. of Sess.

Selling by Retail—Wholesale Licence—Sale of Wholesale Quantity—Delivery by Retail Quantities.]—The respondent was not licensed to sell beer by retail, but held a wholesale beer dealer's licence under the Act 6 Geo. 4. c. 81, which empowered him to sell beer in quantities of not less than four and a half gallons. On April 8, 1910, one J. B. bought at the licensed premises eighteen quart bottles of stout. On the same day J. B. paid to the respondent 6*s.*, the price of the eighteen quart bottles of stout, and the respondent agreed to store and deliver the bottles as the purchaser from time to time might require. The respondent gave on April 8 to J. B. a receipt, and in his presence put aside eighteen quart bottles of stout, which were placed in a locker under the counter in the shop together with a billhead bearing J. B.'s name. From time to time the stout delivered was taken from the bottles which had been set aside by the respondent on April 8, and each delivery was recorded on the billhead bearing J. B.'s name which had been placed with the bottles. On May 28, 1910, the last two of the eighteen bottles paid for by J. B. on April 8 were delivered at his house in accordance with an order given by him:—Held, that there was a complete sale on April 8, 1910, and that the respondent had not sold in respect of the last delivery the stout by retail without a licence, contrary to section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872. Hales v. Buckley, 104 L. T. 34; 75 J. P. 214—D.

Recovery of Penalty for each Sale of Liquor without Licence—Power of Court to Modify Penalty.]—An action having been brought by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue against the owners of a passenger vessel, for which a six-days licence had been obtained, to recover penalties under section 50, sub-section 3 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, for sales of liquor without a licence, which had taken place on Sundays,—Held, first, that the Commissioners were entitled to recover a separate penalty for every separate sale, even though these sales were to the same individual on the same day; and secondly, that the Court had no power to modify the penalties. Lord Advocate v. Nicol, [1915] S. C. 735—Ct. of Sess.

—— Proof.] — For proof in the Court of Exchequer of the offence under section 50, sub-section 3, the evidence of one credible witness is, under the provisions of section 65 of the Excise Management Act, 1827, sufficient. Ib.

Conviction — Non-payment of Fine and no Sufficient Distress—Term of Imprisonment.] —Section 65, sub-section 1 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, prohibits the sale of any intoxicating liquor by retail except by a licensed person, and sub-section 2 enacts that "If any person acts in contravention of this section, he shall be liable . . . in the case of the first offence to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding one month." Section 99, sub-section 1, provides that, "Except as otherwise expressly provided, any offence under this Act may be prosecuted, and every fine or forfeiture may be recovered and enforced in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts":—Held, that as no method of recovering a fine imposed for a contravention of section 65 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, is provided by that Act, the provisions of section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, apply; and therefore, where a person is convicted under section 65, and a fine exceeding 20*l.* is imposed, he may, on non-payment of the fine and in default of sufficient distress, be sentenced, in accordance with the scale provided by section 5 of the Act of 1879, to a term of imprisonment not exceeding three months. Reg. v. Hopkins (62 L. J. M.C. 57; [1893] 1 Q.B. 621) applied. Rex v. Leach; Fritchley, Ex parte, 82 L. J. K.B. 897; [1913] 3 K.B. 40; 109 L. T. 313; 77 J. P. 255; 23 Cox C.C. 535; 29 T. L. R. 569—D.

6. Selling otherwise than by Standard Measure.

Sale by Barman—"Person"—"Sells."]—A barman, employed by the licensee of licensed premises to sell his intoxicating liquor in the usual way, without the knowledge of the licensee sold the licensee's beer to a customer in a measure not marked according to the Imperial standards, in accordance with section 69, sub-section 1 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910:—Held, that the barman was a "person" who "sells" within the meaning of sub-section 2 of section 69, and therefore liable to the penalties imposed thereby for a sale made in the above manner. Caldwell v. Bethell, 82 L. J. K.B. 101; [1913] 1 K.B. 119; 107 L. T. 685; 77 J. P. 118; 23 Cox C.C. 225; 29 T. L. R. 94—D.

7. Allowing Children to be in Bar of Licensed Premises.

Bar—Box Partitioned off from Bar.]—In the corner of the main bar of certain licensed premises a space about six feet square was separated therefrom by wooden partitions seven feet in height, which did not reach the ceiling The box or apartment so formed had a door to it, and inside were chairs and a table, liquor and food being there supplied to customers. It was not proved to be exclusively or mainly used for the supply of intoxicating liquor:—Held, that the box did not form part of the "bar" of the premises within the meaning of section 120 of the Children Act, 1908. Donaghue v. M'Intyre, [1911] S. C. (J.) 61—Ct. of Just.

"Part of the premises exclusively or mainly used for the sale and consumption of intoxicating liquor"—Kitchen Used for Trade Purposes during Portions of the Day and for Domestic Purposes during other Portions of Day.]—The Children Act, 1908, provides in section 120, sub-section 1, that "The holder of the licence of any licensed premises shall not allow a child to be at any time in the bar of the licensed premises, except during the hours of closing." The term "bar of licensed premises" is defined in sub-section 5 as meaning "any open drinking bar or any part of the premises exclusively or mainly used for the sale and consumption of intoxicating liquor." The kitchen of the appellant's licensed premises contained the ordinary fittings and appliances of a kitchen, and was also fitted up as a drinking room. A child, two years old, was in the room while its mother was drinking beer. The Justices found that the room was extensively used for trade purposes during certain portions of the day and for domestic purposes during other portions of the day, and they convicted the appellant of an offence under section 120 of the Children Act, 1908:—Held, that the fact that the room was used for domestic purposes during certain portions of the day did not preclude the Justices from holding that the room was "mainly used for the sale and consumption of intoxicating liquor." Pilkington v. Ross, 83 L. J. K.B. 1402; [1914] 3 K.B. 321; 111 L. T. 282; 78 J. P. 319; 12 L. G. R. 944; 24 Cox C.C. 277; 30 T. L. R. 510—D.

Liability of Licensee for Act of his Wife.]—The appellant, who was the licensee of a public house, was charged, under section 120 of the Children Act, 1908, with having unlawfully allowed a child under the age of fourteen to be in the bar of his licensed premises while the premises were open. The child in question, a girl of ten, had gone to the licensed premises in the evening with an elder sister to see the appellant's wife—who was a dressmaker and carried on business in a room on the upper floor of the premises—about a dress she was making for the elder girl. When the two girls entered the licensed premises the appellant's wife saw them and, without the appellant's knowledge, invited them to wait in the bar parlour while she went to her workroom to bring down the dress, so as to avoid the necessity of lighting up the workroom, which was almost in darkness. The girls went into the bar parlour and waited there for the dress to be brought. While they were so waiting there were no customers in the bar parlour, nor was any intoxicating liquor sold there during that time. The appellant did not see the two girls enter, nor did he know they were in the bar parlour until his attention was called to their presence by police officers who had entered. The Justices convicted the appellant, being of opinion that he was responsible for the action of his wife and so was guilty of an offence under the Act in allowing the younger of the two girls to be on the licensed premises while those premises were open :—Held, that the conviction must be quashed, as in the circumstances the appellant was not responsible for the action of his wife. Russon v. Dutton (No. 2), 104 L. T. 599; 75 J. P. 207; 22 Cox C.C. 487; 27 T. L. R. 198—D.

H. CONVICTION AND PUNISHMENT BY JUSTICES.

See also Vol. VIII. 467, 1770.

Two Convictions on Same Day—"Second offence"—Forfeiture of Licence.] —Two informations were preferred against the applicant, who was the holder of an off-licence for the sale of beer, under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, for having sold beer at places where he was not authorised by his licence to sell the same, and for having at the same time and places exposed beer for sale. The two cases were heard together, and the applicant was convicted and fined upon each information. At the next general annual licensing meeting the applicant applied for a renewal of his licence, but the licensing Justices refused the application on the ground that the applicant had been convicted of a "second offence" under section 3, and that therefore his licence had become forfeited :—Held, that a "second offence" under the section meant an offence committed after a conviction for a previous offence, and that the decision of the Justices was therefore wrong. Rex v. South Shields Licensing Justices, 80 L. J. K.B. 809; [1911] 2 K.B. 1; 105 L. T. 41; 75 J. P. 299; 22 Cox C.C. 431; 55 S. J. 386; 27 T. L. R. 330—D.

Sale by Unlicensed Person — Conviction — Non-payment of Fine and no Sufficient Distress —Term of Imprisonment.]—Section 65, sub-section 1 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, prohibits the sale of any intoxicating liquor by retail except by a licensed person, and sub-section 2 enacts that "If any person acts in contravention of this section, he shall be liable . . . in the case of the first offence to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding one month." Section 99, sub-section 1, provides that, "Except as otherwise expressly provided, any offence under this Act may be prosecuted, and every fine or forfeiture may be recovered and enforced, in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts" :—Held, that as no method of recovering a fine imposed for a contravention of section 65 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, is provided by that Act, the provisions of section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1870, apply; and therefore, where a person is convicted under section 65, and a fine not exceeding 20*l.* is imposed, he may, on non-payment of the fine and in default of sufficient distress, be sentenced, in accordance with the scale provided by section 5 of the Act of 1879, to a term of imprisonment not exceeding three months. Reg. v. Hopkins (62 L. J. M.C. 57; [1893] 1 Q.B. 621) applied. Rex v. Leach; Fritchley, Ex parte, 82 L. J. K.B. 897; [1913] 3 K.B. 40; 109 L. T. 313; 77 J. P. 255; 23 Cox C.C. 535; 29 T. L. R. 569—D.

I. COVENANTS AND AGREEMENTS RESPECTING LICENSED HOUSES.

See also Vol. VIII. 470, 1770.

Lease — Covenant — Construction — Sale of Goods "at fair market price"—Tied and Free Public Houses — Two Market Prices.] — The respondent was the lessee of a public house in London of which the appellants, a firm of brewers, were the owners. By his lease he covenanted that he would deal exclusively with them for all malt liquors which should be sold or consumed on the premises, "provided they shall be willing to supply the same at the fair market price." It was proved that of the public houses in London about 93 per cent. were "tied" houses, and 7 per cent. were "free" houses, and that the London brewers supplied beers at standard prices, fixed by agreement among themselves, subject to discounts, and that the discounts allowed to "free" houses were larger than those allowed to "tied" houses. In an action brought by the appellants to recover the balance of an account for beer supplied to the respondent, he counterclaimed for sums which he alleged that he had paid to the appellants in excess of the fair market price for beer supplied to him. The jury found that there were two market prices—one for "tied" and one for "free" houses—and that the respondent had been charged the fair market price as applying to a "tied" house :—Held, that the term "market price" in a contract had not a fixed definite legal significance which attached to it invariably, but that it must be construed with reference to the context and surrounding circumstances, and that the respondent was not entitled to recover on the counterclaim. Charrington & Co. v. Wooder, 83 L. —— Compensation Charge—Covenant not to Deduct from Rent—Willingness of Tenant not to Deduct—Invalidity of Covenant—Best Rent —Lease Void against Remaindermen.]—By section 7, sub-section 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, "Every lease shall reserve the best rent that can reasonably be obtained, regard being had to any fine taken, and to any money laid out or to be laid out for the benefit of the settled land, and generally to the circumstances of the case." It was enacted by section 3, sub-section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1904, that a percentage of the compensation charge might, "notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary," be deducted from his rent by any licence holder who pays such a charge. A similar provision is contained in section 21, sub-section 3 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910. A tenant for life demised licensed premises to the defendant, who covenanted to pay the compensation charge without making any deduction from the rent, and the defendants in fact paid the charge without making any deduction:—Held, that the covenant was invalid, and that as the defendants were willing to pay the full rent without deductions the rent minus the deduction was not the best rent reasonably obtainable, and therefore the lease was void as against the remaindermen. Pumford v. Butler & Co., 83 L. J. Ch. 858; [1914] 2 Ch. 353; 111 L. T. 408; 78 J. P. 457; 58 S. J. 655; 30 T. L. R. 556—Joyce, J.

Insurance of Licence—Covenant by Lessee—Loss or Forfeiture of Licence—Loss by Reason of Redundancy.]—Where a lease of a public house has been granted since the provisions of the Licensing Act, 1904, for compensation, in the event of the renewal being refused on the ground of redundancy, came into operation, a covenant by the lessee to insure against the loss or forfeiture of the licence is performed by his insuring merely against loss or forfeiture through any act on his part, but not against loss by reason of redundancy. Wootton v. Lichfield Brewery Co., 59 S. J. 744; 31 T. L. R. 615—Astbury, J. Affirmed, 32 T. L. R. 50—C.A.

Attempt to Create Property in Licence Apart from Premises.]—By an agreement dated July 5, 1892, purporting to be made between the plaintiffs, a brewery company, and the defendant, the occupier of a house in D. street in the borough of C., it was recited that the company were beneficial owners of a licence for a house in B. street, and that the defendant had requested the company to allow her to apply for a transfer of the licence to the house in D. street to her own name, and to sell thereunder, to which the company agreed on her undertaking to pay them the sum of 300*l.* secured by a bond executed by her contemporaneously, and the defendant thereby agreed to take all necessary steps to have the licence transferred to her own name, and to the house in D. street, and to maintain the licence in full force, and renew it, and to indorse and deposit it with the company, to be transferred by her to such other person and house as the company might name, the 300*l.* to be repaid to defendant on such transfer being obtained from the licensing authority. The defendant further agreed, while licensed, to deal exclusively with the company for all porter and for all stout so long as they should brew and vend stout, which she should sell on the premises or elsewhere under colour of the licence, and also to purchase from the company four tierces of porter in every month, and the company agreed to supply her while licensed with such quantity of good merchantable porter, and, so long as the company should brew and vend stout, such quantity of good merchantable stout as she might require, on being paid in cash therefor the price usually charged to customers. The agreement was executed by the defendant under seal, but was not executed by the company. The company had purchased the licence of the house in B. street (apart from the house itself) for 160*l.* in 1891, and the defendant had obtained at quarter sessions an interim transfer of this licence to the house in D. street at the licensing sessions in June, 1892, which was confirmed at the annual licensing sessions in October, 1892. The defendant dealt with the company for porter, but only to a very small extent for stout, which she procured almost exclusively from another brewery, and in 1907 she entered into an agreement with this other brewery to sell its bottled stout exclusively. Throughout there was painted on the outside of her shop "J. L. Murphy & Co.'s XX Stout." The plaintiffs were aware for a long time that the defendant was selling some stout of the other brewery, but did not know that she was selling it in large quantities till shortly before bringing the present action, which claimed damages for breach of the agreement of July 9, 1892, and an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling porter and stout other than that manufactured by the plaintiffs. The defendant pleaded want of, and illegality of, consideration, unreasonable restraint of trade, laches, and acquiescence. There was no plea that the agreement, apart from the consideration, was illegal:—Held, that the action should be dismissed. Per O'Brien, L.C., and Holmes, L.J.: The dominant object of the agreement was an attempt to create property in a licence apart from the premises, in contravention of the licensing laws, and the agreement was therefore illegal and not enforceable. Per Palles, C.B.: Illegality pervaded the entire agreement—both the consideration and the promises. Held, further, that as the illegality of the agreement appeared on its face it was not necessary that such illegality should have been pleaded. Murphy & Co. v. Crean, [1915] 1 Ir. R. 111—C.A.

Excise Duty—Intoxicating Liquor Supplied in Registered Club—Basis on which Duty Payable.]—The Excise duty of sixpence imposed upon every registered club by section 48, sub-section 1 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, in respect of every pound of intoxicating liquor purchased by the club is to be paid on the actual price paid by the club for such intoxicating liquor, notwithstanding that in such price there may be included a duty already paid by the merchant from whom the club purchased the liquor. Callaway v. Regem, 108 L. T. 1029; 29 T. L. R. 603—Atkin, J.

Club Struck off Register—Power to Re-register — "Unregistered club."] — A club, struck off the register of clubs under the provisions of section 95, sub-section 1 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, cannot be re-registered, and therefore the sale of liquor on the premises of such club is a sale on the premises of an "unregistered club," as defined in section 110, within the meaning of section 93, sub-section 1. Lees v. Lovie, 81 L. J. K.B. 978; [1912] 2 K.B. 425; 107 L. T. 165; 76 J. P. 372; 23 Cox C.C. 92; 28 T. L. R. 441—D.

Sale to Members of Club—Intoxicating Liquor Property of Members of Club.]—The appellants were the officers carrying on a club which was duly registered under the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, and the property of which was by the rules vested in trustees representing and acting for the whole of the members of the club. The club was struck off the register for twelve months on the ground that it had not been conducted in good faith as a club. The appellants were summoned for selling intoxicating liquor by retail which they were not licensed to sell on a date before the club was struck off the register. The magistrate found that the intoxicating liquor formed part of the general property of the club vested in trustees on behalf of the members of the club. He also found that the club was not a bona fide club, but was conducted solely for the purpose of enabling frequenters of the club to purchase intoxicating liquors in a place other than in a licensed house and during prohibited hours:—Held, that, having regard to the finding of the magistrate, there had been no sale by retail by the appellants of intoxicating liquor within the meaning of section 65 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, but merely a distribution of the property of the club among the members to whom it belonged. Metford v. Edwards, 84 L. J. K.B. 161; [1915] 1 K.B. 172; 112 L. T. 78; 79 J. P. 84; 30 T. L. R. 700—D.

Distribution of Liquor, the Property of the Club, among Members of the Club, at Place other than Club Premises.]—A supper and smoking concert for the members of a club, which was registered under section 91 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, was held at a place other than the club premises. A supply of intoxicating liquor, belonging to the club, was taken to that place by certain members of the club, and there distributed only to the members of the club, in the same way as it was distributed at the club:—Held, that the fact that the distribution of the liquor among the members of the club took place at a place other than the club premises did not make the distribution a sale of intoxicating liquor by retail, so as to constitute an offence under section 65 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910. Quære, whether an offence had been committed under section 94 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, if the appellants had been prosecuted under that section. Humphrey v. Tudgay, 84 L. J. K.B. 242; [1915] 1 K.B. 119; 112 L. T. 152; 79 J. P. 93—D.

Sale, Supply, or Consumption of Intoxicating Liquor—Suspension—Suspension "at an hour earlier than nine at night"—Approval of Order by Secretary of State.]—By section 1, sub-section 1 of the Intoxicating Liquor (Temporary Restriction) Act, 1914, "The licensing justices for any licensing district may, . . . by order direct that the sale or consumption of intoxicating liquor on the premises of any persons holding any retailers' licence . . . and the supply or consumption of intoxicating liquor in any registered club . . . shall be suspended while the order is in operation, during such hours and subject to such conditions or exceptions (if any) as may be specified in the order: Provided that, if any such order suspends the sale, supply, or consumption of intoxicating liquor at an hour earlier than nine at night, the order shall not have effect until approved by the Secretary of State." Licensing Justices made an order under the above section providing that the sale or consumption of intoxicating liquor on the premises of persons holding retailers' licences, and the supply or consumption of such liquor in registered clubs, should be suspended "in the evening of each day after the hour of 10 o'clock until 6 A.M. on the following day being a week day and 12.30 P.M. on the following day being a Sunday":—Held, that the object of the Act was to put licensed premises and registered clubs on the same footing with regard to restrictions on the sale and supply of intoxicating liquor; that the order meant that, in regard both to licensed premises and registered clubs, there should be a suspension from 10 P.M. till the normal opening hour of licensed premises the next morning; and that it did not come within the proviso to section 1, and did not therefore require the approval of the Secretary of State. Lee v. Aykroyd, 84 L. J. K.B. 1831; [1915] 2 K.B. 692; 113 L. T. 454; 79 J. P. 381; 31 T. L. R. 445—D.

Guest of Lodger—Using Licensed Premises merely for Obtaining Liquor.]—By section 62, sub-section 1 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, "If, during any period during which any premises are required under the provisions of this Act, to be closed, any person is found on those premises, he shall, unless he satisfies the Court that he was an inmate, servant, or a lodger on the premises, or a bona fide traveller, or that otherwise his presence on the premises was not in contravention of the provisions of this Act with respect to closing hours, be liable in respect of each offence to a fine not exceeding forty shillings." The appellant's cousin was staying at licensed premises as an ordinary hotel guest or lodger, and he invited the appellant and some friends to have a drink at the hotel during closing hours. The appellant was found on the premises after closing time drinking whisky which had been ordered and paid for by his cousin. Upon the hearing of an information against the appellant charging him under the above section with being unlawfully on licensed premises at a time when they were required to be closed, he was convicted and fined by the Justices:—Held, that the onus was on the appellant of satisfying the Justices that his presence on the premises was not in contravention of the Act, and that they were justified on the evidence in convicting him. Atkins v. Agar, 83 L. Definition—Order for Judicial Separation by Justices.]—Justices are not entitled to find that a person is a habitual drunkard within the meaning of the Habitual Drunkards Act, 1879, unless they are satisfied that by reason of the habitual intemperance the person charged is dangerous at times to himself or herself or to others, or is incapable of managing himself or herself and his or her affairs. It is necessary to prove that, though a person may be excessively intemperate and violent at times, the acts of violence were brought about by reason of the intemperance. Tayler v. Tayler, 56 S. Land Purchase Acts—Appeal to House of Lords.]—Section 24, sub-section 13 of the Irish Land Act, 1903, does not of itself create or enact a right of appeal to the House of Lords. Scottish Widows' Fund Life Assurance Society v. Blennerhassett, 81 L. J. P.C. 160; [1912] A.C. 281; 106 L. T. 4; 28 T. L. R. 187—H.L. (Ir.)

Local Government—Improvement Scheme—Letting of Cottages Erected under Scheme—Preference to Labourer Signing Representation.]—The provision in section 29, sub-section 2 of the Labourers (Ireland) Act, 1906, that, on the first letting of any cottage or allotment comprised in an improvement scheme under the Act, preference shall be given to the agricultural labourers who have signed the representation on which the scheme was founded, does not give to any such labourer a right to any particular cottage, but the district council have a discretion in allotting cottages among applicants. Marron v. Cootehill Rural Council, 84 L. J. P.C. 125; [1915] A.C. 792; 79 J. P. 401—H.L. (Ir.)

Marriage—Celebration by a Roman Catholic Priest—Whether Statute Extra-territorial in Operation.]—The Irish statute 19 Geo. 2. c. 13, which enacted that every marriage after the year 1746 celebrated between a Papist and any Protestant, or between two Protestants, if celebrated by a Roman Catholic priest, should be null and void, was not extra-territorial in its operation, and did not, while it was in force, affect a marriage celebrated in a foreign country. Where, therefore, while that Act was in force a marriage was celebrated in Austria between A, a Protestant and domiciled Irishman, and B, who was an Austrian and a Roman Catholic, by a Roman Catholic priest in facie ecclesiæ, the marriage being valid according to Austrian law,—Held, that the marriage in Austria was not avoided by 19 Geo. 2. c. 13, and therefore that A could not, while B was alive, contract a valid marriage with another woman. Swifte v. Att.-Gen. for Ireland (No. 1), 81 L. J. P.C. 158; [1912] A.C. 276; 106 L. T. 3; 28 T. L. R. 199—H.L. (Ir.)

A. JURISDICTION AND DUTY.

1. GENERALLY.

Priority of Jurisdiction.]—The settled rule as to the jurisdiction of Justices is, that in each particular case it attaches to the first set of Justices duly authorised who have possession and cognisance of the facts. Rex v. Cork Justices, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 151—K.B. D.

Justices for County—Petty Sessional Divisions — Sale of Milk — Place of Delivery to Purchaser.] — By section 20 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, proceedings for the recovery of a penalty for an offence against a provision of the Act may be taken "before any justices in petty sessions assembled having jurisdiction in the place where the article or drug sold was actually delivered to the purchaser, in a summary manner":—Held, that where an article sold is actually delivered to a purchaser in one petty sessional division of a county, Justices who usually sit and act in another division of that county have jurisdiction to adjudicate upon an information for an offence under the Act. Held, also, that a county Justice who usually sits and acts in one petty sessional division of the county has jurisdiction to issue a summons for an offence under the Act, although the article sold was actually delivered to the purchaser in another division of the county. Rex v. Beacontree Justices; Rex v. Wright, 84 L. J. K.B. 2230; [1915] 3 K.B. 388; 79 J. P. 461; 13 L. G. R. 1094; 31 T. L. R. 509—D.

2. Where Disqualified from Acting.

See also Vol. VIII. 543, 1784.

Bias—Application for Renewal of Licence—Justice a Member of Order of Rechabites.]—The renewal of a licence having been refused by the compensation authority by a majority, one of the Justices wrote a letter to a newspaper giving the names of those who voted for and those who voted against the granting of the renewal. Among those stated in that letter to have voted for the granting of the renewal was W. W. thereupon wrote a letter to the same newspaper contradicting this statement, and adding, "I should be nothing less than a traitor, considering the position I hold, if I had voted as he states in his letter." It appeared that W. had been for many years the secretary of a branch of the Order of Rechabites, and as a member of that society he had signed the following declaration: "I hereby declare that I will abstain from all intoxicating liquors . . . I will not engage in the traffic of them, but in all possible ways will discountenance the use, manufacture, and sale of them." On an application for a rule nisi for a mandamus to hear and determine the application for the renewal according to law, on the ground that there was evidence of bias on the part of W. in considering the application,—Held (Kennedy, L.J., dissenting), that the rule for a mandamus must be made absolute, inasmuch as the circumstances were such as to make bias so probable that W. ought not to have taken part in the case. Robinson, Ex parte, 76 J. P. 233; 28 T. L. R. 288—C.A.

—— Member Belonging to Society Pledged to Prohibition Principles.]—The mere fact of belonging to a temperance society pledged to the principle of "no licence in any form under any circumstances for the sale of liquors to be used as a beverage," does not operate as a disqualification for sitting as a member of a licensing Court. M'Geehen v. Knox, [1913] S. C. 688—Ct. of Sess.

Statutory Disqualification—Court of Summary Jurisdiction — Acquittal — Order — Voidable, not Void — Certiorari to Quash Acquittal.]—Two miners were charged before a Court of summary jurisdiction with an offence under the Coal Mines Act, 1911. An order of acquittal was made by the Justices, one of whom was disqualified from acting as a member of the Court by section 103 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, as he was a person employed in a mine:—Held, that the order of acquittal could not be quashed on certiorari —per Ridley, J., upon the ground that the accused had stood in peril of conviction, the order of the Justices being voidable only and not void, and that therefore the maxim Nemo debet bis vexari applied; per Scrutton, J., upon the ground that otherwise the accused would be prevented from raising the plea of autrefois acquit if subsequent proceedings were taken against them; per Bailhache, J., upon the ground that the acquittal was by a competent tribunal notwithstanding that one of its members was disqualified. Rex v. Simpson; Smithson, Ex parte, 83 L. J. K.B. 233; [1914] 1 K.B. 66; 110 L. T. 67; 78 J. P. 55; 23 Cox C.C. 739; 58 S. J. 99; 30 T. L. R. 31—D.

—— Certiorari—Affidavit in Support of Rule —Sufficiency.]—By section 15 of the Bread Act, 1836, "no person who shall follow or be concerned in the business of a miller, mealman, or baker shall be capable of acting or shall be allowed to act as a justice of the peace under this Act . . ." The applicant for a rule for a writ of certiorari had been convicted by a Court of summary jurisdiction of selling bread otherwise than by weight, contrary to section 4 of the Bread Act, 1836. The affidavit in support of the rule stated that, upon the hearing of the information, one of the Justices had sat and acted as chairman of the Court, he being at the time concerned in the business of a baker. It did not, however, state that at the time of the hearing the applicant had no knowledge of the alleged disqualification of the Justice:—Held, that as the affidavit did not state that at the time of the hearing the applicant was ignorant of the facts giving rise to the disqualification he was precluded from claiming a certiorari ex debito justitiæ; that the granting of a rule was therefore discretionary, and must, under the special circumstances of the case, be refused. Rex v. Williams; Phillips, Ex parte, 83 L. J. K.B. 528; [1914] 1 K.B. 608; 110 L. T. 372; 78 J. P. 148—D.

Interest.]—If, on an application to bring up, for the purpose of being quashed, a conviction on the ground that one of the Justices was interested in the matter of the conviction, it appears that the applicant for the certiorari, or his solicitor, knew the Justice's position and did not take objection to his sitting, the Court will refuse to grant the writ. Rex v. Byles; Hollidge, Ex parte, 108 L. T. 270; 77 J. P. 40; 23 Cox C.C. 314—D.

Interested Justice—Conduct Calculated to Lead Public to Think he was Taking Part in Adjudicating.] — U. was prosecuted before Justices for having on his premises purloined yarn. The prosecution was brought by the direction of a linen trade association, and on the complaint of their inspector. When the case came on, U.'s solicitor objected to any magistrate taking part in the proceedings who was a member of the association. M., who was one of the Justices, and was presiding as chairman, stated that he was a member of the association, but that he had no personal interest and would adjudicate. At the close of the statement of the complainant's case, and before any evidence was given, M. left the chair and took his seat on the bench some distance from the other magistrates. After a short time he left the bench and went into the magistrates' room, and was there when the other magistrates came in to consider their decision, but at once retired. He took no part in the adjudication. U. was convicted of the offence charged:—Held, that the conviction must be quashed, with costs to be paid by M. Rex v. Armagh Justices, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 410 —K.B. D.

Refusal of Admission to Court by Justice.]—C. was arrested on a warrant charged with an indictable offence, and brought before E., a Justice of the peace for the county of the city of Belfast, who had been asked by the Crown Solicitor to take the depositions. E. sat in a room in the police station, and on the request of the Crown Solicitor made an order excluding all persons except representatives of the accused. Several other Justices for the county of the city of Belfast endeavoured to enter the room, but were refused admission. C.'s solicitor applied to E. to admit the other magistrates, but E. refused to do so, giving as a reason that he was guided by the Crown, and directed by the Crown not to allow the other magistrates to be present. C. having applied for a writ of prohibition to prohibit E. from proceeding further in the matter on the ground of bias,—Held, while entirely acquitting E. of any moral blame, that a reasonable public might think that the expression used by E. implied that in making his order he was acting by the direction of the Crown and not exercising his own discretion, and that the writ of prohibition should be granted. Rex v. Emerson, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 377—K.B. D.

Costs.]—The case of E. having been taken up on his behalf by the Crown,—Held, that there was no power to give costs against the Crown. Ib.

Function of Justices in Returning for Trial.]—The function of Justices in returning for trial is judicial, and prohibition will lie if bias or want of jurisdiction is established. Rex v. Davison, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 342—K.B. D.

3. Where Claim of Right Set up.

See also Vol. VIII. 553, 1789.

Assault—Claim of Title to Land—Title not Disputed.]—The appellant, the chairman of the managers of a voluntary school, ordered one of the pupils to leave the school for alleged disobedience, and directed the head mistress to take her name off the register. Upon subsequently visiting the school the appellant found the girl there, sitting at a desk in the room of the head mistress. He told the girl to leave the school, and as she did not obey, he forcibly removed her from the school to the highway, and locked the gate to prevent her from returning. Upon an information charging the appellant with assault, he contended that, after the directions he had given, the girl had no right in law to attend the school, and was a trespasser; that he had sole control of the school; that a question of title had arisen, and that under section 46 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, the jurisdiction of the Justices was ousted:—Held, that, assuming that the appellant was a trustee of the school, and that in acting as he did he was asserting a title to, or an interest in land, yet it was a title which was not disputed, and that therefore the jurisdiction of the Justices was not ousted. Lucan v. Barrett, 84 L. J. K.B. 2130; 113 L. T. 737; 79 J. P. 463; 13 L. G. R. 1361; 31 T. L. R. 508—D.

Private Oyster Bed—Fishing—Right of Public.]—Under section 19 of the Ipswich Fishery Act, 1867, the oyster fishery in the river Orwell and the oysters in the river were to be deemed to belong to the Ipswich Corporation, and they were given power by section 20 to demise and lease the oyster fishery. The Act also provided that the lessee under such lease should have the exclusive right of depositing, propagating, dredging, and fishing for and taking oysters in the river; and that all oysters in the river should, during any such lease, be the absolute property of the lessee and be deemed to be in his possession. The Ipswich Corporation demised the oyster fishery to the respondent, who marked out the oyster beds by buoys. The appellant, who had fished with a trawl within the limits of the oyster bed so marked out, was charged with an offence under section 53 of the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, which forbids any person other than the owner of a private oyster bed, within the limits of such bed, knowingly to use any instrument of fishing, except a line and hook or a net adapted solely for catching floating fish, and so used as not to disturb or injure in any manner any oyster bed. The appellant alleged that, as the river was an arm of the sea, the members of the public had the right to fish in the river, which right was not defeated by the lease to the respondent, and that therefore the jurisdiction of the Justices was ousted by that claim of right:—Held, that the right set up by the appellant was one which could not exist in law, having regard to the terms of the Ipswich Fishery Act, 1867, and the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, and that therefore the jurisdiction of the Justices was not ousted; and further, that the fact that the appellant honestly believed that he had the right to fish in that manner did not prevent his being convicted, as a guilty mind was not a necessary ingredient of the offence. Smith v. Cooke, 84 L. J. K.B. 959; 112 L. T. 864; 79 J. P. 245—D.

Railway—Right of Way.]—Where in a case before Justices a claim of right is raised, and, as part of the enquiry whether there is such a right, a question of fact has to be decided, and in the event of a certain finding of fact there is a legal possibility of the existence of the right, the jurisdiction of the Justices is ousted; but if on the admitted facts it appears certain that the right claimed cannot legally exist, their jurisdiction is not ousted. Arnold v. Morgan, 80 L. J. K.B. 955; [1911] 2 K.B. 314; 103 L. T. 763; 75 J. P. 105; 9 L. G. R. 917—D.

The respondent was summoned for trespassing on a railway, and, before the Justices, claimed a right as a member of the public to pass to and fro on the railway. The railway was only used for goods traffic:—Held, that, as the railway company had the power to dedicate a right of way to the public along their railway, provided that the user of the right was not incompatible with the user of the railway as a railway, and that the question whether it was incompatible or not was a question of fact depending on the particular circumstances, and as it was legally possible for such a right to exist if the facts were found in favour of the respondent, the jurisdiction of the Justices was ousted. Ib.

Obstruction of Street.]—On a prosecution for obstruction to the public street of the town of M., there was evidence that the act complained of as an obstruction was the exposing for sale, during a public fair held in the streets of M., of goods on the pavement; that the same class of goods had been sold at such fairs in the public street twenty years before; and that public fairs had been held in the streets of the town for twenty years and upwards. The defendant in the prosecution claimed before the Justices the right so to expose her goods, but was convicted and fined. Upon motion for certiorari,—Held, that on the evidence it might be inferred that the dedication of the street was subject to the right to hold thereon public fairs at stated intervals, that there was evidence that the defendant had the right to sell her goods as a member of the public at such public fair, and that there was consequently a bona fide claim of right on her part to do the acts complained of as an obstruction, which claim being material to their decision ousted the jurisdiction of the Justices. Rex v. Cork Justices, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 391—K.B. D.

When there is a bona fide claim of right material to the decision, as the Justices have no jurisdiction to determine the existence of the right, they have no jurisdiction to determine whether, in the case before them, there has been an excessive user of the alleged right. Ib.

Removing Shingle.]—The Board of Trade, in pursuance of the powers conferred upon them by the Harbours Act, 1814, as amended by the Harbours Transfer Act, 1862, issued an order prohibiting the taking or removing of any shingle or ballast from the shores or banks of the sea between certain points. The appellant, the owner in fee of the locus in quo, prosecuted the respondent, one of his agricultural tenants, for having, in contravention of the statute, removed ballast from the shore within the points indicated in the order of the Board of Trade. The defence set up by the respondent was, that as tenant he had always drawn gravel and sand off the foreshore and that he enjoyed a right of property within the meaning of section 28 of the Act of 1814. The magistrates declined jurisdiction on the ground that a bona fide question of title was involved: —Held, that the magistrates were right in declining jurisdiction. Burton v. Hudson (78 L. J. K.B. 905; [1909] 2 K.B. 564) followed. Anderson v. Jacobs (93 L. T. 17) distinguished. Talbot de Malahide (Lord) v. Dunne, [1914] 2 Ir. R. 125—K.B. D.

Order to Enter into Recognisances to Keep the Peace.]—The question whether Justices have power to order defendants to enter into recognizances to keep the peace where a bona fide question of title is raised, considered. Rex v. Londonderry Justices, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 374—K.B. D.

4. Matters Within.

See also Vol. VIII. 568, 1792.

Power to Order Person to Enter into Recognisances and Find Sureties.] — Under the statute 34 Edw. 3, c. 1, Justices have power to make an order binding over a person, and requiring him to find sureties for his good behaviour, and, in default of his so doing, to order him to be imprisoned; and they make that order notwithstanding that no complainant has stated on oath that he is under actual fear of bodily harm from the person sought to be bound over. Lansbury v. Riley, 83 L. J. K.B. 1226; [1914] 3 K.B. 229; 109 L. T. 546; 77 J. P. 440; 23 Cox C.C. 582; 29 L. T. R. 733—D.

The fact that threats, or an assault, which would authorise Justices in requiring sureties for the peace and good behaviour, arose by reason of a bona fide dispute as to title does not oust the jurisdiction of the Justices to require such sureties. Rex v. Monaghan Justices, [1914] 2 Ir. R. 156—K.B. D.

An order of Justices, setting out a complaint that the defendant used threatening language to the complainant, thereby putting him in fear and dread of the defendant, and ordering the defendant to enter into recognizances to keep the peace and be of good behaviour, sufficiently shews on its face jurisdiction to make such order. Rex v. Londonderry Justices ([1912] 2 Ir. R. 374) explained. Ib.

The applicant was called upon on June 26, 1909, at the instance of the chief constable of Liverpool to shew cause why he should not be ordered to find sureties to keep the peace and to be of good behaviour. The information of the chief constable stated that the applicant had informed him that he intended to lead a parade of his Bible class through certain streets of Liverpool on Sunday, June 27, and that the chief constable apprehended and believed that if the applicant did so the natural consequence would be a breach of the peace, riot, and disorder. Upon the applicant undertaking at the hearing not to hold a procession on Sunday, June 27, he was released on bail. At the adjourned hearing on July 1 the chief constable expressed his willingness to withdraw the proceedings as the proposed object had been attained—namely, the prevention of the procession on June 27—but the magistrate refused to allow this unless the applicant would enter into his own recognizances to keep the peace and to be of good behaviour, and he made an order accordingly, or, in the alternative, that the applicant should go to prison for four months. The applicant refused to enter into the recognizances. A rule nisi having been obtained calling upon the magistrate to shew cause why he should not state a Case, the magistrate filed an affidavit in which he stated that the applicant had been twice previously directed to find sureties to keep the peace; that serious sectarian riots had taken place in Liverpool on June 5 and 20 in connection with processions of the applicant's Bible class; that the chief constable had reasonable grounds for anticipating a breach of the peace if the procession had taken place on June 27; that a few days previously the applicant had, in addressing a meeting, used insulting language with reference to Roman Catholics; that between the date of granting the warrant against the applicant and his decision he had had to hear charges against numbers of rioters animated by sectarian animosities; and that he could not use any discretion in favour of a person who had acted as the applicant had done:—Held, that the rule nisi must be discharged; that the magistrate had ample grounds for saying that he would not be satisfied with anything less than the applicant entering into his recognizances to be of good behaviour; and that he was justified in refusing to state a Case. Rex v. Little; Wise, Ex parte, 101 L. T. 859; 74 J. P. 7; 22 Cox C.C. 225; 26 T. L. R. 8—D.

Criminal Libel—Civil Proceedings Pending—Injunction Granted against Publication.]—Proceedings were taken in the High Court in which L. claimed an injunction restraining E. from publishing certain defamatory statements. An interim injunction was granted, and subsequently E. gave an undertaking not to publish any further defamatory statements in relation to L. E. having afterwards published further statements of the same character alleged to be libellous, L. laid an information before a Metropolitan police magistrate charging E. with publishing a criminal libel. E. applied for a rule for a writ of prohibition directed to the magistrate on the ground that L., having chosen his civil remedy, was precluded from proceeding criminally in respect of the same subject-matter:—Held, refusing a rule, that the magistrate had jurisdiction to enquire whether E. had published a criminal libel. Edgar, Ex parte, 77 J. P. 283; 29 T. L. R. 278—D.

5. Withdrawal of Justice from Adjudicating.

Court Consisting of Stipendiary Magistrate and Justice of Peace—Court Differing in Opinion—Acquiescence by Justice—Magistrate Adjudicating Alone.] — The applicant appeared before a Court of summary jurisdiction on a charge under the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, the Court consisting of a stipendiary magistrate and a Justice of the peace. After the evidence had been heard the Justice discussed the matter privately with the magistrate and said that the evidence, in his opinion, would not justify a conviction. The magistrate was satisfied that the case for the prosecution was made out, and expressed this view to the Justice, adding that he would take upon himself the burden of adjudicating alone on the case. Thereupon the Justice said "Very well," and the magistrate then convicted the applicant of the offence, saying that he alone was responsible for the decision, and that the Justice was not a party thereto:—Held, that what took place amounted to a withdrawal by the Justice from being a party to the decision, and that the magistrate, having jurisdiction to decide the case himself, the conviction was valid. Rex v. Thomas; O'Hare, Ex parte, 83 L. J. K.B. 351; [1914] 1 K.B. 32; 109 L. T. 929; 78 J. P. 55; 23 Cox C.C. 687—D.

B. PROCEDURE BEFORE.

1. Information.

See also Vol. VIII. 578, 1796.

Information on Behalf of Corporation—Malicious Damage—Right of Private Individual to Prosecute.] — The appellant, on behalf of the Mayor and Corporation of London, preferred an information against the respondents under section 22 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, for damaging a tree, the property of the Corporation. The appellant was not formally authorised by the Corporation to prefer the information. Before the Justices it was contended by the respondents that as the information was laid on behalf of a corporate body it could only be laid by an attorney duly appointed under the common seal or warrant of the Corporation. The Justices upheld this contention and dismissed the information:—Held, that any person could prefer an information for such an offence, that the words in the information "on behalf of" the Corporation might either be treated as surplusage or as shewing that the appellant prosecuted because the property was that of the Corporation, and therefore that the Justices were wrong in dismissing the information. Duchesne v. Finch, 107 L. T. 412; 76 J. P. 377; 10 L. G. R. 559; 23 Cox C.C. 170; 28 T. L. R. 440—D.

Husband and Wife Charged Jointly in one Information—Old Age Pension—Making False Representations for the Purpose of Obtaining Old Age Pension.]—A husband and wife, who make a false representation for the purpose of obtaining an old age pension for the wife, can be charged jointly in one information with the offence, under section 9, sub-section 1 of the Old Age Pensions Act, 1908, of making a false representation for the purpose of obtaining an old age pension, inasmuch as the information does not charge two separate offences, but merely charges two persons with committing the same offence. MacPhail v. Jones, 83 L. J. K.B. 1185; [1914] 3 K.B. 239; 111 L. T. 547; 78 J. P. 367; 12 L. G. R. 1237; 24 Cox C.C. 373; 30 T. L. R. 542—D.

2. Summons.

See also Vol. VIII. 581, 1797.

Absence of Seal—Objection to Validity.]—The absence of a seal from a summons issued by a Justice of the peace upon an information or complaint is merely a defect in form, to which, by section 1 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, objection cannot be taken. Rex v. Garrett-Pegge; Brown, Ex parte, 80 L. J. K.B. 609; [1911] 1 K.B. 880; 104 L. T. 649; 75 J. P. 169; 22 Cox C.C. 445; 27 T. L. R. 187—D.

Per Hamilton, J.: A summons must, in order to comply with the Summary Jurisdiction Acts and Rules, have a seal affixed to it.

Per Avory, J. : Whether a summons need be sealed in order to comply with the Summary Jurisdiction Acts and Rules, quære. Ib.

Service of—"Place of abode"—Estoppel.]—"Place of abode" in section 1 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, does not include a shop where the person sought to be served does not reside. A shopkeeper informed an inspector under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act on the purchase of a sample that the shop was his private address and he lived there. As a fact he resided elsewhere, and summonses were served by a police officer on the wife of the tenant of one of the flats in the building of which the shop formed the ground floor. The shopkeeper had no knowledge of any proceedings until after he had been convicted :—Held, that the service was bad; and, further, that the shopkeeper was not estopped from setting up such bad service, as there was no evidence that he made the statement to the inspector for the purpose of avoiding service. Rex v. Lilley; Taylor, Ex parte, 104 L. T. 77; 75 J. P. 95—D.

—— Last or Usual Place of Abode—Lodger only.]—The house where a defendant lodged for a period of six weeks while temporarily employed on work therein is not "his last or most usual place of abode" within the meaning of these words in section 12, sub-section 3 of the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851 (cf. section 1 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848), and to leave a copy of a summons at such house two days after the defendant has ceased to reside there is not sufficient service. Rex v. Cork Justices, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 258—K.B. D.

The expression "place of abode" in section 1 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, means the person's place of residence. Service of a summons by leaving the same for him at his lock-up office is therefore not good service. Rex v. Rhodes; McVittie, Ex parte, 79 J. P. 527—D.

Withdrawal of Summons—Effect of.]—An order of Justices permitting a summons for an offence punishable on summary conviction to be withdrawn does not amount to an acquittal of the defendant, and a fresh summons may subsequently be issued for the same offence. Statement in Pickavance v. Pickavance (70 L. J. P. 14, at p. 15; [1901] P. 60, at p. 63), that the withdrawal of a summons puts an end to the complaint, dissented from. Rex v. Tyrone Justices, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 44—K.B. D.

The withdrawal of a summons owing to a technical informality in the proceedings is not equivalent to a dismissal of the summons which could be pleaded in bar to subsequent proceedings for the same offence. Davis v. Morton, 82 L. The occupier of a beerhouse was charged under section 1 of the Betting Act, 1853, with using his house for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto. During the hearing of the information it was discovered that he had not been informed at the commencement of the hearing of his right to be tried by a jury, and the summons was thereupon withdrawn. A further information was subsequently preferred against the same person under the same section for using his house for the purpose of moneys being received by him for the consideration of assurances to pay sums of money on the happening of certain events—namely, the winning of horse races. The evidence on the hearing of the second summons was substantially the same as that given on the hearing of the first summons : —Held, that the withdrawal of the first summons was no bar to the subsequent proceedings. Ib.

Evidence—Enquiry Commenced before One Magistrate and Completed before Another Magistrate—Reading Depositions to Witnesses.]—Where a preliminary enquiry on a criminal charge has been commenced before one magistrate and is completed before another magistrate, the second magistrate, if in his discretion he deems it advisable to do so, may, instead of taking the evidence de novo, recall the witnesses, have them re-sworn, read their depositions over to them (including not only their examination-in-chief, but also their cross-examination and re-examination), with instructions that they should correct them if necessary and then allow counsel further to examine and cross-examine the witnesses. Bottomley, Ex parte, 78 L. J. K.B. 547; [1909] 2 K.B. 14; 100 L. T. 782; 73 J. P. 246; 22 Cox C.C. 106; 25 T. L. R. 371—D.

Reception of Unsworn Evidence—Mis-trial—Re-hearing of Case on Same Day—Second Conviction—Validity of Second Hearing.]—The applicant was charged before a Metropolitan police magistrate with assaulting a police constable in the execution of his duty. The evidence of one of the two police constables who gave evidence in support of the charge was given without the police constable having been sworn. No evidence was called on behalf of the applicant, and the magistrate on this evidence convicted the applicant. The attention of the magistrate having been called to the fact that some of the evidence given against the applicant had not been given on oath, he, on the same day, and before the conviction on the first hearing had been drawn up, re-heard the case, when the police constable was duly sworn and evidence given on behalf of the applicant. The magistrate upon the evidence before him on the second hearing again convicted the applicant :—Held, that the first hearing was a mis-trial, and that as a conviction on the first hearing could have been quashed owing to the improper reception of unsworn evidence, the applicant never was in peril on that hearing, and was not entitled to plead autrefois convict upon the second hearing, and that therefore she was properly convicted upon the second hearing. Rex v. Marsham : Pethiek Lawrence, Ex parte, 81 L. J. K.B. 957; [1912] 2 K.B. 362; 107 L. T. 89; 76 J. P. 284; 23 Cox C.C. 77; 28 T. L. R. 391—D.

Dealing with Case Summarily — Duty of Justices.]—Semble, it is not necessary for Justices when they ask a person charged with an indictable offence whether he will be dealt with summarily, to inform him that if he elects to be dealt with summarily he thereby loses his right of appeal. Walker v. Morgan, 76 J. P. 325—D.

Declaration of Objection by Accused to be Tried by Court of Summary Jurisdiction—Right to be Tried by Jury.]—Section 9 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, gives to a person charged before a Court of summary jurisdiction with an offence made punishable by that Act, and for which a penalty of 20*l.* or imprisonment may be imposed, the right of making a declaration of his objection to being tried by a Court of summary jurisdiction to have such objection entertained, and that thereupon the Court are bound to exercise the power given to them by the section and deal with the case in all respects as if the person were charged with an indictable offence and not an offence punishable on summary conviction. Rex v. Mitchell; Livesey, Ex parte, 82 L. J. K.B. 153; [1913] 1 K.B. 561; 108 L. T. 76; 77 J. P. 148; 23 Cox C.C. 273; 29 T. L. R. 157—D.

Right to Trial by Jury — Incorrigible Rogue.]—Section 5 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, provides that Justices in petty sessions may commit incorrigible rogues for detention with hard labour until the next quarter sessions, and by section 10 of the Act quarter sessions may order such offenders to be further imprisoned with hard labour. Section 17 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, provides that a person charged before a Court of summary jurisdiction with an offence for which he is liable to more than three months' imprisonment and which is not an assault may claim to be tried by a jury:—Held, that section 17 of the Act of 1879 only applies when the Justices at petty sessions can pass an actual sentence of more than three months' imprisonment, and therefore that a person convicted as an incorrigible rogue at petty sessions and committed until the next quarter sessions is not entitled to claim a trial by jury, although he may be liable to more than three months' detention owing to the next quarter sessions not being held within that time. Rex v. Evans; Rex v. Connor, 83 L. J. K.B. 905; 110 L. T. 780; 24 Cox C.C. 138; 30 T. L. R. 326—C.C.A.

Decision by Justices to Try Case as Court of Summary Jurisdiction — Decision during Hearing to Commit for Trial—Jurisdiction to Try on Indictment.]—Where Justices have a discretion whether to deal summarily with an accused person, or to commit him for trial, they may exercise that discretion and commit him for trial at any time after all the circumstances of the case are before them. Rex v. Hertfordshire Justices, 80 L. J. K.B. 437; [1911] 1 K.B. 612; 104 L. T. 312; 75 J. P. 91; 22 Cox C.C. 378; 27 T. L. R. 156—D.

The Justices decided to deal with the defendant summarily, but, after all the evidence had been given both for the prosecution and the defence, being of opinion that the case had assumed a serious aspect, they changed their minds and committed him for trial:—Held, that they had power to do so, and that he could be tried on indictment. Ib.

Dismissal of Summons—"Extenuating circumstances."]—On an information laid by the police against the respondent for placing a stall on the footway of a certain street contrary to the provisions of a local Act, it was proved that the stall projected over the footway about sixteen inches, that in the same street there were other stalls projecting over the footpath causing more obstruction than the respondent's stall, and that no proceedings had been instituted against the owners of those other stalls. The Justices dismissed the information under the provisions of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907, owing to the extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed:—Held, that there were extenuating circumstances, and that the Justices were therefore justified in dismissing the information. Dunning v. Trainer, 101 L. 4. Warrants.

Appearance of Defendant by Counsel—Issue of Warrant to Compel Defendant's Personal Attendance—Jurisdiction.]—Where upon the hearing of an information the defendant is represented by counsel, and the Justices decide to convict, they have no jurisdiction to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the defendant, for the purpose of his being identified by witnesses for the prosecution in relation to alleged previous convictions. Rex v. Thompson, 78 L. J. K.B. 1085; [1909] 2 K.B. 614; 100 L. T. 970; 73 J. P. 403; 7 L. G. R. 979; 22 Cox C.C. 129; 25 T. L. R. 651—D.

A summons was taken out against the applicant for exceeding the speed limit with his motor car. The applicant did not appear when the summons was returnable, but he wrote to the prosecutor admitting the offence and offering to pay the fine and all charges. The Justices adjourned the hearing, and notice was given to the applicant that unless he attended a warrant would be granted for his arrest. At the adjourned hearing the applicant was not personally present, but he was represented by a solicitor, who stated that the applicant pleaded guilty and also admitted a previous conviction which the police alleged against him. The police inspector in charge of the case having intimated that he required the applicant's personal attendance, the Justices granted a warrant for his arrest. A rule nisi having been obtained by the applicant to set aside the warrant,—Held, that there was no justification for the issue of the warrant, which therefore must be set aside. Rex v. Brentford Justices; Long, Ex parte, 102 L. Common Assault—Power to Require Defendant to Find Sureties for Good Behaviour.]—When Justices convict summarily of an assault under section 42 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, they may further order the defendant to find sureties for good behaviour. Rex v. Cork Justices, [1912] 2 Ir. 6. Convictions.

See also Vol. VIII. 605, 1808.

No Appointment of Days for Trial of Indictable Offences.]—Conviction of the appellant, who was dealt with summarily on an indictable charge, quashed on the ground that no public notice had been given, in accordance with section 20, sub-section 8 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, of days appointed by the Justices for hearing indictable offences. Walker v. Morgan, 76 J. P. 325—D.

Power to Impose Consecutive Sentences.]—Under section 25 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, Justices before whom a defendant is at one and the same time convicted on several charges have no jurisdiction to impose more than two consecutive sentences. Reg. v. Cutbush (36 L. J. M.C. 70; L. R. 2 Q.B. 379) considered. Rex v. Martin; Smythe, Ex parte, 80 L. J. K.B. 876; [1911] 2 K.B. 450; 105 L. T. 220; 75 J. P. 425; 22 Cox C.C. 560; 27 T. L. R. 460—D.

Informant not Present and not Represented—Offer by Justices to Adjourn—Refusal by Defendant's Solicitor—Waiver.]—Upon the hearing of an information under section 1 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, the defendant was present with his solicitor, but the informant was not present and was not represented by counsel or solicitor. The informant's witnesses were called in support of the charge, and were examined by a police officer. The Court thereupon announced that the case would be adjourned, but the defendant's solicitor stated that he preferred that it should go on. The hearing accordingly proceeded and the defendant was convicted:—Held, that, after the refusal by the defendant's solicitor of the Justices' offer to adjourn, it was not competent to the defendant to object to the conviction, under section 13 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, on the ground that the informant was not present at the hearing. May v. Beeley, 79 L. J. K.B. 852; [1910] 2 K.B. 722; 102 L. T. 326; 74 J. P. 111; 8 L. G. R. 166; 22 Cox C.C. 306—D.

Defendant Charged with One Offence—Four Separate Convictions—Cruelty to Animals—Jurisdiction.]—Upon the hearing of an information under section 2 of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, for ill-treating four ponies, the defendant appeared, and the Justices, after hearing the evidence, convicted him and imposed a fine of 20*l.*, being 5*l.* in respect of each pony. Four separate convictions were subsequently drawn up. It was not intimated to the defendant when he was before the Justices that he had to answer more than one charge, nor that the fine was imposed in respect of more than one conviction:—Held, that, in the absence of notice to the defendant that he was being tried for four offences, the Justices had no jurisdiction to convict him of more than one offence, and that three of the convictions were therefore bad. Rex v. Trafford-Rawson, 78 L. J. K.B. 1156; [1909] 2 K.B. 748; 101 L. T. 463; 73 J. P. 483; 22 Cox C.C. 173; 25 T. L. R. 785—D.

Sale by Unlicensed Person—Non-payment of Fine and no Sufficient Distress—Term of Imprisonment.]—Section 65, sub-section 1 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, prohibits the sale of any intoxicating liquor by retail except by a licensed person, and sub-section 2 enacts that "If any person acts in contravention of this section, he shall be liable . . . in the case of the first offence to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding one month." Section 99, sub-section 1, provides that, "Except as otherwise expressly provided, any offence under this Act may be prosecuted, and every fine or forfeiture may be recovered and enforced, in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts":—Held, that as no method of recovering a fine imposed for a contravention of section 65 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, is provided by that Act, the provisions of section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, apply: and therefore, where a person is convicted under section 65, and a fine exceeding 20*l.* is imposed, he may, on non-payment of the fine and in default of sufficient distress, be sentenced, in accordance with the scale provided by section 5 of the Act of 1879, to a term of imprisonment not exceeding three months. Reg. v. Hopkins (62 L. J. M.C. 57; [1893] 1 Q.B. 621) applied. Rex v. Leach; Fritchley, Ex parte, 82 L. J. K.B. 897; [1913] 3 K.B. 40; 109 L. T. 313; 77 J. P. 255; 23 Cox C.C. 535; 29 T. L. R. 569—D.

Defendant Called as Witness — Cross-examination—Question as to Previous Conviction—Question not Answered—Conviction of Defendant—Validity of Conviction.]—The appellant was charged before a Court of summary jurisdiction with unlawfully assaulting the respondent, and gave evidence on his own behalf. In cross-examination he was asked whether he had been previously convicted of a similar offence. The question was disallowed, but the respondent's solicitor stated that he had a certified copy of the conviction. The Justices convicted the appellant, but stated that the above incident was entirely ignored by them in arriving at their decision: —Held, that, although the question ought not to have been asked, yet as the decision of the Justices was not affected by it, or by the observation of the respondent's solicitor, the conviction was valid. Barker v. Arnold, 80 L. J. K.B. 820; [1911] 2 K.B. 120; 105 L. T. 112; 75 J. P. 364; 22 Cox C.C. 533; 27 T. L. R. 374—D.

Court Consisting of Stipendiary Magistrate and Justice of Peace — Court Differing in Opinion — Acquiescence by Justice — Magistrate Adjudicating Alone.] — The applicant appeared before a Court of summary jurisdiction on a charge under the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, the Court consisting of a stipendiary magistrate and a Justice of the peace. After the evidence had been heard the Justice discussed the matter privately with the magistrate and said that the evidence, in his opinion, would not justify a conviction. The magistrate was satisfied that the case for the prosecution was made out, and expressed this view to the Justice, adding that he would take upon himself the burden of adjudicating alone on the case. Thereupon the Justice said "Very well," and the magistrate then convicted the applicant of the offence, saying that he alone was responsible for the decision, and that the Justice was not a party thereto:—Held, that what took place amounted to a withdrawal by the Justice from being a party to the decision, and that the magistrate, having jurisdiction to decide the case for himself, the conviction was valid. Rex v. Thomas; O'Hare, Ex parte, 83 L. J. K.B. 351; [1914] 1 K.B. 32; 109 L. T. 929; 78 J. P. 55; 23 Cox C.C. 687—D.

Borough Prosecutions—Borough with Separate Commission of the Peace, but no Separate Court of Quarter Sessions.]—A borough with over 10,000 inhabitants had a separate commission of the peace, but no separate Court of quarter sessions. It had the right of appointing and paying for its own police, and it exercised that power by contracting with the county in which the borough was situate for the services of a certain number of police, for whom it paid a fixed sum. Fines imposed by the borough bench under certain statutes which did not provide for their appropriation were retained by the clerk to the Justices for the borough, who, in rendering an account to the county treasurer, deducted the costs of prosecutions undertaken by the police before the borough Justices in cases where such costs were not remitted and were not paid by the parties chargeable:—Held, that such costs were not chargeable to the funds of the county, but must be defrayed out of the borough fund. George v. Thomas, 80 L. C. APPEAL.

1. To High Court.

See also Vol. VIII. 628, 1818.

Power to State Case — Claim for Seamen's Wages—Order of Court—Final Order.]—Section 33, sub-section 1 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, empowers any person aggrieved who desires to question a conviction, order, determination, or other proceeding of a Court of summary jurisdiction, on the ground that it is erroneous in point of law, to apply to the Court to State a Special Case setting forth the facts and the grounds upon which the proceeding is questioned. Section 164 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, provides that "A seaman . . . may as soon as any wages due to him, not exceeding fifty pounds, become payable, sue for the same before a Court of summary jurisdiction in or near the place at which his service has terminated, or at which he has been discharged . . . and the order made by the Court in the matter shall be final":—Held, that, an order made by a Court of summary jurisdiction nnder section 164 of the Act of 1894 for the payment of seamen's wages being a "final" order, a "person aggrieved" is not entitled to appeal by way of Special Case under the provisions of section 33, sub-section 1 of the Act of 1879. Westminster Corporation v. Gordon Hotels (76 L. J. K.B. 482; [1907] 1 K.B. 910; 77 L. J. K.B. 520; [1908] A.C. 142) applied. Wills v. McSherry (No. 2), 83 L. J. K.B. 596; [1914] 1 K.B. 616; 110 L. T. 65; 78 J. P. 120; 12 Asp. M.C. 426—D.

—— Cinematograph — Licence.] — County councils and, in the case of county boroughs, borough councils are empowered by section 2 of the Cinematograph Act, 1909, to license premises for the purpose of cinematograph exhibitions. By section 5 of that Act county councils or borough councils are empowered to delegate the powers conferred upon them by the Act to Justices sitting in petty sessions:—Held, that Justices sitting in petty sessions for the purpose of exercising the powers delegated to them under section 5 of the Cinematograph Act, 1909, are not a Court of summary jurisdiction, and therefore have no power to state a Case for the opinion of the High Court. Boulter v. Kent Justices (66 L. J. Q.B. 787; [1897] A.C. 556) followed. Huish v. Liverpool Justices, 83 L. J. K.B. 133; [1914] 1 K.B. 109; 110 L. T. 38; 78 J. P. 45; 12 L. G. R. 15; 58 S. J. 83; 30 T L. R. 25—D.

—— Dismissal of Charge of Perjury—Order on Prosecutor to Pay Costs.]—A charge of perjury brought against two persons was dismissed by the Justices, who, being of opinion that the charge was not made in good faith, made an order under section 6, sub-section 3 of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908, that the prosecutor should pay 5l. 5s. as the costs of the defence:—Held, that in making that order the Justices were acting as a Court of summary jurisdiction, and could be ordered to state a Case for the opinion of the High Court. Rex v. Allen; Hardman, Ex parte, 81 L. ——Confirming Authority — Order Declaring District a "populous place" — Power to Revise Order.]—Schedule 6 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, provides that licensed premises in a populous place in Wales may remain open until 11 P.M., but in districts other than a populous place not later than 10 P.M. By special provision 2 of the schedule "populous place" means any area with a population of not less than 1,000, which by reason of the density of its population the confirming authority of the county by order determine to be a populous place. It provides that an order restrictive of a previous order shall not be made except on a revision after the publication of a census, and that as soon as may be after the publication of each census the confirming authority of the county shall, at a meeting to be specially convened for the purpose, revise orders then in force within their jurisdiction, and may alter or cancel any of those orders, or may make such further orders, if any, as they shall deem necessary to give effect to the provisions of the Act. A licensing district in Wales was some years ago declared to be a "populous place," and its population had, subsequent to such declaration, increased, but other adjacent districts had, owing to the opening of new collieries therein, increased in population to a still greater extent. In 1913 the confirming authority held that it was no longer a "populous place," and cancelled the previous order. An appeal from their decision by way of a Case stated by the confirming authority for the opinion of the High Court was made and a preliminary objection taken that quarter sessions had no power to state the same:—Held, that quarter sessions were not dependent for their power to state a Case on the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and, although acting in an administrative capacity, could state the Case submitted. Rex v. Southampton Justices; Cardy, Ex parte (75 L. J. K.B. 295; [1906] 1 K.B. 446), followed. Nicholas v. Davies, 83 L. J. K.B. 1137; [1914] 2 K.B. 705; 111 L. T. 56; 78 J. P. 207; 30 T. L. R. 388—D.

Held also, on the merits, that it was open to the confirming authority to raise the standard of a "populous place," and that the Court would not consider whether their reasons for so doing were or were not adequate. Ib.

Special Case—Notice of Appeal—Disappearance of Respondents—Impossibility of Service of Notice of Appeal and Copy of Case—Jurisdiction to Hear Appeal.]—On an appeal by way of Special Case from an order by a Court of summary jurisdiction the appellants made every effort to give the notice of appeal and the copy of the Case to the respondents in the manner and within the time prescribed by section 2 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, but were unable to do so. Within the same time they gave the notice and a copy of the Case to the solicitor who had appeared for the respondents before the Justices, and who still had instructions from them to receive the money payable to them by the appellants under the above order and to remit it to them. The respondents did not appear on the appeal, nor were they represented:—Held, in the circumstances (Channell, J., hæsitante), that the giving of the notice and the copy of the Case could be dispensed with, and the appeal heard. Syred v. Carruthers (27 L. J. M.C. 273; E. B. & E. 469) followed. Foss v. Best (75 L. J. K.B. 575; [1906] 2 K.B. 105) not followed. Wills v. McSherry (No. 1), 82 L. J. K.B. 71; [1913] 1 K.B. 20; 107 L. T. 848; 77 J. P. 65; 23 Cox C.C. 254; 29 T. L. R. 48 —D.

—— Service on Respondent's Solicitor — Sufficiency of Service.]—On an appeal by way of Special Case from an order by a Court of summary jurisdiction, service of the notice of appeal and the copy of the Case within the prescribed time on the solicitors acting for the respondent in those proceedings is sufficient compliance with the requirements of section 2 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, in the absence of evidence that the retainer of the solicitor has in fact been withdrawn by the respondent; and service on the respondent personally is not necessary. Pennell v. Uxbridge Churchwardens (31 L. J. M.C. 92; 8 Jur. N.S. 99) followed and applied. Hill v. Wright (60 J. P. 312) commented upon. Godman v. Crofton (No. 2), 83 L. J. K.B. 1524; [1914] 3 K.B. 803; 111 L. T. 754; 79 J. P. 12; 12 L. G. R. 1330; 24 Cox C.C. 424—D.

Transmission of Case within Three Days of its Receipt from Justices—Case Left at Crown Office after Office Hours on Third Day.]—The provision of section 2 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, which requires the appellant from a determination of Justices to transmit the Case stated by them within three days after its receipt from them, is sufficiently complied with if the Case is left at the Crown Office before the expiration of the third day, although after office hours. Holland v. Peacock, 81 L. Case Stated—Case Set Down before Notice of Appeal Given.]—Where a Case stated by Justices was set down for hearing before notice of appeal was given or copy of the Case was served on the respondents,—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal in consequence of the non-compliance with the requirements of section 2 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857. Hollidge v. Ruislip-Northwood Urban Council, 77 J. Point not Taken before Justices—Right to Raise Point on Appeal.] — Upon an appeal from Justices, the Court will not entertain a point which was not taken before the Justices, unless it is a point of law which could not have been altered by evidence. Power of Court to Remit Case to Justices for Re-trial.]—Semble, where on a Case stated it appears that Justices have convicted a person on a wrong ruling of law, the Court will not remit the Case to the Justices under section 6 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, to be re-tried, unless in the Case itself the Justices request this to be done in the event of their determination being held to be wrong. Taylor v. Wilson, 106 L. T. 44; 76 J. P. 69; 22 Cox C.C. 647; 28 T. L. R. 97—D.

Case Stated by Quarter Sessions—Questions of Fact.] — A public-house licence was granted by way of transfer to one Davies, who was the lessee of the premises under an agreement with the owners, a firm of brewers. Subsequently the terms of the agreement were altered, and the owners received a proportion of the takings for the purpose of paying off Davies's liability to them. Ultimately the owners put an end to the arrangement with Davies and applied for a transfer to one Hickton. The licensing Justices refused the transfer on the ground that liquor was sold on the premises by the firm, which was not licensed, and that therefore the premises were ill-conducted. On appeal to quarter sessions it was admitted that the character of the house was good, that Hickton was a fit and proper person to hold a licence, and that he was in possession. Quarter sessions held that Davies was merely a manager, and that the house had therefore been ill-conducted, and they dismissed the appeal :—Held, first, that section 2 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1894, did not make every Case stated by quarter sessions an appeal on the facts as well as on law, although the High Court could decide whether the conclusions drawn by quarter sessions from the facts were correct; and secondly, that there was no evidence that the owners had been selling their own beer on the premises, and therefore the decision of quarter sessions was wrong. Hickton v. Hodgson, 110 L. T. 380; 78 J. P. 93; 30 T. L. R. 221—D.

Appeal to Quarter Sessions—Order to Take Down or Repair Dangerous Wall.] — Section 24 of the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, gives a right of appeal to quarter sessions from (inter alia) an order of Justices for payment of any penal or other sum exceeding 20*s.* or for the doing of anything at a greater expense than 40*s.* :—Held, that no appeal lies under this section from an order of Justices made under section 75 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, ordering the owner of a dangerous wall to take it down, rebuild or repair it, even though the expense involved in doing the work may exceed 40*s.* Rex v. Cork (Recorder), [1913] 2 Ir. R. 35—K.B. D.

Notice — Successful Objector to Renewal — "The party against whom the appeal shall be brought" — Costs.] — Where an appeal is brought from the refusal of the renewal of a music licence the person who successfully objected to the renewal is not, within section 262 of the Manchester Police Act, 1844, "the party against whom the appeal shall be brought," and therefore notice in writing of such appeal need not be served upon him, and costs cannot be given against him under section 263. For the purposes of section 262 only the Justices who refused the renewal are the parties against whom the appeal is brought, but they are not parties in the sense that costs can be given against them under section 263. Rex v. Ashton; Walker, Ex parte, 85 L. J. K.B. 27; 113 L. T. 696; 79 J. P. 444—D.

Prisoner Consenting to Summary Trial—Indecent Assault upon Child.] — By section 128, sub-section 2 of the Children Act, 1908, "The First Schedule to the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, shall include the offence mentioned in the Second Schedule to this Act in the same manner as if that schedule formed part of the First Schedule to the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879." The offence referred to is committing an indecent assault upon a child or young person :—Held, that the effect of the enactment is to place that offence in the same category as the other offences mentioned in the First Schedule to the Act of 1879, and that where a person charged with such an assault consents under section 12 to be dealt with summarily he has no right of appeal to quarter sessions. Rex v. Dickinson; Davis, Ex parte, 79 L. J. K.B. 256; [1910] 1 K.B. 469; 102 L. T. 48; 74 J. P. 76; 22 Cox C.C. 249—D.

Non-payment of Poor Rate—Issue of Distress Warrant—Levy—"Order of a Court of summary jurisdiction"—Procedure on Appeal—Recognisance.]—An appeal to quarter sessions under section 7 of 17 Geo. 2. c. 38, by a person aggrieved by a distress for non-payment of a poor rate is not an appeal from an "order" of a Court of summary jurisdiction within section 31 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, and the appeal is therefore not subject to the conditions and regulations prescribed by that section. Rex v. London Justices (68 L. J. Q.B. 383; [1899] 1 Q.B. 532) applied. Rex v. Lincolnshire Justices, 81 L. J. K.B. 967; [1912] 2 K.B. 413; 107 L. T. 170; 76 J. P. 311; 10 L. G. R. 703; 23 Cox C.C. 102—D.

Time within which Recognisances to be Entered into.]—The applicants having been convicted before a magistrate on May 21, 1912, desired to appeal to quarter sessions. Under section 31, sub-section 2 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, they had till May 28 within which to give notice of appeal, but they in fact gave such notice on May 25. On May 29 they attended before the magistrate to enter into the recognisances as required by section 31, sub-section 3 of the Act of 1879, but the magistrate refused to take the recognisances on the ground that, as more than three days had elapsed since the date of the notice of appeal was given, the time allowed by section 31, sub-section 3, had expired. On an application for a mandamus directing the magistrate to take the recognisances,—Held, that as the time prescribed by section 31, subsection 3, for entering into the recognisances had expired, a rule must be refused. Grafton Club or Ashton, Ex parte, 76 J. P. 383; 28 T. L. R. 473—D.

Death of Appellant before Hearing — Whether Appellant's Personal Representatives Liable for Costs.]—A person was charged before Justices with being drunk on a highway while in charge of a motor car. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment. He gave notice of appeal to quarter sessions and entered into a recognisance to appear and prosecute the appeal. Before the quarter sessions were held at which the appeal would have been heard the appellant died. Counsel appeared at quarter sessions and informed the Court that the appellant had died, and he also made a statement that the appellant would have been able to put a different complexion on the case if he had been alive. The quarter sessions made an order that the appeal should be dismissed with costs to be paid by the personal representatives of the appellant:—Held, that the personal representatives had not become parties to the proceedings and that there was no jurisdiction to order them to pay the costs. Rex v. Spokes; Buckley, Ex parte, 107 L. T. 290; 76 J. P. 354; 23 Cox C.C. 141; 28 T. L. R. 420—D.

Convictions for Wilful Damage and Trespass—Notice of Appeal to Quarter Sessions—Appeal not Entered or Prosecuted—Order for Payment of Respondent's Costs of Appeal—Certiorari—Refusal of High Court to Grant Order Nisi—Jurisdiction—"Criminal cause or matter."]—Where a Court of quarter sessions has made an order under section 6 of the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849, for the payment to the respondent of the costs of an appeal against a conviction by Justices in petty sessions for trespass or for wilful damage, imposing a fine and costs or in default of payment to be imprisoned, the appellant not having either entered or prosecuted such appeal after having given notice of appeal, such order for costs is one made in a "criminal matter," and under section 47 of the Judicature Act, 1873, no appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from the refusal of the High Court to grant an order nisi for a writ of certiorari to remove such order for costs into the High Court. Rex v. Wiltshire Justices; Jay, Ex parte, 81 L. J. K.B. 518; [1912] 1 K.B. 566; 106 L. T. 364; 76 J. P. 169; 10 L. G. R. 353; 56 S. J. 343; 28 T. L. R. 255; 22 Cox C.C. 737—C.A.

D. SITTINGS OF QUARTER SESSIONS.

Authority to Fix Place at which Courts shall Sit.]—The London County Council, and not the standing joint committee of quarter sessions and County Council, has the duty to decide at what place or places within the County of London the Courts of quarter sessions shall sit. London Quarter Sessions v. London County Council (No. 1), 104 L. T. 923; 9 L. G. R. 1239; 75 J. P. 455; 27 T. L. R. 473—D.

Right to Determine Character of Accommodation.]—While the London County Council and not the standing joint committee of quarter sessions and County Council, has the duty to decide as to the site within the County of London at which the Courts of quarter sessions shall sit, the power and duty of determining the character of the accommodation to be provided on that site are vested in the joint committee, and when that committee has come to a decision thereon the County Council must provide the accommodation demanded. London Quarter Sessions v. London County Council (No. 2), 75 J. P. 459; 9 L. G. R. 1239; 55 S. J. 716; 27 T. L. R. 567—D.

E. JURISDICTION OF QUARTER SESSIONS AS TO INDICTABLE OFFENCES.

Living on Earnings of Prostitution—Procedure on Indictment — Charge in Respect of One Specified Day only—Validity of Indictment—Admissibility of Evidence of Similar Offences on other Days.]—In an indictment for the offence of knowingly living on the earnings of prostitution a male person can properly be charge with having committed the offence on one specified day only, and evidence of the offence having been committed on other days is admissible to prove the offence on the specified day. An indictment for such offence after a previous conviction for a similar offence can, under sub-section 5 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, be tried by a Court of quarter sessions. Rex v. Hill; Rex v. Churchman, 83 L. J. K.B. 820; [1914] 2 K.B. 386; 110 L. T. 831; 78 J. P. 303; 24 Cox C.C. 150—C.C.A.

Recognisances — Felony — Conviction on Indictment—Binding Over on Conditions to Come up for Sentence—Breach of Condition—Power to Sentence.]—A prisoner, convicted of felony on indictment at quarter sessions, was bound over in recognisances to come up for judgment when called upon, and (inter alia) to abstain from intoxicating liquor, but on breach of the latter condition he was brought before the Court of quarter sessions for sentence:—Held, that, although it was probable that there was no power to sentence him conferred by section 6, sub-section 5 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907, which apparently deals only with prisoners bound over by a Court of summary jurisdiction to appear for conviction and sentence, the Court of quarter sessions, having duly bound the prisoner over under section 1, sub-section 2 of the Act, had an inherent power to pass the postponed sentence on the prisoner so brought before it. Rex v. Spratling, 80 L. J. K.B. 176; [1911] 1 K.B. 77; 103 L. T. 704; 75 J. P. 39; 22 Cox C.C. 348; 55 S. J. 31; 27 T. L. R. 31—C.C.A.

Dismissal of Complaint — Evidence on Behalf of Defendant Improperly Admitted—Refusal of Justices to State Case.]—Where Justices have dismissed a complaint, the Court will not grant a mandamus to compel them to state a Case on the ground that evidence tendered on behalf of the defendant, and objected to by the complainant, was improperly admitted, the evidence given on behalf of the complainant being such as would have justified the Justices in dismissing the complaint. Rex v. Cork Justices, [1914] 2 Ir. LAND.

Adjoining Owners—Extraordinary Misfortune—Right to Protect Land—Liability for Damage to Adjoining Land.]—The owner or occupier of land has a right to repel an extraordinary misfortune coming to him by way of his neighbour's land, though the effect may be to transfer the mischief from his own land to that of his neighbour. Therefore where the respondent endeavoured to drive a swarm of locusts, which were moving from the appellant's land, away from his own land, and so caused them to remain on the appellant's land,—Held, that he was not liable for the damage thereby caused to the appellant's crops. Greyvensteyn v. Hattingh, 80 L. J. P.C. 158; [1911] A.C. 355; 104 L. T. 360; 27 T. L. R. 358—P.C.

Licence—Injury to Infant from Heap of Stones Deposited by Landowner—Infant mere Licensee on Land — Non-liability of Landowner.]—A landowner who allows persons, whether adults or children, to come on to his land is not liable for an accident which happens to one of them there unless the coming on to the land was the result of allurement or invitation, or unless the accident was due to something in the nature of a concealed trap or to something dangerous and outside the ordinary use of the land which the landowner brought on to it without warning the licensee. Latham v. Johnson, 82 L. J. K.B. 258; [1913] 1 K.B. 398; 108 L. T. 4; 77 J. P. 137; 57 S. J. 127; 29 T. L. R. 124—C.A.

A child of two and a half years of age came unaccompanied on to land belonging to the defendants, who were aware that children were in the habit of coming there to play. Whilst on the land the child was injured by the fall of a stone from a heap of stones deposited there by the defendants :—Held (reversing the decision of Scrutton, J.), that the child was not entitled to recover damages from the defendants for negligence. The child was at most a mere licensee, while the use of the land by the defendants had been perfectly normal, and the heap of stones did not constitute a trap. Cooke v. Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland (78 L. J. P.C. 76; [1909] A.C. 229) explained and distinguished. Ib.

Tort — Embankment Raised by Owner to Protect against Flood — Consequent Damage to other Land—Damnum absque Injuria.]—Every owner of land is entitled, provided he acts with reasonable care and skill, and provided he uses only reasonable and usual means for that purpose, to do what is necessary to protect himself or protect his land against damage by anticipated flood. Accordingly, where a landowner erects an embankment on his own ground to prevent natural flooding waters which by the lie of the ground would come upon his land from doing so, and in consequence the water floods other land and does damage, it is a case of damnum absque injuria. Maxey Drainage Board v. Great Northern Railway, 106 L. Yorkshire — Registration — Mortgage — Priority.]—An incumbrancer on an interest in the proceeds of sale of real estate in Yorkshire settled upon trust for sale but with power to postpone conversion obtains no priority over prior incumbrancers of such interest by registering his mortgage deed, and the priorities of such incumbrancers are determined by the dates of their respective notices to the trustees. This is so, although the land in fact is not sold. Arden v. Arden (54 L. J. Ch. 655; 29 Ch. D. 702) followed. Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Crowther, 84 L. J. Ch. 312; [1915] 1 Ch. 214; 111 L. T. 887; 59 S. J. 103—C.A.

Decision of Astbury, J. (83 L. J. Ch. 867; [1914] 2 Ch. 219), affirmed. Ib.

Settlement — Trust for Sale — Power to Postpone—Conversion.]—By a settlement real property was conveyed to trustees upon trust for sale and to hold the proceeds on certain trusts with power to postpone conversion for so long as the trustees should think fit, and a direction that while it should remain unsold the property should be held upon such trusts as should, as nearly as the nature of the property would admit, correspond with the trusts thereinbefore declared concerning the trust fund :—Held, that there was an imperative trust to convert, and the property must be treated as converted for the purposes of the Yorkshire Registries Act, 1884, even although no sale had in fact taken place, and a cestui que trust was, subject to a mortgage, entitled to the property absolutely. Ib.

Implied Right of Way—Deed—Alteration of Date—Parcels—Plan.]—A lessor granted a lease of certain plots of land on which had been erected certain then nearly finished houses. The grant was defined by reference to a plan in the margin, which shewed a narrow strip of ground, coloured brown, at the rear of the plots, and running along other land that belonged to the lessor but was not included in the lease. The lease contained no express grant of any right of way along this strip, nor indeed further reference to it; but the evidence shewed that the use of the strip was essential to the tenants of the new houses for the convenient ingress of coal and manure, and for the egress of garden rubbish. At the time of the original granting of the lease the dates of the day and month were left in blank, but subsequently there was an alteration of the year (with the consent of all parties), and the blanks were also filled in. At the date of the original granting of the lease the plots were not yet fenced on the side towards the strip; but at the time of the alteration they were so fenced, and the position was indicated for gates communicating between the plots and the strip:—Held, that the alteration of the lease did not avoid it, and that the lessor was estopped from shewing that the date inserted by himself was not the date from which the demise operated, so as to prevent any one claiming under the lease from relying upon the circumstances existing at the date that the lease finally bore. Held, further, that under those circumstances an implied right of way over the strip in question had passed under the lease from the lessor to the lessee. Rudd v. Bowles, 81 L. Lease of Business Premises in Name of One Partner—Rent Paid out of Profits—Nature of Tenancy.]—In the absence of any provision in the partnership articles, where the lease of the business premises was acquired prior to the commencement of the partnership and stands in the name of one partner, but the firm pays the rent, the inference is that the tenancy exists during the continuance of the partnership only, and is not a tenancy from year to year. Poeock v. Carter, 81 L. Demise of First-floor Offices—Flower Boxes Fixed to Window Sill—Demise of Both Sides of Outside Wall.]—Where the owner of a building demises a floor or a room bounded in part by an outside wall, the floor or room so demised comprises both sides of the wall, unless there is something in the lease which excludes the demise of the outside wall. Demise of Rooms — External Walls Included.]—The demise of a room includes the external walls by which it is bounded, unless there is anything in the document itself to limit the demise. Carlisle Café Co. v. Muse Brothers & Co. (67 L. Arbitration Clause in Lease — Action for Rectification.]—A lease contained the following clause: "Any dispute, difference, or question which may at any time arise between all or any of the parties hereto touching the construction, meaning, or effect of these presents or any clause herein contained or the rights or liabilities of the said parties respectively, or any of them, under these presents or otherwise howsoever, in relation to these presents, shall be referred to the arbitration of a single arbitrator if the parties so agree, or otherwise of two arbitrators . . ." An action was brought by the lessors against the lessees claiming (inter alia) rectification of the lease. Upon a motion by the lessees that, pursuant to section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, all proceedings in the action might be stayed and that the matters in difference therein between the parties be referred to arbitration,—Held, that the claim for rectification of the lease did not fall within the arbitration clause, and that that was a sufficient reason for refusing to stay the proceedings. Printing Machinery Co. v. Linotype and Machinery, Lim., 81 L. Covenant for Renewal on Surrender and Payment of a Fine — Right of Perpetual Renewal.]—A lease dated August 5, 1901, for twenty-one years from September 29, 1901, contained a covenant by the lessors, a municipal corporation, with the lessee, that "they the lessors will at the expiration of the first eleven years of the term hereby granted in case the lessee shall surrender or resign these presents and the term of twenty-one years hereby granted to the lessors and upon such surrender as aforesaid and paying to the lessors at the expiration of eleven years aforesaid or upon the 29th day of September next after the determination of the said eleven years the sum of seven pounds and ten shillings for a fine for the said premises that then the lessors shall and will at the proper costs and charges of the lessee grant unto the lessee a new lease of the premises hereby demised with the appurtenances for the term of twenty-one years to commence from the expiration of the said eleven years at with and under the like rents covenants and agreements as are in these presents mentioned expressed or contained and so often as every eleven years of the said term shall expire the lessors will grant and demise unto the lessee such new lease of the said premises upon surrender of the old lease as aforesaid and paying such fine of seven pounds and ten shillings on the day or time hereinbefore limited or appointed." Since the year 1824 the predecessors in title of the lessee, and subsequently the lessee himself, had been lessees or lessee of the corporation under a series of leases for twenty-one years, each lease being in the same form and containing a covenant in similar terms to that above stated, and such leases had been regularly renewed at the end of the first eleven years of the term upon payment of a fine of 7*l.* 10*s.* The first eleven years of the term of twenty-one years granted by the lease of August 5, 1901, expired on September 29, 1912, but the corporation refused to grant the lessee a new lease in the terms of the covenant. The lessee brought an action for specific performance:—Held, that, on the fair construction of the covenant, so often as every first eleven years of the term of twenty-one years last granted should expire, the lessors covenanted to grant a similar new lease upon the surrender of the old lease, and consequently that the covenant conferred upon the lessee a perpetual right of renewal at the expiration of every successive period of eleven years upon payment of the fine of 7*l.* 10*s.* Hare v. Burges (27 L. J. Ch. 86; 4 K. & J. 45) applied. Wynn v. Conway Corporation, 84 L. J. Ch. 203; [1914] 2 Ch. 705; 111 L. T. 1016; 78 J. P. 380; 13 L. G. R. 137; 59 S. J. 43; 30 T. L. R. 666—C.A.

Cancellation of Lease—Innocent Misrepresentation.]—A lease cannot be cancelled on the ground that its execution was brought about by means of an innocent misrepresentation. Legge v. Croker (1 Ball & B. 506) followed. Angel v. Jay, 80 L. Society — Right to Sue — Under-lease to Society—Forfeiture of Head-lease—Claim of Society to a Vesting Order.]—A member of an unregistered society purported to take an under-lease for and on behalf of his society. On the head-lease being forfeited for breach of covenant the trustees of the society, suing on behalf of the members, brought this action for an order vesting the premises in them for the residue of the term of the under-lease under section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue. Jarrott v. Aekerley, 113 L. D. TENANCIES FROM YEAR TO YEAR.

Holding over—Implied Tenancy—Agreement by Tenant to Pay Tithe Rentcharge—Non-payment of Rent — Statute of Limitations.]—A lessee for a term held over after the expiration of the term, paying no rent, but paying the tithe rentcharge. In an action brought by the landlord for recovery of possession more than twelve years after the expiration of the lease,—Held, that the relationship between the parties continued after the expiration of the term, that a tenancy from year to year must be implied, and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession. Neall v. Beadle, 107 L. T. 646; 57 S. J. 77—Eve, J.

1. Premises Let for Immoral Purposes.

Agreement for Letting Premises to Kept Mistress — Right of Landlord to Recover Rent.]—The plaintiff let a flat to the defendant, a spinster. At the time of letting the plaintiff's agent knew that the defendant was the mistress of a certain man who visited her at the flat; that the rent of the flat would come through the defendant being a kept woman; and that the man whose mistress she was would find the money for the rent. Certain rent not having been paid by the defendant, the plaintiff sued her to recover it:—Held, that the flat being let for an immoral purpose, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Upfill v. Wright, 80 L. 2. Recovery of Rent.

a. By Action.

Agreement to Let for Seven Years — No Lease — Entry into Possession — Action for Rent Commenced before Expiration of Term —Hearing Subsequent.]—The plaintiff agreed in writing to let certain premises to the defendant for seven years. The defendant entered in possession, but subsequently, with the consent of the plaintiff, assigned his interest in the agreement and premises. No lease of the premises was ever granted. Shortly before the expiration of the term the plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant for three quarters' rent, but this action was heard after the expiration of the seven years:—Held, that specific performance of the agreement would have been granted, and that the action was maintainable. Gilbert (or Gilbey) v. Cossey, 106 L. Liability of Executors for Rent.] — The executors of a deceased lessee entered into possession of the demised lands, the rent of which was payable in advance on November 1 in each year. Within two months of the lessee's death an order for the administration of his estate was made in a creditor's suit, and a receiver was appointed by the Court who took possession and complete control of the leasehold premises, accounting to the Court for any profits arising therefrom. In an action against the executors to recover one year's rent, which became due in advance on the following November 1, the executors pleaded that the leasehold premises were of no value and that they had been unable, and would during the period in respect of which the rent was claimed be unable, to derive any profit or advantage out of the leasehold premises. The jury were unable to say whether the executors could have made any profit out of the premises, and the Judge thereupon gave judgment for the year's rent. No question was left to the jury as to the value of the premises, although there was evidence that they were not value for the rent:—Held (Cherry, L.J., dissentiente), that the personal liability of an executor who has entered into possession of a testator's leasehold property is limited to the profits which he makes, or by the exercise of due care, skill, and diligence could make, out of them; and that the appointment of the receiver, and the possession by him of the premises, precluded the executors from making any profit during the period for which the rent claimed was payable, and that they were consequently entitled to have a verdict entered for them; and further, that the action was premature, as it would be impossible at the beginning of a year to ascertain by anticipation what profits could be made out of a particular holding during the ensuing twelve months. Minford v. Carse, [1912] 2 Ir. Tenancy for Three Years — Subsequent Lease of Premises for Seven Years to Another Person — Lease to Commence at once — No Attornment of Tenant—Right of Lessee to Sue Tenant for Rent.] — The defendant in June, 1908, took a certain flat on a three years' agreement expiring in June, 1911. During the currency of the defendant's tenancy a lease of the flat for twenty-one years was granted to the plaintiff, to commence immediately, the plaintiff being aware of the existence of the tenancy agreement. The defendant, however, never knew of the existence of the lease till after the termination of his tenancy, the rent both before and after the grant of the lease to the plaintiff having been paid by the defendant to the same firm of solicitors:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to sue the defendant for unpaid rent under the tenancy agreement which had accrued due subsequent to the grant of the lease, notwithstanding that the defendant had not attorned tenant to the plaintiff, inasmuch as the lease to the plaintiff operated under 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 9, to pass the reversion, together with the right to the rent under the tenancy agreement, without the necessity of an attornment, the effect of the statute being to create an immediate privity between the grantee of the lease and the tenant. Horn v. Beard, 81 L. Fee-farm Grant — Grantees Holding in Severalty — Joint and Several Covenants by Grantees to Pay Entire Rent—Liability of Assignee of One of Grantees.]—A fee-farm grant made under the Renewable Leasehold Conversion Act to several persons contained a joint and several covenant on the part of the grantees to pay the entire rent reserved by the grant. As between themselves the grantees held their respective shares of the lands in severalty, each paying an apportioned part of the rent. All the estate and interest of one of the grantees in the lands subsequently became vested in the defendant, against whom an action was brought as such assignee to recover the entire rent :—Held, that the defendant was liable only for such proportion of the rent as was applicable to the share of the lands which had become vested in her. Dooner v. Odlum, [1914] 2 Ir. R. 411—K.B. D.

Tenant Remaining in Possession after Surrender of Tenancy — Judgment Creditor — Claim by Landlord for Rent.]—A tenant surrendered his tenancy of a farm to the landlord on March 25, 1912. By a verbal agreement of the same date it was arranged that the tenant should continue in occupation of the farmhouse, rent free, but subject to the liability to give up possession at any time when required by the landlord. Subsequently, on July 9, 1912, a County Court execution was levied on the tenant's goods. The landlord thereupon claimed payment by the bailiff of the arrears of rent due before the surrender, out of the proceeds of the execution, under the provisions of section 160 of the County Courts Act, 1888 : —Held, that the claim for rent by the landlord was not good as against the execution creditor. Cox v. Leigh (43 L. Rent of Immediate Tenant in Arrear — Notice to Under-tenant to Pay Rent to Superior Landlord—Service—Sufficiency of Personal Service.] — The provision in section 6 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908, relating to the service by registered post on the under-tenant of a notice requiring future payments of rent to be made to the superior landlord till arrears of the immediate tenant's rent have ben paid, is inserted only to enable the superior landlord to effect service by registered post if he so desires. The object of the section is that the notice should come to the knowledge of the under-tenant, and personal service is sufficient. Jarris v. Hemmings (No. 1), 81 L. J. Non-payment of Rent — Recovery of Possession—Moratorium—Postponement of Payments Act, 1914.]—By section 1, sub-section 1 of the Postponement of Payments Act, 1914, and a proclamation issued in pursuance thereof, the payment of any sum due and payable before the date of the proclamation in respect of a contract made before that time was postponed to a specified date :—Held, that rent due and payable before the date of the proclamation could not be recovered in an action in which the writ was issued after the proclamation and before the specified date, because not due and payable at the date of the writ; and that as the right, given by the agreement of tenancy, to re-enter for non-payment of rent was only a security for the rent, it followed that that right also did not exist at the date of the writ and could not be enforced in the action. Durell v. Gread, 84 L. The rule that a purchaser or mortgagee is bound by the equities of a tenant in possession does not apply to the right of a tenant to damages for breach of a covenant in a building agreement. Reeves v. Pope, 83 L. 3. PAYMENT OF RENT.

First Quarter's Rent Payable "on the 25th of December next."] — By a lease dated December 23, 1910, but which had been executed earlier by the lessor, the rent was payable by equal quarterly payments to be made on the usual quarter days "of which the first shall be made on the 25th day of December next" :—Held, that the first quarterly payment of rent was due on December 25, 1910. Simmer v. Watney, 28 T. Deduction of Landlord's Property Tax — Right of Tenant to Deduct after Paying Rent without Deduction.]—A tenant is entitled to deduct from his rent sums paid in respect of landlord's property tax, although since such payment he has made a payment of rent without deduction. Sturmey Motors, Lim., In re; Rattray v. Sturmey Motors, Lim., 82 L. Severance of Reversion—No Apportionment —Payment to One Reversioner.] — Where a lease is granted and there is afterwards a severance of the reversion without the rent being apportioned, and no notice of the severance is given to the lessee, payment of the whole rent to one of the reversioners is not a payment to a person wrongfully claiming it within section 9 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, so as to bar the claim of the other reversioner. Mitchell v. Mosley, 83 L. 1. GENERALLY.

Proviso for Determination by Lessee — Notice to Determine — Outstanding Legal Estate.] — An assignee of a lease with an equitable title only cannot exercise the right, given by a proviso in the lease, to determine the tenancy before the expiration of the full term by giving six months' notice. Such notice is only valid from the person possessing the legal estate; and the lessor is not estopped from asserting this contention by having licensed the assignment to and received rent from the assignee, where he did so without full knowledge of the facts and without knowing that the legal estate was outstanding in another person. Dictum of Channel, J., in Seaward v. Drew (67 L. Conditions Precedent before Determination.]—Where such notice of earlier determination is given, under a proviso requiring the payment of all rent and performance of all covenants by the lessee up to the determination, the performance of covenants to pay the last quarter's rent in advance and put the premises in repair before delivering up to the lessor is a condition precedent, the nonfulfilment of which will prevent the determination. Grey v. Friar (4 H.L. 2. Notice to Quit.

Sufficiency of—Tenancy for Three Years and so on from Year to Year.]—By an agreement a farm was let to the defendants for a period of three years commencing on March 25, 1907, and so on from year to year until the tenancy should be determined by either party giving to the other one year's notice in writing. On March 21, 1910, the plaintiffs gave the defendants a notice to quit on March 25, 1911: —Held, that the notice so given was good. Herron v. Martin, 27 T. L. R. 431—Darling, J.

Six Months' Notice to be given "on the 1st of March or the 1st of September in any year" — Notice to Quit "at the earliest possible moment"—Sufficiency.]—The defendants were tenants of the plaintiff under an agreement for a yearly tenancy, which provided that the tenancy might be determined by six months' notice on either side, to be given on March 1 or September 1 in any year. The defendants on December 23, 1913, sent the following letter to the plaintiff: "We very much regret having to give you notice to quit the studio at Deerhurst at the earliest possible moment. We are hoping to effect a satisfactory re-organisation of our film enterprise shortly after Christmas, in which case the notice will be cancelled; but should our expectations not be realised we naturally wish to relieve ourselves of the studio at the earliest possible moment, unless in the meantime we see some other use for it":—Held, a good notice to quit determining the tenancy on August 31, 1914. May v. Borup, 84 L. Lease Determinable "after expiration of three years" — Notice to Determine — Validity.]—A lease for five years contained a provision that "after the expiration of the first three years of the term," if the lessees should desire to determine the lease, and should give to the lessors six calendar months' previous notice in writing, such notice to determine on any quarter day, the lease should determine on the expiration of such notice:—Held, that no valid notice could be given until the expiration of the first three years and that the lease could not therefore be determined until the expiration of a further six months. Gardner v. Ingram (61 L. 3. Forfeiture.

Notice of Breaches—Sufficiency.]—A notice under section 14 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, ought to be such as to enable the tenant to understand with reasonable certainty what he is required to do, so that he may have an opportunity of remedying the things complained of before an action to enforce a forfeiture of the lease is brought against him, but it need not contain a detailed specification of the work to be done. Fox v. Jolly, 84 L. Where a block of similar houses is held on one lease, and is bound by one covenant, and it is alleged in general terms that the covenant has been broken throughout, and the breaches are specified generally in a schedule, without reference to the separate houses in detail, it is sufficient. Relief against Forfeiture for Breach — Covenant to Repair and Keep in Repair—Structural Alterations—Waste.]—The discretion entrusted to the Court under section 14, sub-section 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, for relief against forfeiture for breach of covenant in a lease is wide in its terms, and it is not advisable to lay down rigid rules for guiding that discretion so as to fetter it by limitations which have nowhere been enacted. Hyman v. Rose, 81 L. Vesting of Reversion by Private Act of Parliament—Assignee of Reversion.]—By a lease made in 1844 the Freemen and Stallingers of the Antient Borough of Sunderland demised unto the lessees certain pieces or parcels of land, messuages, tenements, and hereditaments, for a term of ninety-nine years at a yearly rent. The lease subsequently became vested in the Secretary of State for War, and was assigned by him to the defendants. By a private Act of Parliament of 1853 made in pursuance of the desire of the Freemen and Stallingers of the Antient Borough of Sunderland the reversion of these lands and hereditaments became vested in the plaintiffs :—Held, that the plaintiffs were assignees of the original lease within the meaning of the statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 34, and so entitled to enforce the covenants therein contained. Sunderland Orphan Asylum v. Wear (River) Commissioners, 81 L. Covenant by Covenantor with Himself and Others—Validity. —The three trustees of a will, as lessors, leased to one of themselves, as lessee, a freehold house for twenty-one years; and the lessee covenanted for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, with the lessors, their heirs and assigns (inter alia), to keep the property in repair and not to assign without the lessor's consent. The lessee entered into possession of the house and carried on his business there until he sold the business to a company and assigned the term to them. The company issued debentures which were secured by a trust deed. By this deed the premises were assigned to the trustees of the debenture trust deed for the residue of the term. In an action by the lessors against the trustees of the debenture trust deed.—Held, that the lease was not void in law, but that the covenants were by one person with himself and others jointly and, following Ellis v. Kerr (79 L. J. Ch. 291; [1910] 1 Ch. 529), were void; and therefore that there was no covenant which could run with the land and impose any personal liability on the defendants. Napier v. Williams, 80 L. J. 2. To Repair.

See also Vol. VIII. 1100, 1874.

Tenant to Pay all Outgoings—Landlord to Keep Exterior of House and Buildings in Repair—Outside Drain—Repair Necessarily Involving Improvements.]—The plaintiff let a house to the defendant, and by the lease the defendant covenanted to "pay and discharge all rates, taxes, assessments, charges, and outgoings whatsoever which now are or during the said term shall be imposed or charged on the premises or the landlord or tenant in respect thereof (land tax and landlord's property tax only excepted)." The plaintiff, as landlord, covenanted to "keep the exterior of the said dwelling house and buildings in repair." During the tenancy an outside drain was found to be defective, and the local authority compelled the plaintiff to put it in proper condition. To comply with the local authority's requirements a certain amount of reconstruction or improvement, such as putting in inspection chambers and ventilation pipes, was involved in doing the work. The plaintiff paid for the work and claimed to be recouped by the defendant in respect of that portion of it which was attributable to reconstruction or improvement as distinct from repairs :—Held, that the whole expense fell upon the plaintiff inasmuch as he could not perform his covenant to keep the exterior of the house and buildings in repair without executing the reconstruction or improvement. Howe v. Botwood, 82 L. J. K.B. 569; [1913] 2 K.B. 387; 108 L. T. 767; 29 T. L. R. 437—D.

Tenant to Complete Fittings to Shop — Covenant to Deliver up Demised Premises in Good Repair — Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Affixed in Pursuance of Covenant.]—By the lease of an unfinished shop the lessees covenanted at their own expense to "complete and finish . . . all necessary fittings for the carrying on of the trade of a provision merchant," and also to deliver up the demised premises in good repair at the end of the term. In pursuance of their covenant the lessees affixed certain fittings to the premises which became "trade fixtures," and they removed them shortly before the end of the term :—Held (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), that the covenant in the lease did not take away the right of the lessees during the term to remove the fittings as trade fixtures. Mowats v. Hudson, 105 L. T. 400—C.A.

Lessee to Repair and Keep in Thorough Repair and Good Condition — Old House — Decay of Wall—Liability of Lessee.—Under a lessee's covenants in the lease of a house to well and substantially repair and keep in thorough repair and good condition the demised premises, and in such repair and condition to deliver them up at the end of the term, the lessee is bound to renew and rebuild any subsidiary part of the demised premises which is past ordinary repair. Where, therefore, the front wall of the demised premises, consisting of an old house, had by natural decay at the end of the term fallen into such a state that it had been condemned as a dangerous structure, the lessee was held liable under his covenant to pull down and rebuild the same. Lurcott v. Wakeley, 80 L. J. K.B. 713; [1911] 1 K.B. 905; 104 L. T. 290; 55 S. J. 290—C.A.

Per Fletcher Moulton, L.J.—A covenant to keep a house in good condition involves an obligation on the part of the covenantor to do all that is necessary to maintain it as a habitable house, and, if necessary, to put it in that condition, whether the means to that end consist of repair or renewal, though the nature of the obligation will vary according to the age and character of the house. Ib.

Under-lease—Similar Covenants to Repair — Notice to Lessee to Repair — Notice by Lessee to Under-lessee—Failure to Repair—Costs of Relief against Forfeiture—Right of Lessee to Recover from Under-lessee.—The plaintiff was the holder of a lease of certain premises, granted to his predecessors in title, containing a covenant to repair within three months after notice in writing. His predecessors had granted an under-lease of part of the premises to the defendant, which contained a covenant in similar terms. Notice to repair was served on the plaintiff by the superior landlord, and the plaintiff thereupon served a similar notice on the defendant. The notices were not complied with, and the superior landlord brought an action against the plaintiff to recover possession of the premises. The defendant obtained leave to appear and defend. The repairs having been executed, the plaintiff obtained an order for relief against forfeiture on payment of costs as between solicitor and client. In an action by the plaintiff for damages for the breach of the defendant's covenant to repair,—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover such costs from the defendant in the absence of a covenant of indemnity by him or of a covenant to perform the covenants of the head-lease. Dictum of Lindley, L.J., in Ebbetts v. Conquest (64 L. Death of Assignee of Lease—Executor de Son Tort—Personal Liability.—The mother of the defendant, who was the assignee of a lease which had been granted by the plaintiffs, died intestate, leaving no estate. The defendant continued to collect the rents, and, after paying the ground rent to the plaintiffs in his mother's name, paid the balance over to his sister until her death. He afterwards collected the rents, and paid the ground rent to the plaintiffs, retaining the balance on behalf of the persons who might be found to be entitled to it. The plaintiffs, who were not aware of the death of the defendant's mother, sent a notice calling upon her to execute certain repairs to the premises, and upon subsequently ascertaining the facts they took possession of the premises, and brought an action against the defendant as executor de son tort for breach of the covenant to repair contained in the lease, and in the alternative claiming damages against him in his personal capacity. The County Court Judge found that the defendant had acted as agent for his mother and sister, and that he had never taken possession of the term as his own nor intended to act for himself, and gave judgment for the defendant:—Held, that the decision of the County Court Judge was right, as the term had never vested in the defendant so as to make him liable by reason of privity of estate. Williams v. Heales (43 L. J. C.P. 80; L. R. 9 C.P. 177) considered. Stratford-upon-Avon Corporation v. Parker, 83 L. J. K.B. 1309; [1914] 2 K.B. 562; 110 L. T. 1004; 58 S. J. 473—D.

Action for Breach of Covenant—Judgment for Damages — Subsequent Bankruptcy of Assignee—Proof Lodged in Bankruptcy—No Assets — Money Recovered from Cestui que Trust under Indemnity — Whether Money Assets Divisible amongst Creditors Generally or Belonged to Lessors.—The assignee of a lease was trustee thereof for his wife, and consequently had an equitable right to be indemnified by her against any claim under the covenants in the lease. On the expiration of the lease the lessors brought an action against the assignee for arrears of rent and damages for breach of covenant, and recovered judgment for the amount to be found to be due to them by an official referee, and costs. The certified sum was 711*l.*, but before it had been ascertained the assignee was adjudicated a bankrupt and the lessors lodged a proof in the bankruptcy for that amount. The proof was not dealt with, as there were no assets. The lessors then obtained liberty in the bankruptcy to use the name of the trustee in bankruptcy in an action to be brought by them against the bankrupt's wife to recover the 711*l.* under her indemnity as cestui que trust, one of the terms being that the Court in bankruptcy was to determine whether any sum to be so recovered should be treated as assets divisible amongst the creditors generally, or should be retained by the lessors. The action was commenced and was compromised on the payment by the wife of 520*l.* :—Held, that the right of indemnity which passed to the trustee in bankruptcy could only be used by him for the purpose of paying the claim of the lessors against which the bankrupt's estate was indemnified, and that as no such payment had been made by him the 520*l.* did not form part of the general assets of the bankrupt, but belonged to the lessors and might be retained by them on account of their judgment debt. The proof lodged by them was directed to be withdrawn, but without prejudice to their right to lodge such other proof as they might be advised. Richardson, In re; St. Thomas's Hospital, ex parte, 80 L. Derogation from Grant—Building Scheme—Easement.]—The law does not recognise any easement of prospect or privacy. There will be assumed in favour of a purchaser or lessee under the doctrine that no one can derogate from his own grant, when a vendor or lessor sells or lets land for a particular purpose, an obligation not to do anything to prevent its being used for that purpose; but it will not be assumed that the vendor or lessor has undertaken restrictive obligations which would prevent his using land retained by him for any lawful purpose whatsoever merely because he might thereby affect the amenities or comfortable occupation of the property he had sold or let. Browne v. Flower, 80 L. Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment—Privacy—Comfort.] — To constitute a breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment there must be some physical interference with the enjoyment of the demised premises, and a mere interference with the comfort of persons using the demised premises by the creation of a personal annoyance such as might arise from noise, invasion of privacy, or otherwise, is not enough. Ib.

Implied Covenants for Title — Lessee and Assignee—Third-party Notice to Indemnify—Assignment as "beneficial owner"—Rectification of Assignment.] — A lessee and an intending sub-assignee of the lease executed an agreement for sale by which it was recited that the legal interest in the lease was outstanding in a third party. The agreement provided that the lessee should not be required to get it in, nor to obtain the consent of the third party to the assignment. The lessee assigned "as beneficial owner" to the sub-assignee. The sub-assignee having been prevented from availing himself of one of the conditions in the lease, through not having the legal estate, and having been obliged to indemnify the lessee against the rent and covenants in the lease, claimed damages from the lessee for breach of the covenants for title implied under section 7, sub-section 1 (a) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 :—Held, that, in view of the agreement between the parties, the lessee was entitled to have the assignment rectified by inserting a proviso that his covenants for title should not be deemed to imply that he had power to assign the outstanding legal estate in the term or to render him liable by reason of the fact that the said legal estate was not effectually assigned. Stait v. Fenner; Fenner v. McNab, 81 L. Not to Assign without Consent — Consent not to be Withheld in Respect of "respectable and responsible person" — Limited Company. —A limited company may be a "respectable and responsible person" within the meaning of a covenant by a lessee not to assign without the consent of the lessor (such consent not to be withheld in the case of a "respectable and responsible person"). Harrison, Ainslie & Co. v. Barrow-in-Furness Corporation (63 L. T. 834) overruled on this point. Willmott v. London Road Car Co., 80 L. J. Ch. 1; [1910] 2 Ch. 525; 103 L. T. 447; 54 S. J. 873; 27 T. L. R. 4—C.A.

The plaintiff, who was the assignee of a lease which contained a covenant not to assign without the consent of the lessors, unless such consent should be unreasonably withheld, applied to the lessors for leave to assign to certain persons. The lessors stated that they would not grant any licence to assign, whereupon the plaintiff's solicitors wrote that in view of this attitude they would advise the issue of a writ forthwith. Before the writ was served the lessors wrote again that they were taking up the proposed assignees' references. Subsequently, the lessors wrote stating that having taken up the references they could not accept the proposed assignees. Thereupon the plaintiff executed an assignment of the premises, and in this action claimed a declaration that the lessors had unreasonably withheld their consent :—Held, that the lessors' consent had not been unreasonably withheld and that the action failed. Shanley v. Ward, 29 T. L. R. 714—C.A.

Where an agreement for a lease provided that the lease should contain a covenant not to assign without the written consent of the lessor, such consent not to be unreasonably or vexatiously withheld,—Held, that the lessor was, on the facts justified in refusing to give the consent, without stating any reason for such refusal; and that the covenant ran with the land and bound the assigns of the lessee although they were not mentioned therein. Goldstein v. Sanders, 84 L. J. Ch. 386; [1915] 1 Ch. 549; 112 L. T. 932—Eve, J.

"Lessors" Including "their executors administrators and assigns" — "Lessees" Including "their executors and administrators."]—Where there was a covenant in a sub-lease for over seventy years as follows,

"the lessees will not at any time during the said term assign or sublet the said demised premises or any part thereof," and the lease defined "lessors" as including "their executors administrators and assigns" and lessees as including "their executors and administrators," it was held, first, that a covenant against assignment or under-letting runs with the land, although "assigns" are not mentioned if a contrary intention is not shewn; and secondly, that there was not a sufficient indication of an intention that the covenant should be personal only and should not run with the land, either (a) in the fact that it was a long leasehold with an absolute prohibition of consignment, or (b) in the definition of "lessors" and "lessees." Goldstein v. Sanders (84 L. J. Ch. 386; [1915] 1 Ch. 549) applied. Stephenson & Co., In re; Poole v. The Company (No. 2), 84 L. J. Ch. 563; [1915] 1 Ch. 802; 113 L. T. 230; 59 S. J. 429; 31 T. L. R. 331—Sargant, J.

Not to Under-let without Consent—Consent not to be Withheld in the Case of Respectable and Responsible Person.]—Where there is a covenant in a lease that the lessee shall not assign or sub-let without the lessor's consent, with the usual proviso that such consent shall not be withheld in the case of a respectable and responsible person, a withholding of the consent when asked enables the lessee to assign or under-let to a respectable and responsible person without breach of covenant. Lewis & Allenby, Lim. v. Pegge, 83 L. J. Ch. 387; [1914] 1 Ch. 782; 110 L. T. 93; 58 S. J. 155—Neville, J.

Withholding Consent—Reasonable Time—Under-lease without Consent.] — Where the consent was requested within eleven days, and there were no special circumstances to warrant a longer notice, a failure by the lessor to give consent within that period was held to amount to a withholding within the meaning of the proviso. Ib.

Consent of Lessor not to be "Unreasonably" Withheld—Consent Refused, except on Condition of Insertion of Restrictive Covenant.] — The defendants, who carried on business as a cinematograph theatre, granted a lease of premises adjoining their own, the lessees not to assign their lease without consent in writing of the lessors, such consent not to be "unreasonably or vexatiously" refused. The lessees desired to assign, but the lessors refused to consent thereto, except on condition of the insertion in the lease of a covenant not to use the demised premises for the purposes of a cinematograph theatre:—Held, that in the circumstances the consent was "unreasonably" refused. Premier Rinks v. Amalgamated Cinematograph Theatres, 56 S. J. 536—Joyce, J.

Not to Assign or Sub-let — Implied Covenant.]—A provision in an agreement for a lease that the lessor shall not, save for "exceptionally strong and good reasons," withhold assent to an assignment or sub-lease did not amount to an implied covenant on the part of the lessee not to assign or sub-let without leave of the lessor. De Soysa (Lady) v. De Pless Pol, 81 L. J. P.C. 126; [1912] A.C. 194; 105 L. T. 642—P.C.

Not to Under-let without Lessor's Consent—Lease made in 1874—Licence to Under-let—Money Payment as Condition—Statute—Retrospective Operation—Action by Lessee—Declaration merely Claimed—Costs.]—The provisions of section 3 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892—that in all leases containing a covenant against assigning or under-letting without licence or consent, such covenant shall, unless the lease contains an expressed provision to the contrary, be deemed to be subject to a proviso to the effect that no fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine shall be payable for or in respect of such licence or consent—apply to all leases, whether made before or after the commencement of the Act. West v. Gwynne, 80 L. J. Ch. 578; [1911] 2 Ch. 1; 104 L. T. 759; 55 S. J. 519; 27 T. L. R. 444—C.A.

A lease dated July 31, 1874, by which certain premises were demised for ninety-four and a half years from March 25, 1874, at a yearly rent of 640*l.*, contained a covenant by the lessees not to assign or under-let without the lessor's consent, and also a proviso for re-entry on default in the performance of any of the lessees' covenants, and the usual covenant by the lessor for quiet enjoyment. In 1906 the lease was duly assigned, and in 1909 the lessor, in reply to an application by the assignees, stated that he was prepared to grant them a licence for a proposed under-lease for twenty-one years of part of the demised premises at a yearly rent of 340*l.* on condition that he should thenceforth receive one-half of the surplus rental to be obtained by the assignees over and above the rent of 640*l.* payable under the lease. The assignees brought an action against him merely for a declaration that he was not entitled to impose any monetary condition in respect of the licence, and that, in the events which had happened, the plaintiffs were entitled to grant, without any further consent on the part of the defendant, an under-lease on the terms approved by him. The defendant contended that section 3 of the Act of 1892 had not a retrospective operation:—Held, that the section interfered with existing rights, and that "retrospective operation" was an inaccurate term to apply to it; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the declaration asked for, together with the costs of the action. Ib.

Dicta in Andrew v. Bridgman (77 L. J. K.B. 272; [1908] 1 K.B. 596) affirmed and followed. Jenkins v. Price (76 L. J. Ch. 507; [1907] 2 Ch. 229) and Evans v. Levy (79 L. J. Ch. 383; [1910] 1 Ch. 452) in effect overruled as regards costs. Ib.

Lessee to Pay all "assessments charged on the premises"—Inhabited House Duty—Assessment of Owner of House—No Appeal—Payment of Duty by Owner — Action to Recover Amount Paid from Lessee — "Dwelling house brought into charge."]—A lessor, before the making of the lease, was assessed to landlord's property tax and inhabited house duty. By a covenant in the lease the lessee agreed to "pay, bear and discharge all rates, taxes, duties, assessments, charges, impositions and out-goings whatsoever of an annual nature, whether parliamentary, parochial, or of any other description, which now are or during the term shall be imposed or charged on the premises or the owner or occupier in respect thereof, except landlord's property tax," &c. After the making of the lease the lessor, who did not appeal against the assessment, continued to pay the tax and duty as before. In an action by the lessor to recover from the lessee the amount of inhabited house duty so paid by her during the term:—Held, that inhabited house duty was an assessment charged upon the premises within the meaning of the covenant. Held, also, that the lessor, not having appealed against the assessment, was bound thereby and liable to pay the duty, and that, having paid it, she could recover the amount paid from the lessee as upon an implied request by the lessee to pay the same and an implied promise by the lessee to repay the lessor the amount so paid. Juson v. Dixon (1 M. & S. 601) and MacGregor v. Clamp (83 L. Absolute Covenant or Qualifying Clause.]—An under-lease of a house contained the following clause: "The tenant shall use the said premises only for private residential purposes, but shall be entitled to carry on thereon a high-class boarding establishment": —Held, on construction, that the words "but shall be entitled to carry on thereon a high-class boarding establishment" were not an absolute covenant for title by the under-lessor, but merely a qualification of the preceding words. Milch v. Coburn, 55 S. J. 170; 27 T. L. R. 170—Joyce, J. Reversed, 55 S. J. 441; 27 T. L. R. 372—C.A.

Agreement to Let Premises for Dancing — Restrictive Covenant against Use of Premises for Dancing—Collateral Agreement.]—The plaintiff, in an action for damages for breach of warranty in connection with the letting to him of certain premises, alleged that, as a basis of negotiations which culminated in an agreement in writing whereby the defendants agreed to let and the plaintiff agreed to take the premises in question, the defendants verbally warranted to let the premises for dancing purposes. The defendants had no power to let the premises for such purposes without the consent of the superior landlord, and such consent was never in fact obtained. The plaintiff took possession under the agreement and expended considerable sums in alterations, and now claimed to recover the amount of such expenses less the sums received by him during his possession of the premises. There was no fraudulent misrepresentation:—Held, that the plaintiff had failed to establish the alleged parol agreement, and that even if the evidence had established that before the contract was entered into the plaintiff had asked whether the premises could be let for dancing and had been answered in the affirmative it would only have been evidence as to the subject-matter of the contract, and could not control, vary, or add to the terms of the written contract. Crawford v. White City Rink, 57 S. J. 357; 29 T. L. R. 318—Eve, J.

Not to Let as "motor garage."] — A covenant not to let premises as a "motor garage and office" is not infringed by letting them as a shed or house where motor cars may be taken for temporary storage, and for no other purpose. Derby Motor Cab Co. v. Crompton and Evans' Union Bank (No. 2), 31 T. L. R. 185—Eve, J.

Lessor not to Let any of Adjoining Shops for Purposes of Certain Trades—Meaning of word "Adjoining."] — The defendant, who was the owner of six shops in a terrace forming part of the Limes estate and numbered 1 to 6 consecutively, let No. 4 for a term of years to the plaintiffs, who covenanted not to carry on any trade or business except certain specially named trades or businesses, including that of cabinet makers, without the defendant's licence in writing. The defendant also covenanted with the plaintiffs that he would not at any time during the continuance of the lease "let or agree to let any of the adjoining shops belonging to him on the Limes estate" for the purpose of certain trades or businesses, including that of cabinet makers. Subsequently the defendant let shop No. 6 to G. for the purpose of carrying on the business (inter alia) of a cabinet maker. In an action to recover damages for breach of his covenant by the defendant,—Held, that shop No. 6 was an "adjoining" shop within the meaning of the covenant, which extended to all the shops, and that the defendant, by letting that shop to G., had committed a breach of his covenant with the plaintiffs, which entitled them to damages. Cave v. Horsell, 81 L. J. K.B. 981; [1912] 3 K.B. 533; 107 L. T. 186; 28 T. L. R. 543—C.A.

The defendants in a lease of premises to the plaintiffs covenanted not to let the "adjoining" premises as a motor garage and office without giving the plaintiffs the first refusal. The defendants having let premises which were near to, but not next door or physically adjoining, those let to the plaintiffs as a lock-up show room for motor cars without giving the plaintiffs the first refusal, the plaintiffs claimed an injunction:—Held, first, on the evidence, that the premises were not being used as a motor garage; and secondly, that the premises were not "adjoining" those let to the plaintiffs, and therefore on both grounds the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction. Cave v. Horsell (81 L. J. K.B. 981; [1912] 3 K.B. 533) distinguished. Derby Motor Cab Co. v. Crompton and Evans Union Bank (No. 1), 57 S. J. 701; 29 T. L. R. 673—Eve, J.

Not to Demise Adjoining Land for Erection of other than Specified Buildings—Height—Erection of Bandstand.]—The plaintiff was the owner and occupier of certain leasehold premises in C. Crescent, which in 1842 had been the subject of a demise for a term of ninety-nine years by the predecessors in title of the D. Harbour Board, whereby the lessors covenanted not, during the continuance of the term, to demise or lease any part of the ground between C. Crescent and the sea for the erection of any building other than public baths, with or without libraries, nor suffer any such building to be erected thereon to exceed the height of 15 feet 7 inches. In 1880 a bandstand was erected on the land which had been laid out as public gardens, and in 1893 an agreement was entered into between the board and the corporation for a yearly tenancy of the gardens. In 1911 the corporation executed improvements in the gardens, and erected a new bandstand on the site of the old, exceeding the height of 15 feet 7 inches. In an action by the plaintiff for a mandatory order to remove the bandstand,—Held, that, upon the true construction of the covenant contained in the lease of 1842, the board's predecessors had covenanted only not to demise the land in question for the erection of other than the specified buildings, and not to permit such buildings, if erected, to exceed the height of 15 feet 7 inches, and that there was no covenant not to permit any buildings erected thereon to exceed that height; and that there being no evidence that the board had leased, for the purpose of, or authorised the erecting of, the bandstand, there had been no breach of the covenant. Palliser v. Dover Corporation. 110 L. T. 619; 58 S. J. 379—Joyce, J.

Not to Carry on Business of Fishmonger—Prohibition against Using Premises "otherwise than as a restaurant"—Carrying on Fried-fish Shop—Annoyance to Neighbours.]—A lease of premises contained a covenant restricting the lessee from carrying on on the premises the business of a "fishmonger," or any other trade which should be a nuisance or an annoyance to the tenants or occupiers of any messuage in the neighbourhood. The lessee let a part of the premises to a tenant who agreed not to use the premises "otherwise than as a restaurant," and not to do upon the premises any act or thing which should or might be a "nuisance, annoyance, or inconvenience" to the lessee or her tenants or the occupiers of any adjoining houses or the neighbourhood. The tenant set up and carried on on the premises the business of a fried-fish shop for the sale of cooked fish for consumption on and off the premises. The occupier of the adjoining house had complained of the annoyance caused by the steam and smell from the fish shop. In an action by the lessee for an injunction to restrain the tenant from using the premises otherwise than as a restaurant, or so as to be an annoyance or inconvenience to occupiers in the neighbourhood,—Held, that the carrying on of the business of a fried-fish shop was not the carrying on of the business of a "fishmonger" within the meaning of the covenant in the lease; but that the use of the premises as a fried-fish shop was a use of the same "otherwise than as a restaurant," and was an "annoyance or inconvenience" to the occupiers of adjoining houses and the neighbourhood, and that the lessee was entitled to the injunction claimed. Errington v. Birt, 105 L. T. 373—Avory, J.

Premises not to be Used except for Business of Hosier.]—In a lease of certain premises the lessees covenanted that the demised premises should not, without the consent in writing of the lessors, be used in any way except for the purpose of carrying on therein the business or businesses of a hosier or hatter and mercer, including the sale of fancy waistcoats and mackintoshes:—Held, that the sale of overcoats (not being mackintoshes) and sports jackets on the premises was a breach of the covenant. Wartski v. Meaker, 110 L. T. 473; 58 S. J. 339—Joyce, J.

Condition—Yearly Tenancy—Tied Public House — Agreement to Continue Exclusive Dealing with Assignees of Reversion—Notice of Agreement to Assignee of Tenancy.]—M., a brewer in the town of S., let a public house to K. as tenant from year to year on the terms that K. would deal with M. exclusively for draught porter. The house, with the licence attached, was worth far more than the yearly rent, and, in fact, the only profit M. had out of it was the benefit of the agreement for exclusive dealing. D. & Co., brewers in the town of C., purchased M.'s reversion in the house, but did not acquire his brewery at S., which was discontinued. D. & Co. entered into an arrangement with K. to continue the yearly tenancy "on the same conditions as K. had formerly held under M." K. afterwards assigned the house to O'L. and informed O'L. "of the arrangement to deal with D. & Co. for draught porter." O'L. did not take any draught porter from D. & Co., but dealt with a rival firm:—Held, that the condition as to exclusive dealing with D. & Co. for draught porter was valid and binding on O'L. O'Leary v. Deasy, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 150—C.A.

To Build—Waiver—Covenant to Repair—Continuing Breach—Right of Re-entry.]—Where in a lease there is an express covenant to erect buildings by a certain date, a further continuing covenant to erect these buildings cannot be implied from a covenant to repair them contained in the same document. Dictum of Stirling, J., to the contrary effect in Jacob v. Down (69 L. J. Ch. 193; [1900] 2 Ch. 156) disapproved. Stephens v. Junior Army and Navy Stores, 84 L. J. Ch. 56; [1914] 2 Ch. 516; 111 L. T. 1055; 58 S. J. 808; 30 T. L. R. 697—C.A.

Where, therefore, the right of forfeiture for not erecting buildings pursuant to the building covenant has been waived, any right or forfeiture for not repairing these buildings has necessarily been waived also. Ib.

Lessor to Erect Buildings on Demised Property — Death of Lessor before Complete Performance — Incidence of Liability — Lessor's General Estate or Specific Devisees.]—A lease of premises used as pottery works contained a covenant by the lessor to build, if required by the lessees during the term, an additional oven and cone, shed and workshops according to a specified plan, though such a plan did not then exist. The lessor died during the term, having devised the property specifically. Only the workshops had been erected at his death. Disputes between the lessees and his executors were referred to arbitration, and the arbitrator's award directed the executors to erect the remaining works, and to pay the costs of the arbitration:—Held, that the covenant was not incident to the relation of landlord and tenant, but was intended to be performed forthwith, and not to remain attendant on the lease; and that the expenses of performing it must be discharged primarily out of the lessor's general estate, and not by the specific devisees. Eccles v. Mills (67 L. J. P.C. 25; [1898] A.C. 360) applied Hughes, In re; Ellis v. Hughes, 83 L. J. Ch. 31; [1913] 2 Ch. 491; 109 L. T. 509—Warrington, J.

Covenant not to Alter Premises without Landlord's Consent—"The like consent"—Consent Reasonably Withheld.] — A lessee covenanted with his lessor not to sub-let without the lessor's previous consent in writing, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld, and not "without the like consent" to make any alteration to the demised premises, which consisted of the gardens in the centre of a London square. The lessee subsequently proposed to erect a building in the said square, to which the lessor refused his consent:—Held, that the lessor was precluded from withholding his consent unreasonably to any proposed alteration by the lessee, but that in the circumstances his consent to the proposed alteration was reasonably withheld. Cartwright v. Russell, 56 S. J. 467—Joyce, J.

No Alteration in Elevation of Buildings—Electric Light Advertisements.] — Electric light advertisement held not to constitute a breach of a covenant in a lease not to permit "any alteration in the elevation of the buildings or in the architectural decoration thereof," on the ground that the covenant referred to an alteration in the fabric and not to an alteration in appearance caused by temporary advertisements and frameworks which could be removed at any time. Joseph v. London County Council, 111 L. Exclusion of Implied by Express Covenant.]—In 1903 the plaintiff demised to the defendant company certain lands for a term of years, subject as to part of the lands, to a weekly tenancy created therein by the plaintiff, together with "all the right, benefit, and advantage" of the plaintiff under a memorandum of agreement, by which the said tenancy had been created. By the said memorandum of agreement the payment of the weekly rent had been guaranteed by two sureties; but prior to 1903 the sureties had been released by the plaintiff. During the negotiations for the lease of 1903 a copy of the said memorandum of agreement was sent to the defendant company, but the release of the sureties was not disclosed by the plaintiff, nor was any requisition in relation to the contract of suretyship made by the defendant company. The lease contained an express covenant by the plaintiff for quiet enjoyment, which did not make any reference to the contract of suretyship. The defendant company, having failed to recover the weekly rent from the tenant, sued the sureties, who successfully relied on their release by the plaintiff. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant company for rent due under the lease of 1903, the defendant company counterclaimed damages for breach of contract to assign to them the full benefit of the contract of suretyship and for non-disclosure of the discharge of the sureties, but abandoned any claim founded on fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation:—Held, that the presence in the lease of the above-mentioned express covenant negatived the existence of any implied covenant or warranty that at the date when the lease was executed the contract of suretyship was still valid and subsisting, even assuming that such a covenant could otherwise have been implied from the terms of the lease, as to which quære. Murphy v. Bandon Co-operative Society, [1909] 2 Ir. Covenant by Lessee—Implied Covenant by Lessor.]—Where a lessor who is the owner of certain premises demises part of the premises to a lessee who covenants that he will conduct it as a restaurant, there is an implied covenant by the lessor that he will take all reasonable steps to prevent the lessee from being prejudiced in the business, and if the lessor demises to another lessee another part of the same premises and if with the knowledge and consent of the lessor disturbances occur therein which interfere with the first lessee's business, the lessor is liable to an injunction and damages at the suit of the first lessee. Malzy v. Eichholz, 32 T. I. OTHER RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF LANDLORD AND TENANT.

1. Tenant's Right to Compensation for Improvements under Agricultural Holdings Acts.

See also Vol. VIII. 1258, 1917.

Statutory Notice of Intention to Execute Improvements—Agreement to Dispense with Notice.]—In a claim by tenants of a holding for compensation under the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908, in respect of drainage improvements, it appeared that no notice in compliance with section 3, sub-section 1 of the Act [section 3 is in the same terms as section 3 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908] had been given by the tenants to the landlord, but the tenants maintained that there had been an agreement under section 3, sub-section 4 to dispense with notice. It was proved that, before the improvements were executed, the tenants had interviews with the landlord's factor, at which, although the question of compensation or notice was never specifically raised, the factor was informed of the nature of the proposed work; and that the tiles were supplied to the tenants under orders given by the landlord's factor and were paid for by the landlord, while the cartage and the laying of the drains were done by the tenants at their own expense, and that this was the custom on the estate:—Held, that an agreement to dispense with the notice required by section 3, sub-section 1 of the Act could not be inferred. Barbour v. M'Douall, [1914] S. C. 844—Ct. of Sess.

Whether such an agreement must be proved by writing, quære. Ib.

Notice of Claim—Time for.]—A clause in a lease by which an agricultural tenant can make no claim for compensation for improvements "later than one month prior to the determination of the tenancy" is void under section 36 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1883, as being inconsistent with the provisions of section 2, sub-section 2 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, under which he is entitled to claim up to the last day of his tenancy. Cathcart v. Chalmers. 80 L. J. P.C. 143; [1911] A.C. 246; 104 L. T. 355—H.L. (Sc.)

Improvements "then" Executed.]—The Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908, s. 29, sub-s. 2 [corresponding to section 42, sub-section 2 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908], begins with these words: "Where under a lease current on the first day of January, 1898, a holding was at that date in use or cultivation as a market garden . . . and the tenant thereof has then executed thereon . . . any improvement":—Held, that the word "then" means thereafter. Smith v. Callander (70 L. J. P.C. 53; [1901] A.C. 297) followed. Taylor v. Steel-Maitland, [1913] S. C. 562—Ct. of Sess.

Artificial Manure Applied in Terms of the Lease—"Benefit" Given by Landlord—Implied Benefit—Lower Rent.]—A lease contained a provision by which the tenant was bound to apply to the land a certain amount of farmyard manure per acre, and, so far as he had not sufficient farmyard manure for the purpose, to make up the amount with artificial manure. On quitting his holding the tenant claimed compensation for the unexhausted value of artificial manure applied in terms of that provision. The landlord maintained that the tenant was not entitled to claim compensation for manure applied in terms of the lease, in respect that he had received a "benefit" in the sense of section 1, sub-section 2 (a) of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908, the benefit of having to pay less rent than he would otherwise have to pay:—Held, that such an implied benefit was not a "benefit" in the sense of the section. M'Quater v. Fergusson, [1911] S. C. 640—Ct. of Sess.

Per The Lord President: A "benefit" must be one specially mentioned and allowed. Ib.

Improvements Executed in Accordance with Lease.]—A tenant is not entitled to compensation under the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908, for making an improvement comprised in Schedule I. to the Act, if the improvement was one which he was bound under his lease to execute. Galloway (Earl) v. M'Clelland, [1915] S. C. 1062—Ct. of Sess.

Whether, in order to entitle the tenant to compensation, it is necessary that the operation executed by him should result in an improvement in the condition of the holding at the waygoing as compared with its condition at the date of entry under the lease, quære. Ib.

"Benefit" Given by Landlord—Pasture Handed Over at Entry to Holding.]—A tenant under a lease entered into prior to the date of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908, claimed compensation under that Act for an improvement, in respect of temporary pasture laid down by him in carrying out the system of cultivation imposed on him by the lease. The landlord maintained that, if compensation fell to be awarded, the arbitrator must set against it the temporary pasture handed over to the tenant free of charge on his entry as being in terms of section 1, sub-section 2 (a) of the Act a "benefit" which the landlord had given or allowed to the tenant in consideration of his executing the improvement. There was no reference in the lease to the temporary pasture received by the tenant on his entry. Semble, that this temporary pasture, although it was not specially mentioned and allowed as a benefit, must be taken into account as being a benefit under section 1, sub-section 2 (a). M'Quater v. Fergusson ([1911] S. C. 640) discussed. Galloway (Earl) v. M'Clelland, [1915] S. C. 1062—Ct. of Sess.

Valuation of Stock.]—A valuation of stock which is to be taken over by the owner or the new tenant from the outgoing tenant is an arbitration and must be made in the method prescribed by section 11, sub-section 1 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908, notwithstanding any agreement in the lease providing a different method. [This section corresponds to section 13, sub-section 1 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908.] Stewart v. Williamson, 80 L. J. P.C. 29; [1910] A.C. 455; 102 L. T. 551—H.L. (Sc.)

—— Basis of Valuation.]—A lease of a farm provided that the tenant should, at the end of the lease, leave the sheep stock on the farm to the proprietor or incoming tenant at a valuation to be fixed by arbitration. In a Case stated under the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908, with regard to the basis of valuation to be adopted by the arbitrator, —Held, that it is the duty of the arbiter to value the sheep upon the basis of their value to an occupant of the farm in view of the arbiter's estimate of the return to be realised by such occupant from them, in accordance with the course of prudent management, in lambs, wool, and price when ultimately sold; and not upon the basis either, first, of market value only or, secondly, of the cost and loss which would be involved in the restocking of the farm with a like stock if the present sheep stock were removed. Held, further, that the arbiter is entitled to take into account both current market prices and the special qualities of the sheep, both in themselves and in their relation to the ground, which in his opinion will tend either to enhance or to diminish the return to be realised from them by an occupant of the farm. Williamson v. Stewart, [1912] S. C. 235—Ct. of Sess.

Compensation for Unreasonable Disturbance — Reasonable Opportunity to Landlord of Making Valuation of Tenants' Stock and Implements.]—The tenants of a holding gave notice to their landlord on May 24, 1912, that they intended to claim compensation under section 10 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908 [corresponding to section 11 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908], and thereafter without further notice or intimation to the landlord, proceeded on February 13, 1913, to sell their stock and implements by public auction :—Held, that the tenants had given to the landlord a reasonable opportunity of making a valuation in terms of the Act, there being no obligation on a tenant, on his own initiative, to make an offer to the landlord of such an opportunity. Barbour v. M'Douall, [1914] S. C. 844—Ct. of Sess.

Observed that, where there was a displenishing sale, what the tenant would be entitled to as compensation under the section would include not merely the expense of the sale, but also the loss through deterioration of the stock upon a sale. Ib.

Market Garden — Compensation — Tenancy from Year to Year—"Contract of tenancy current at the commencement of the Act."]—A tenant from year to year under a contract of tenancy current on January 1, 1896, of a holding which was at that date used to the knowledge of the landlord as a market garden, is not, in the absence of any agreement that the premises should be let or treated as a market garden, entitled to compensation for improvements executed by him or his predecessors after the earliest day on which, if notice had been given immediately after January 1, 1896, the tenancy could have been determined. Kedwell and Flint, In re, 80 L. J. K.B. 707; [1911] 1 K.B. 797; 104 L. T. 151; 55 S. J. 311—C.A.

Termination of Tenancy by Notice to Quit —"Good and sufficient cause"—"Reasons inconsistent with good estate management" —Demand of Increase of Rent—Reason for such Demand—Value of Holding Increased by Improvements.]—A notice to quit given by a landlord to the tenant of an agricultural holding in order that a higher rent may be obtained is a "good and sufficient cause" and is not a reason "inconsistent with good estate management" within the meaning of section 11 (a) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, and excludes the operation of the section which gives a tenant a right to compensation for disturbance. Observations of the Lord President (Lord Dunedin) on this point in Brown v. Mitchell ([1910] S. C. 369) approved. Bonnett and Fowler, In re, 82 L. J. K.B. 713; [1913] 2 K.B. 537; 108 L. T. 497; 77 J. P. 281—C.A.

—— Burden of Proof.]—The burden of proof prima facie lies on an agricultural tenant under section 11 (b) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, to shew, where an increase of rent has been demanded, that such increase was demanded by reason of an increase in the value of the holding due to improvements executed by or at the cost of the tenant and for which he has not, either directly or indirectly, received an equivalent from the landlord, and that such demand has resulted in the tenant quitting the holding. Ib.

—— Power of Court of Appeal to Draw Inferences of Fact. —Quære, whether the Court of Appeal has power to draw inferences of fact in an appeal from the decision of a County Court Judge on a Case stated by an arbitrator under the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908. Ib.

Application to County Court to Set Aside Award on Ground of Misconduct of Arbitrator —Refusal to Admit Material Evidence— Appeal.]—On the termination of a tenancy the landlord claimed damages for breach of a covenant to deliver up the premises "in as good and tenantable repair as they now are," and the claim was referred to an arbitrator under the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908. The tenant applied under the Act to the County Court to have his award set aside on the ground that he had misconducted himself by refusing to admit evidence as to the condition of the premises at the commencement of the tenancy. The County Court held that this was not misconduct within the meaning of the Act, and dismissed the application. The tenant appealed to the High Court :—Held, that section 120 of the County Courts Act, 1888, applied and that the appeal lay. Held also, that refusal by an arbitrator to admit material evidence is evidence of misconduct by him as arbitrator. Williams v. Wallis, 83 L. J. K.B. 1296; [1914] 2 K.B. 478; 110 L. T. 999; 78 J. P. 337; 12 L. G. R. 726; 58 S. J. 536—D.

2. Tenant's Obligation.

Implied Obligation of Tenant to Cultivate Land in a Husbandlike Manner according to the Custom of the Country — Measure of Damages.]—An agricultural farmer, occupying land as yearly tenant under a parol agreement, impliedly agrees with his landlord to cultivate the whole of the land in his occupation in a husbandlike manner, according to the custom of the country, whether the land is or is not in good condition at the commencement of his tenancy, and the measure of damage for breach of the implied agreement is the injury to the reversion occasioned by the breach. The diminution in the rent that the landlord will get on re-letting, or the allowance which he will have to make to the incoming tenant, may be a fair indication of the loss sustained by the landlord by reason of the breach, but such loss must be proved in the usual manner. Williams v. Lewis, 85 L. J. K.B. 40; [1915] 3 K.B. 493; 32 T. L. R. 42—Bray, J.

3. Wrongful Acts and Nuisances.

a. Liability of Landlord.

i. To Tenant.

Damage by Escape of Water from Lavatory—Negligence—Liability for Malicious Act of Third Person.]—The landlord of a building let out as offices to different tenants placed on the top floor a properly constructed lavatory basin for the use of his tenants. One night water escaped from this lavatory and damaged goods belonging to the tenant of a lower floor. In an action by the tenant against the landlord it was proved that the overflow was caused by the tap of the lavatory having been turned on and the pipes intentionally choked, and the jury found that the lavatory was in proper order when the caretaker left the building in the evening, and that the overflow was caused by "the malicious act of some person":—Held, that the landlord was not liable for the consequences of a wrongful act, which he could not have reasonably anticipated, committed by a third person. Rickards v. Lothian, 82 L. J. P.C. 42; [1913] A.C. 263; 108 L. T. 225; 57 S. J. 281; 29 T. L. R. 281—P.C.

Unfurnished Flat — Repair of Roof — Duty of Lessor — Whether Absolute — Breach — Claim for Rent—Whether a Defence.]—The lessor of an unfurnished flat, where the roof forms no part of the demise, but remains in the control of the lessor, owes an absolute duty to his lessee to keep the roof in repair and is not merely under an obligation to use reasonable care to keep it in repair. A breach of this duty is, however, no answer to a claim for rent, but is a matter for cross-action. Miller v. Hancock ([1893] 2 Q.B. 177) considered and applied. Hart v. Rogers, 32 T. L. R. 150—Scrutton, J.

ii. To Third Parties.

Wife of Tenant of House—Injured Owing to Defect in Stair.]—The wife of the tenant of a dwelling house on a common stair claimed damages against the landlord for injuries sustained by her owing to the defective condition of the stair. The defender pleaded that the pursuer had no title to sue as she was not a party to the lease:—Held, that the pursuer was entitled to sue, in respect that the stair was not included in the lease, but remained under the control of the landlord, who was bound to keep it reasonably safe for tenants and others using it as a means of access to the houses. Cameron v. Young (77 L. J. P.C. 68; [1908] A.C. 176) and Cavalier v. Pope (75 L. J. K.B. 609; [1906] A.C. 428) distinguished. Mellon v. Henderson, [1913] S. C. 1207—Ct. of Sess.

—— Dangerous Premises—Building Let out in Flats—Building Approached by Flight of Steps — Steps in Possession of Landlord—Steps not Protected by Railing.]—The defendant was the owner of a tenement house, the rooms on each floor of which were separately let out in flats. The house was entered by a front door on the ground-floor level, which was approached from the street by a flight of six or seven steps, which were only protected on each side by a coping about eight inches high, and on either side of the steps was an area. These steps remained in the possession of the defendant. The plaintiff, who lived with her husband in two rooms on the ground floor, of which her husband was the tenant, alleged that she tripped in consequence of a defect in one of the steps and fell into the area owing to the steps being insufficiently fenced, and was injured. She sued the defendant for damages for negligence in respect of the condition of the steps. The jury found that the plaintiff was injured through a defect in the flight of steps, which consisted not in the defective condition of the steps, as alleged by the plaintiff, but in the absence of a railing at the side of the steps; that the defect was due to the negligence of the defendant, but that the plaintiff knew of the existence of the defect prior to the accident:—Held, that although, under the circumstances, the defendant was under an implied duty towards persons using the steps to see that there was nothing in the nature of a trap, yet as the plaintiff knew of the absence of the railings prior to the accident, and the danger, if any, was patent to every one, she voluntarily took upon herself to bear the risk, and therefore could not recover. Huggett v. Miers (77 L. J. K.B. 710; [1908] 2 K.B. 278) followed. Miller v. Hancock ([1893] 2 Q.B. 177) distinguished. Lucy v. Bawden, 83 L. J. K.B. 523; [1914] 2 K.B. 318; 110 L. T. 580; 30 T. L. R. 321—Atkin, J.

—— Defective Condition of House.]—The wife of the tenant of a house to which the Housing, Town Planning, &c. Act, 1909, applies, has no cause of action against the landlord in respect of injuries sustained by her by reason of the premises being out of repair. Middleton v. Hall, 108 L. T. 804; 77 J. P. 172—Bankes, J.

Injury to Tenant's Daughter.]—The undertaking implied by section 15 of the Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, in a contract for the letting for habitation of a house at a rent not exceeding the sum therein mentioned, that the house shall, during the holding, be kept by the landlord in all respects reasonably fit for human habitation, is a purely contractual obligation, and gives the tenant of the house alone a right to sue for a breach of the undertaking. Ryall v. Kidwell, 83 L. J. K.B. 1140; [1914] 3 K.B. 135; 111 L. T. 240; 78 J. P. 377; 12 L. G. R. 997; 30 T. L. R. 503—C.A.

The daughter of the tenant of a house to which sections 14 and 15 of the Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, applied, was injured through the failure of the landlord to keep the house in all respects reasonably fit for human habitation :—Held, that she was not entitled to maintain an action against the landlord for a breach of the statutory undertaking. Cavalier v. Pope (74 L. J. K.B. 857; 75 L. J. K.B. 609; [1905] 2 K.B. 757; [1906] A.C. 428) applied. Ib.

Decision of the Divisional Court (82 L. J. K.B. 877; [1913] 3 K.B. 123) affirmed. Ib.

Injury to Tenant's Child—Demise of Single Room in House—Flight of Steps Giving Access to House—Gap in Railings Protecting Steps from Area.]—The defendant was the owner of a house containing four rooms, one of which she let to a tenant at a weekly rent. The house was approached from the street by a flight of steps, on each side of which was an area, and the steps were protected from the area on both sides by railings. From the railing on one side one of the upright posts was missing, so that there was a gap in the railing on that side. The post had been so missing from a time before the commencement of the tenancy. The tenant's child, a boy of the age of three and a-half years, while playing on the steps fell through the gap into the area, and was seriously injured. In an action by the infant to recover damages for personal injuries, and by the father to recover out-of-pocket expenses, alleging negligence on the part of the defendant in not keeping the railings in a reasonable safe and fit state of repair, thus causing a danger and a nuisance to persons lawfully using the steps,—Held, that, there being nothing in the nature of a trap, the defendant was not liable. Miller v. Hancock ([1893] 2 Q.B. 177) distinguished. Dobson v. Horsley, 84 L. J. K.B. 399; [1915] 1 K.B. 634; 112 L. T. 101; 31 T. L. R. 12—C.A.

Visitor Injured through Defect in Outside Stair Giving Access to Premises.]—The only access to premises let to a tenant was by an outside stair and gangway which formed the access to these premises alone. All the repairs to the stair and gangway were executed by the landlord and not by the tenant. A visitor to the premises having been injured through the defective condition of the stair and gangway, sued the landlord for damages :—Held (Lord Skerrington dub.), that the landlord was not liable in respect that, in the circumstances, he could not be held to have retained possession and control of the stair and gangway. M'Ilwaine v. Stewart's Trustees, [1914] S. C. 934—Ct. of Sess.

Injuries Sustained by Trespasser—Holding over by Tenant.]—In an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained through the negligence of the defendants, evidence was given that the plaintiff (who was a minor of six years of age) resided with his parents in two rooms on the first floor of a tenement house; that the parents had held these rooms on a weekly tenancy from the defendants; that the stairs and landings were kept by the defendants under their own control; that on August 8, 1910, the defendant served a notice to quit upon the parents; that this notice expired on the 15th; that on the 16th demand of possession was made; that on the 17th a summons under the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Act, 1851, was issued to recover possession of the premises; that on the 22nd the infant plaintiff fell through an open window, on the same landing as the rooms, to the yard below, a distance of some twenty-four feet; that on the 25th an order for possession was obtained from the magistrate :—Held, on these facts, that the infant plaintiff and his parents were trespassers, and there was therefore no obligation on the landlord to maintain the premises in such a condition as to prevent the child falling through the window in question. Coffee v. McEvoy, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 95—K.B. D. Affirmed, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 290—C.A.

Whether Freeholder or Tenant Liable to Sub-tenant.]—A tenement of eight houses was let by the proprietor to a company, and the individual houses were sub-let by the company to their employees. A child visiting one of the houses, which was approached by an outside stair common to that and to another house, fell from the stair in consequence of a concealed defect in the railing, and was injured. In an action for damages against the proprietor and the company,—Held, that the latter were alone liable on the ground that they had possession and control of the stair and railing, and that in consequence of their contract with their tenant the child was to be regarded as being on the stair on their invitation. Kennedy v. Shotts Iron Co., [1913] S. C. 1143—Ct. of Sess.

Nuisance — Rabbit Coursing — Evidence——Judicial Notice—Pleading.]—An owner let his field for the holding of rabbit-coursing matches on Sundays and Wednesdays. The holding of the meetings was a nuisance to the adjoining owner :—Held, that the agreement for the use of the field amounted to a letting and not a mere licence; that the landlord was only liable for the nuisance if it was the inevitable result of the purpose for which the land was let. Held, further, that the fact that the rabbit coursing was an inevitable nuisance was a fact which ought to have been pleaded, that the Court could not take judicial notice of such a fact, but that it must be proved by evidence. Ayers v. Hanson, 56 S. J. 735—Warrington, J.

b. Liability of Tenant.

Tenant's Duty to Preserve Premises from Injury—Duty to Turn off Water when Leaving House Empty.]—The tenant of a villa, who left it unoccupied for a month in winter without having either turned off the water or informed the landlord of her intended absence, held liable to the landlord for damage caused by the bursting of the water pipes owing to frost. Mickel v. M'Coard, [1913] S. C. 896—Ct. of Sess.

1. Notice to Treat.

Mortgaged Property—Assessing Compensation in Absence of Mortgagee—Entry by Promoters—Right to Serve Subsequent Notice to Treat on Mortgagee.]—Promoters of an undertaking who have proceeded to assess the compensation in respect of mortgaged premises which they are empowered to acquire in the absence of the mortgagee, and have entered into possession, do not thereby lose the right to serve a subsequent notice to treat on the mortgagee, nor will they be restrained from exercising their statutory powers against him. Cooke v. London County Council, 80 L. 2. What Lands or Interests.

See also Vol. VIII. 1328, 1933.

a. For what Purposes.

Building Necessary for the Working of Tramway—Residences for Staff.]—The appellant company had by statute compulsory powers of taking land "in case the construction of any tramway, or of any works or building necessary for the working thereof pursuant to the terms of the licence granted, involves the acquisition of" such land. The licence required them to construct, maintain, and work tramways "with all . . . necessary and convenient . . . buildings . . . for the due and efficient working of the said tramways": —Held, that their compulsory powers did not extend to taking land for the erection of residences for the housing of their staff. West India Electric Co. v. Kingston Corporation, 83 L. J. P.C. 380; [1914] A.C. 986; 111 L. T. 1038—P.C.

Conditions of Lease—Public Purpose——Provision of Residences for Government Officers—Right to Resume Possession.]—In order to constitute a "public purpose" in taking land it is not necessary that the land when taken is to be made available to the public at large. Hamabai Framjee Petit v. Secretary of State for India, L. R. 42 Ind. App. 44—P.C.

The Government had, under a lease, a right, subject to giving notice and paying compensation, to resume possession of the land granted if they desired to use it for a public purpose. The Government gave notice of their intention to resume possession with the object of using the land for the provision of residences to be let at moderate rentals to Government officers: —Held, that the use to which it was proposed to put the land was a "public purpose" within the meaning of the lease. Ib.

Exercise of Powers by Congested Districts Board.]—Where an administrative body has been authorised by statute to take land compulsorily for specified purposes, the Court will not interfere with the exercise of such powers if the administrative body in its discretion bona fide intends to take land for those purposes and if the land is in fact capable of being used for them. Clanricarde (Marquess) v. Congested Districts Board for Ireland, 13 L. G. R. 415; 79 J. P. 481; 31 T. L. R. 120—H.L. (Ir.)

b. Houses, Buildings and Manufactories.

Part of "House or other building or manufactory"—Requiring Promoters to take Whole—Undertaking of Canal Company—Meaning of "Building."]—A "building" within the meaning of section 92 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, is something in the nature of a house, although in ordinary language it would not be called a house. Observations of Brett, L.J., in Richards v. Swansea Improvement and Tramways Co. (9 Ch. D. 425), followed:—Held, therefore, that the undertaking of a canal company, though it included, besides the canal, a number of houses and other buildings, was not a "building" within the meaning of section 92, and that promoters, who desired to take under statutory powers some pieces of land belonging to the company, could not be required to take the whole undertaking. Regent's Canal and Dock Co. v. London County Council, 81 L. J. Ch. 377; [1912] 1 Ch. 583; 106 L. T. 745; 76 J. P. 353; 10 L. G. R. 358; 56 S. J. 309; 28 T. L. R. 248—Warrington, J.

Power of Canal Company to Convey Whole Undertaking.]—Semble, that the canal company could have conveyed the whole undertaking under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. Ib.

Power to Acquire Part of Property Subject to Proviso against Interference with Main Structure—Destruction of Access to Chapel.]—By section 18 of the London County Council (Tramways and Improvements) Act, 1913, the Council were given power in connection with certain street improvements to take the parts of properties specified in the Third Schedule to the Act without being required or compelled to purchase the whole of such properties, but there was a proviso that the section was not to "entitle the Council to take or interfere with the main structure of any house, building, or manufactory." Under this section the Council served notice to treat for the acquisition of the "forecourt, walls, gates and railings" of a Baptist chapel specified in the Third Schedule. The result of the taking of this forecourt and the lowering of its level for the purpose of a street widening would be to make access to the chapel impossible without extensive alterations to the main structure:—Held, that the taking of the forecourt amounted to an interference with the main structure of the chapel, and that section 18 of the special Act was therefore inapplicable and that the Council could not acquire compulsorily the lands specified in the notice without taking the whole building. Genders v. London County Council, 84 L. J. Ch. 42; [1915] 1 Ch. 1; 112 L. T. 365; 79 J. P. 121; 13 L. G. R. 14; 59 S. J. 58; 31 T. L. R. 34—C.A.

II. PURCHASE MONEY, DISPOSAL OF.

See also Vol. VIII. 1380, 1939.

A. Payment out to Persons Absolutely Entitled.

Compensation Money Lodged in Court—Words in Deed Sufficient to Pass.]—X was tenant in tail in remainder, under an indenture of settlement made in 1870, of considerable estates in Galway and in other parts of Ireland. In 1890 a railway company acquired a small portion of the Galway lands under their compulsory powers, and the compensation money was lodged and remained in Court. In 1901 X mortgaged his estates by several instruments in which they were variously described as "all my estates in Galway and wheresoever situate in Ireland," "all my estate situate in Galway and elsewhere in Ireland," and "all my lands, hereditaments, and premises in county Galway, Ireland, and other lands, hereditaments, and premises wheresoever situate in Ireland." X was adjudicated a bankrupt in England in 1902, and the estate tail in remainder given to him by the settlement having subsequently become an estate in possession, the official receiver and trustee of his estate duly executed a disentailing assurance of the lands comprised in and settled by the indenture of settlement of 1870, and all other "if any, the tenements and hereditaments of or to which the said X was seised or entitled as tenant in tail whether at law or in equity, under the said indenture or otherwise howsoever." Upon a summons by the official receiver in bankruptcy for payment out of Court of the compensation moneys, which was opposed by the mortgagee,—Held, first, that the compensation moneys were not included in the mortgage; and secondly, that they were included in the disentailing assurance and should be paid out to the official receiver in bankruptcy. Ballinrobe and Claremorris Light Railway and Kenny, Ex parte, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 519—Barton, J.

B. Costs of Payment Out.

Trustees for Purposes of Settled Land Acts—Petition by—Tenant for Life Respondent—Costs.]—Where there is a petition for payment out of Court of money paid in by a railway company as the purchase money of real estate settled by the will of a testator, which the company had taken under their compulsory powers, presented by the trustees of the will for the purposes of the Settled land Acts, and that petition is served upon the tenant for life, the tenant for life is entitled to be separately represented and to have his costs paid by the railway company. Piggin, In re; Mansfield Railway, ex parte, 82 L. J. Ch. 431; [1913] 2 Ch. 326; 108 L. T. 1014—Warrington, J.

Order for Transfer to Several Transferees—Separate Fees for Requests and Attendance before Paymaster.]—The allowance of two fees for attendance before the Accountant-General, on an application, under the new rules for payment out of funds paid in under the Lands Clauses Act, which originated when under the practice in Chancery under the old Consolidated Orders it was necessary for the solicitor to attend both before the Registrar and also before the Accountant-General, was held to be common form to-day, and such fees were accordingly not disallowed. Butler's Will, In re; Metropolitan Board of Works, ex parte, 106 L. T. 673; 56 S. J. 326—Parker, J.

Costs Incidental to Application for Payment out—Letters of Administration—Tenant for Life.]—Freehold premises, which were devised to a widow for life, and after her death to her children as tenants in common in fee, were during the life tenancy taken compulsorily and the purchase money paid into Court. On the death of the life tenant, the fund, which was divisible into six shares, was ordered to be distributed and the costs paid by the promoters, in accordance with the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 80. Upon taxation the Master disallowed (a) the costs of taking counsel's opinion as to the persons entitled, (b) the costs of an application to the Probate Division for leave to presume the death of one child, and (c) the costs of obtaining administration to the estates of two children who predeceased the tenant for life. The applicants appealed:—Held, by Astbury, J., that the costs under heading (a) were not payable by the promoters; but held, by the Court of Appeal (affirming Astbury, J.), that the costs under headings (b) and (c) were reasonable charges incident to obtaining payment of the fund out of Court, and were therefore payable by the promoters. Lloyd and North London Railway (City Branch) Act, 1861, In re (65 L. A. In Respect of what Injuries.

Mortgaged Lands—Mortgagee in Possession—Part taken Compulsorily—Claim of Compensation for Injurious Affection of Residue.]—Mortgagees of lands in possession with a power of sale are entitled under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, as being parties entitled to sell and convey them, to the rights of owners thereof. Where part of the mortgaged lands is taken they are also entitled, as being parties interested in such lands, to claim compensation for damage by reason of the residue being injuriously affected by the execution of the works by the promoters of the undertaking. Their rights in that respect are not restricted by the special provisions relating to mortgagees in sections 108 to 114 of the Act. Rex v. Middlesex (Clerk of the Peace), 83 L. J. C. In Respect of what Persons.

Mortgaged Lands—Mortgagee in Possession—Part taken Compulsorily—Claim of Compensation for Injurious Affection of Residue.]—Mortgagees of lands in possession with a power of sale are entitled under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, as being parties entitled to sell and convey them, to the rights of owners thereof. Where part of the mortgaged lands is taken they are also entitled, as being parties interested in such lands, to claim compensation for damage by reason of the residue being injuriously affected by the execution of the works by the promoters of the undertaking. Their rights in that respect are not restricted by the special provisions relating to mortgagees in sections 108 to 114 of the Act. Rex v. Middlesex (Clerk of the Peace), 83 L. J. D. Principles of Assessment.

Land Specially Adapted to Railway Purposes.]—On the expiration of the lease of a piece of land over which the main line of a railway company passed, the company obtained compulsory powers to purchase the land. This railway was also the only means of conveying coal from the neighbouring collieries to their port of shipment:—Held, that in assessing compensation the arbitrator ought to take into consideration the special adaptability of the land for railway purposes, because had the railway company not obtained compulsory powers they would have had to compete with the colliery companies for its acquisition; but that he ought not to consider its special value to the railway company in respect of the fact that a part of the passenger railway ran over it, for there could be no competition with any other for its purchase, as the railway company alone could use it for the purposes of a passenger railway, and in the absence of competition the doctrine of special adaptability had no application. Sidney v. North-Eastern Railway, 83 L. J. K.B. 1640; [1914] 3 K.B. 629; 111 L. T. 677—D.

Restricted Use of Land.]—Where land is taken compulsorily for public purposes the value upon which compensation is to be assessed is the value to the old owner who parts with the property, not the value to its new owner who takes it over. If, therefore, the old owner holds the property subject to restrictions, the question of how far those restrictions affect the value is to be considered in assessing the compensation. Hilcoat v. Canterbury and York (Archbishops) (19 L. J. C.P. 376; 10 C. B. 327) and Stebbing v. Metropolitan Board of Works (40 L. J. Q.B. 1; L. R. 6 Q.B. 37) discussed and explained. Corrie v. MacDermott, 83 L. J. Owner of Two Contiguous Pieces of Land—One Building Site—Purchase of Strip of one Piece without Reference to other Piece—Valuation.]—Where the owner of two contiguous pieces of land, which he has separately acquired, sells under compulsion a strip of one piece without any reference to his interest in the other piece, the purchase price of the strip must be ascertained without reference to the other piece, although the vendor has, after the purchase has been agreed upon, dealt with the two properties as one building site. South-Eastern Railway v. London County Council, 84 L. E. Settling Amount and Practice Thereon.

1. Reference to Arbitration.

a. Award.

Light Railway — Taking up Award — Mandamus.]—The promoters of a light railway under an Order made under the Light Railways Act, 1896, incorporating the Lands

Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, are bound under section 35 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to take up an award of compensation in respect of land compulsorily acquired by the company, and if they fail to do so the Court will issue a mandamus to compel them to take up the award. The provisions of the Light Railways Act, 1896, are only substituted for those of the Lands Clauses Act as regards the manner of the determination of the compensation—the amount being ascertained by a single arbitrator instead of by the verdict of a jury, by arbitration, or by two Justices, as under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. Rex v. Barton and Immingham Light Railway; Simon, Ex parte, 81 L. J. K.B. 964; [1912] 3 K.B. 72; 76 J. P. 344—D.

Action on Award—Statute of Limitations.] —See Turner v. Midland Railway, post, col. 860.

b. Costs.

Award in Favour of Plaintiff — Costs — Sufficiency of Previous Offer.]—A railway company having, pursuant to compulsory powers, diverted a public footpath, the owner of adjoining land claimed compensation under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, on the ground that the diversion of the footpath had injuriously affected his estate and interest in such land, and the matter went to arbitration. The company, before appointing their arbitrator, wrote to the claimant stating that they had arranged for the construction of a road which would compensate him for the diversion of the footpath, and, "on the understanding that such road will be made," offering him 50*l.* in settlement of his claim. The proposed road was in fact completed before the arbitration took place. The umpire awarded the plaintiff 50*l.* compensation and his costs :—Held, that the company's offer was not a valid offer under section 34 of the Act, inasmuch as it was not a plain, clear, and unconditional offer of a sum of money only, but was an offer of either a sum of money and the making of a road, or a sum of money conditional upon the making of a road; and consequently, as in effect no sum had been offered at all under the section, the plaintiff's costs of and incident to the arbitration should be borne by the company. Fisher v. Great Western Railway, 80 L. J. K.B. 299; [1911] 1 K.B. 551; 103 L. T. 885; 55 S. J. 76; 27 T. L. R. 96—C.A.

LAND TRANSFER.

Vendor and Purchaser—Leasehold Land—Ninety-nine Years Term—Mortgage by Sub-demise Less One Day—Registration of Term—Sale by Mortgagee under Statutory Power—Requisitions.]—Where leasehold land is registered under the Land Transfer Acts, after a mortgage by sub-demise for the terms less one day has been created (and not registered), the mortgagee selling under the statutory power of sale is not the vendor of registered land within the meaning of section 16, sub-section 2 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, and the purchaser is not entitled to require him either to be registered as proprietor of the land or of a charge giving a power of sale over the land, or to procure a transfer from the registered proprietor to the purchaser. Voss and Saunders' Contract, In re, 80 L. J. Ch. 33; [1911] 1 Ch. 42; 103 L. T. 493; 55 S. J. 12—Warrington, J.

Land held under a lease of ninety-nine years was sub-demised, by way of mortgage, for the residue of the term less the last day. The mortgage contained no express power of sale, but a provision that on a sale by the mortgagee under the statutory power the mortgagor should stand possessed of the last day in trust for the purchaser. Subsequently a purchaser from the mortgagor was registered under the Land Transfer Act, 1897, as the first proprietor, with possessory title. The mortgage having been transferred, the transferee's executor contracted under the statutory power of sale to sell. To a requisition by the purchaser that the vendor must get himself put on the register as the registered proprietor, the vendor replied that he would not, as he was not selling a registered title :—Held, that the requisition had been sufficiently answered. Ib.

LICENCE.

Power to Revoke Licence—Theatre—Ticket for Seat—Effect of Purchase—Right to Retain Seat—Mere Licence—Licence Coupled with an Interest.]—The plaintiff was occupying a seat, for which he had bought a ticket, in the defendants' theatre during a cinematograph exhibition, when he was forcibly removed by the defendants' servants under the mistaken belief that he had not obtained a ticket for his seat. In answer to an action for assault, the defendants, on the authority of Wood v. Ledbitter (14 L. J. Ex. 161; 13 M. & W. 838) asserted that the plaintiff had a mere licence to be in the theatre, and claimed that they had the power to revoke that licence at will at any time:—Held (Phillimore, L.J., dissenting), that since the Judicature Act, Wood v. Ledbitter (supra) was no longer law, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for the assault. Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Lim., 83 L. Right to Revoke — Assignment of Subject-matter to which Licence Attached.]—By a contract contained in an agreement not under seal, entered into on July 1, 1913, between the defendant, therein described as "the licensor," and the plaintiffs, described as "the licensees," the defendant granted to the plaintiffs exclusive permission to affix posters and advertisements to one of the walls of a picture house proposed to be erected on his property by a company about to be formed for a term of four years from November 1, 1913, or the first day the picture house should be opened for business, at a rent of 12*l.* per annum. An agreement for a lease of the site, dated August 29, 1913, and made between the defendant and a trustee for the Picture House Co., provided that the defendant should assign to the trustee for the company his interest under the agreement of July 1, and that the trustee should, as soon as the company should be registered, obtain the ratification by the company of the said agreement. On September 2, 1913, the Picture House Co. was registered with articles of association containing a provision for carrying the agreement of August 29 into effect. The lease to the company was executed on September 13, 1913, and at a meeting of directors on the same day the agreement of August 29 was ratified and adopted. Neither the articles of association nor the lease contained any reference to the agreement of July 1. The Picture House Co., having refused the permission granted by the licence, the licensees brought an action for damages for breach of contract against the licensor:—Held (Kenny, J., dissenting), that the licensor was answerable in damages for breach of the contract embodied in the agreement of July 1. Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Lim. (83 L. Contract for Work to be Done upon Goods —Sub-contract for Part of Work—Right of Sub-contractor to Retain Goods as against Owner — General Lien — Particular Lien — Calico-printing Trade — Custom as to Bleacher's Right of Lien.]—The plaintiffs, being possessed of a quantity of calico, sent it to some calico printers to be printed. The printers, without any express authority from the plaintiffs so to do, sent on the calico to the defendants, who were bleachers, with instructions to them to bleach it. There was nothing in these instructions to indicate to whom the goods belonged, but each piece of calico was marked with the plaintiffs' initials. On the defendants' invoices and on their correspondence paper was a printed notice that all goods received by them would be subject to a lien for the general balance of account. After the defendants had bleached all the calico, and while half of it remained in their hands, the printers went into liquidation, being indebted to the defendants in respect of a general balance of account between them. The plaintiffs demanded delivery from the defendants of the calico which remained in their hands, but the defendants, relying on an alleged custom in the calico-printing trade, claimed to be entitled to retain the goods under a lien for the general balance of account between themselves and the printers. The defendants also asserted such a general lien by virtue of an authority from the plaintiffs to the printers to create such a lien to be implied from the ordinary course of business in the calico-printing trade. In the alternative the defendants asserted a particular lien for the price of bleaching the plaintiffs' goods:—Held, such alleged custom not being proved, and there being no evidence of such implied authority, that the defendants were not entitled to retain the goods under either a general lien or a particular lien. Cassils & Co. v. Holden Wood Bleaching Co., 84 L. Contract to Maintain Motor Car and Supply Driver and Materials — Right to Lien for Unpaid Moneys — Maintaining but not Improving Article—Owner to be at Liberty to Remove Article.]—If a repairer under a contract to repair an article improves the article by the repair, he has a lien on it for the amount of his charges; but if he merely maintains it in its former condition he gets no lien on it for the amount spent on maintenance. Even if in such circumstances the contractor had a lien, it would be lost under an arrangement by which the owner of the article was to be at liberty to remove it at pleasure, and did so remove it. Where, therefore, a company contracted with the owner of a motor car to maintain it, supply all necessaries for running it, and repair it if it broke down, and to supply a driver, for a fixed annual sum, and the company permitted the owner to remove the car from their garage as often as she pleased,—Held, that the company had no lien on the car for moneys due from the owner under the contract. Hatton v. Car Maintenance Co., 84 L. Bills of Exchange — Promissory Note — Calculation of the Six Years—Limit Expiring on Sunday—Order LXIV. rule 3.]—The time for payment of a promissory note, including the days of grace, expired on Saturday, September 22, 1906. The writ in the action to recover the amount due on the note was issued on Monday, September 23, 1912:—Held, that the action on the note was barred by the Statute of Limitations, as the cause of action was complete on the expiration of September 22, 1906, the day on which payment was due, and the six years next after the cause of such action, within which the action must be brought in order to comply with the Limitation Act, 1623, expired on Sunday, September 22, 1912. Held, further, that Order LXIV. rule 3 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, which provides that, "Where the time for doing any act or taking any proceeding expires on a Sunday, or other day on which the offices are closed, and by reason thereof such act or proceeding cannot be done or taken on that day, such act or proceeding shall, so far as regards the time of doing or taking the same, be held to be duly done or taken if done or taken on the day on which the offices shall next be open," has no effect on the operation of the Statute of Limitations, and that therefore the writ, which was issued on Monday, September 23, 1912, could not be considered as having been issued on Sunday, September 22, 1912. Gelmini v. Moriggia, 82 L. Express Trustee—Shipping Agent—Sale of Cargo in Course of Business—Payment of Salvage Claims — Balance Remaining in Agent's Hands.]—The plaintiff was the surviving partner of a firm who carried on the business of average adjusters in Paris. In the year 1883 a vessel called the International became a total wreck near Ramsgate. The bill of lading was sent by the plaintiff's firm, who was acting for the insurers, to the defendant, who was a shipping agent, with instructions to sell the cargo on behalf of the firm. The cargo was sold by the defendant, and, after deducting salvage claims and other expenses, there remained in his hands a sum of 96*l.*, which appeared for several years in his books as owing in respect of the vessel. The entry ceased to appear after the year 1888, but the amount was not paid over to the plaintiff's firm. In an action brought by the plaintiff in 1912 to recover the sum of 96*l.* the defendant pleaded that the claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that as the defendant had been employed to sell the cargo in the ordinary course of his business, he was not bound to keep the proceeds of the sale as a separate fund to be paid over to the plaintiff's firm; that the defendant was not therefore an express trustee of the amount, but only a debtor to the plaintiff in respect of the ultimate balance of account as between them, and that the claim was consequently barred by the Statute of Limitations. Henry v. Hammond, 82 L. Payment to Wrong Beneficiary—Mistake of Fact—Right of Recovery—Lapse of Time.]—The right of a cestui que trust to recover a trust fund from another cestui que trust, to whom the fund has been wrongfully paid by the trustee through a bona fide mistake of fact, of which all parties were ignorant, can be defeated by the Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1. c. 16), where the claim is in the nature of a claim for money, and not for a specific trust fund impressed with the trust. Harris v. Harris (No. 2) (29 Beav. 110) explained. Robinson, In re; McLaren v. Public Trustee, 80 L. Equitable Charge on Lands Appointed in Certain Shares—Interest.]—Certain shares in an equitable charge of 20,000*l.* were appointed, pursuant to a power contained in marriage articles, to the daughters of the marriage, and were by them assigned to the trustees of their respective settlements. 8,000*l.*, the share appointed to one of the daughters, was afterwards paid off by J. P. the father, who was at the time tenant for life of the lands subject to the charge, and was assigned to him for his own benefit. Subsequently J. P. assigned 3,001*l.*, portion of this sum of 8,000*l.*, to the trustees of the settlement of another of the daughters. On his death in 1877 the entire charge became raisable. Since that time interest had been regularly paid on the other appointed shares and also on the 3,001*l.*, but no payment of principal or interest had been made since that time or acknowledgment given in respect of the 4,999*l.*, the balance of the 8,000*l.*:—Held, that the claim to the 4,999*l.* was barred. Young v. Lord Waterpark (8 L. Account against Executor, at Suit of Creditor—Right to be Allowed Payments made to Beneficiaries More than Six Years before Action.]—Notwithstanding section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, an order for an account against an executor in a creditors' administration action ought not to be so limited as to entitle the executor to be allowed sums paid to beneficiaries more than six years before the commencement of the proceedings, the provisions of the section being inapplicable to the case. Dictum of Fletcher Moulton, L.J., in Lacons v. Warmoll (76 L. Residuary Devise of Real and Personal Estate — Trust to Sell and Convert — Trust to Pay Debts—Mixed Fund—Whether Debt Barred so far as Attributable to the Personal Estate.]—A testator devised the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and out of the moneys produced by such sale and conversion to pay his debts :—Held, that the testator by creating a mixed fund and imposing a duty not on the executors, but on the trustees, of paying his debts out of that mixed fund, had created a charge not of a part but of the whole of the debts on the real estate, and that it could not be said that any particular part of the debts was attributable to the personal estate; therefore no part of a claim for a debt was barred by the Statutes of Limitation if brought within twelve years of the testator's death. Query of Kay, J., in Stephens, In re; Warburton v. Stephens (59 L. 5. Bankrupt.

Power of Appointment—Exercise—Effect of Bankruptcy.]—Where a person has the absolute power of appointing the capital of a trust fund by will, the exercise of such power, coupled with the death of the appointer, does not give his creditors a new cause of action, but merely a new remedy. Where a cause of action has arisen and the Statute of Limitations has begun to run, the subsequent bankruptcy of the debtor does not prevent the statute from continuing to run. Benzon, In re; Bower v. Chetwynd, 83 L. III. Matters in Avoidance of the Statutes.

1. Acknowledgment.

Letter—Admission.]—The plaintiff sued the defendant for money lent. To the defence that the claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations the plaintiff relied on the following letter, written to him by the defendant as being a sufficient acknowledgment to prevent the operation of the statute : "I do not forget, old friend, the debt I owe you, and which I do wish I could wipe out. Why, it must be at least six years since you cabled me promptly the help I then needed" :—Held, that this letter constituted a sufficient acknowledgment to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations. Tanner v. Smart (5 L. In an action to recover a debt due under a promissory note the defendant relied on the Statute of Limitations. After the time fixed by the statute had run, the defendant, in answer to a demand for payment by the plaintiff's solicitors, wrote admitting the debt and adding, "I have no means of any sort . . . if I could I should gladly pay" :—Held, that this was a sufficient acknowledgment and unconditional promise to pay to take the case out of the operation of the statute. Parson v. Nesbitt, 60 S. J. 89—Lord Coleridge, J.

Affidavit for Probate.]—A statute-barred debt was set out in the schedule of debts of a testator's estate in the Inland Revenue affidavit for probate by the executors : Held, that it was not a sufficient acknowledgment within the Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828, to take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations. Smith v. Poole (10 L. 2. Concealed Fraud.

Breach of Contract — Fraudulent Concealment.]—In a common law action for breach of contract it is no answer to a plea of the Trust.]—See Levesley, In re; Goodwin v. Levesley, post, col. 860.

Right of Defrauded Party to Rescind Contract.]—The plaintiff claimed to set aside certain transactions which he had entered into with the defendant, who was his stockbroker, with regard to certain shares, on the ground that the defendant had fraudulently represented that he would act in the plaintiff's interest with reference to the transactions, whereas he had in fact acted as principal, and had sold his own shares to the plaintiff. The jury found that the plaintiff was induced to purchase the shares by the false and fraudulent representations of the defendant. The transactions took place between November, 1905, and August, 1906, but the plaintiff did not discover the fraud till July, 1912. The action was commenced in November, 1912 :—Held, that when once fraud is established the rights of the party defrauded are not affected by the Statute of Limitations so long as he remains, without any fault of his own, in ignorance of the fraud, and that therefore the plaintiff's claim was not barred by the statute. Gibbs v. Guild (51 L. B. ACTIONS RELATING TO LAND, AND ACTIONS ON SPECIALTIES.

I. Application of the Statutes to Particular Persons.

1. Landlord and Tenant.

See also Vol. IX. 152, 1893.

Tenancy at Will — Determination.] — A tenancy at will may be implied where a person enters into and remains in occupation of lands and the enjoyment of the profits, by arrangement with the owner, without payment of rent, and not as agent or under any express contract of tenancy. If the owner visits the lands in the character of owner and exercises rights of ownership animo possidendi, such visits may prevent the Statute of Limitations from running in favour of the tenant at will. Woodhouse v. Hooney, [1915] 1 Ir. R. 296—Barton, J.

2. Mortgagor and Mortgagee.

See also Vol. IX. 206, 1895.

Claim for Account and Recovery of Rents by Second Mortgagee against First Mortgagee.]—The second mortgagee of lands claimed an account against the first mortgagee of all rents and profits of the lands received by the first mortgagee after the first mortgagee had been satisfied, and repayment by the first mortgagee of any surplus of rents in his hands, and a reconveyance of the lands. The first mortgagee, who had ceased to be in possession of the lands and in receipt of the rents and profits thereof for more than six years previous to action brought, pleaded section 20 of the Common Law Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1853, which (inter alia) provides that all actions of account (other than merchants' accounts) must be commenced within six years, as a bar to the action :—Held, that the action, being one for redemption and other appropriate remedies, was not barred by section 20. Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation v. Collum, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 328—Ross, J.

Mortgage in Form of Trust — Building Society—Entry of Mortgagee before whole Mortgage Debt Payable — Possession by Mortgagee after Mortgage Debt Satisfied—Statutory Claim of Mortgagor for Surplus Rents and Profits.]—A member of a building society mortgaged certain leasehold property to the society in order to secure repayment of a sum of 400*l.* within the period of ten years by equal monthly payments. The mortgage contained a clause enabling the society, on failure of the mortgagor to keep down the monthly payments, to enter into possession of the rents and profits. This clause was in the form of a trust, and provided that the society, after satisfying all sums due to them on account of the mortgage, should pay the surplus (if any) to the mortgagor. Three years after the date of the mortgage the society duly entered into possession under the clause; and at the end of fifteen years they had received sufficient from the rents and profits to satisfy the whole of the mortgage debt. At this time the mortgagor had left England, and for the next eight years, or thereabouts, there was no communication of any kind between him and the society. At the end of this period, however, when the society was being wound up, the mortgagor appeared, and put in a claim for the surplus rents and profits that had been received by the society since the date of the complete satisfaction of the mortgage debt. The lease under which the mortgagor held the property had by this time come to an end :—Held, that the period of twelve years of uncontested adverse possession on the part of the society (required by section 7 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, to bar the mortgagor's right to recover the surplus rents and profits) began to run from the date at which the society first entered into possession of the rents and profits, and not from the date when the whole mortgage debt first became repayable—that is, at the end of the ten years; that the statutory annual statement of the society's accounts that was made in accordance with section 40 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, did not amount to such an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 7 as was sufficient to exclude the operation of the section; and that, accordingly, inasmuch as the prescribed period of twelve years had expired before the whole mortgage debt had been completely satisfied, the claim of the mortgagor to recover the surplus rents and profits that had since accrued had been thereby, once and for all, completely barred, and could not afterwards be resuscitated by the operation of the trust subsequent to such complete satisfaction. Dictum of Walton, J., in Wilson v. Walton and Kirkdale Permanent Building Society (19 Times L. R. 408) not followed. Metropolis and Counties Permanent Investment Building Society, In re, 80 L. J. Ch. 387; [1911] 1 Ch. 698; 104 L. T. 382—Neville, J.

Quære, as to whether the mortgagor would not have been entitled to recover the surplus rents and profits had the period of twelve years not expired prior to the complete satisfaction of the mortgage debt. Ib.

Trust for Sale—Proceeds of Sale.]—A mortgagor's interest in the proceeds of sale of land held on trust for sale is an "interest in land" as defined by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, s. 1, and therefore, under section 34 of the same Act and section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, after the lapse of twelve years, in the absence of any payment or acknowledgment, the title of the mortgagee is extinguished. Hazeldine's Trusts, In re (77 L. J. Ch. 97; [1908] 1 Ch. 34), and Kirkland v. Peatfield (72 L. J. K.B. 355; [1903] 1 K.B. 756) followed. Fox, In re; Brooks v. Marston, 82 L. J. Ch. 393; [1913] 2 Ch. 75; 108 L. T. 948—Warrington, J.

Inclusion in Deed of Power of Sale.]—In 1890, A by deed conveyed certain lands to B and C, as tenants in common in fee-simple, to secure a sum of 300*l.*, therein recited to be due, with a proviso for redemption on payment of the principal money, the deed being silent as to interest. There was a provision that the powers and remedies conferred on mortgagees by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, were thereby given to B. On the execution of the deed, B and C went into possession, and had since remained in possession, without accounting to A for the rents and profits or having given any acknowledgment in writing of his title:—Held, that the express inclusion in the deed of a power of sale shewed that it was not intended to operate as a Welsh mortgage, and that A's right to redeem was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Cronin, In re, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 23—Madden, J.

3. Reversioners.

Mines and Minerals—Land Subject to Mining Lease—Conveyance of Part of Land—Conveyance of Reversion—Severance of Reversion—Apportionable Rent.]—In 1740 the defendant's predecessors in title granted a mining lease of the coal under certain of their lands for a term of two hundred years. By deeds of 1791 and 1828 the defendant's predecessors in title assured a part of these lands to the plaintiff's predecessors in title. There was no exception of minerals in either deed. In the deeds of 1791 the mining lease was only mentioned in the vendor's covenant against incumbrances, from which it was excepted. In the deed of 1828 the grant was expressly "subject to" the mining lease. No apportionment was made of the rent of the mining lease, and the whole of the rent had been received by the defendant and his predecessors in title. Upon action by the plaintiff claiming the reversion on the mining lease in respect of her part of the lands and an account, upon apportionment, of what might be due to her as rent for six years before the issue of the writ,—Held, that the deeds of 1791 and 1828 conveyed the land and the minerals, so that the reversion on the mining lease was severed and the rent became apportionable; that no apportionment having been made there had never been any wrongful receipt of rent by the defendant's predecessors in title to bring the case within section 9 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to the account as asked. Mitchell v. Mosley, 83 L. J. Ch. 135; [1914] 1 Ch. 438; 109 L. T. 648; 58 S. J. 218; 30 T. L. R. 29—C.A.

4. Persons Claiming under Lands Clauses Acts.

See also Vol. IX. 243, 1899.

Compensation—Arbitrator's Award—Cause of Action.]—A railway company under the powers conferred by their special Act, which incorporated the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, stopped up a certain road in October, 1902, thereby causing the plaintiff's cottages to be injuriously affected. The plaintiff made a claim for compensation in August, 1909, under section 68 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the arbitrator made his award fixing the amount of compensation in January, 1910:—Held, that the plaintiff had no cause of action under section 68 of the Act of 1845 until the arbitrator had made his award, and therefore that the plaintiff's claim was not statute-barred. Turner v. Midland Railway, 80 L. J. K.B. 516; [1911] 1 K.B. 832; 104 L. T. 347; 75 J. P. 283—D.

5. Trustee.

Trust—"Concealed fraud."]—In 1900 the testator, a North Sea skipper, by a deed of gift gave his sons W. and F. in fee-simple in equal moieties certain land at P. and at S. In July, 1901, he sold the land at S. and bought additional land at P. In August, 1901, W. died. The testator by his will, dated 1913, gave to F. all the land at P., and his residue to the children of a deceased son. The testator received the rents of the land at P. down to his death in 1914, the sons never having known of the deed of gift. F. died in 1915:—Held, that as the testator might have thought the deed non-effective until communicated to his sons, there had been no "concealed fraud" by him, and therefore he had not become a trustee for W. and F., and in the case of the land at P. section 26 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, did not apply and the Statute of Limitations ran and the representatives of W. and F. were not entitled to the land at P. under the deed of gift. Levesley, In re; Goodwin v. Levesley, 60 S. J. 142; 32 T. L. R. 145—Peterson, J.

II. Possession.

Trespass—Claim of Right—Discontinuance and Acquisition of Possession—Acts of Ownership.] — A defendant in an action for an injunction and damages for trespass was the owner of land divided from the land of the plaintiffs by a wall belonging to the plaintiffs, and by a strip of land, on the defendant's side of the wall, the ownership of which was in dispute. The defendant had tipped rubbish on his own land and also on the disputed strip up to and against the wall. There was evidence that the wall had been built in 1894 and 1895, and that the plaintiffs had since then made no further use of the strip except occasionally in repairing and altering their wall; and there was some evidence that the defendant or his tenant had grazed cows up to the wall. The defendant contended that the plaintiffs had discontinued possession and that the defendant had acquired a good title under the Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833 and 1874:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed. Observations on discontinuance and acquisition of possession under the Real Property Limitation Acts. Kynoch, Lim. v. Rowlands, 55 S. J. 617—Joyce, J. See S. C. in C.A., infra.

—— Adjoining Owners—Wall Within Boundary Line—Strip Outside Wall—Abandonment—Adverse Possession—Acts of Ownership.] — Where a person claims to have acquired a possessory title in law under the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, upon the abandonment of possession by the original owner, he must prove not only a discontinuance of possession by the original owner for the statutory period, but also acts of possession by himself. Norton v. London and North-Western Railway (13 Ch. D. 268) and Marshall v. Taylor (64 L. J. Ch. 416; [1895] 1 Ch. 641) followed. Kynoch, Lim. v. Rowlands, 81 L. J. Ch. 340; [1912] 1 Ch. 527; 106 L. T. 316—C.A.

The mere straying of cattle over a known boundary by reason of there being no fence is not an act of such exclusive possession as will enable the trespasser whose cattle has so strayed on to land of an adjoining owner to acquire a statutory title as against the true owner. Ib.

Inclosure Acts — Award — Allotment to Ecclesiastical Corporation Sole — Action of Ejectment Based on Award — Defence of Sixty Years' Possession—Acts of Ownership for Sixty Years, Partly Before and Partly After Award—"Ancient inclosure"—Question for Determination of Valuer and Commissioners—Conclusiveness of Award.] — The rector of a parish brought an action in 1913 to recover possession of a piece of land which had in 1866 been allotted to a former rector by an inclosure award made by a valuer and confirmed by the Inclosure Commissioners under the provisions of the Inclosure Acts. The defendant set up the defence that he and his predecessors in title had been in possession of the land for sixty years. The effect of the evidence was that the defendant's father had encroached upon the land in question and inclosed it, and that acts of ownership had been exercised thereon by the defendant's father and the defendant for more than sixty years before the commencement of the action:—Held, first, that the defendant failed to establish a sixty years' possessory title, because the sixty years' possession required by section 29 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, would not begin to run against the plaintiff, as an ecclesiastical corporation sole, until 1866, the date of the award; and secondly, that it was not open to the defendant to say by way of defence to the action that the encroachment was at the date of the award an ancient inclosure under section 52 of the Inclosure Act, 1845, because by sections 49, 50, and 105 of that Act the question whether an encroachment was an ancient inclosure was a question for the determination of the valuer and the Commissioners, and the award itself must be taken to be a decision binding and conclusive on all persons that the encroachment was not an ancient inclosure. Chilcote v. Youldon (29 L. J. M.C. 197; 3 E. & E. 7) and Jacomb v. Turner ([1892] 1 Q.B. 47) considered. Blackett v. Ridout, 84 L. J. K.B. 1535; [1915] 2 K.B. 415; 113 L. T. 267—C.A.

III. Charges on Land.

See also Vol. IX. 273, 1905.

Covenant to Pay—Remedy on Covenant Barried—Remedy against Land.] — A personal covenant to pay a rentcharge cannot be enforced after the expiration without acknowledgment of twelve years from the last payment, as the effect of section 1 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, is to reduce the period of twenty years fixed by the Civil Procedure Act, 1833, s. 3, to twelve years. Shaw v. Crompton, 80 L. J. K.B. 52; [1910] 2 K.B. 370; 103 L. T. 501—D.

Joint Owners of Equitable Charge in Receipt of Rents of Lands Subject to Charge—Constructive Payment of Interest on Charge.] — Where the owners of an equitable charge on land had, under an assumption of title to the land as tenants in tail, entered into receipt of the rents and profits, constructive payment of interest on the charge will be presumed, so as to prevent it being barred, it being for their benefit to pay such interest until they had acquired by statute a title to the lands. Battersby's Estate, In re, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 453—Wylie, J.

Legacy Charged on Land—Express Trust.] — A testator left a farm to A. adding, "I direct that he shall pay the following legacies which I hereby charge upon my said farm," the legacies being set out. He appointed A sole executor. The testator died in 1891, and A proved the will and went into possession of the farm. He subsequently purchased it under the Land Purchase Acts, and in 1905 was registered in the Land Registry as owner, subject to equities. A died, having devised the lands to B, and appointed B executor. No payment had ever been made on account of the legacies or any acknowledgment given in respect of them. There were no other charges on the lands. B applied to the registering authority to have the note as to equities cancelled:—Held, that the legacies were not secured by an express trust; that, even if they had been so secured, the claims of the legatees were barred as against the lands by section 10 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, and that B was entitled to have the note as to equities cancelled. Hazlette, In re, [1915] 1 Ir. R. 285—C.A.

IV. Acknowledgment.

Acknowledgment of Mortgage.]—A claim by a legal mortgagee for payment of principal and interest due on his mortgage, brought in in a suit for the administration of the real and personal estate of a deceased owner of the equity of redemption, is a proceeding to recover money secured by a mortgage charged upon or payable out of the land within section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, and not an action or suit to recover the land, within section 1 of that Act, and consequently the mortgagee in such case can rely upon an acknowledgment of his right given in writing by the agent of the owner of the equity of redemption, as keeping alive a mortgage debt, which would otherwise have become statute-barred. Lloyd's Estate, In re; Waters v. Lloyd, [1911] 1 Ir. Acting as Member of a County Council.]—M., a member of a county council, was present at a meeting of that body during the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting, and took part in a discussion on a matter not on the agenda—namely, a circular drawing attention to the disqualification of members who directly or indirectly derived any financial benefit from certain county schemes. At the close of that discussion M. retired from the meeting, having come to the conclusion that he was not qualified any longer to be a member of the council. Per Cherry, L.C.J.: M. had acted as a member of the council. Keeffe v. McMahon, [1915] 2 Ir. R. 312—K.B. D.

a. Election.

Nomination Paper—Name of Candidate—Misnomer.]—A candidate for election as rural district councillor described himself in his nomination paper as Michael B. Walsh, the name in which he appeared in the register of voters, and which he always assumed, and signed in transactions requiring his signature. His mother's name was Barry, and he had added the initial "B." to the Christian name "Michael" to distinguish him from others in the district named Michael Walsh. The deputy returning officer rejected the nomination paper on the ground that it did not comply with the terms of rule 4, sub-rule 2 of the County and Rural District Councillors (Ireland), No. 2, Election Order, 1889 [cf. rule 4, sub-rule 2 of the (English) Rural District Councillors Election Order, 1898, and the same rule of the (English) Urban District Councillors Election Order, 1898], by setting out the surname and other name or names in full:—Held, that under the circumstances the name of the candidate was properly stated in accordance with rule 4, sub-rule 2; that, even assuming there was a misnomer, it was cured by rule 32 of the said Order [corresponding to rule 33 of the English Rural District Councillors Election Order and rule 32 of the English Urban District Councillors Election Order]; and that a peremptory writ of mandamus should issue to the deputy returning officer directing him to include the prosecutor's name in the list of candidates validly nominated. Reg. v. Plenty (38 L. b. Members.

Chairman—First Meeting of Council—Right of Chairman of Previous Council to Preside.]—At the first meeting of a newly elected urban district council, the chairman of the previous council took the chair and gave a casting vote upon the election of a chairman for the ensuing year:—Held, that he was not entitled to act as chairman at the meeting merely by reason of his having been chairman of the previous council. Held, further, that the members of a council have an inherent right to elect a chairman, and that the new urban council should therefore have elected a chairman for the purpose of carrying on the business of the meeting, which would include the election of a chairman for the ensuing year. Held, further, that this course might have been adopted under rule 5 of the rules in Schedule I. of the Public Health Act, 1875, which provides for the case of a chairman being absent from a meeting. Rex v. Rowlands; Beesly, Ex parte, 80 L. Combination of Urban District Council with Another Authority to Provide Joint Hospital—Officer of Joint Managing Hospital Committee—Person Holding "paid office under" Council.]—Under the powers of an enabling statute a borough and a district council entered into an agreement for the provision of a joint hospital. Under that agreement a committee was formed, for administering the hospital, consisting of twelve members, six appointed by the borough and six by the district council from their members respectively. To this committee the parties to the agreement delegated all their powers with reference to the management, maintenance, and otherwise of the hospital. The committee appointed, paid, and dismissed its own officers, including, as their paid clerk, the appellant, who was also chairman of the district council. The fund out of which his salary was paid was provided by a pro rata contribution from the borough and the district council:—Held, that the appellant held a paid office under the district council, and was consequently disqualified from acting as such chairman by section 46, sub-section 1 (d) of the Local Government Act, 1894, and had committed an offence under that Act in so acting. Greville-Smith v. Tomlin, 80 L. J. K.B. 774; [1911] 2 K.B. 9; 104 L. T. 816; 75 J. P. 314; 9 L. G. R. 598—D.

Disqualifications—Absence from Meetings—Illness or Reason Approved by the Council or Board.]—Illness in fact is a sufficient reason to prevent a member of a council of a parish, or of a district other than a borough, or of a board of guardians, who has been absent from meetings of a council or board for more than six months consecutively from being disqualified by section 46, sub-section 6 of the Local Government Act, 1894, for holding office; and it is not necessary that the council or board should "approve" of the reason of one of their members for his absence from that cause. Rex v. Hunton; Hodgson, Ex parte, 9 L. G. R. 751; 75 J. P. 335—D.

c. General Powers and Duties.

Right of Way—Aid in Defence of Action—Joinder of District Council as Defendants—Claim for Declaration and Injunction—Declaratory Judgment.]—A district council who, under the provisions of section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894, elect to aid members of the public in maintaining a right of way action, may be properly joined as parties to the action. Where the council assert the existence of a right of way, although they have not by their servants or agents entered on the land in question, the landowner may allege that they threaten and intend to do so, and may obtain a declaratory judgment against them that the right of way does not exist, together with an injunction to restrain them from exercising any such alleged right. Shafto v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co. (56 L. J. Ch. 735; 34 Ch. D. 725) and Hext v. Gill (L. R. 7 Ch. 699) followed. Thornhill v. Weeks (No. 1), 82 L. J. Ch. 299; [1913] 1 Ch. 438; 108 L. T. 892; 77 J. P. 231; 11 L. G. R. 362; 57 S. J. 477—Swinfen Eady, J.

—— District Council Joined as Co-defendants —Right of Way neither Claimed nor Denied— Motion to Strike out—Embarrassing—Costs.]—A district council who have elected, under the provisions of section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894, to aid others in defending a right of way action, and who, though unwilling to become active parties to the suit, have themselves been joined as co-defendants, may assert in their defence that the public right of way is neither claimed nor denied by them. Such a pleading does not embarrass or fail to disclose an answer, within the meaning of Order XIX. rule 27 or Order XXV. rule 4. But semble, such a pleading would not prevent the council being ordered to pay the costs of the action if the plaintiff should succeed. Thornhill v. Weeks (No. 2), 82 L. J. Ch. 485; [1913] 2 Ch. 464; 109 L. T. 146; 11 L. G. R. 1183—C.A. Affirming, 77 J. P. 327; 57 S. J. 645—Neville, J.

—— Council's Resolution to Defend—Action— Judgment for Plaintiff — Right to Costs against Council.]—A district council, acting under section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894, became co-defendants in a right of way action, and in answer to a claim for a declaration that there was no such right asserted that a public right of way was neither claimed nor denied by them. They then proceeded to take up the whole defence until the trial, and failed to establish their case:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaration with costs against all the defendants, including the district council. Thornhill v. Weeks (No. 2) (82 L. J. Ch. 485); [1913] 2 Ch. 464) followed. Rex v. Norfolk County Council (70 L. J. K.B. 575; [1901] 2 K.B. 268) and Offin v. Rochford Rural Council (75 L. J. —— Whether Joinder of Attorney-General Necessary.]—In an action by a rural district claiming a declaration that a certain road was a public right of way,—Held, that it was not necessary that the Attorney-General should be joined as plaintiff. Newton Abbot Rural Council v. Wills. 77 J. P. 333—Swinfen Eady, J.

Right of Parochial Elector to Inspect Documents — Threatened Litigation — Opinion of Counsel — "Documents" — Mandamus.]—A parochial elector threatened to take legal proceedings against a district council, who thereupon submitted a case for the opinion of counsel, and an opinion was given. The parochial elector claimed a right to inspect the case and opinion under sub-division 5 of section 58 of the Local Government Act, 1894:—Held, that the case and opinion were "documents" within the meaning of the sub-section, and that the parochial elector had a right to inspect them; bnt the Court in the exercise of its discretion refused in the circumstances to enforce that right by mandamus. Rex v. Godstone Rural Council, 80 L. Chairman — Election of New Council — Annual Meeting of Council—Election of New Chairman—Right of Former Chairman to Vote.]—Sub-section 1 of section 3 of the Local Government Act, 1894, provides that "The parish council for a rural parish . . . shall consist of a chairman and councillors." Sub-section 8 provides that "At the annual meeting, the parish council shall elect, from their own body or from persons qualified to be councillors of the parish, a chairman, who shall, unless he resigns, or ceases to be qualified, or becomes disqualified, continue in office until his successor is elected." The chairman of the parish council of a rural parish, on the termination of his year of office as chairman, is entitled under section 3 of the Local Government Act, 1894, and rules 9 and 10 of the rules in Part II. of Schedule I. to the Act to preside at the annual meeting of the parish council until his successor is elected, and, being a member of the parish council, to give an original vote in the election of the new chairman as well as a second or casting vote in case of an equal division of votes, notwithstanding that he may have been an elected councillor in the retiring parish council and have failed to be re-elected as councillor. Rex v. Jackson: Pick, Ex parte, 82 L. Assistant Overseer Clerk to Parish Council— Guarantee Policy.]—A was appointed assistant overseer of the parish of H, and by virtue of his appointment under section 17, sub-section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1894, he became clerk to the parish council of H. The defendants entered into a bond guaranteeing the faithful performance of his duties as assistant overseer. A committed defalcations in respect of moneys received by him as clerk to the parish council. In an action to recover the amount of such defalcations under the guarantee given by the defendants:—Held, that the defalcations of H in relation to the parish council accounts were not covered by the terms of the bond guaranteeing the faithful performance of his duties in the office of assistant overseer. Cosford Guardians v. Poor Law Guarantee Association, 103 L. T. 463; 75 J. P. 30; 8 L. G. R. 995—D.

Contract Exceeding 50*l.* — Necessity for Seal.]—The Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878, s. 201, sub-s. 1 [corresponding to section 174, sub-section 1 of the Public Health Act, 1875], enacts that "every contract made by a sanitary authority whereof the value or amount exceeds 50*l.* shall be in writing, and sealed with the common seal of such authority." The "value or amount" of a contract within the meaning of this enactment is the amount which, in the light of the facts within the contemplation of the parties, and in reference to which the contract is made, would be recoverable by the contractor from the sanitary authority on completion. Munro v. Mallow Urban Council, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 130—K.B. D.

—— Contract to Make up Highway—Validity—Part Performance—Specific Performance.]—The plaintiff was the owner of certain freehold land adjoining a highway known as Stag Lane in a parish for which the defendants were the urban authority. In 1908 the plaintiff submitted to the defendants plans for the erection of thirty-six houses on this land facing Stag Lane. The defendants approved these plans, and they were signed by the plaintiff and the chairman of the council. It was also arranged between the plaintiff and the chairman of the council that if the plaintiff would throw a strip of his land twenty feet wide and about one thousand feet in length into Stag Lane, and level it, the council would make up and adopt the same as a highway at their own cost as the building of the houses proceeded. A written agreement to this effect was drawn up, dated May 26, 1909, and signed by the plaintiff. It was not, however, signed by or on behalf of the defendants, neither was their common seal affixed. The plaintiff proceeded to erect the proposed houses, and gave up and levelled the strip of land as part of the highway according to the terms of the agreement. The defendants then placed posts and trees upon the strip, and exercised other acts of ownership upon it. In 1912 the plaintiff had nearly completed the erection of the thirty-six houses, but the council had not made up the road, and disregarded the requests of the plaintiff to do so. In an action for specific performance of the agreement of May 26, 1909,—Held, that the agreement was entered into by the defendants as an urban authority under powers contained in the Public Health Act, 1875, and not under the powers of a highway board or surveyor of highways; and that as the power to purchase land for widening a street contained in section 154 of the Public Health Act, 1875, includes power to pay in money's worth, an agreement such as the present was within the powers of the council. Held, also, upon the construction of the agreement, that it was for over 50*l.* in value; and that no conduct on the part of the defendants having been proved which could estop them from relying on the fact that the agreement was not under seal, as required by section 174 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the original agreement was unenforceable, nor would any agreement to pay quantum meruit be implied. Held, further, that, although there was sufficient part performance of the agreement to take it out of the Statute of Frauds, the equitable doctrine of part performance does not extend to contracts by an urban authority so as to do away with the necessity for obtaining the seal of the authority in contracts falling under section 174. Hoare v. Kingsbury Urban Council, 81 L. —— Work Done for Purposes of Local Government Enquiry — Executed Consideration — Benefit — Quantum Meruit.] — An urban council, exercising the powers of the R. Improvement Commissioners, applied to the Local Government Board to sanction a loan in order that they might, under powers conferred by local Improvement Acts, purchase and extend the pier at R. The Board directed that a valuation and estimates should be prepared by an independent expert for the purposes of an enquiry. The council passed and confirmed a resolution appointing the plaintiff to value, estimate, and report, upon agreed terms. His report was used for the enquiry, but the Board refused to sanction the loan and the scheme was not proceeded with. The plaintiff claimed the amount of his fees under a contract of employment or, alternatively, on a quantum meruit. The council refused payment on the ground that, as there was no contract under seal, section 174 of the Public Health Act, 1875, had not been complied with:—Held, that the contract was not made under the powers or for the purposes of the Public Health Act, 1875, but under the powers and for the purposes of the Improvement Acts; that section 174 of the Public Health Act, 1875, had no application; and that under the circumstances the plaintiff was entitled to his fees on a quantum meruit. Lawford v. Billericay Rural Council (72 L. —— Employment of Architect—Dismissal of Architect before Work Completed—Right to Recover on Quantum Meruit.]—At a meeting of the defendant council it was verbally resolved that the plaintiff should be employed as joint architect for the erection of a kursaal which the defendants were authorised under a private Act to erect. The plaintiff prepared plans, and for some time did work in pursuance of the resolution, but before the work was finished he was dismissed. In an action against the defendants,—Held, that, although the contract was not under seal, the plaintiff was entitled to recover on a quantum meruit as the defendants had had the benefit of his work in an employment within the scope of their authority and for the purposes for which they were created. Hodge v. Matlock Bath Urban Council, 74 J. Agreement with Local Authority in Compromise of a Dispute—Necessity for Seal.]—An agreement was made between a local authority and an architect by which the former agreed not to sue the latter in respect of his alleged negligent supervision of a building contract on his agreeing to make the defective work good :—Held, that this agreement did not require to be under seal. Leicester Guardians v. Trollope, 75 J. "Concerned" in Contract.]—Certain commissioners agreed to purchase land for a public purpose :—Held, that the fact that one of the commissioners was the eldest son of a landowner whose property would be improved by the proposed action of the commissioners, and that he acted for his father in negotiations with the commissioners, did not make him "concerned" in the contract within the meaning of section 286 of the Isle of Man Local Government Act, 1886. Laughton v. Port Erin Commissioners, 80 L. Public Water Supply—Covenant to Allow Vendor's House a Reasonable Supply Free of Charge—Enlargement of House—Presumed Increased User—Lapse of Covenant—Covenant to Supply Farm Buildings—Severable Contracts—Motor House.]—A covenant by a local authority to supply a small farmhouse with a reasonable supply of water free of charge is no longer binding if the house be so altered and enlarged that the identity of the old building is lost, and the measure of what would have been a reasonable supply at the date of the contract no longer ascertainable. But a similar covenant, entered into at the same time, to supply a reasonable amount of free water to the farm buildings is still enforceable, the covenants being severable; and this is so, notwithstanding that the buildings have been let off to a neighbouring farmer. A motor house, to which the water is carried for the purpose of washing a car, is not, however, a "farm building" within the scope of the covenant, and such user is unreasonable. Hadham Rural Council v. Crallan, 83 L. III. BORROWING POWERS.

Credit of Fund or Rates—Mortgage—Money Borrowed without Security—Payment of Interest—Surcharge by Auditor.]—A municipal corporation, having obtained the sanction of the Local Government Board in accordance with section 233 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to borrow a certain sum of money, proceeded to borrow the amount from their bankers, and secured the repayment of the advance by a mortgage of the rates. Subsequently they transferred their current account and their loan account to other bankers, with whom was deposited the sanction of the Local Government Board, but who did not require a mortgage or a transfer of the original mortgage. Certain members of the corporation having signed cheques in payment of interest on the loan, the district auditor surcharged them in respect of such payment on the ground that the corporation had borrowed money without giving proper security for the sum advanced—namely, by a mortgage of the rates. A certiorari to bring up the certificate of surcharge was granted by the Court of Appeal, on the ground that on the true view of the facts the transaction was a transfer both of the debt and of the mortgage by which it was secured. Rex v. Locke; Bridges, Ex parte, 80 L. Consolidated Loans Fund—Overdrafts on Bank for Electrical Purposes—Repayments out of Consolidated Loans Fund.]—A corporation possessed statutory powers to borrow moneys (with the consent of the Local Government Board) for the purposes of its electrical undertaking. It also possessed various other statutory powers to borrow moneys for various other specific purposes. It further possessed a consolidated loan fund for the purpose of paying dividends upon its corporation stock and of redeeming the same when redemption became necessary, and it was entitled, in place of exercising any statutory borrowing power, to borrow money from this consolidated loans fund, so far as the latter was not needed for the time for the payments of dividends on corporation stock. It did not, however, obtain sanction from the Local Government Board to borrow moneys for the purposes of its electrical undertaking, but borrowed large sums for these purposes by way of overdraft from its bankers. Part of these sums was repaid from time to time out of the consolidated loans fund :—Held, that the overdrafts obtained from the bank for the purposes of the electrical undertaking in respect of borrowing powers granted for other specific purposes were ultra vires and illegal; that the application of moneys due to the consolidated loans fund in repayment of these overdrafts was ultra vires and illegal; that the application of moneys due to the consolidated loans fund in repayment of these overdrafts was ultra vires and illegal; and that the borrowing of moneys from the bank for the purpose of the electricity account otherwise than in the exercise of borrowing powers with the sanction of the Local Government Board was ultra vires and illegal. Att.-Gen. v. West Ham Corporation, 80 L. IV. TRANSFER OF AREAS, DUTIES, AND ADJUSTMENT OF LIABILITIES.

Alteration of Areas — Adjustment — Loan Debt—Increase of Burden.]—By the Queenborough Extension Order, 1912 (confirmed by the Local Government Board's Provisional Orders Confirmation (No. 7) Act, 1912), certain portions of the rural district of Sheppey were added to the borough of Queenborough. An adjustment thereupon became necessary, and reference was made to arbitration between the corporation and the district council with regard to certain matters, including a loan debt incurred by the district council for the purpose of constructing sewers and sewage disposal works. No part of these works was situated within the transferred area, but a due proportion of the burden in respect of the loan debt was upon the ratepayers of the transferred area. The arbitrator found as a fact that the ratepayers of the remaining area derived no advantage from the fact that the works remained in their area. The district council claimed to be paid that part of the debt outstanding which would have been borne by the transferred area if the alteration of area had not taken place. By the Local Government Board's Provisional Orders Confirmation (No. 7) Act, 1912, s. 2 (which was in effect the same as the Local Government (Adjustments) Act, 1913, s. 1, sub-s. 1), it was enacted that on any adjustment made otherwise than by agreement in respect of matters connected with this alteration of area provision should be made for the payment to any council or other authority affected by the alteration of such sum as seemed equitable in respect of any increase of burden properly thrown on the ratepayers of the area of that council or other authority in meeting the cost incurred by them in the execution of any of their powers or duties in consequence of the alteration of area : —Held, that the increased rate which the ratepayers of the remaining area would have to pay as a result of the expenditure by the rural district council in respect of the loan debt remaining constant, while the number of ratepayers had been diminished by the alteration of area, was an increase of burden within the meaning of section 2 of the Local Government Board's Provisional Orders Confirmation (No. 7) Act, 1912, and that therefore the claim of the rural district council must succeed. Queenborough Corporation v. Sheppey Rural Council, 84 L. —— Adjustment of Liabilities.] — A burgh having extended its boundaries so as to embrace part of the county area, the county council, which had raised loans secured on the county rates and repayable by instalments, sought to recover from the burgh the amount of these loans proportional to the assessable area taken over by the burgh. The arbitrator refused the claim on the ground that what was sought was not an " adjustment of liabilities " within the meaning of section 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889 (cf. section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888), but compensation for loss of assessable area : —Held, that such loans were " liabilities " within the meaning of the section which might be proper subjects for adjustment. Caterham Urban Council v. Godstone Rural Council (73 L. Guardians—Transfer of Duty—Rural District Council — Urban District Council.] — Guardians who, as the sanitary authority, had constructed sewers, were at common law under a duty to dispose of their sewage so as not to interfere with private rights and a liability to others for injury caused by the escape of the sewage :—Held, that this duty and liability were transferred by section 25 of the Local Government Act, 1894, to a rural district council; and the liability is also included in a transfer to the urban district council, by an order of the county council converting the rural into an urban district, of the liabilities attaching to the rural district council. Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth Local Board (49 L. Adjustment of Financial Relations—County Borough—Contribution to County Expenses—Grant of Court of Quarter Sessions to Borough —Redemption of Liability of Borough to Contribute.]—By section 32, sub-section 1 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which provides for the adjustment of financial relations between counties and county boroughs, it is enacted that an equitable adjustment respecting all financial relations between each county and each county borough specified in the Third Schedule to the Act shall be made by agreement between the councils of each county and each borough, and, in default of agreement, by the Commissioners appointed under the Act. By sub-section 3 (b) : " If the borough is not at the passing of this Act a quarter sessions borough, the borough council shall contribute a proper share of the costs of and incidental to the quarter sessions and petty sessions of the county, and of and incidental to the coroners of the county or any franchise therein; and if a grant of a Court of quarter sessions is hereafter made to the borough, the borough shall redeem the liability to such contribution on such terms as may be agreed upon, or, in default of agreement, may be determined by arbitration under this Act." A grant of a Court of quarter sessions was made to a county borough which was contributing annually to the county in which it was situated a share of the costs specified in section 32, sub-section 3 (b) of the Local Government Act, 1888. The county council having claimed that the borough should redeem their liability to such contribution under the provisions of the section, and the borough having tendered evidence before an arbitrator that the share of the costs incurred by the county in respect of the borough exceeded the amount of the contribution,—Held, on appeal, that the words "redeem the liability" in sub-section 3 (b) did not mean that, although the county were no longer to render services to the borough, yet the annual payment was to be capitalised for an amount which would bring in annually the same sum as the county had been receiving from the borough in respect of the services which the county had been rendering, but had ceased to render: and that evidence was rightly admitted to shew that in consequence of the grant of quarter sessions to the borough the county were relieved from incurring in respect of the borough costs greater than the sums they received for rendering the services. Held, also, that where an arbitrator has stated his award in the form of a Special Case for the opinion of the Court, there is no power to remit to the arbitrator otherwise than in the terms of the Special Case. Yorkshire (N. R.) County Council and Middlesbrough County Borough Council, In re, 83 L. J. K.B. 1004; [1914] 2 K.B. 847; 110 L. T. 961; 78 J. P. 257; 12 L. G. R. 555; 58 S. J. 431 —C.A.

—— Between County Council and County Boroughs — Powers of Arbitrator.] — An arbitrator appointed under the Local Government Act, 1888, to make a new equitable adjustment of the financial relations of the county of Glamorgan and the county boroughs of Cardiff and Swansea, by his award apportioning the aggregate proceeds of the local taxation licences and the estate duty grant between these authorities directed that out of such proceeds priority payments should be made to the authorities representing the payments which they were required to make under section 23, sub-section 2 (i.) (ii.) (iii.), and section 34 of the Act, and that the remainder of such proceeds should be divided among them in the proportion of their respective rateable values. There were many main roads in the county, few in the county borough of Swansea, and none in the county borough of Cardiff, and on an appeal by Case stated it was contended on behalf of the county that the arbitrator should have taken into account among the priority payments the annual sums expended by the authorities in respect of the maintenance of their main roads. The Commissioners under the Act in making the original adjustment had taken into account as priority payments these last-mentioned sums. There was no evidence that if these sums were not taken into account the county would be placed in a worse financial position within the meaning of section 32, sub-section 3 of the Act:—Held, that the duty of the arbitrator was to make what he himself considered to be an equitable adjustment, and that he was not bound to follow the original adjustment of the Commissioners; that it could not be said that the adjustment made by the arbitrator was not an equitable adjustment because it did not take the main road expenditure into account as a priority payment; and that the appeal should be dismissed. Decision of Lawrence, J. (12 L. G. R. 752), affirmed. Glamorgan County Council v. Cardiff Corporation, 84 L. J. K.B. 2073; [1915] 3 K.B. 438; 113 L. T. 356; 79 J. P. 905; 13 L. G. R. 1039—C.A.

—— "Property."] — A tramway company, authorised by Act of Parliament to lay tramways in a county, were bound, in every year in which their profits sufficed to provide a certain dividend, to pay the county 50*l.* for every mile of tramway laid in the county. A portion of the county in which lines were authorised but not laid having been transferred to a burgh,—Held, that the contingent right to payments from the tramway company was not "property" within section 50 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, to be taken into account in adjusting the financial liabilities of the burgh and county. Lanark County Council v. Motherwell Magistrates, [1912] S. Appointment of Town Clerk—Right to Prescribe Qualifying Examination.]—A resolution passed by an urban district council that a candidate to be elected by the council at a forthcoming election to fill the office, then vacant, of town clerk, must have passed a qualifying examination is valid. But a resolution the effect of which is to interfere with the discretion of the council at future elections in making future appointments is ultra vires. Rex v. Tralee Urban Council, [1913] 2 Ir. Clerk to Parish Council.]—It is necessary, on an application for a rule for a quo warranto information against a person appointed clerk to a parish council or board, for the applicant, if he relies upon the fact, to prove that the members who voted for the person appointed had not duly made the declaration required by section 35 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, as applied to rural district councillors by the Rural District Councils Election Order, 1898; and the onus is not upon the person appointed to prove that they had made such declarations. Rex v. Hunton; Hodgson, Ex parte, 9 L. Vestry Clerk—Duties—Preparation of Lists of Voters—Checking Returns made by Owners —Expense of Canvassing—Salary of Vestry Clerk—Non-payment by Overseers—Remedy—Mandamus.]—The proper remedy of the vestry clerk of a parish against the overseers of the parish who have refused to pay his salary, which by section 8 of the Vestries Act, 1850, is chargeable upon and payable out of the moneys raised for the relief of the poor, is by writ of mandamus, and not by action of debt or on the case. Rex v. Davies; Peake, Ex parte, 80 L. The duties of a vestry clerk under section 7 of the Vestries Act, 1850, in regard to the preparation of lists of voters do not include the verification of the returns made by owners to the overseers pursuant to section 9 of the Representation of the People Act, 1884, and therefore the vestry clerk of a parish cannot be called upon by the overseers to undertake at his own expense the work of making enquiries for the purpose of verifying such returns. Ib.

a. Formation and Alteration of.

"New street" By-laws—Width and Construction—Penal Character of By-laws—Intended Breach Abandoned—Injunction—"Laying out" Street—Nothing done on Street Itself.]—The model by-laws of urban authorities under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, with respect to the level, width, and construction of new streets, are of a penal character, and ought not to be construed so as to impose on the party whose compliance with them it is sought to enforce any greater burden than the by-laws in their fair and natural construction will allow. Att.-Gen. v. Dorin, 81 L. J. Ch. 225; [1912] 1 Ch. 369; 106 L. T. 18; 76 J. P. 181; 10 L. G. R. 194; 56 S. J. 123; 28 T. L. R. 105—Warrington, J.

The by-laws refer, as regards the laying out of a new street, to a physical laying out, and not to a metaphorical one; and a person does not "lay out" a new street within their meaning merely by making a road a street by building houses on the side of it, but only if he does something on the street itself. Observations of Collins, M.R., and Romer, L.J., in Devonport Corporation v. Tozer (72 L. J. Ch. 411; [1903] 1 Ch. 759) followed. Ib.

In 1907 the defendant bought a field surrounded by a hedge, bordering on an occupation road about nineteen feet wide, which had been made up under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and on the other side of which two houses had been built with their sides turned towards the road. No house fronted towards it. The defendant submitted to the local authority, in whose district the model by-laws were in force, plans for building a row of houses on the field, to be approached by a footpath a few feet wide, leading from the road to the side of the houses furthest from the road, and with an open space of about sixteen feet between them and the road. The local authority objected to the plans on the ground of their non-compliance with the by-laws; and the defendant thereupon removed the footpath, when it had reached a length of about 150 feet, and informed the authority that he had abandoned the intention of laying it out. Instead, he made the approaches to the houses on the side of the road, putting gates in the hedge opposite each house as it was completed, with cement paths leading to the houses. He also carried the drains under the road; but he did nothing on the road itself; nor had he made, or proposed to make, the space between the houses and the road part of the road:—Held, that the footpath would have been a breach of the by-laws, but that in view of the defendant's abandonment of it there was no ground for an injunction; and that, while the defendant by building the row of houses had made the road a street, he had not laid out a street within the meaning of the by-laws. Ib.

—— Building Estate—Approval of Plans by Local Authority—Right of Local Authority to Consider Practicability.]—Where, under the Public Health Act, 1875, a local authority have the power to approve plans, they have power, before approving them, to enquire into the practicability of carrying them out. Rex v. Tynemouth Corporation; Cowper, Ex parte, 80 L. J. K.B. 892; [1911] 2 K.B. 361; 105 L. T. 217; 75 J. P. 420; 9 L. G. R. 953—D.

The applicant had submitted a plan to the local authority shewing a proposed new street. The local authority were aware of the existence of certain restrictive covenants enforceable by adjoining owners which might affect the power of the applicant to carry out the plan as submitted, and refused to approve it:—Held, that the Court would not grant a mandamus directed to the local authority to hear and determine the application to approve the plan. Ib.

—— By-law Requiring Approval of Plans—Right of Owner to Vary Deposited Plans.]—Where a local by-law requires that no person shall commence to build in any new street until the whole length of the street shall have been defined to the satisfaction of the local authority, and a plan for making a new street has been deposited and approved and building begun, but no order varying the position or length of the street has been made under section 17 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, then at any time if the road has not become a highway and the owner finds that any part of it is not required for the purpose of developing his building estate, he may inclose such part and devote it to any other purpose he pleases. Kirby v. Paignton —— Resolution—Right of Ratepayer to Claim Injunction without Joining Attorney-General.] —The plaintiff, a ratepayer in the rural district of E., sought to restrain the county council and the rural district council of E. from acting on a resolution carrying into effect a proposal of the latter council to make a new road :—Held, that it was competent for the plaintiff to sue without making the Attorney-General a party. Weir v. Fermanagh County Council, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 63—Ross, J.

The proposal was defective as it omitted to state the number of years within which the money to be borrowed for the work should be repaid :—Held, that this omission was fatal to the proposal. Ib.

The county council by resolution of January 13 approved of the proposal by resolution of February 24, rescinded the resolution of January 13, and by resolution of May 15 rescinded that of February 24 :—Held, that the county council, in the absence of standing orders to the contrary, had power to rescind the prior rescinding resolution. Ib.

—— Agreement to Give Land—Construction—"Opening" of Street—Macadamising.]—The respondent gave land to the appellant town to form "a public street . . . to be forthwith opened by the said town for use as a public street," and it was agreed between the parties "that no special assessment shall be levied upon the remainder" of the respondent's land "to defray the cost of the opening of the" street, "but this shall not be construed as exempting the lands . . . from special assessments for drains and macadamising such street" :—Held, that the land of the respondent was not liable to be assessed in respect of the cost of grading and levelling and doing other preliminary work in making the street. Outremont Corporation v. Joyce, 107 L. T. 569—P.C.

Approval of Plans Subject to Agreement under Local Act—Estoppel.]—Section 32 of the W. Local Board Act, 1890, provides that "every undertaking or agreement in writing, given by or to the board or by or on behalf of any owner of property on the passing of plans or for the removal of obstructions, or otherwise in connection with the property of such an owner, shall be binding upon the owner of the property for the time being and upon his successors in title and upon the board, and may be enforced by either party in any Court of summary jurisdiction by a penalty . . ." The appellant, in 1910, purchased a house and garden, as to which his predecessor in title had, in 1892, by agreement with the then local board under the above section, undertaken whenever required by the board to give up so much of the garden as the board might require for widening a lane on which it abutted. Before the completion of his purchase the appellant had received a letter from the clerk of the W. Urban District Council, in answer to his enquiry, that the lane was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and that the council had no outstanding charges for private improvement expenses against the property. In 1911 he received notice from the respondent corporation (successors of the local board and urban district council) to carry out the agreement of 1892 in pursuance of section 32 of the Act. He objected that the agreement was void for remoteness, that section 32 did not apply, and that the council were estopped by the letter of their clerk :—Held, that the agreement of 1892 was enforceable against the appellant; that section 32 was not confined to the removal of obstructions but applied to the widening of highways, and was sufficient to make the agreement binding upon the successor in title of the owner who had entered into it; and that the letter of the town clerk created no estoppel. Crane v. Wallasey Corporation, 107 L. T. 150; 76 J. P. 326; 10 L. G. R. 523—D.

—— By-laws — Completion of Construction — Private Road—Alteration after Completion.] —A by-law of a local authority provided that every person who should construct for use as a carriage road a new street intended to form the principal approach or means of access to any building should comply with certain requirements as to the width of the carriageway and footways. In 1905 a portion of a road on a building estate, then in the course of development, was constructed as a new street, in accordance with the by-law. The appellant subsequently purchased the estate, and in 1910 continued the road by a section, which section was also constructed as a new street in accordance with the by-law. In 1911 he further continued the road by another section, which section was also constructed as a new street in accordance with the by-law. The whole, when completed, formed one road, and terminated at each end in a public highway. It had never been dedicated to the public, and remained a private road with buildings of a residential nature abutting thereon. In 1913 the appellant, as owner of the road, and at the request of the residents on the estate, placed at one end of the road (the termination of that section which was constructed in 1905) some piers and gates, which, when the gates were open, limited the extent of the width of the carriageway and footways to less than that required by the by-law. He was summoned before the Justices for unlawfully constructing a new street not in accordance with the requirements of the by-law by reason of the erection of the piers and gates, and was convicted :—Held, that the conviction was wrong. As the section of the road on which the piers and gates were placed was completed as a "new street" in 1905, it could not be said that the placing of the obstruction in 1913 was in any way the construction of a new street within the meaning of the by-law, and there was nothing in the by-law to prevent the appellant, as owner of a private road, from making alterations in it which might not have been permitted at the time of its construction. Tarrant v. Woking Urban Council, 84 L. J. K.B. 314; [1914] 3 K.B. 796; 111 L. T. 800; 79 J. P. 22; 12 L. G. R. 1293—D.

Whether section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1857, which empowers an urban authority to make by-laws with respect to the level, width, and construction of "new streets," authorises the making of a by-law which would constitute a reduction of the original width of the street an offence, quære. Ib.

"Part of a street"—Strip of Ground Marked by Line of Pillars—Sufficiency of Evidence.]—On an objection taken by the appellants in pursuance of section 7 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, that a certain strip of ground did not form part of the street with which the urban district council were dealing under the Act, the evidence shewed that the strip in question had been shewn upon a plan deposited in 1909 by the appellants' predecessors in title, and approved by the respondent council, in pursuance of the by-laws as to new streets and buildings which were in force in the district. On this plan the strip was coloured green, and bounded on the side adjoining the then existing street by a dotted line, and on the other side by a proposed corner shop which was to be set back in line with existing buildings further along the street. The shop had been built practically in accordance with the plan; and a wall, which had stood where the dotted line was marked, had been taken down, and five large stone pillars had been erected at intervals along its site. The strip between the line of pillars and the shop was partly asphalted in a similar manner to the footpath of the main road round the corner of the shop, and foot traffic passed over it without interruption. The council had previously purchased similar strips of ground from the appellants' predecessors in title for the purpose of widening the main road. After the council had taken steps under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, with respect to the street, the appellants placed wooden rails between the stone pillars and across the strip. The Justices found that the strip of ground in question was part of the street:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence before the Justices to support their finding. Bell v. Great Crosby Urban Council, 108 L. T. 455; 77 J. P. 37; 10 L. G. R. 1007—D.

Footpath—Bank of Stream on which Footpath Ran being Eaten Away—Danger to Public—Obligation to Protect.]—The appellants were the owners of certain parts of the bank of the river Mersey over which an ancient footpath ran. There was no obligation on the appellants to repair the footpath ratione tenuræ. By the action of the weather and by erosion caused by the Mersey eating away the bank, portions of the bank, on which the footpath ran, were washed away, and portions of the footpath fell into the river, and further portions were threatening to fall, and the way was thereby rendered dangerous to persons lawfully using the same. The respondents, the local authority for the district, called upon the appellants under section 30 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, to repair and protect the bank, so as to prevent danger therefrom:—Held, that section 30 did not apply in such circumstances and that the appellants were under no liability to comply with the notice served upon them. Cheshire Lines Committee v. Heaton Norris Urban Council, 81 L. J. K.B. 1119; [1913] 1 K.B. 325; 107 L. T. 348; 76 J. P. 462; 10 L. G. R. 972; 28 T. L. R. 576—D.

Per Darling, J.: The narrow strip of land between the footpath and the river was not a "bank" in the sense in which that expression is used in section 30. Per Phillimore, J.: The proper construction of section 30 is to limit its application to artificially constructed dangers. Ib.

b. Fencing Land Adjoining Street.

Vacant Land Adjoining Street—Land Used for "purpose causing inconvenience or annoyance to the public"—Power of Local Authority to Fence—Recovery of Expenses from Owner.]—Section 32 of the Willesden Urban District Council Act, 1903, provides that "If any land in the district . . . adjoining any street is allowed to remain unfenced or the fences thereof are allowed to be or to remain out of repair and such land is in the opinion of the council owing to the absence or inadequate repair of any such fence a source of danger to passengers or is used for any immoral or indecent purposes or for any purpose causing inconvenience or annoyance to the public," then, after notice to the owner or occupier, "the council may cause the same to be fenced or may cause the fences to be repaired in such manner as they think fit and the expenses thereby incurred may be recovered from such owner or occupier summarily as a civil debt." The appellant erected, round some vacant land belonging to him within the district of the respondent council, a barrier consisting of posts three feet four inches high and eight feet apart with a rail along the top. This barrier was not out of repair. The respondent council served upon the appellant a notice stating that the land, owing to the absence of a proper fence, was used for a purpose causing inconvenience or annoyance to the public and requiring him forthwith properly to fence in the land. The respondents subsequently erected round the land an "economic" fence and sued the appellant to recover the expenses thereby incurred. The Justices held that it was for the council and not for them to decide whether the land was used for a purpose causing inconvenience or annoyance to the public, and that as the council had decided that the land was being so used they could recover:—Held, that the decision of the Justices was wrong; that the user of the land for a purpose causing inconvenience or annoyance to the public must be proved by evidence of the fact in the proceedings before the Justices; and that the case should be remitted to the Justices in order that the respondents might have the opportunity of giving such evidence. Upjohn v. Willesden Urban Council, 83 L. J. K.B. 736; [1914] 2 K.B. 85; 109 L. T. 792; 78 J. P. 54; 11 L. G. R. 1215; 58 S. J. 81; 30 T. L. R. 62—C.A.

c. Regulating Traffic.

Order by Local Authority Regulating Traffic in Streets—"In any case when the streets are thronged or liable to be obstructed"—Prohibition of Hawkers Selling Fruit from Barrows in Certain Streets during Certain Hours—Validity of Order.]—Section 21 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, enables the local authority from time to time to make orders "for preventing obstruction of the streets . . . in all times of public processions, rejoicings, or illuminations, and in any case when the streets are thronged or liable to be obstructed." A local authority made an order in which, after reciting that certain streets specified in the schedule were, between the hours of ten in the forenoon and eight in the afternoon, thronged and liable to be obstructed on all days except Sundays, prohibited costermongers and hawkers from using those streets during those hours for selling fruit, &c., from barrows:—Held, that the local authority were entitled under section 21 to make a general order applicable to any street which was usually or habitually thronged or liable to be obstructed, and that the power of the local authority to make an order was not limited to a case similar to those of public processions, rejoicings, or illuminations. Teale v. Williams, 83 L. J. K.B. 1412; [1914] 3 K.B. 395; 111 L. T. 285; 78 J. P. 383; 24 Cox C.C. 283; 12 L. G. R. 958—D.

Meaning of "left or near side of the road."]—A by-law of a borough council imposed a penalty on any person who should drive any carriage in the borough and should not keep the same on the left or near side of the road, except in cases when he should have occasion to pass any other carriage, or of actual necessity or some sufficient reason for deviation therefrom. A lorry was driven for about 380 yards in a street from 29½ to 31 feet wide, so that its near-side wheels were about ten feet from the kerb on the near side, whilst its off-side wheels were within a few inches of the centre of the road, but never crossed the centre line. There were two sets of tramway lines in the street, and electric tram cars passed every two or three minutes, but none passed nor were there other vehicles in the street at the time, and no one was obstructed or inconvenienced:—Held, that so long as the off-side wheels of the lorry were kept within the centre line of the roadway it was on the "left or near side of the road," notwithstanding the presence of the tramway lines; that the by-law did not require the driver to keep his near-side wheels as near as he conveniently could to the kerb on the near side; and that the Justices were wrong in convicting him of having infringed the by-law. Bolton v. Everett, 105 L. T. 830; 9 L. G. R. 1050; 75 J. P. 534; 22 Cox C.C. 632—D.

a. Definition.

New Buildings—Conversion of Dwelling Houses into Warehouse—Notice to Local Authority—Deposit of Plans.]—Section 26 of the Bolton Corporation Act, 1901, provided that the conversion of a dwelling house into any other building not intended for human habitation "shall for all purposes of the former Acts and this Act and of any by-law made thereunder respectively be deemed to be the erecting of a new building." By order of the corporation two adjoining dwelling houses were compulsorily closed as unfit for habitation; whereupon the owners let them to tenants who used and occupied them for two and a half years as separate warehouses. The owners subsequently made certain interior alterations so as to convert the two warehouses into one, intending to occupy the same themselves as a warehouse. They failed, however, to give any notice of conversion to the corporation, nor did they deposit plans before making the alterations. Upon proceedings against them by the corporation for contravening the above section Justices were of opinion that these premises were warehouses and not dwelling houses at the time of the alterations, that no offence had been committed, and dismissed the information:—Held (Darling, J., dissentiente), that the case was one of the conversion of one class of building—namely, a dwelling house, into another class of building—namely, a warehouse—and consequently the work which was being done came within section 36 as the conversion of a dwelling house into any other building not intended for human habitation. It therefore became the erection of a new building for which notices should have been given and plans and details deposited in accordance with the by-laws. Morgan v. Kenyon, 110 L. T. 197; 78 J. P. 66; 12 L. G. R. 140—D.

Erection and Occupation of New Building—No Notice to Local Authority.]—The appellant was summoned for erecting and occupying a new building without having given notice to the local authority and without having delivered plans, &c., contrary to the provisions of the local authority's by-laws. It was proved that the appellant had from 1909 till April, 1912, occupied and used as a dwelling house two vans standing at right-angles to one another; that in April, 1912, he removed these vans, and on the ground previously occupied by them built a dwarf wall of brickwork; that he then brought back the vans, placed them side by side, one of them standing partly on blocks of wood and partly on the dwarf wall; that he cut part of the side of one of the vans and caused it to be placed against a brick chimney stack which was built into the opening created in the side of the van; that new brickwork was added to the flue and a chimney stack erected, this being built right into the side of the van; that a mortar joint was made between the vans and the dwarf wall; that the appellant then occupied the vans as a dwelling house. Upon these facts the Justices found that the appellant had erected a new building without having given notice to the local authority and without having delivered plans; they further found that he had occupied them before they had been certified as fit for human habitation; they accordingly convicted the appellant:—Held, that there was evidence which warranted this conclusion. James v. Tudor, 77 J. P. 130; 11 L. G. R. 452—D.

Re-erection of Buildings—Part of Old Building Pulled Down and New Part Erected—"New building"—Notice of Intention to Erect—Plans of Whole Building—By-laws of Local Authority.]—The by-law of a local authority, made and approved in 1906, provided that "Every person, who shall intend to erect a building, shall give to the council notice in writing of such intention . . . and shall at the same time deliver or send . . . complete plans and sections of every floor of such intended building . . ." Section 23 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, which came into force in the district of the local authority in 1909, provides that, for the purposes of the Act and the Public Health Acts and any by-laws made thereunder, the following operation—namely, the re-erection, wholly or partially, of any building of which an outer wall is pulled down or burnt down to or within ten feet of the surface of the ground adjoining the lowest storey of the building shall be deemed to be the erection of a new building. The owners of an old building, which was erected before by-laws came into existence, pulled down a part including some of the outer walls, leaving the remaining part of the premises standing, and gave notice in writing to the local authority of their intention to erect on the site of the part pulled down a new part, the notice being accompanied by plans and sections of the new part, but they gave no notice as to, or plans or sections of, the whole building:—Held, that, under section 23 of the Act, the whole building—that is, the old part and the new part—was to be deemed to be a new building, and the owners were therefore bound to send to the local authority notice as to, and plans and sections of, the whole building. Leonard v. Hoare & Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 1361; [1914] 2 K.B. 798; 111 L. T. 69; 78 J. P. 287; 12 L. G. R. 844; 30 T. L. R. 425—D.

The by-laws of a local authority, made and approved in 1906, provided that every person who intended to erect a building should give notice in writing of such intention, and deliver complete plans and sections of every floor. Section 23 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, provides that "for the purposes of this Act and the Public Health Acts, and any bye-laws made thereunder, (a) the re-erection, wholly or partially, of any building of which an outer wall is pulled down to within ten feet of the surface . . . shall be deemed the erection of a new building." The appellants pulled down part of a very old inn, including certain outer walls, but left the rest standing. They gave notice in writing to the local authority of their intention to erect a new part on the site of the old part pulled down. This new part was to fit into the part left standing. With the notice plans and section of the new part were sent, but not of the whole of the building—that is, the part left standing and the new part. The local authority admitted that if the portion of the old building left standing was not, and should not be, treated as part of a new building, by-law 104 had been complied with by the building owners; but on the decision of Leonard v. Hoare & Co. (83 L. J. K.B. 1361; [1914] 2 K.B. 798), in which it was held that the present appellants were erecting what must be deemed a new building, they refused to pass the plans. Thereupon a rule nisi for a mandamus was obtained:—Held, that, upon the true construction of section 23 of the Act of 1907, only such part of a building as had been pulled down to be re-erected was to be deemed a new building; and as in that view the appellants had conformed to the by-laws, the rule must be made absolute. Rex v. Foots Cray Urban Council, 85 L. J. K.B. 191; 113 L. T. 705; 79 J. P. 521; 13 L. G. R. 1027; 59 S. J. 597—C.A.

Conversion into more than one Dwelling House—Rejection of Plans by Corporation—Conversion nevertheless Completed—Failure of Corporation to Determine which of New Dwelling Houses Original Dwelling House—Proceedings for Breach of By-law.]—Section 21 of the Liverpool Improvement Act, 1882, enacts that "the conversion into more than one dwelling-house of any building originally constructed as one dwelling-house only shall be deemed for the purposes of this Act and of any . . . bye-law in force within the City to be the erection of a new dwelling-house or dwelling-houses and in cases of division or conversion of a building into more than one dwelling-house the Corporation shall determine which (if any) one of the houses formed out of the previously existing house shall be deemed to be the old or original dwelling-house"; and by-law 4 of the Liverpool Corporation By-laws with respect to New Buildings, 1890, provides that "every new dwelling-house . . . shall, . . . have at the rear thereof an open space. . . ." The respondent deposited with the city authorities a plan shewing a proposal to convert certain premises into three separate dwelling houses. The plan was disapproved, and notice to that effect was sent to the respondents. The respondents, nevertheless, proceeded with the conversion of the premises and completed the work. The new dwelling houses created by the conversion did not comply with the requirements of by-law 4 above, and the respondents were summoned. They contended that, as the corporation had failed to make the determination required by section 21 of the Liverpool Improvement Act as to which (if any) of the houses formed out of the previously existing house should be deemed to be the old or original dwelling house, the proceedings were irregular and should be dismissed:—Held, that, the corporation having disapproved the plan submitted to them by the respondents, their failure to make the determination did not affect the proceedings. Alexander v. Tracy, 84 L. J. K.B. 1890; 79 J. P. 458—D.

Addition to House—Porch on Wheels.]—The respondent placed in the garden in front of his house a wooden porch which stood on wheels, and which projected beyond the front main wall of the house six and a half feet. On proceedings being taken against him by the local authority for a contravention of section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, the Justices dismissed the information, being of opinion that the porch in question did not constitute an addition to the house within section 3:—Held, that the Justices could on the facts properly come to that conclusion. Sunderland Corporation v. Charlton, 77 J. P. 127; 11 L. G. R. 484—D.

b. General Regulations.

Disapproval of Plans on General Grounds—By-laws — Mandamus to Approve Plans Granted after Completion of the Work.]—A local authority cannot refuse their approval of plans of a proposed new building, deposited with them in pursuance of their by-laws, where such plans comply with the by-laws and the general law, merely on general grounds, such as that the situation of the building and its cesspool for slop water would be so close to the seashore that the cesspool would be filled by sea water at spring tides. And a mandamus may, in special circumstances, be granted directing the local authority to approve such plans, even though the building has been completed. Rex v. Bexhill Corporation; Cornell, Ex parte, 9 L. G. R. 640; 75 J. P. 385—D.

—— One Domestic Building.] — The local authority refused to approve the plans for the erection of a barn adjoining to and at the back of a dwelling house, on the ground that their by-laws required that there must be an open space at the rear of a new domestic building:—Held, that the dwelling house and proposed barn constituted one domestic building, and therefore that the plans did not infringe the by-laws. Rex v. Preston Rural Council; Longworth, Ex parte, 106 L. T. 37; 10 L. G. R. 238; 76 J. P. 65—D.

Restraining Local Authority from Approving Plans Contravening By-law — Attorney-General — Inspection of Deposited Plans — Amendment of Writ.] — Ratepayers in a borough issued a writ claiming an injunction to restrain the borough council from approving certain deposited plans, an injunction restraining them from refusing to allow the plaintiffs to inspect the plans, and an injunction to restrain the persons who had deposited the plans from carrying them out. They then moved for interim injunctions in the terms of the indorsement on the writ:—Held, on appeal against the refusal of the Judge in chambers to grant any relief on the motion: First, with regard to the approval of the plans by the defendant council, that as at the time of the hearing of the appeal the plans had in fact been approved, though only on the day when the appeal was opened, no injunction could be granted; secondly, with regard to the council's refusal to allow inspection of the plans, that an injunction to restrain a refusal to allow inspection was equivalent to a mandatory order to allow inspection, and that such an order could not be made on an interlocutory application; and thirdly, with regard to the carrying out of the plans by the other defendants, that, as the plaintiffs had not joined the Attorney-General, and had not sued on behalf of themselves and all other ratepayers in the borough, and had not shewn any special injury to themselves beyond a mere grievance, they could not succeed without amending their writ, and that no leave to amend would be given for the purpose of an interlocutory application. Stockport District Water Works Co. v. Manchester Corporation (9 Jur. N.S. 266) and Tottenham, In re; Tottenham v. Tottenham (65 L. J. Ch. 549; [1896] 1 Ch. 628), considered. Dover Picture Palace v. Dover Corporation, 11 L. G. R. 971—C.A.

Building Line—Notice—Compensation—Payment or Tender—Mandatory Injunction.]—Where a local authority on a house being pulled down in a street prescribes, under section 155 of the Public Health Act, 1875, a building line to which the house to be rebuilt in the same situation is to conform, it is not necessary that the authority should expressly inform the owner that it is proceeding under that section, or specify a building line only for the particular house, provided it makes it clear that it is in reference to that house that the building line is to be compulsory. Att.-Gen. v. Parish, 82 L. J. Ch. 562; [1913] 2 Ch. 444; 109 L. T. 57; 77 J. P. 391; 11 L. G. R. 1134; 57 S. J. 625; 29 T. L. R. 608—C.A.

Section 155 does not require that compensation for the damage sustained by the owner in setting back his building should be paid or tendered upon any particular date, or make such payment or tender a condition precedent to the prescription of the building line. Ib.

Where the local authority have acted in good faith in prescribing a building line the Court will not refuse to enforce their decision by mandatory injunction because the matter may appear trivial and unimportant and of little public benefit. Ib.

"Land laid out for buildings"—Covering over Watercourse — "Adjoining land."] — A local Act provided that: "If any watercourse or ditch in the district situate upon land laid out for buildings, or on which any such land abuts, requires in the opinion of the Council to be wholly or partially filled up or covered over, the Council may by notice in writing require the owner of such land, before any building is commenced or proceeded with, to execute such works as may in their opinion be necessary for effecting the objects aforesaid. . . ." A certain firm purchased land abutting on such a watercourse, and contemporaneously they sold a strip of the land to O., a person in their employ. The strip, which for the greater part of its length was only some six feet wide, extended along the watercourse and entirely separated it from the rest of the land. The firm commenced to erect a factory on the land retained by them and disregarded a notice of the urban district council requiring them in pursuance of the local Act to cover over the watercourse before proceeding with the building of the factory. Thereupon an action was brought by the Attorney-General at the relation of the council against the firm and O. to restrain them from proceeding with the factory until they had culverted the watercourse. Before the action came on for hearing the factory was completed, and at the hearing the plaintiffs asked for an order upon the defendants to culvert the watercourse :—Held, upon the construction of the section, that it only enabled the council to compel the owners for the time being of land, which was then laid out for building, and also abutted on a watercourse, to cover over the watercourse before proceeding to build; and held that the action failed as against the firm because they were not owners of land abutting on the watercourse by turning sewage. On the other hand, and never had had any intention of building on his strip. Att.-Gen. v. Rowley, L. G. R. 121; 75 J. P. 81—Swinfen Eady, J.

"Back-to-back" Houses — "Working classes."] — By section 43 of the Housing, Town Planning, &c. Act. 1909, the erection of back-to-back houses intended to be used as dwellings for the working classes is prohibited. Houses standing back to back, containing garages on the ground floor and living rooms on the first floor, which were separated by a party wall on the ground floor and by an air shaft on the first floor, were erected and intended to be used as dwelling houses for chauffeurs :—Held, that the questions whether these were back-to-back houses, and whether they were intended to be used as dwellings for the working classes, were questions of fact, the first being whether they were substantially back-to-back houses; and that a chauffeur was, in the ordinary and popular sense, a member of the working classes, and it was therefore open to the Local Government Board, as a matter of law, to find that the houses in question were intended to be used as dwellings for the working classes. White v. St. Marylebone Borough Council, 84 L. J. K.B. 2142; [1915] 3 K.B. 249; 113 L. T. 447; 79 J. P. 350; 13 L. G. R. 977—D.

It was proposed to erect a block of three-storeyed tenements, each storey containing four dwelling-houses, two to the front and two to the back. It appeared from the plans that in the centre of each tenement there was a space or well containing a common stair which was roofed over, and that all the houses in each tenement entered from this well. It also appeared that in each storey the division between the front and back houses was formed by the walls inclosing the well in the centre and by an unbroken wall common to the front and back houses on each side of the well :—Held, that the proposed houses were "back-to-back houses" within the meaning of section 43 of the Housing, Town Planning, &c. Act, 1909, which prohibits the erection of such houses as dwellings for the working classes. Murrayfield Real Estate Co. v. Edinburgh Magistrates, [1912] S. C. 217—Ct. of Sess.

Bungalows—Seaside Encampment—Alleged Public Nuisance.]—About forty bungalows of two or three rooms apiece, constructed on footings above the level of the ground, had been erected for occupation in the spring and summer months on some eleven acres of low-lying land between a sea-wall and the sea without notice to the rural district council. They were erected on separate sites or plots let at weekly rents. There were also a considerable number of tents on these sites. The land lay below the level of high tides, and no system of drainage was practicable. Sets of closets at different parts of the land were erected for men and women respectively, and their contents were removed and emptied on land at a distance from the residences. The water supply was from stand-pipes. In an action by the Attorney-General, at the relation of the rural district council, for an injunction to restrain the defendants from continuing an alleged public nuisance, and from continuing to maintain the bungalows in contravention of by-laws and from erecting more, and by the rural district council for specific performance of an agreement to take down existing bungalows,—Held, on the evidence, that the plaintiffs had failed to establish that the encampment was a nuisance to the public health. Att.-Gen. v. Kerr, 79 J. P. 51; 12 L. G. R. 1277—Lush, J.

Refreshment House — Keeping Open Contrary to Law—Shop for Sale of Fruit.]—A local Act subjected to a penalty any person occupying "a building or part of a building, or other place of public resort for the sale or consumption of provisions or refreshments of any kind" who failed to comply with the regulations contained therein as to the hours of opening and closing :—Held, that the Act applied to a fruiterer's shop. M'Intyre v. Wilson, [1915] S. C. (J.) 1—Ct. of Just.

c. Right of Entry on Premises.

Preventing Officers of Local Authority from Entering.] — Preventing medical or other officers of a local authority from entering working-class dwelling houses for survey and examination under section 36 (c) of the Housing, Town Planning, &c. Act, 1909, to carry into effect the provisions of Part II. of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, is an offence under section 51 of the latter Act, and an order may be made against the owner for entry to examine and survey under that section. Arlidge v. Serase, 84 L. J. K.B. 1874; [1915] 3 K.B. 325; 79 J. P. 467—D.

d. Closing Order.

Validity—Insanitary Houses.]—The form of closing order of houses provided by the Local Government Board under the powers bestowed upon them by section 41 of the Housing, Town Planning, &c. Act, 1910, (Form 5 of the Statutory Rules and Orders, 1910, No. 2), is not valid when served upon an owner of property unless it embody the note as to his right of appeal that is printed at the end of the prescribed form. Rayner v. Stepney Borough Council, 80 L. J. Ch. 678; [1911] 2 Ch. 312; 105 L. T. 362; 75 J. P. 468; 10 L. G. R. 307; 27 T. L. R. 512—Neville, J.

Houses "unfit for human habitation"—Reason of Unfitness—Circumstances External to House—Insufficient Ventilation.]—A building may be "unfit for human habitation" within the meaning of section 41 of the Manchester Corporation Waterworks and Improvements Act, 1867, if it is so unfit for any reason, such as insufficient ventilation, and not only if it is so unfit because of some structural or other defect existing in the building itself. Whether it is so unfit or not is a question of fact to be determined by the corporation in a judicial spirit. Semble, the standard of fitness or unfitness to be applied is that of the ordinary reasonable man. Hall v. Manchester Corporation, 84 L. J. Ch. 732; 113 L. T. 465; 79 J. P. 385; 13 L. G. R. 1105; 31 T. L. R. 416—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal (111 L. T. 182; 12 L. G. R. 688) affirmed. Ib.

—— Appeal to Quarter Sessions—Time for Appealing.]—Semble, that the time for appealing to quarter sessions from an order made under the above section declaring the building unfit for habitation runs from the date when such order is affixed to the building. Ib.

"Dangerous or injurious to health."]—A local authority, acting under section 17, subsection 2 of the Housing, Town Planning, &c. Act, 1909, issued, upon a representation by their medical officer, a closing order with regard to a tenement of dwelling houses, as being, in the words of the statute, a "dwelling house . . . in a state so dangerous or injurious to health as to be unfit for human habitation":—Held, first, that a tenement of dwelling houses was a dwelling house in the sense of the Act, and that a closing order was competently issued with regard to a whole tenement generally; secondly, that a closing order was competently issued without specifying as between two alternatives whether the house was "dangerous" or "injurious to health," these not being alternative grounds for an order, but the second being exegetical of the first; thirdly, that, the closing order being in a statutory form which did not require a statement of the grounds upon which it was issued, non-disclosure of these grounds in the order did not render it inept; fourthly, that the closing order was competently issued without previous exercise by the local authority of their statutory powers under section 15 to require remedial works, and without affording to the owner of the house an opportunity of being heard. Kirkpatrick v. Maxwelltown Town Council, [1912] S. C. 288—Ct. of Sess.

Intention of Owner to Convert into Warehouses — Demolition Orders — Appeal to and Powers of Local Government Board.]—Where, under the Housing, Town Planning, &c. Act, 1909, s. 17, a closing order in respect of a dwelling house has been made by the local authority and has become operative, and the local authority, on taking into consideration the question of the demolition of the dwelling house, are of opinion that the dwelling house has not been rendered fit for human habitation, and that the necessary steps are not being taken with all due diligence to render it so fit, it is the duty of the local authority to order the demolition of the building, under section 18, although they may be satisfied that there is no intention on the part of the owner to use the house as a dwelling house, or that prior to the demolition order the house has been so altered as to become incapable of use as a dwelling house. But the Local Government Board, in the exercise of their appellate jurisdiction under section 39 of the Act, have power, notwithstanding that the local authority may be bound to make a demolition order, to quash or vary such order or to make such other order as they may consider equitable in the circumstances of the particular case. Lancaster v. Burnley Corporation, 84 L. J. K.B. 181; [1915] 1 K.B. 259; 112 L. T. 159; 79 J. P. 123; 12 L. G. R. 1319; 31 T. L. R. 13—D.

A local authority, being satisfied that certain dwelling houses were unfit for human habitation, made closing orders in respect of them, and the appellant, after the orders had become operative, purchased the houses with notice of the closing orders, but with the intention of converting them into warehouses. Subsequently he proceeded to convert some of the dwelling houses into warehouses with the result that they could not be used as dwelling houses, and he gave notice to the local authority of his intention to convert all the houses into warehouses, submitting plans for their approval, which plans were, however, disapproved. After due notice to the appellant the local authority considered the question of the demolition of the houses and made demolition orders in respect of them, being satisfied that the houses were then unfit for human habitation, and that the necessary steps were not being taken with all due diligence to render them so fit. The appellant appealed to the Local Government Board, contending that, under the circumstances, the demolition orders ought not to have been made. The Local Government Board gave no decision, but, for the purpose of arriving at a decision, stated a Case for the opinion of the Court upon questions of law arising in the appeals:—Held, first, that, on the facts as stated, the local authority were bound to make the demolition orders; but secondly, that, in the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction given by section 39 of the Housing, Town Planning, &c. Act, 1909, the Local Government Board were not restricted to making orders which the local authority might have made, but that they could, on the facts stated, quash or vary the demolition orders. Ib.

Refusal to Determine Closing Order—Appeal to Local Government Board—Order of Board Dismissing Appeal—Procedure—Right of Appellant to See Report of Inspector—Right to a Hearing before the Board.]—Where the decision of a question in dispute between parties has been entrusted by statute to an administrative body, the enquiry must be taken, in the absence of directions in the statute, to be intended to be conducted in accordance with the ordinary procedure of that body; and therefore, although they must act judicially and in good faith, and give to both parties an opportunity of presenting their case, they are not bound to treat such a question as if it were a trial inter partes. In the case of an appeal against a refusal by a local authority to determine a closing order, closing a dwelling house as being unfit for human habitation, which appeal is, by the Housing, Town Planning, &c. Act, 1909, to the Local Government Board, it is not contrary to the principles of natural justice that the Board should, in accordance with its ordinary procedure, under rules made under the statute, dismiss the appeal without disclosing to the appellant the report of an inspector made after a public enquiry at which the appellant was represented, and without giving the appellant an opportunity of being heard orally before the Board itself. Local Government Board v. Arlidge, 84 L. J. K.B. 72; [1915] A.C. 120; 111 L. T. 905; 79 J. P. 97; 12 L. G. R. 1109; 30 T. L. R. 672—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal, sub nom. Rex v. Local Government Board; Arlidge, Ex parte (83 L. J. K.B. 86; [1914] 1 K.B. 160), reversed. Ib.

Service of Order on Lessee—Freeholder not Known—Service of Order on Freeholder by Leaving Order with the Inmate of the Premises.]—Where the defendant council made all the usual enquiries, but were unable to discover the owner of the freehold, and accordingly served a sealed copy of a closing order addressed to the owner of the premises by leaving it with a woman who was in occupation thereof,—Held, that such service was sufficient, and that for the purposes of section 17, sub-section 3 of the Housing, Town Planning, &c. Act, 1909, it was not necessary that the order should be served personally. Arlidge v. Hampstead Urban Council, 59 S. J. 717—Neville, J. Affirmed, 60 S. J. 43—C.A.

Statement of Special Case.]—The Housing, Town Planning, &c. Act, 1909, allows any person aggrieved by a closing order to appeal in Scotland to the Sheriff [in England to the Local Government Board], and enacts by section 39 that the Sheriff [Local Government Board] may "at any stage of the proceedings on appeal" state a Special Case on a question of law for the opinion of the Court:—Held, that such a Case must be stated during the progress of the appeal, and cannot be stated after the Sheriff [Local Government Board] has given judgment. Johnston's Trustees v. Glasgow Corporation, [1912] S. C. 300—Ct. of Sess.

e. Demolition.

Dangerous Wall.]—Semble, although Justices in making an order under section 75 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, ordering the owner of a dangerous wall to take it down, rebuild, or repair it, have jurisdiction to enquire who is the owner of the wall, in order to ascertain whether the proper notices have been given, that enquiry is one preliminary to the exercise of their jurisdiction, and their decision as to ownership is not conclusive in a subsequent proceeding to recover the expenses. Rex v. Cork (Recorder), [1913] 2 Ir. R. 35—K.B. D.

Insanitary Dwelling Houses—Obstructive Building—"Any building"—Workshop.]—The expression "any building" in section 38 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, which provides for the removal of "obstructive buildings," includes buildings of every description, such as a workshop, and is not confined to dwelling houses. Section 38 contains a complete code for fixing the compensation for the removal of an "obstructive building" which is not a dwelling house. Jackson v. Knutsford Urban Council, 84 L. J. Ch. 305; [1914] 2 Ch. 686; 111 L. T. 982; 79 J. P. 73; 58 S. J. 756—Eve, J.

f. By-laws.

Room Used for Human Habitation—Scullery.]—By By-law 69 of the B. and R. Urban District Council, "Every person who shall erect a new building and shall construct any room therein so that it may be used for human habitation shall comply with the following requirements: If such room is not intended to be used as a sleeping room he shall construct such room so that it shall not be less in any part thereof than 9 feet in height." The respondents erected three scullieries eight feet by eight feet six inches in area and eight feet three inches in height only:—Held, that the scullieries were not rooms constructed so that they "may be used for human habitation" within the by-law. Bain v. Compstall Co-operative Society, 103 L. T. 759; 75 J. P. 76; 9 L. G. R. 75—D.

Chimneys—Flues—Thickness of Back—Party Wall.]—By one of the by-laws of the borough of E. it was provided as follows: "Every person who shall erect a new building shall cause the back of every chimney opening in a party wall to be at least 9 in. thick, and he shall cause such thickness to be continued at the back of the flue; such person shall cause the back of every other chimney opening to be at least 4½ in. thick if such opening be in an external wall and 9 in. thick if such opening be elsewhere than in an external wall, and he shall cause such thickness to be continued at the back of the flue. Provided that where flues are constructed back to back, the thickness at the back of such flues may be not less than 4½ in.":—Held, that the proviso contained in the above by-law had no application in the case of flues in a party wall which divided two adjoining houses. Miller v. Field, 110 L. T. 36; 78 J. P. 5; 12 L. G. R. 284—D.

Keeping Premises Open Contrary to By-law.—A corporation by-law provided that "a person registered . . . to keep or use any . . . premises as a place for public refreshment shall not keep such premises open, or suffer them to be kept open" except during hours specified:—Held, that proof that an accused person had kept his premises open, or had suffered them to be kept open, after the hours specified was sufficient per se to establish a contravention of the by-law without any proof as to the purpose for which they were kept open. M'Intyre v. Persichini, [1914] S. C. (J.) 126—Ct. of Just.

3. Sewers and Drains.

See also Vol. IX. 412, 426, 1961, 1973.

Single Private Drain.]—A pipe connected with the drains of several dwelling houses, owned by different owners, and constructed by the owners of those dwelling houses on private ground, as, and used as, a common conduit to receive and carry away the sewage from those houses brought down by the connecting drains, is not a "sewer," but is a "single private drain." Holywood Urban Council v. Grainger, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 126—K.B. D.

—— Conduit Used for Drainage of Roadway and Cottages Belonging to one Owner—Cul-de-sac—Highway. —By section 49, sub-section 1 of the Kingston-upon-Hull Act, 1903, "Where two or more houses or premises are connected with a single private drain which conveys their drainage into a public sewer, the Corporation shall have all the powers conferred by section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875." Section 49, sub-section 2, provided that section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, should cease to be in force in the locality, and section 49, sub-section 3, that the expression "drain" should include a drain used for the drainage of more than one building, whether owned or occupied by the same person or not. Section 4 of the Act provided that words to which meanings were assigned by the Public Health Acts should have those meanings, unless there was something repugnant or inconsistent in the subject or context. By section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the word "premises" includes "messuages buildings lands easements and hereditaments of any tenure." The defendants were the proprietors of a roadway and of a row of cottages on each side of it. The roadway was a cul-de-sac. As the result of a notice under section 23 of the Public Health Act, 1875, served on the defendants in 1876, they laid a conduit under the whole length of the roadway, a great part of which was outside the limit mentioned in that section of 100 feet from the public sewer with which it connects. This conduit was used for surface drainage only, and was fed by conduits from gullies in the backyards of the cottages and by other conduits from gullies in the roadway:—Held, that there was no sufficient evidence that the roadway had been dedicated to the public; but that, whether it had or not, the conduit under the roadway was a "single private drain" within section 49 of the local Act, the conduit being an exclusive and private system of drainage for the defendants' cottages and land on each side of the roadway and the roadway itself, the soil of which was vested in the defendants. Per Bankes, L.J.: "Premises" in section 49 of the local Act must be taken to mean premises in the same ownership as one or more of the houses connected with the single private drain." Hull Corporation v. North-Eastern Railway, 84 L. J. Ch. 905; 60 S. J. 58—C.A.

Sewer or Drain—Underground Culvert for Water of a Natural Watercourse.]—The mere fact that a natural watercourse is culverted or piped by the several owners of the lands which are intersected by it does not make it a drain or sewer so as to vest it in the local authority under the Public Health Act, 1875. Shepherd v. Croft, 80 L. J. Ch. 170; 103 L. T. 874—Parker, J.

Sewer—Natural Stream—Pollution.]—The mere pollution of a natural stream or watercourse by turning sewage into it does not convert it into a sewer. On the other hand, if it is substantially a sewer, the fact that at certain portions of the year clean water flows into it does not prevent it being a sewer. In each case it is a question of fact and degree. Att.-Gen. v. Lewes Corporation, 81 L. J. Ch. 40; [1911] 2 Ch. 495; 55 S. J. 703; 27 T. L. R. 581—Swinfen Eady, J.

Sewage Farm — Discharge of Sewage Effluent—"Natural stream or watercourse"—"Sewer."]—An agricultural ditch or channel constructed by a landowner on his land for the purpose of carrying off surface water, but in which there is no constant flow of water is not a "natural stream or watercourse" within the meaning of section 17 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Phillimore v. Watford Rural Council, 82 L. J. Ch. 514; [1913] 2 Ch. 434; 109 L. T. 616; 77 J. P. 453; 11 L. G. R. 980; 57 S. J. 741—Eve, J.

Such a channel is a "sewer" within section 4, but it falls within the first of the three classes of excepted sewers enumerated in section 13, and is not therefore vested in the local authority. Sykes v. Sowerby Urban Council (69 L. J. Q.B. 464; [1900] 1 Q.B. 584) followed. Ib.

—— Grant of Right of Passage to Local Authority—Effect.]—The grant of a right of "passage and running of water" through a drain or watercourse does not entitle the grantee to discharge sewage effluent into such drain or watercourse. Ib.

Grant of Land for Sewage Works—Access to Sewer.]—The common predecessor in title of the plaintiffs and of the defendants granted to the plaintiffs' predecessors the right to lay a sewer through certain land, and from time to time to repair, maintain and renew the same, the grantees to reinstate the ground as soon as possible after disturbing the same:—Held, that the right of access by the plaintiffs to the sewer was a right of access to it in the condition in which it was when it was first laid down, and that the defendants were not entitled to alter the condition of the ground as by increasing the quantity of soil above the sewer to impose a greater obligation on the plaintiffs in the execution of their right. Birkenhead Corporation v. London and North-Western Railway (55 L. J. Q.B. 48; 15 Q.B. D. 572) distinguished. Thurrock Grays and Tilbury Joint Sewerage Board v. Goldsmith, 79 J. P. 17—Eve, J.

4. Water Closets.

Privies—Notice to Owner to Substitute Water Closets—Notice to Owner that he would be Charged with Cost of Work—Decision of Local Authority—Appeal of Owner to Local Government Board.]—A local authority passed a resolution in pursuance of section 36 of the Public Health Act, 1875, that the privies of four houses were insufficient, and notices were served upon the owner requiring him to provide a water closet for each of the houses. As the work was not carried out by the owner, the local authority decided that their engineer should carry out the work, and that the owner should be charged with the cost of carrying out the work. Notices of these decisions were given to the owner, who, deeming himself aggrieved by the decisions, addressed a memorial by way of appeal to the Local Government Board under section 268 of the Act of 1875, stating the grounds of his complaint. The Local Government Board refused to hear the appeal. Upon a rule nisi for a mandamus to the Local Government Board to hear and determine the appeal,—Held, that the only right of appeal given by section 268 of the Public Health Act, 1875, was against the decision of the local authority that the expenses incurred by the local authority should be recovered in a summary manner instead of being declared private improvement expenses, and that, as the local authority had not come to such a decision, the appeal was premature, and the Local Government Board were entitled to refuse to hear it. Reg. v. Local Government Board (52 L. J. M.C. 4; 10 Q.B. D. 309) applied. Rex v. Local Government Board; Thorp, Ex parte, 84 L. J. K.B. 1184; 112 L. T. 860; 79 J. P. 248; 13 L. G. R. 402—D.

Enforcement of Provision of Earth Closets.]—Undisputed evidence was given by the surveyor of a rural district council that he had reported to them the insanitary condition of certain houses, that his report was considered by them, and that they directed the subsequent proceedings—namely, to enforce the substitution of earth closets for privies in some of the houses; the minutes were produced of resolutions of the sanitary committee recommending that the work be carried out (the owners having failed to comply with notices to execute it), and that the expenses be recovered from such owners, and afterwards that proceedings be taken for recovery of the expenses (the work having then been executed by the council); and the minutes were also produced of a resolution of the council adopting the last-mentioned resolution of the committee:—Held, that this was sufficient evidence that the condition of the houses and the means to be taken to improve it had been properly considered by the council, so as to enable them to recover the expenses of the work under section 36 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Bower v. Caistor Rural Council, 9 L. G. R. 448; 75 J. P. 186—D.

5. Baths and Washhouses.

Swimming Bath—Power of Borough Council to Let—Healthful Recreation—Cinematograph Entertainment.]—By section 5 of the Baths and Washhouses Act, 1878, a borough council may in winter close their public swimming bath and allow it to be used for purposes of "healthful recreation" or exercise:—Held, that the letting of the bath for a cinematograph entertainment was a letting for a "healthful recreation" within the meaning of the above provision. Att.-Gen. v. Shoreditch Borough Council (No. 1), 58 S. J. 415; 30 T. L. R. 382—Eve, J. See next case.

A local authority fitted up and let a public swimming bath for certain afternoons and evenings every week during the winter season of 1913-14 for the purpose of cinematograph entertainments. At these entertainments music was performed and money taken at the doors. The authority had obtained a music licence. The Baths and Washhouses Act, 1878, s. 5, empowers a local authority for five months in any year, between November and March, to allow a public swimming bath "to be used as 'an empty building'" for "purposes of healthful recreation," subject to a proviso that it was not to be used for music. The Baths and Washhouses Act, 1896, s. 2, repealed this proviso, but enacted, by sub-section (a) of section 2, that before any such bath was used for "music" a licence must be obtained; and sub-section (b) of section 2 provided that no portion of the premises for which such licence was granted should be let "otherwise than occasionally," and that no money should be taken at the doors:—Held, that the bath was not being used as "an empty building," within section 5 of the Baths and Washhouses Act, 1878; that the "music" was not incidental merely, but required a licence; that the prohibitions in section 2, sub-section (b) of the Act of 1896 were therefore applicable and had been contravened, and that the letting was illegal. Att.-Gen. v. Shoreditch Borough Council (No. 2), 84 L. J. Ch. 769; [1915] 2 Ch. 154; 112 L. T. 626; 79 J. P. 369; 13 L. G. R. 1144; 59 S. J. 439; 31 T. L. R. 400—C.A.

6. Omnibuses.

Regulation Prohibiting Passengers from Riding on Top of Omnibuses on Section of Route — Notice to Passenger — Refusal to Descend from Top—Delay of Omnibus—Wilful Obstruction of Corporation's Servants in Execution of their Duty.]—A municipal corporation, having statutory authority to run motor omnibuses, in view of the camber of the road on a section of the omnibus route made an order prohibiting passengers from riding on the top of their omnibuses whilst travelling over the section. The order was made in the interest of the passengers and notice thereof was exhibited on the top of each omnibus, but no reference thereto was made on the passengers' tickets. One of the corporation's by-laws provided that "No passenger or other person shall wilfully obstruct or impede any officer or servant of the Council in the execution of his duty upon or in connection with any motor omnibus."

The appellant, who had previous knowledge of the order and notice, was an outside passenger on a motor omnibus on this route, having paid his fare entitling him to travel over the section; and on the omnibus arriving at the beginning of the section, although requested by the conductor and an inspector to descend, and his attention having been again called to the notice, he refused to do so, stating that he had got his ticket and intended to ride on the top to the terminus. The appellant remained on top of the omnibus for some twenty minutes, during which time the inspector declined to allow the omnibus to proceed, and it was consequently delayed. The appellant was convicted of a breach of the by-law:—Held, that, as the corporation had not held themselves out as common carriers of passengers on the top of their omnibuses, or contracted to carry the appellant on the top of their omnibus over the section, he was not entitled to be carried as an outside passenger over the section; that his conduct amounted to wilful obstruction of the corporation's servants within the meaning of the by-law; and that therefore he was rightly convicted. Baker v. Ellison, 83 L. 7. Small Holdings.

Compulsory Purchase of Land—Reservation of Minerals—Risk of Subsidence—Assessment of Compensation.]—Where a county council acquire the surface of land compulsorily under section 7 of the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908, and the subjacent minerals are retained by the landowner, the arbitrator in estimating the compensation to be paid by the county council for the acquisition of the surface may properly leave out of consideration the risk of subsidence, because the Legislature affords a sufficient remedy by sections 77 and 78 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (incorporated in the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908), which enable the council to require that the minerals be left unworked on payment of further compensation. The arbitrator may also leave out of consideration the question whether the county council is or is not in a position to avail itself of such remedy. Carlisle (Earl) and Northumberland County Council, In re, 105 L. T. 797; 75 J. P. 539; 10 L. G. R. 50—Channell, J.

—— Petition for Payment out—Wilful Refusal to Convey.]—After an order for compulsory purchase of land had been duly confirmed under section 39, sub-section 3 of the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908, the solicitor for the owner wrote that he was advised by counsel that the order might be bad, and subsequently he wrote again refusing to convey, alleging the same advice:—Held, that there had been a wilful refusal to convey within the meaning of section 80 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. Jones and Cardiganshire County Council, In re, 57 S. J. 374—Farwell, L.J.

Compensation to Tenant—Loss or Expense Directly Attributable to Quitting Holding.]—A county council being desirous of acquiring a certain holding for the purposes of the Small Holdings Act, by an agreement of January 24, 1912, agreed to pay the tenant 500*l.*, being the estimated amount of one year's profits of the farm, and also "to pay to the tenant such compensation for the loss or expense directly attributable to the quitting which the tenant may unavoidably incur upon and in connexion with the sale or removal of his household goods and his implements of husbandry, produce, and farm stock on or used in connexion with the land as he would have been entitled to under the Small Holdings Act, 1910, if his tenancy of the said farm had been terminated by a notice to quit as in the said Act stated." The tenant sold his farm stock by public auction and sent in his claim for compensation in connection therewith. Certain items of the claim were disputed by the council, and the matter eventually went to arbitration. The items more particularly in dispute were: (a) cost of refreshments at the sale, 34*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*—this item referred to lunches and drink provided for those attending the sale; (b) valuation of farming stock and tenant right, 73*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*; (c) loss on compulsory auction sale as against valuation, 442*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*; (d) fee for settling the agreement of January 24, 2*l.* 2*s.* The umpire disallowed item (a), but found as a fact that it was reasonable in amount, and that it was customary and desirable at agricultural auction sales to provide refreshments for buyers and persons attending the sale. With respect to item (b) he stated that to make a valuation of the tenant's farming stock prior to sale was, in his opinion, a reasonable and prudent expenditure and one which a tenant was absolutely justified in incurring under the circumstances of the case, and he awarded to the tenant in respect of such valuation the sum of 21*l.*, which he considered was fair and ample. He did not award any sum for valuation of tenant right, as tenant right was not a subject with which he had authority to deal. With respect to item (c), the umpire allowed the sum of 181*l.* He allowed item (d), and found as a fact that it was not a charge for legal work, but was a charge made by the valuer for time and services in arranging and agreeing the basis of the agreement, and that it was a reasonable charge. On a Special Case stated on the award,—Held, that item (a), being found by the umpire to be reasonable and the provision of refreshments being customary and desirable at such sales, should be allowed; that item (b) for valuation of the stock should not be allowed; that as to item (c) the tenant was entitled to compensation for any loss or expense which he unavoidably incurred by the sale; and that item (d) could not be allowed, as a fee for settling the agreement was not an unavoidable expense incurred in connection with the sale. Evans and Glamorgan County Council, In re, 76 J. 8. Offensive Trades.

Order of Local Authority Declaring Certain Trade to be Offensive Trade—Establishment of Trade before Making of Order.]—In order that a person may commit the offence under section 112 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as amended by section 51 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, of establishing an offensive trade within the district of an urban authority without their consent in writing, or of carrying on an offensive trade so established, the trade (which must have been established after the passing of the Act of 1875) must be one of the six offensive trades specified in section 112 of the Act of 1875, or be a trade which at the time it was established had been declared by order of the urban authority duly confirmed by the Local Government Board to be an offensive trade. Butchers' Hide, Skin, and Wool Co. v. Seacome, 82 L. J. K.B. 726; [1913] 2 K.B. 401; 108 L. T. 969; 77 J. P. 219; 11 L. G. R. 572; 23 Cox C.C. 400; 29 T. L. R. 415—D.

The appellants established in December, 1911, without the consent in writing of the urban authority, the trade of dealers in raw hides and skins. Such trade was subsequently declared by an order of the urban authority, duly confirmed by the Local Government Board, to be an offensive trade:—Held, that the appellants had not committed the offence of carrying on an offensive trade within the meaning of section 112 of the Act of 1875, as amended by section 51 of the Act of 1907, as their trade had been established before it was declared to be an offensive trade. Ib.

9. Nuisances.

Bungalows—Seaside Encampment—Alleged Public Nuisance.]—About forty bungalows of two or three rooms apiece constructed on footings above the level of the ground had been erected for occupation in the spring and summer months on some eleven acres of low-lying land between a sea-wall and the sea without notice to the rural district council. They were erected on separate sites or plots let at weekly rents. There were also a considerable number of tents on these sites. The land lay below the level of high tides, and no system of drainage was practicable. Sets of closets at different parts of the land were erected for men and women respectively, and their contents were removed and emptied on land at a distance from the residences. The water supply was from stand-pipes. In an action by the Attorney-General at the relation of the rural district council for an injunction to restrain the defendants from continuing an alleged public nuisance, and from continuing to maintain the bungalows in contravention of by-laws and from erecting more, and by the rural district council for specific performance of an agreement to take down existing bungalows,—Held, on the evidence, that the plaintiffs had failed to establish that the encampment was a nuisance to the public health. Att.-Gen. v. Kerr, 79 J. P. 51; 12 L. G. R. 1277—Lush, J.

Abatement—Sufficiency of Notice to Abate.]—A notice was served on the owner of certain premises under section 94 of the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring him to abate a nuisance arising from his allowing water to rise and accumulate in his cellar. The water came from a spring in the cellar. The notice continued: "and for that purpose to drain off the water, and to fill up the cellar, and to execute all such other works, and do all such other things as may be necessary for the abatement of the said nuisance":—Held, that the notice was bad—by Ridley, J., on the ground that, although it need not set out the work to be done in detail, it ought to set out the character of the work to be done—namely, pumping, and not draining; by Avory, J., and Lush, J., on the ground that it was ambiguous in that it might mean either that the owner was to effectively drain the water from the cellar or only to pump out the water then in the cellar. Whatling v. Rees, 84 L. J. K.B. 1122; 112 L. T. 512; 79 J. P. 209; 13 L. G. R. 274—D.

10. Food and Drink.

a. Sale of Unsound Meat.

See also Vol. IX. 443, 1984.

Local Government — Unsound Meat — Sale without Exposure for Sale — Jurisdiction to Inflict Penalty—"Sold or exposed for sale."]—On a prosecution under section 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as amended by section 28 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, for selling diseased meat intended for the food of man, it is necessary to prove that the meat has been exposed for sale by the defendant, and that the defendant was the owner of the meat at the time of the exposure for sale. The word "sold" in section 28 of the Act of 1890 gives jurisdiction to deal with the article of food and with the defendant on the termination of the exposure for sale by a sale—per Rowlatt, J. The appellants sold a diseased live bullock to a butcher, knowing that he intended to use it for human food, but they had not exposed it for sale. It was seized on the butcher's premises, and condemned by a Justice:—Held, that the appellants could not be convicted because they had not exposed the meat for sale. The article sold, the bullock, was not the same thing as the article seized and condemned, the meat; therefore the conviction was bad on that ground also—per Avory, J. Bothamley v. Jolly, 84 L. J. K.B. 2223; [1915] 3 K.B. 425; 31 T. L. R. 626—D.

Seizure on other than Seller's Premises after Sale — Condemnation — Jurisdiction to Inflict Penalty—"So seized."]—In order to give jurisdiction, under sections 116 and 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and section 28 of the amending Act of 1890, to inflict a penalty for selling, exposing for sale, depositing for the purpose of sale or of preparation for sale meat intended for the food of man and unfit for the food of man, it is not necessary that it should have been seized at the time when so sold or exposed. Salt v. Tomlinson, 80 L. J.

Meat was seized on the premises of the medical officer of health for the district, who had received it from a person who had purchased it from the appellant on the previous day, and it was subsequently condemned by a Justice, it being found as a fact that it was unfit for the food of man at the time of the sale:—Held, that the appellant was rightly convicted of selling the meat when so unfit. Ib.

Possession of Diseased Meat—Proceedings by Police Officer—Consent of Attorney-General.]—A police officer is precluded by the provisions of section 253 of the Public Health Act, 1875, from taking proceedings, without the consent of the Attorney-General, under section 117, against a person for unlawfully having in his possession meat, for the purpose of preparation for sale and intended for the food of man, which is diseased. Dodd v. Pearson, 80 L. J. K.B. 927; [1911] 2 K.B. 383; 105 L. T. 108; 75 J. P. 343; 9 L. G. R. 646; 22 Cox C.C. 526; 27 T. L. R. 376—D.

Evidence of Possession at the Time of Seizure of Unsound Meat intended to be Sold for Food.]—Meat supplied for the use of a regiment was delivered at their barracks and rejected as unsound. It was subsequently found by the inspector of nuisances in a waggon on the premises of a slaughterer, and was condemned by a Justice. The appellant had after the seizure admitted his ownership of the meat to the inspector, and had said to him that it was perfectly fit for food. The appellant had also requested the medical officer of health to keep the meat for further examination on his behalf, and had told that officer that if it had not been seized he was prepared to sell it:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence to justify the Justices in finding that the meat was in the possession of the appellant when it was seized, and in convicting him under section 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Bull v. Lord, 9 L. G. R. 829—D.

Seizure of Meat Erroneously Alleged to be Unsound — Claim for Compensation.] — A veterinary surgeon, approved by the local authority under the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, seized and carried away meat which appeared to him to be diseased, but which eventually did not prove to have been diseased. The owners of the meat claimed compensation from the local authority for the value of the meat, and presented an application to the Local Government Board, more than six months after the seizure of the meat, for the appointment of an arbiter to ascertain the compensation due. The local authority thereupon brought an action to interdict the application from proceeding:—Held, first, that the local authority were not relieved from liability by virtue of section 166 of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, the claim not being a claim of damages for an "irregularity" in the sense of that section, but a claim for compensation under section 164; secondly, that the proceedings were timeously taken, in respect that this was not the case of an "action or prosecution" for a "wrong" in the sense of section 166 of the Act which had to be brought within two months, nor of an "action, prosecution, or other proceeding" in the sense of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act which had to be brought within six months. Glasgow Corporation v. Smithfield and Argentine Meat Co., [1912] S. Refusing to Sell to Inspector for Analysis—Milk Kept in Counter Pan—Milk only Sold Mixed with Something Else—"Exposed to sale, or on sale by retail."]—The respondent, who kept an eating house, had on the counter in his shop a pan labelled "Pure milk." The appellant, who was an inspector under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, asked to be supplied with a glass of milk from the counter pan for the purpose of analysis. The respondent's servant refused to serve him, as he did not sell milk alone, the milk being on the premises only for the purpose of being added to cups of tea, coffee, cocoa, or glasses of soda water:—Held, that the milk was "exposed to sale, or on sale by retail" within the meaning of section 17 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, notwithstanding that it was only sold mixed with something else, and that therefore the respondent was guilty of the offence under section 17 of the Act of 1875 of refusing to sell to an inspector an article of food "exposed to sale or on sale by retail" in his shop. McNair v. Terroni, 84 L. J. K.B. 357; [1915] 1 K.B. 526; 112 L. T. 503; 79 J. P. 219; 13 L. G. R. 377; 31 T. L. R. 82—D.

Notification of Intention to Submit Article to Analysis—Notification to "seller or his agent selling the article"—Notification to Agent other than Agent Selling the Article.]—Section 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, which requires that a person purchasing an article with the intention of submitting it to analysis shall, after the purchase is completed, forthwith "notify to the seller or his agent selling the article" his intention to have the same analysed by the public analyst, may be sufficiently complied with by a notification to an agent of the seller other than the agent who actually sold the article:—So held by Lord Alverstone, C.J., and Avory, J.; Pickford, J., dissenting. Davies v. Burrell, 81 L. J. K.B. 736; [1912] 2 K.B. 243; 107 L. T. 91; 76 J. P. 285; 10 L. G. R. 645; 23 Cox C.C. 81; 28 T. L. R. 389—D.

Milk not of the Nature, Substance, and Quality Contracted to be Sold—Milk not Tampered with.]—The respondent was charged on an information with having consigned to a purchaser milk which was not of the nature, substance, and quality contracted to be sold, the milk being deficient in fat to the extent of 26 per cent. of the minimum amount fixed by the Sale of Milk Regulations, 1901. At the hearing the facts stated in the information were proved or admitted, and evidence was also given and admitted that another consignment of the same morning's milk from the same cows shewed on analysis 3.1 per cent. fat (being in excess of the said minimum), and that the morning's milk from the same cows seven days later shewed on analysis a deficiency in fat below such minimum of 3 per cent. only. The Justices, on this evidence, were of opinion that, although the sample, the subject of the summons, was not of the nature, substance, and quality contracted to be sold, yet the respondent had not tampered with the milk and that the milk was as it came from the cows. They accordingly dismissed the information :—Held, that the Case must be remitted to the Justices to convict the respondent unless further evidence was given before them bearing upon the question whether or not the difference between the quantities of fat in the two consignments on the day in question was consistent with there having been ordinary milking. Marshall v. Skett, 108 L. T. 1001; 77 J. P. 173; 11 L. G. R. 259; 23 Cox C.C. 435; 29 T. L. R. 152—D.

Deficiency of Fat in Milk Due to Method of Feeding.]—J. was charged with selling "sweet milk which was not of the nature, substance, and quality of sweet milk, the article demanded by the purchaser, in respect that" it did not contain the percentage of milk fat and solids required by the Regulations, "contrary to the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, s. 6, and to the Sale of Milk Regulations, 1901." It was proved that the milk did not contain the percentage of milk fat and solids required by the Regulations; that it had not been tampered with or adulterated, but had been sold in the same condition as yielded by the cows; and that the deficiency of milk fat and solids was due to the method of feeding, which had been purposely adopted to produce quantity of milk irrespective of quality :—Held, that the milk was "genuine," and that the accused was not guilty of the offence charged. Smithies v. Bridge (71 L. J. K.B. 555; [1902] 2 K.B. 13) commented on. Scott v. Jack, [1912] S. C. (J.) 87—Ct. of Just.

Milk Deficient in Fat—Proof of Genuineness—Onus.]—The Sale of Milk Regulations, 1901, provide that where a sample of milk contains less than 3 per cent. of milk fat it shall be presumed, "until the contrary is proved, that the milk is not genuine, by reason of the abstraction therefrom of milk fat, or the addition thereto of water" :—Held, that the onus of proof so imposed upon a seller of milk was sufficiently discharged by the evidence of the accused himself and his mother and servants (which was not disbelieved) that the milk had not been tampered with, and that it was not necessary for him to have the corroboration of a neutral witness or witnesses. Lamont v. Rodger, [1911] S. C. (J.) 24—Ct. of Just.

Deficiency in Milk Solids—12 per cent. of Added Water—Contents of Churn not Stirred Prior to Purchase—Offence of Trivial Nature.]—The respondent was charged with selling milk not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by the appellant. The milk purchased was analysed, and the analyst stated in his certificate that in his opinion the sample contained 12 per cent. of added water. The churn from which the milk was taken was not stirred prior to the quantity purchased by the appellant being taken therefrom. No evidence was given, or called, by the respondent, nor did he require the public analyst to be called. The Justices stated that they were of opinion from their own knowledge that the sample taken by the appellant did not fairly represent the whole contents of the churn, and that the slight deficiency in the standard prescribed by the Sale of Milk Regulations, 1901, might be due to causes other than abstraction of solids or the addition of water, and they did not feel justified in convicting the respondent on so small a percentage of water in excess of the Regulations, having regard to the fact that the milk supplied was of good quality; they were further of opinion that, in any event, the offence was of so trivial a nature that they were justified in dismissing the information :—Held, that in view of the findings of the Justices the Court could not say that they were not entitled to come to the conclusion at which they arrived. Preston v. Redfern, 107 L. T. 410; 76 J. P. 359; 10 L. G. R. 717; 23 Cox C.C. 166; 28 T. L. R. 435—D.

Sample Taken "in course of delivery."]—The respondent, a milkman, drew milk from a can and delivered it to a customer who came out of her house with a jug to get it. He was under contract to deliver to the customer pure milk from one cow. As soon as the customer received the milk she went back with it into her house and shut the door. The appellant, an inspector under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, then went to the respondent and bought some milk from the same can, being told by the respondent that the milk was diluted. The appellant then knocked at the door of the customer's house, and the door was opened by the customer, who still had the jug in her hand, and said that the milk in the jug was exactly as she received it. The appellant took a sample from the milk in the jug and sent it, with the sample bought from the respondent, for analysis. The result of the analysis was the same as to each sample, both being adulterated with 30 per cent. of water. In a prosecution for selling to the customer milk which had been adulterated the Justices held that the sample taken from the milk supplied to her had not been taken by the appellant while the milk was "in course of delivery" to the customer within section 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act Amendment Act, 1879, and they accordingly dismissed the charge :—Held (Lord Alverstone, C.J., dissenting), that there was evidence upon which the Justices could find that there was a complete delivery of the milk before the sample was taken by the appellant. Helliwell v. Haskins, 105 L. T. 438; 9 L. G. R. 1060; 75 J. P. 435; 27 T. L. R. 463; 22 Cox C.C. 603—D.

A consignment of forty-two gallons of milk in six barrels, five of which contained eight gallons each and the remaining one two gallons, was delivered at a milk shop. It was there sampled by the sanitary inspector, the method adopted being as follows: Four of the five eight-gallon barrels were poured separately into a ten-gallon dish, and a sample of each taken, and the last of the five eight-gallon barrels and the sixth barrel of two gallons were poured together into the dish, and a sample taken. Each of the five samples was separately analysed, and the average of these analyses was taken as representing the quality of the whole consignment:—Held, that this was a fair method of sampling. Lamont v. Rodger, [1911] S. C. (J.) 24—Ct. of Just.

Per Lord Ardwall.—It would have been preferable to have mixed all the samples together before the analysis. Ib.

Skimmed Milk.]—The Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, s. 4, sub-s. 1, empowers the Board of Agriculture to make regulations determining what deficiency in the constituents of "genuine milk, cream, butter, or cheese," or what addition of extraneous matter "in any sample of milk (including condensed milk), cream, butter, or cheese," shall raise a presumption that the same is not genuine:—Held, that "milk" included skimmed milk, and that "genuine" meant merely "unadulterated"; and accordingly that the Board of Agriculture had power under the section to make regulations as to skimmed milk. Gordon v. Lore, [1911] S. C. (J.) 75—Ct. of Just.

Cream—Sale of Mixture as Article of Commerce—Notice to Purchaser by Label.]—Section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, provides that any person selling an article of food not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser, shall be liable to a penalty, except in the case of any matter or ingredient not injurious to health being added to the food because the same is required for the production or preparation thereof as an article of commerce, in a state fit for carriage or consumption, and not fraudulently to increase the bulk, weight, or measure of the food, or conceal the inferior quality thereof. Section 8 of the Act provides that, in respect of the sale of an article of food mixed with any matter or ingredient referred to in section 6, no person shall be guilty of an offence under that section if at the time of delivering the article he shall supply to the person receiving the same a notice, by a label distinctly and legibly written or printed on or with the article, to the effect that the same is mixed. A purchaser asked for cream and was supplied with a mixture of cream and boric acid, which mixture was poured from a can into an earthenware pot. Attached to this pot was a label on which were legibly printed these words: "Preserved cream containing boric acid not exceeding 0.5 per cent." After filling the pot the vendor placed it in a plain paper bag for the convenience of the purchaser so quickly that the purchaser had no opportunity of seeing the label, but there was no intention on the part of the vendor of concealing the label from him:—Held, that the vendor had not supplied to the person receiving the pot the notice required by section 8 of the Act, inasmuch as he had omitted to bring to his mind the fact that there was a label thereon. Batchelour v. Gee, 83 L. J. K.B. 1714; [1914] 3 K.B. 242; 111 L. T. 256; 78 J. P. 362; 12 L. G. R. 931; 24 Cox C.C. 268; 30 T. L. R. 506—D.

Pearks, Gunston & Tee v. Houghton (71 L. J. K.B. 385; [1902] 1 K.B. 889) followed. Jones v. Jones (58 J. P. 653) dissented from. Ib.

—— Added Matter or Ingredient—Boron Preservative—"Injurious to health"—Notice to Purchaser.]—The appellant, a dairyman, sold to a purchaser cream mixed with a preservative. Nothing was said by the appellant at the time of the sale, but opposite to the entrance of his shop a notice was exhibited stating that all cream sold at the establishment contained a small portion of boron preservative to keep the cream "sweet and wholesome." The purchaser read the notice before he was supplied with the cream. Upon an information under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, charging the appellant with having sold "to the prejudice of the purchaser" an article of food which was not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by him, the Justices found that the article sold was injurious to health, and convicted the appellant:—Held, that there was no evidence that the sale was a sale "to the prejudice of the purchaser" within the meaning of section 6, inasmuch as he was informed by the notice that the cream was mixed. Held, further, that for the purposes of section 6 the fact that the article was found to be injurious to health was immaterial. Williams v. Friend, 81 L. J. K.B. 756; [1912] 2 K.B. 471; 107 L. T. 93; 76 J. P. 301; 10 L. G. R. 494; 23 Cox C.C. 86; 28 T. L. R. 407—D.

Mixture of Butter and Margarine—Evidence—Maximum Legal Proportion of Butter—Proportion Relative thereto in Mixture—"Quality."]—By section 8 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, it is unlawful to sell margarine containing more than 10 per cent. of butter fat. Hence where the defendant sold, as a mixture, a mixture of butter and margarine which contained 4½ per cent. of butter fat,—Held, that there was no evidence to justify a finding that it was merely colourable, as the proportion to be considered was that of the butter in the mixture to the legal maximum of butter fat it could contain, and not its proportion to the total quantity of the mixture. "Quality," in section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, means commercial quality. Anness v. Grivell, 85 L. J. K.B. 121; [1915] 3 K.B. 685; 79 J. P. 558; 13 L. G. R. 1215—D.

Admixture of Coffee and Chicory—Notice to Purchaser by Label—"Supply . . . a notice."]—The appellant bought at the respondent's shop some half-dozen articles, including half a pound of coffee. These, in accordance with trade custom and for the purchaser's convenience, the respondent wrapped up together in a parcel, and handed to the appellant. When the latter opened the parcel he immediately saw a label on the coffee bearing a notice, "This is sold as a mixture of coffee and chicory." He had had no opportunity of seeing this label before :—Held (Avory, J., dissentiente), that the respondent had complied with section 8 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, which enacts that where the article of food or drug is mixed the seller "shall supply to the person receiving the same a notice, by a label," and that he had not sold to the prejudice of the purchaser an article of food not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded within the meaning of section 6 of the Act. Jones v. Jones (58 J. P. 653) followed. Batchelour v. Gee (83 L. J. K.B. 1714; [1914] 3 K.B. 242) not followed. Clifford v. Battley, 84 L. J. K.B. 615; [1915] 1 K.B. 531; 112 L. T. 765; 79 J. P. 180; 13 L. G. R. 505; 31 T. L. R. 117—D.

Sardines in Oil.]—The respondent requested the appellant to supply him with nine tins of sardines in olive oil. The tins sold to him by the appellant, in fact, contained sardines in cotton-seed oil, an oil which is not injurious to health :—Held, that there had been a sale by the appellant "to the prejudice of the purchaser" within the meaning of section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. Winterbottom v. Allwood, 84 L. J. K.B. 1225; [1915] 2 K.B. 608; 112 L. T. 590; 79 J. P. 161; 13 L. G. R. 551; 31 T. L. R. 68—D.

Sugar — Demerara Sugar — Coloured Mauritius Sugar — Place of Origin.] — The respondent was summoned, under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling as "Demerara sugar" crystallised cane sugar grown in Mauritius and coloured with an organic dye. Evidence was given that the sugar was equal to the best West Indian cane sugar and that the public expect under the designation "Demerara sugar" a yellow crystallised cane sugar without reference to its origin. The magistrate found that "Demerara sugar" had become a generic term referring to a process and not to a place, and he dismissed the summons :—Held, that although the sugar was not grown in Demerara, yet as it was "Demerara sugar" in every other respect, the magistrate's decision must be affirmed. Anderson v. Britcher, 110 L. T. 335; 78 J. P. 65; 12 L. G. R. 10; 24 Cox C.C. 60; 30 T. L. R. 78—D.

Lardine — Percentage of Water.] — The respondents were summoned for having sold to the prejudice of the appellant a certain article of food, to wit lardine, which was not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by the appellant. It was proved that the appellant having asked for one pound of lardine was supplied with one pound of a substance which contained the following percentages of ingredients : Fat, &c., 25 per cent., water 25 per cent.; that lardine is a substitute for, and is sold at a lower price than, lard (which contains no water), but that there is no statutory standard for lardine; that during the three months ending June 30, 1910, twenty-six samples of lard substitutes were analysed by the county analyst, of which twenty-two samples contained no water and that four samples did contain water; that during the three months ending September 30, 1910, eight samples or lard substitutes were analysed, six of them containing no water and two containing water. The Justices were of opinion that, there being no statutory standard for lardine, and the only evidence before them of any commercial standard being the composition of the samples analysed by the county analyst, they were not justified in holding that lardine must contain no water; nor, in the absence of evidence as to the percentage of water in such samples, did they consider the evidence sufficient to enable them to fix a percentage of water permissible, and to say that what was sold by the respondent was not lardine. The Justices accordingly dismissed the summons : —Held (Bray, J., dissenting), that the Justices ought to consider whether there was adulteration or not, and that the case must go back to them for this purpose. Rudd v. Skelton Co-operative Society, 104 L. ii. Analysis.

Notification of Intention to Submit Article to Analysis—Notification to "seller or his agent selling the article" — Notification to Agent other than Agent Selling the Article.] —Section 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, which requires that a person purchasing an article with the intention of submitting it to analysis shall, after the purchase is completed, forthwith "notify to the seller or his agent selling the article" his intention to have the same analysed by the public analyst, may be sufficiently complied with by a notification to an agent of the seller other than the agent who actually sold the article :—So held by Lord Alverstone, C.J., and Avory, J.; Pickford, J., dissenting. Davies v. Burrell, 81 L. J. K.B. 736; [1912] 2 K.B. 243; 107 L. T. 91; 76 J. P. 285; 10 L. G. R. 645; 28 T. L. R. 389—D.

Sample—Purchase for Analysis—Deterioration of Sample—Mode of Sealing up—Impossibility of Analysis — Condition Precedent to Prosecution.]—The sale of sardines in olive oil is not a sale of two separate articles—namely, sardines and oil—but of one article, and it is not necessary, under section 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for the respondent to give the appellant a separate sample of each. Winterbottom v. Allwood, 84 L. J. K.B. 1225; [1915] 2 K.B. 608; 112 L. T. 590; 79 J. P. 161; 13 L. G. R. 551; 31 T. L. R. 68—D.

It is not a condition precedent to proceedings under section 14 that each part of the article shall be "sealed or fastened up" in such a manner as to be capable of effective analysis at the date of the service of the summons; but the purchaser is bound to take reasonable care in regard to the sealing up. Ib.

Certificate.] — An analyst's certificate in respect of certain skimmed milk was as follows: Solids not fat, 7.35; fat, 1.31; water, 91.34. Total, 100.00. Ash, .59: — Held, that the certificate was not open to the objection that it was unintelligible because the "solids" were not described as "milk solids," or because the amount of the ash was added. Gordon v. Love, [1911] S. iii. Persons Liable.

Sale by "Person"—Limited Company.]—A limited company are liable to be convicted, under section 20, sub-section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, for giving to a purchaser a false warranty in writing in respect of an article of food or drug sold by the company as principal or agent. Chuter v. Freeth & Pocock, 80 L. K.B. 1322; [1911] 2 K.B 832; 105 L. T. 238; 75 J. P. 430; 9 L. G. R. 1055; 27 T. L. R. 467; 22 Cox C.C. 573—D.

"Carrying on trade of purveyor of milk"—Small Quantity of Milk Sold at Refreshment Buffet — Necessity for Registration.] — The appellants were the occupiers of a refreshment buffet at a railway station in London, and among other articles sold there by them was milk, which they obtained from a firm of F. & Sons, who undertook to supply it guaranteed pure and to convey it to the appellants as they might require. The sale of milk by the appellants at the buffet in question was extremely small, amounting to about three or four glasses per week, the takings for milk being about 4*d.* out of 50*l.* per week. In no circumstances was milk sold for consumption off the premises, but it was never refused when asked for for consumption on the premises:—Held, that the appellants did not at the buffet in question "carry on the trade of purveyors of milk" within the meaning of the Dairies, Cowsheds, and Milkshops Order, 1885, and therefore that it was not necessary for them to be registered as purveyors of milk in respect of that buffet. Spiers & Pond, Lim. v. Green, 82 L. J. K.B. 26; [1912] 3 K.B. 576; 77 J. P. 11; 10 L. G. R. 1050; 29 T. L. R. 14—D.

Sale by Shop Assistant—Company Carrying on Business — Liability of Director and Principal Shareholder.] — Butter containing margarine was sold to the respondent's representative by an assistant at a shop of which a limited company were the proprietors. The appellant, a director of the company, was practically the only shareholder. He was also the secretary and general manager of the company's business, but was not on the premises at the time of the sale. Upon an information charging the appellant with an offence under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, the Justices found that the assistant was a person employed by the appellant as a salesman, and convicted the appellant of the offence charged:—Held, that the assistant was employed, not by the appellant, but by the company, which was a separate entity, and that the appellant was therefore improperly convicted. Booth v. Helliwell, 83 L. J. K.B. 1548; [1914] 3 K.B. 252; 111 L. T. 542; 78 J.P. 223; 12 L. G. R. 940; 24 Cox C.C. 361; 30 T. L. R. 529—D.

Unauthorised Sale by Servant.] — In the prosecution of a dairyman for selling, by the hand of his servant, milk which was not genuine, it was proved that the servant who sold the milk had no authority to do so, his duty being merely to deliver milk to his master's customers—Held, that as the servant had exceeded his authority in selling the milk, there had been no sale by the accused, and that he must therefore be acquitted. Lindsay v. Dempster, [1912] S. C. (J.) 110—Ct. of Just.

iv. Prosecution.

Jurisdiction of Justices—Place of Delivery — County — Petty Sessional Division.] — The provision in section 20 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, that proceedings may be taken for an offence against the Act "before any Justices in petty sessions assembled having jurisdiction in the place where the article or drug sold was actually delivered to the purchaser," authorises the taking of proceedings in any part of the county in which delivery took place, and does not require that they should be taken in the particular petty sessional division in which delivery took place. Rex v. Beacontree Justices; Rex v. Wright, 84 L. J. K.B. 2230; [1915] 3 K.B. 388; 113 L. T. 727; 79 J. P. 461; 13 L. G. R. 1094; 31 T. L. R. 509—D.

Article Intended to be Used for Adulteration of Butter—Sample Taken by Officer for Analysis—Necessity for Division into Parts—Limit of Time for Instituting Proceedings.] —Where an officer acting under the powers conferred by section 2, sub-section 1 of the Butter and Margarine Act, 1907, enters registered premises and takes a sample for analysis of any article capable of being used for the adulteration of butter, margarine, margarine cheese, or milk-blended butter, it is not a condition precedent to the institution of a prosecution of the occupier of the premises under section 3 of the Act that the officer should have notified the occupier of his intention to have the sample analysed by the public analyst, or shall have divided it into parts or otherwise have complied with the provisions of section 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs

Act, 1875; and section 19, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, which prescribes a time limit for a prosecution, does not apply to such prosecution. Principle laid down in Rouch v. Hall (50 L. J. M.C. 6; 6 Q.B. D. 17) applied. Monro v. Central Creamery Co., 81 L. J. K.B. 547; [1912] 1 K.B. 578; 106 L. T. 114; 76 J. P. 131; 10 L. G. R. 134; 22 Cox C.C. 682—D.

Information by Inspector—Proof of Appointment.]—The appellant preferred an information against the respondent under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling whisky which was not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by the appellant. On the hearing before the Justices the appellant stated that he was an inspector under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act. He was not cross-examined as to his appointment, nor asked to produce it. The respondent's solicitor thereupon contended that it was necessary for the appellant to produce his appointment as inspector, and that, as he had not done so, the case should be dismissed. The Justices were of opinion that it was necessary that the appellant should have formally proved his appointment, and dismissed the information, refusing an application for an adjournment:—Held, that, assuming that it was necessary for the appellant to prove his appointment as inspector, there was sufficient prima facie evidence before the Justices that he was an inspector, and that they were wrong in dismissing the information. Ross v. Helm, 82 L. J. K.B. 1322; [1913] 3 K.B. 462; 107 L. T. 829; 77 J. P. 13; 11 L. G. R. 36; 23 Cox C.C. 248—D.

Semble (per Channell, J., and Avory, J.), that upon an information under section 6 of the Act of 1875 it is unnecessary for the informant to prove that he is an inspector. Ib.

False Warranty — Where Given — Vinegar —Jurisdiction.]—Where a false warranty in respect of food or drugs is sent by post to a purchaser or sent to him with the goods purchased, the Justices of the place where the warranty is received have jurisdiction to deal with the offence. Grimble & Co. v. Preston, 83 L. J. K.B. 347; [1914] 1 K.B. 270; 110 L. T. 115; 78 J. P. 72; 12 L. G. R. 382; 24 Cox C.C. 1; 30 T. L. R. 119—D.

Analyst's Certificate not Served with Summons — Waiver.] — An objection to the jurisdiction of Justices, on the ground that section 19, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899—which provides that in any prosecution under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts there must be served with the summons a copy of any analyst's certificate obtained on behalf of the prosecutor—has not been complied with, is waived by the defendant's advocate cross-examining the witnesses for the prosecution; and he cannot take the objection when he is called upon to open his defence. Ib.

The appellants, brewers in London, on receipt of an order from a grocer at Nuneaton, Warwickshire, sent him by carrier some vinegar labelled "Guaranteed pure malt vinegar, free from added acid, warranted unadulterated," and also at the same time an invoice by post containing these words: "All our vinegar warranted unadulterated." A summons to appear before the Justices at Nuneaton on a charge of having given a false warranty to the grocer in respect of the vinegar was served on the appellants, but no copy of the analyst's certificate obtained on behalf of the prosecutor was served therewith. On the hearing of the summons the appellants' solicitor cross-examined the witnesses for the prosecution, and at the end of the case for the prosecution objected to the jurisdiction of the Justices, on the grounds that, first, the warranty was not given at Nuneaton, but in London; and secondly, that no copy of the analyst's certificate had been served with the summons. The Justices overruled the objections:—Held, on a Case stated by the Justices, that their decision was right. Ib.

Semble, that the omission to serve a copy of the analyst's certificate together with the summons could not have been cured, either by amendment or adjournment, if a preliminary objection had been taken thereto. Ib.

—— Dismissal of Summons—Issue of Second Summons—Autrefois Acquit.]—The appellant was summoned for an offence under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. At the hearing of the summons it appeared that the analyst's certificate had not been served on the appellant with the summons, as required by section 19, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, and the magistrate thereupon dismissed the case. Subsequently a fresh summons was issued in respect of the same offence and based on the same facts, and on this occasion was served on the appellant with the certificate. At the hearing of this second summons the appellant contended that the matter was res judicata, and that the proceedings were therefore bad. The magistrate considered that the appellant had not been in peril on the first occasion, and that, consequently, he could not raise a good plea of autrefois acquit, and proceeded to convict. The appellant appealed:—Held, on the authority of Grimble & Co. v. Preston (83 L. J. K.B. 347; [1914] 1 K.B. 270), that the service of the certificate with the summons was not a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of a magistrate to try a summons under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts. The appellant, therefore, had been in peril at the hearing of the first summons and could not be put on his trial again for the same offence, and under the circumstances the magistrate was wrong in convicting him. Haynes v. Davis, 84 L. J. K.B. 441; [1915] 1 K.B. 332; 112 L. T. 417; 79 J. P. 187; 13 L. G. R. 497—D.

Per Ridley, J.: A man who has been in peril and acquitted is entitled to protection from any further proceedings with reference to the same offence, whether the acquittal is by the verdict of the jury on the merits, or on some point of law. Rex v. Galway (Justices) ([1906] 2 Ir. R. 499) principle applied. Ib.

Per Lush, J. (dissenting): The service of the certificate with the summons was a condition precedent to the magistrate having jurisdiction. The appellant was therefore never in peril on the first occasion. An acquittal of a charge on a purely technical ground which operates as a bar to the adjudication does not entitle a defendant to raise a successful plea of autrefois aequit. Ib.

v. Defences to Prosecution.

Written Warranty — Sufficiency.]—In proceedings under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts by an inspector against a retail milk dealer for selling milk not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded, on the ground that a certain percentage of water had been added to the milk, the dealer relied upon the warranty of his vendors, a limited company, as a defence, and claimed, under section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, to be discharged from the prosecution. The warranty relied upon consisted of the following agreement by the company: "The said S. S. and G. Dairies Limited purchase all milk sold by them under a warranty of its purity from the farmers, and agree to put the same on rail thoroughly well cooled over a refrigerator, and guarantee it as such up to the time of delivery at the above address":—Held, that this was a warranty of the purity of the milk as delivered at the dealer's address, upon which he was entitled to rely under section 25, and not merely a guarantee that the milk should arrive "thoroughly well cooled over a refrigerator." Jackling v. Carter, 107 L. T. 24; 76 J. P. 292; 10 L. G. R. 632; 23 Cox C.C. 54—D.

Notice of Defence—"Sent to the purchaser"—"Within seven days after service of summons"—Notice Put into Post within Seven Days — Notice Reaching Purchaser after Expiration of Seven Days.]—Section 20 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, provides that "A warranty or invoice shall not be available as a defence to any proceeding under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts unless the defendant has, within seven days after service of the summons, sent to the purchaser a copy of such warranty or invoice, with a written notice stating that he intends to rely on the warranty or invoice":—Held, that the word "sent" simply meant despatched, and that the section was complied with if the defendant put the documents into the post within seven days, even although they were not received by the party to whom they were sent until after the expiration of the seven days. Retail Dairy Co. v. Clarke, 81 L. J. K.B. 845; [1912] 2 K.B. 388; 106 L. T. 848; 76 J. P. 282; 10 L. G. R. 547; 23 Cox C.C. 6; 28 T. L. R. 361—D.

Notice Sent by Defendant to Person Giving Warranty of Intention to Rely upon Warranty—Time within which Notice must be Sent.]—Section 20 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, provides that "A warranty or invoice shall not be available as a defence to any proceeding under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts unless the defendant has, within seven days after service of the summons, sent to the purchaser a copy of such warranty or invoice with a written notice stating that he intends to rely on the warranty or invoice, and specifying the name and address of the person from whom he received it, and has also sent a like notice of his intention to such person":—Held, that the words "within seven days after service of the summons" did not apply to the notice to be sent to the person giving the warranty, and that the words "within a reasonable time" could not be read into the section as applying to such notice; it was sufficient if, at the time the Court had to decide whether a warranty or invoice was available to the defendant as a defence, notice had been given by the defendant to the person giving the warranty or invoice of his intention to rely on the warranty or invoice as a defence. Marcus v. Crook, 83 L. J. K.B. 1376; [1914] 3 K.B. 173; 111 L. T. 461; 78 J. P. 430; 12 L. G. R. 923; 24 Cox C.C. 328; 30 T. L. R. 538—D.

Semble, the Court were not bound to grant an adjournment of the hearing in order to enable the defendant to give notice to the warrantor of his intention to rely on the warranty as a defence. Ib.

Written Warranty — Vendors' Responsibility to Cease after Delivery other than under Food and Drugs Act.]—By an agreement made between the appellant and a dairy company, the company agreed to supply the appellant with the whole of the new milk required by him in his business as a milk seller. The agreement contained the following provisions: "The company hereby warrants each and every consignment of milk delivered under this contract to be pure, genuine new milk with all its cream according to the conditions of the Food and Drugs Act . . . The company take great precautions to obtain a supply of pure milk with all its cream and to deliver the same in that condition to the buyer. It is therefore agreed that no responsibility is taken by the company after delivery other than under the Food and Drugs Act, and that for all other purposes the buyer must satisfy himself at the time of delivery that the milk is sweet, sound, pure, and contains all its cream, and if the milk is accepted by the buyer he shall not be entitled to make any claim for compensation, damages or costs upon the company afterwards in respect of any milk which shall been accepted by him under this contract" The appellant sold certain milk in the same state as that in which he purchased it from the dairy company, and as, on analysis, it was found to be deficient in fat, proceedings were taken against him for selling to the prejudice of the purchaser milk which was not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded. The appellant contended that the agreement under which he purchased the milk constituted a written warranty within section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and that he was entitled to the protection of that section. The magistrate was of opinion that the agreement was so qualified as not to amount to a written warranty within section 25, and he accordingly convicted the appellant:—Held, that the conviction was wrong, as the agreement constituted a written warranty within section 25. Wilson v. Playle (88 L. T. 554) followed. Plowright v. Burrell, 82 L. J. K.B. 571; [1913] 2 K.B.

Selling with False Warranty — Time for Laying Information.]—On August 9, 1910, the appellants, wholesale milk dealers, agreed to supply to a retail firm all the milk which the firm might require at one of their branches, and at the same time gave them a written warranty by which they warranted that all new milk which might thereafter be supplied by the appellants should be pure new milk with all its cream and unadulterated. On January 17, 1911, the purchasers received from the appellants a consignment of milk which was not in accordance with the warranty. On February 15, 1911, an information was laid against the appellants charging them with having given a false warranty in respect of the milk, contrary to section 20, sub-section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899:—Held, that the warranty was a continuing one, and therefore applied to all subsequent deliveries of milk by the appellants to the purchasers; that the six calendar months limited by section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, for laying such informations ran from the date of each delivery, and not from the date of the original warranty; and that the information laid against the appellants was therefore in time. Thomas, Lim. v. Houghton, 81 L. J. K.B. 21; [1911] 2 K.B. 959; 105 L. T. 825; 75 J. P. 523; 9 L. G. R. 1142; 22 Cox C.C. 628—D.

Person Giving Warranty having Reason to Believe that Statements in Warranty were True—Evidence.]—The appellants, wholesale dealers in milk, who purchased their milk from farmers in the country, were charged with having given to a purchaser from them a false warranty in writing. The milk in respect of which they gave the warranty in question was received from a farmer with whom they had dealt for three years, and during that time nothing had occurred to lead them to suppose that the milk was not of the proper standard. The farmer had given the appellants a warranty with the milk in question. The appellants having been convicted,—Held, on the facts, that when the appellants gave the warranty they had reason to believe that the statements contained therein were true within section 20, sub-section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, and that the conviction must therefore be quashed. Dairy Supply Co. v. Houghton, 106 L. c. Margarine.

Printed Matter on Wrapper — Fancy or Descriptive Name — "On" the Wrapper — —"In" any Wrapper.]—The words "in any wrapper" in section 8 of the Butter and Margarine Act, 1907, are used advisedly; and therefore that section which permits a person dealing in margarine to describe it "in any wrapper" by the name "margarine," either alone or in combination with a fancy or other descriptive name approved as therein provided, does not repeal section 6, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, which prohibits any printed matter other than the word "margarine" to appear "on the wrapper." Williams v. Baker, 80 L. J. K.B. 545; [1911] 1 K.B. 566; 104 L. T. 178; 75 J. P. 89; 9 L. G. R. 178—D.

—— Transparent Wrapper — Printed Words Appearing through.]—The appellant sold to the respondent a packet of margarine wrapped in the following manner: The margarine was first wrapped in a piece of plain paper. Next, the parcel was inclosed in a cardboard case upon the outside of which were the words "Green Leaf Margarine," and around such case was a transparent wrapper upon which was printed the word "Margarine" only, the wrapper being fastened at each end by means of a circular gummed label upon which was printed the words "4*d.* per packet about ½ lb." The words "Green Leaf" appeared through the transparent wrapper. The magistrate having convicted the appellant of an offence under section 6 of the Margarine Act, 1887, and section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, under which no other printed matter than the word "Margarine" shall appear on the wrapper,—Held, that the fact that the words "Green Leaf" appeared through the wrapper might constitute an offence under the above sections, and that the magistrate was not wrong in convicting the appellant upon that ground. Held, further, that the appellant had committed an offence by attaching the printed circular labels to the wrapper. Millard v. Allwood, 81 L. Food for Cattle—Failure to Give Invoice—Liability of Seller — Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs.]—By section 6, sub-section 1 of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1906, if any person who sells any article for use as food for cattle fails without reasonable excuse to give, on or before or as soon as possible after the delivery of the article, the invoice required by the Act, he is liable to a penalty; and by sub-section 3 "a prosecution for an offence under this section shall not be instituted except with the consent of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries. . . ." The Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland instituted a prosecution against the respondents for an offence committed in England under section 6, sub-section 1 of the Act without having obtained the consent of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries:—Held, that such consent was necessary under section 6, sub-section 3, notwithstanding that certain preliminary steps had been taken in Ireland, and that the magistrate had therefore no jurisdiction to entertain the case. Hill v. Phœnix Veterinary Supplies, Lim., 80 L. J. K.B. 669; [1911] 2 K.B. 217; 105 L. T. 73; 75 J. P. 321; 9 L. G. R. 731; 22 Cox C.C. 508—D.

Invoice—"Invoice required by this Act"—Statement of Percentages of Oil and Albuminoids.]—By section 6, sub-section 1 (a) of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1906, a person who sells any article for use as food for poultry is liable to a penalty if he fails to give "the invoice required by this Act." By section 1, sub-section 2, this, in the case of any article artificially prepared otherwise than by being mixed, broken, ground, or chopped is an invoice stating "what are the respective percentages (if any) of oil and albuminoids contained in the article":—Held, on a sale of greaves, that an invoice expressed as follows: "Greaves, not less than 15 per cent. albuminoids and 2½ per cent. oil" did not comply with the requirements of the Act. Kyle v. Jewers, 84 L. J. K.B. 255; 112 L. T. 422; 79 J. P. 176; 13 L. G. R. 260—D.

Poultry Food—Article Artificially Prepared—Preparation by Mixing—Invoice—Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs.]—The respondents sold a quantity of poultry food without giving to the purchaser an invoice stating what were the respective percentages of oil and albuminoids contained in it. The food was composed of three substances—namely, (a) biscuits made by the respondents by baking a cereal substance; (b) greaves, the refuse or sediment left in making tallow or soap grease, purchased by the respondents in blocks; (c) oyster-shells broken to a suitable size. The biscuits were broken by the respondents' machinery to the size required, and the greaves chopped to pieces; the broken fragments of biscuits, the pieces of greaves, and the broken pieces of oyster-shells were then mixed together by the machinery, and the resulting mixture formed the poultry food:—Held, that the food was an article artificially prepared "otherwise than by being mixed, broken, ground, or chopped" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 2 of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1906, and that the respondents had therefore committed an offence in failing to supply to the purchaser an invoice stating the percentages of oil and albuminoids contained in the food as required by that sub-section. Latham v. Spillers & Bakers, Lim., 82 L. J. K.B. 833; [1913] 2 K.B. 355; 108 L. T. 996; 77 J. P. 277; 11 L. G. R. 539; 23 Cox C.C. 422—D.

"Sharps"—Article Artificially Prepared Otherwise than by Being Mixed, Broken, Ground, or Chopped—Natural Substance Produced by Separation—Invoice Stating Percentages of Oil and Albuminoids.]—Section 1, sub-section 2 of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1906, provides that every person who sells for use as food for cattle or poultry any article which has been artificially prepared otherwise than by being mixed, broken, ground, or chopped, shall give to the purchaser an invoice stating what are the respective percentages (if any) of oil and albuminoids contained in the article. The respondents sold for use as food for cattle or poultry a substance known as "sharps," which contained oil and albuminoids. Sharps are an offal of wheat, being that part of the wheat which remains after the flour and bran have been removed by the following process: Wheat is taken in the whole grain and passed by the miller through his mill. The wheat-meal so made is then by mechanical means passed by air currents through a series of sieves, whereby it is separated and divided into three substances—flour, sharps, and bran. The chemical composition of each of these three substances, when thus produced, differs from that of each other and from that of the original wheat, but no other chemical change is effected:—Held by Avory, J., and Shearman, J. (Rowlatt, J., dissenting), first, that sharps are not an article artificially prepared within the meaning of the section; and secondly, that, assuming they are, they are not artificially prepared otherwise than by being ground. The respondents were, therefore, not compelled to give to the purchaser an invoice stating the percentages of oil and albuminoids in the article sold. Worcestershire County Council v. Notley, 83 L. Emission of Black Smoke.]—The provisions of Article II. (2) (a) of the Bolton Order, confirmed by the Local Government Board Provisional Orders Confirmation (No. 15) Act, 1893, making it an offence to allow the emission of black smoke from any chimney not being the chimney of a private dwelling house, are not controlled by section 334 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Bessemer v. Gould, 107 L. T. 298; 76 J. P. 349; 10 L. G. R. 744; 23 Cox C.C. 145—D.

Emission Caused by Negligence of Stoker—Liability of Occupier of Premises.]—Section 5, sub-section 2 of the Bradford Corporation Act, 1910, provides that if any person uses or suffers to be used any furnace in any building used for trade or manufacture "which shall not be constructed upon the principle of consuming and so as to consume or burn its own smoke, or if any person using or permitting to be used any furnace so constructed shall in the event of the smoke arising therefrom not being effectually consumed or burnt fail to shew that such furnace has not been negligently used, he shall, if he is the owner or occupier of the premises or a foreman or other person employed by such owner or ocupier, be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l*. . . ." :—Held, that under this provision the owner or occupier of the premises is liable to the penalty if the furnace has been used negligently, whether by himself or by some one else. Chisholm v. Doulton (58 L. Emission of Smoke from Furnace Constructed so as to Consume its Own Smoke—Emission Due to Default of Stoker—Sufficiency of Evidence.]—By section 53, sub-section 1 of the Bradford Corporation Act, 1910, every furnace employed in any mill is to be constructed upon the principle of consuming, and so as to consume or burn, the smoke arising from such furnace. Sub-section 2: "if any person using or permitting to be used any furnace so constructed shall in the event of the smoke arising therefrom not being effectually consumed or burnt fail to show that such furnace has not been negligently used he shall if he is the owner or occupier of the premises . . . be liable to a penalty. . . ." By section 72, sub-section 3 of the Bradford Corporation Act, 1913, no penalty is to be inflicted on an owner or occupier under sub-section 2 of section 53 of the Act of 1910 "where the furnaces are constructed in manner provided by sub-section 1 of the said section and the emission of smoke was due to the act or default of a stoker, engineer or other person employed by such owner or occupier." Upon the hearing of an information under section 53 of the Act of 1910 an expert witness gave evidence that the emission of the smoke could not have been caused otherwise than by means of some act or default of the stokers or engineer:—Held, that the Justices were not bound to accept this evidence as conclusive, but were entitled to exercise their own judgment upon the whole of the evidence and to convict the defendants. Held, further, that the burden of shewing that they came within the exemption in section 72, sub-section 3 of the Act of 1913 lay upon the defendants. Drummond v. Nicholson, 84 L. J. K.B. 2190; 79 J. P. 525; 13 L. G. R. 958—D.

—— No Mechanical Apparatus for Stoking.]—The fact that the furnace of the boiler of a steam engine is not fitted with any of the systems for mechanical stoking, which have among their objects improved smoke consumption, does not make the furnace a nuisance within the meaning of section 16, sub-section 9 of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, where mechanical stoking as contrasted with stoking by hand is unsuitable for the particular business. Leith Magistrates v. Bertram, [1915] S. Covenant to Allow Vendor's House a Reasonable Supply Free of Charge—Enlargement of House—Presumed Increased User—Lapse of Covenant—Covenant to Supply Farm Buildings — Severable Contracts — Motor House.]—A covenant by a local authority to supply a small farmhouse with a reasonable supply of water free of charge is no longer binding if the house be so altered and enlarged that the identity of the old building is lost, and the measure of what would have been a reasonable supply at the date of the contract no longer ascertainable. But a similar covenant, entered into at the same time, to supply a reasonable amount of free water to the farm buildings is still enforceable, the covenants being severable; and this is so, notwithstanding that the buildings have been let off to a neighbouring farmer. A motor house, to which the water is carried for the purpose of washing a car, is not, however, a "farm building" within the scope of the covenant, and such user is unreasonable. Hadham Rural Council v. Crallan, 83 L. Regulation of Selling and Hawking Articles —By-laws Restricting Selling and Hawking to Portion of Shore Allotted by Notice—Conviction.]—Under powers conferred by their local Act the corporation of R. made a by-law that where any part of the seashore had by notices conspicuously affixed been set apart for the hawking of specified articles, no person should hawk such articles on any other part of the seashore. The appellant had been convicted by Justices of hawking on a prohibited portion of the seashore:—Held, that as there was no finding in the case which enabled the Court to say that the portion set apart for hawking was insufficient in fact, nor evidence that the corporation had improperly made the by-law for their own benefit, and nothing on the face of the case to shew the by-law was unreasonable, the conviction must be upheld. Cassell v. Jones, 108 L. T. 806; 77 J. P. 197; 11 L. G. R. 488; 23 Cox C.C. 372—D.

Per Channell, J.: By-laws of public bodies relating to seashores to which the public have access stand on a different footing to other by-laws of such bodies; and the assigning of one part for hawking of specified articles, and allowing the erection of stalls (for which the holders pay a rent to the local authority) for the sale of the same articles on another, is prima facie within their power so long as the portion set apart for hawking is not so wholly insufficient and obviously illusory as to be prohibitive. The principle is that local authorities are to decide local questions. Ib.

Public Assemblages—Delivery of Addresses, Sermons, Lectures, &c.—Restriction as to Places and Hours.]—Under the provisions of a local Act enabling a local authority to make by-laws "for the preservation of order and good conduct among persons frequenting the parades, foreshores, &c." of a maritime town, the local authority made a by-law prohibiting the delivery of speeches or holding of public assemblages except upon such portion or portions of the foreshore as they should from time to time appoint by notice affixed or set up thereon, and subject to such conditions and regulations as they might from time to time prescribe. Regulations under this by-law reserved certain specified places for orderly public assemblages; and the Salvation Army had for years held services on one of these reserved spots. Subsequently the local authority abolished this particular spot as a place for the delivery of public addresses and the holding of public assemblages, substituting another, and by order prescribed a new set of regulations and conditions in substitution for those previously in force. Proper notice of this order was given, but no confirmation or allowance of the new regulations and conditions by the Local Government Board was considered necessary or obtained. The appellant, however, continued to hold orderly Salvation Army services on the original spot, and was convicted of doing so, and fined:—Held, that the power given by the special Act enabled the local authority to prohibit that which would otherwise have been a perfectly lawful act on the part of the appellant. The by-laws were neither ultra vires nor vitiated by the subsequent regulations and conditions, which the Court did not consider unreasonable. The allocation of particular places for the holding of Salvation Army meetings was not beyond the scope of the by-law, and it was not intended that the Local Government Board, who knew nothing of the locality, should fix them. Slee v. Meadows, 105 L. 1. Notice to do Works.

Notice to Make Drain and Provide Water Closet.]—Where notice is given by a local authority to a person to do work which he cannot legally do without the permission of a third party, and where there is a substantial difficulty in the way of his obtaining such permission, it is doubtful whether, when the work is done by the local authority, the cost can be recovered from the person to whom notice was given, but it lies upon him to shew that he could not obtain the necessary permission. Meyrick v. Pembroke Corporation, 76 J. P. 365; 10 L. G. R. 710—D.

—— "House" within One Hundred Feet of Sewer.]—A "house" may be within one hundred feet of a sewer within the meaning of section 23 of the Public Health Act, 1875, although the main building is not within that distance. Ib.

Notice to Execute Works within Specified Time—Right of Frontager to Complete his Share of the Work after Expiration of the Time.]—Where a local authority has given notice to a frontager under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to execute works, including the connection of drains from the gullies with an existing surface-water sewer in the street, within a specified time, and the frontager has bona fide commenced but has not finished his share of the work within the time specified, he may, after the expiration of that time, if the local authority have not in the meantime intervened and taken over the completion of the work, himself complete it, and make the necessary connection of the drains from the gullies with the sewer. Denman v. Finchley Urban Council, 10 L. Urgent Repairs to Private Streets—Notice by Local Authority to Frontagers — Counter-notice to Authority to Proceed under Private Street Works Act, 1892—Withdrawal of Original Notice.]—A local authority gave notice under section 19, sub-section 1 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, to frontagers "to execute repairs in a street, not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large." This was met by a counter-notice of a majority of the frontagers under sub-section 4, requiring the local authority to proceed under the Private Street Works Act, 1892. The local authority resolved to proceed accordingly, but subsequently abandoned their resolution, and withdrew the notice they had given under the first-mentioned sub-section. A rule nisi for a mandamus requiring the local authority to proceed forthwith in relation to the street, under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, was then obtained by the frontagers:—Held, that, inasmuch as questions had been raised—first, as to part of the road being repairable by the inhabitants at large; secondly, as to the work which the local authority had, before they withdrew their notice, resolved to execute under the Act of 1892 being excessive; and thirdly, as to some of the persons served with that notice not being frontagers, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, ought not to make the rule absolute. Rex v. Epsom Urban Council; Course, Ex parte, 76 J. P. 389; 10 L. G. R. 609—D.

Quære, whether a counter-notice under section 19, sub-section 4 of the Act of 1907 does more than require the local authority, if they proceed further in the matter at all, to proceed under one or other of the enactments mentioned in that sub-section. Quære, whether the application for the mandamus was barred under the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (a), by the lapse of more than six months since the alleged default of the local authority. Ib.

Private Street Works — Premises not Abutting on Street—Access through "court, passage, or otherwise."]—By section 10 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, in a provisional apportionment of expenses the apportionment, unless the urban authority otherwise resolve, is to be according to the frontage of the respective premises; but the urban authority may, if they think just, "include any premises which do not front, adjoin, or abut on the street or part of a street, but access to which is obtained from the street through a court, passage, or otherwise, and which in their opinion will be benefited by the works, and may fix the sum or proportion to be charged against any such premises accordingly :—Held, that, in applying the above section to a road or way giving access to particular premises, the urban authority should consider whether the road is substantially a means of access from the street to the premises in the same way in which a court or passage gives access, or whether it is a road made for other purposes and only incidentally affording access to the premises. Newquay Urban Council v. Rickard, 80 L. J. K.B. 1164; [1911] 2 K.B. 846; 105 L. T. 519; 9 L. G. R. 1042; 75 J. P. 382—D.

If the road is one along which houses may be built, and which will probably become a street, it is not within the section. Ib.

Held, further, that the words "court, passage, or otherwise" do not mean that the road or way along which access to the premises is obtained must necessarily be narrow. Ib.

—— Premises Outside Urban District—Insertion in Provisional Apportionment.]—Premises situate outside a local district should not be included in a provisional apportionment under section 6 of the Private Streets Works Act, 1892, of the expenses of making up a street within the local district, although they front, adjoin, or abut on the street. Herne Bay Urban Council v. Payne (76 L. Charge in Respect of Making up Roads—Several Different Properties Belonging to Same Owner in Road.]—Where an owner has several premises in the same street, and the local authority have incurred expenses in executing street works under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and such expenses have not been recovered from the owner, the expenses of such works must be apportioned in respect of each of the separate premises fronting on the street, and the local authority is entitled under section 257 of that Act to a charge in respect of each of such separate premises and not to a charge for one sum in respect of all the premises belonging to such owner. Croydon Rural Council v. Betts, 83 L. J. Ch. 709; [1914] 1 Ch. 870; 12 L. G. R. 906; 58 S. J. 556—Warrington, J.

Notice in respect of Part only.]—It appeared that the respondents, the local authority, had put five earth closets into five houses of the appellant, but had only given notice under the section in respect of four of them, and their surveyor accordingly took the total expenditure on the five houses, divided it by five, and charged the appellant with four-fifths of the whole :—Held, that this operation was merely a division of expenses between the respondents on the one hand and the appellant on the other, and not an apportionment of expenses within the meaning of section 257; and accordingly that the appellant was not entitled to a lapse of three months' time before the respondents could proceed to recover their expenses in respect of the four houses : the words in section 257—"where such expenses have been settled and apportioned by the surveyor of the local authority as payable by such owner"—having reference to an apportionment between such owner and other owners. Bower v. Caistor Rural Council, 9 L. Private Street Works—Apportionment of Expenses—Premises not Abutting on Street—Access through "court, passage, or otherwise."]—Where works are executed under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, by a local authority, the expenses thereof can, under section 6, sub-section 1, be apportioned on premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting on the street or part of the street in which the works are executed; and, under section 10, on premises access to which from such street or part of street is obtained "through a court, passage, or otherwise" :—Held, that the words "or otherwise" refer to some means of access of the same character as a court or passage, and do not include access through a private street. Dictum of Lord Alverstone, C.J., in Newquay Urban Council v. Rickeard (80 L. 3. Arbitration.

Omission of One of a Frontager's Houses from Notice and Apportionment—Jurisdiction of Arbitrator.]—The notice to execute certain private street improvement works under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, served on the owner of two houses, R. and F., the gardens of which adjoined each other and abutted on the street, and also the apportionment of the expenses incurred by the local authority in executing the works on the default of the owners, by mistake referred only to the "garden of R.," though the length of frontage, according to which the owner's share of the expenses was apportioned, consisted of that of the two gardens. The owner disputed the apportionment, and the dispute was referred to arbitration. The arbitrator having by his award declared the apportionment of the owner's share to be bad, and having adjudged that such share should be reduced to a sum which was proportionate to the frontage of the "garden of R."—Held, that the award was valid. Thomas v. Hendon Rural Council, 9 L. G. R. 234; 75 J. P. 161—D.

Withdrawal by Frontager of Notice Disputing Apportionment—Award—Jurisdiction of Arbitrator.]—A local authority, acting under the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, served on the owner of premises adjoining or abutting on a certain street or yard a notice requiring him within a specified time to level, pave, flag, and channel that portion of the street or yard on which his premises abutted. The notice not being complied with, the local authority did the work themselves, and their surveyor served upon the owner an apportionment of his proportion of paving, &c., the whole of the street or yard. Within the time limited by the Act the owner disputed the apportionment solely on the ground that the larger portion of the area paved &c. was private property, for which he contended he was not liable; but he was willing to pay an apportionment in respect of a small portion of the area for which he admitted liability. The local authority appointed their arbitrator to determine the dispute, but the owner declined, when requested, to appoint his arbitrator, and within fourteen days, the time limited by section 180 of the Act, withdrew his notice disputing the apportionment. The arbitrator appointed by the local authority thereupon, after duly notifying both parties, proceeded to hear and determine the dispute between them in the absence of the owner who declined to attend the reference. By his award he declared (inter alia) that the said street or yard was a street within the meaning of section 4 of the Act, that the portion of such street forming the subject of the reference was not repairable by the inhabitants at large, that the cost of making it up under section 150 of the Act was properly payable by the owners of premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting on such street, and that the owner in question was the owner of property fronting, adjoining, or abutting on the said street to the extent of 112 feet 10 inches, including the gateway. He awarded that the contribution payable by the owner in respect of his premises was 19*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, and that he should pay the costs of the arbitration and the arbitrator's charges and expenses. The Divisional Court held—first, that the revocation by the owner of his notice disputing the apportionment was too late, and that the arbitrator was properly appointed; but secondly, that the matters determined by the arbitrator were unnecessary for assessing the proper apportionment of the owner, and therefore beyond the arbitrator's province, and that the award was bad for excess of jurisdiction:—Held, on appeal, that as the owner had not appointed an arbitrator to act on his behalf, he had the right to withdraw his notice disputing the apportionment within fourteen days, and that as he had withdrawn his notice he had made no submission to arbitration, and therefore the arbitrator was not entitled to act as sole arbitrator, and the award was a nullity, and must be set aside. Held, further, that even if the arbitrator had jurisdiction to make an award, he had no jurisdiction to determine that the place was a "street" within the meaning of the Act and was not repairable by the inhabitants at large, and for this reason also the award must be set aside. Stoker and Morpeth Corporation, In re, 84 L. Works Executed on Default of Owner—Notice — Authentication of Documents — Signature of Rating Surveyor.] — Expenses incurred under section 36 of the Public Health Act, 1875, by a local authority in substituting water closets for privies in houses were demanded from the owner of the houses, who had failed to carry out the work after having been required to do so. The notice demanding payment was signed on behalf of the local authority by their rating surveyor. In summary proceedings for the recovery of the amount expended the Justices found as a fact that it was part of the duty of such rating surveyor to prepare, sign, and serve all notices demanding payment of moneys due to the local authority, and to collect and receive payment on their behalf of all such moneys:—Held, that the notice of demand had been sufficiently signed in compliance with section 266, and that an objection to it on the ground that it ought to have been signed by the clerk to the local authority, or their surveyor or inspector of nuisances, could not be maintained. Per Lord Alverstone, C.J.: It is better upon principle that a notice connected with a particular department should be signed by an officer of that department. Willis v. Rotherham Corporation, 105 L. Vacant Land Adjoining Street—Land Used for "purpose causing inconvenience or annoyance to the public"—Power of Local Authority to Fence—Recovery of Expenses from Owner.] —Section 32 of the Willesden Urban District Council Act, 1903, provides that "If any land in the district . . . adjoining any street is allowed to remain unfenced or the fences thereof are allowed to be or to remain out of repair and such land is in the opinion of the council owing to the absence or inadequate repair of any such fence a source of danger to passengers or is used for any immoral or indecent purposes or for any purpose causing inconvenience or annoyance to the public," then, after notice to the owner or occupier, "the council may cause the same to be fenced or may cause the fences to be repaired in such manner as they think fit and the expenses thereby incurred may be recovered from such owner or occupier summarily as a civil debt." The appellant erected round some vacant land belonging to him within the district of the respondent council a barrier consisting of posts 3 feet 4 inches high and 8 feet apart, with a rail along the top. This barrier was not out of repair. The respondent council served upon the appellant a notice stating that the land, owing to the absence of a proper fence, was used for a purpose causing inconvenience or annoyance to the public and requiring him forthwith properly to fence in the land. The respondents subsequently erected round the land an "economic" fence and sued the appellant to recover the expenses thereby incurred. The Justices held that it was for the council and not for them to decide whether the land was used for a purpose causing inconvenience or annoyance to the public, and that as the council had decided that the land was being so used they could recover:—Held, that the decision of the Justices was wrong; that the user of the land for a purpose causing inconvenience or annoyance to the public must be proved by evidence of the fact in the proceedings before the Justices; and that the case should be remitted to the Justices in order that the respondents might have the opportunity of giving such evidence. Upjohn v. Willesden Urban Council, 83 L. Action Claiming Charge in Respect of Apportioned Expenses—Time for.]—An action by a local authority claiming to be entitled to a charge on premises under section 13 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, in respect of apportioned expenses, and 5 per cent. interest thereon, may be brought, although three months have not elapsed from the date of the notice served on the defendant requiring payment of such expenses. Pontypridd Urban Council v. Jones, 75 J. P. 345—Swinfen Eady, J.

Charge on Property—Neglect to Answer—Inquiry as to Incumbrances — Contempt of Court—Attachment—Costs.]—Where an order has been obtained by a local authority giving them a charge in priority to other incumbrances on property adjoining a road for their costs of paving such road, and directing an enquiry as to incumbrances, and the sole partner of the defendant company neglects to obey an order that he should answer such enquiry on affidavit, and a subsequent order that he should attend for examination :—Held, on a motion to attach him, that an order for attachment must be made, and the costs of, and incidental to, the motion were directed to be added to the charge. Tottenham Urban Council v. Nielson & Co., 79 J. P. 504; 59 S. J. 667—Neville, J.

Time Running from Demand, not from Apportionment — Cumulative Remedies.] — The B. Corporation Act, 1872, provided by section 117 that all expenses incurred by the corporation for private improvements expenses under the Public Health Acts, for the payment of which the owner of the land or buildings concerned was liable, should, if not paid on demand, be recoverable by the corporation either as a debt in any Court of competent jurisdiction, or by distress after summoning the owner. In 1901 S. was served with notice to execute certain improvements, which were executed by the corporation, the apportionment of expenses being in December, 1905. Notice of the apportionment was served in February, 1906, and a demand for payment in June, 1906. In August, 1911, summary proceedings were taken for recovery of the amount due, but were dismissed as being out of time. In March, 1912, proceedings were commenced in the Salford Hundred Court for recovery of the amount due as a civil debt :—Held, that the remedies given by section 117 of the Act were cumulative; that the limitation of time applicable to summary proceedings did not apply to proceedings in a Court of competent jurisdiction for the recovery of a sum as a civil debt, which was six years, running from the date of the demand for payment, and not from the apportionment; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the amount claimed. Bolton Corporation v. Scott, 108 L. Owner Rated instead of Occupier at Reduced Amount—Owner Occupying his own House.]—The power given to an urban authority by section 211, sub-section 1 (a) of the Public Health Act, 1875, to rate at a reduced amount the owner instead of the occupier where the rateable value of the premises does not exceed the sum of ten pounds only applies where the owner and occupier of the premises are different persons. Rex v. Propert; Jones, Ex parte, 80 L. J. K.B. 98; [1911] 1 K.B. 83; 103 L. T. 844; 74 J. P. 474; 9 L. G. R. 38—D.

Owners of Properties, under the Net Annual Value of 10*l.*, Rated — Abatement or Compensation Claimed by Owners.]—Prior to the passing of the Public Health Act, 1875, the R. Improvement Commissioners had under section 65 of their special Act of 1865, which Act incorporated section 181 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, as to the rating of owners instead of the occupiers of property of 10*l.* per annum and under, levied a rate called "the R. Improvement Rate." After 1875 the R. Improvement Commissioners became the urban district council and continued to levy the rate as a local improvement rate in the nature of a general district rate under their special Act of 1865 and the Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 207 and 227. Section 211 of the Public Health Act, 1875, allows properties of a rateable value not exceeding 10*l.* where the owner is rated instead of the occupier, to be assessed on a reduced estimate. In 1912 certain owners of properties in R. of 10*l.* per annum and under refused to pay the rate in full and demanded the reductions or compensation allowances given to owners of such properties by section 211 of the Public Health Act, 1875 :—Held, that the rate was an improvement rate in the nature of a general district rate governed by the R. Improvement Act, 1865, and the incorporated Towns Improvement Act, 1847, s. 181; that the 10*l.* property owners were liable to pay in full, and were not entitled to reductions or allowances under section 211 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Ross Urban Council v. Daniels, 109 L. T. 933; 77 J. P. 456; 11 L. G. R. 1225—D.

Land Used as Railway.]—Certain premises alleged by a railway company to be "used as a railway," and as such liable to be assessed at one-fourth only of their net annual value, were included in the valuation list under the heading "buildings" and not under the heading "railways, fisheries, &c.," and were accordingly assessed by the urban council at their full value. No objection was made by the railway company to the valuation list prior to the making of the rate, and no appeal was taken by them either against the valuation or against this rate. The urban council having sued the railway company for the disputed rates,—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the full rate. Whaley v. Great Northern Railway, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 142—C.A.

—— Land at the Side of Railway—Necessary Adjuncts of Conveyance.]—Whether land is "used as a railway" for the purposes of rating is a question of fact in each particular case. By the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1893, power was given to levy a general rate on all property assessed to the relief of the poor in the city, and by section 36 (ii.) it was provided that "No person occupying land used . . . only . . . as a railway made under the powers of any Act of Parliament for public conveyance shall be rated in respect of the same to the general rate in any greater proportion than one-fourth part of the net annual value thereof." The appellant company were the owners and occupiers of two goods stations in the city, which were made under the powers of various Acts of Parliament. These stations included, in addition to the lines of railway, loading ways, platforms, and mounds for goods and cattle, sidings and turntables, hoist houses, capstans, and machinery, approach roads, and other buildings, and roofs over the lines, loading ways, and loading platforms:—Held, that the exemption in the Act extended not only to the actual lines of railway, but included land at the side of the rails used for necessary adjuncts of conveyance, but did not extend to accommodation and appliances which, though convenient, were not reasonably necessary for the conveyance of public traffic; and therefore the loading ways, platforms, and mounds, sidings and turntables, hoist houses, capstans, and machinery were within the exemption, but the approach roads, roofs, and other general buildings used in connection with the railway were not. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway v. Liverpool Corporation, 83 L. Tramway—Not a "Railway."]—In public legislation the word "railway" does not include a tramway unless it is expressly made to do so by the terms of the Act. Therefore a tramway company is not entitled to the exemption from rating given to railways by section 211, sub-section 1 (b) of the Public Health Act, 1875. Swansea Improvements and Tramway Co. v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority (61 L. Graving Dock — Entrance — "Land covered with water."]—By section 211, sub-section 1 (b) of the Public Health Act, 1875, "the occupier of any land covered with water" is to be assessed in respect of it to the general district rate at one-fourth only of its net annual value. By an agreement made between the parties an arbitrator was appointed to value the dock estate of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, a portion of which consisted of graving docks, for the purpose of assessment. The graving docks were excavations with walls, quays, and gates having direct access to the adjoining Birkenhead Docks, of which they formed part. They were used for the examination and repair of ships. The ships were floated into them, and the water was then pumped out. After the work was carried out, the water was re-admitted and the ships were floated out. The water was then generally, but not always, pumped out and the docks left dry. Each dock was approached by an entrance, which was always covered with water. The arbitrator held that the docks with their entrances were not land covered with water, and that they were therefore assessable at their full value:—Held, that the graving docks were not "land covered with water" within the meaning of section 211, sub-section 1 (b) of the Act of 1875, and must therefore be assessed at their full net annual value, but that the entrances were "land covered with water," and were assessable at one-fourth only of such value. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Corporation, 84 L. Building Exclusively Used for Purposes of Public Charity—Borough Rate—General District Rate.]—The trustees of a will, acting under their testator's directions, founded and endowed a perpetual charity for the establishment of an institution for ladies in reduced circumstances. By the deed of foundation one of the objects of the charity was to provide a home for a limited number of such ladies, who were to be called lady occupants, and for the purpose of carrying out that object the trustees were to build a number of houses, not exceeding twenty-four, of such dimensions and in such manner as they might from time to time determine. The number of lady occupants was to be the same as the number of houses, and the trustees were from time to time to elect as lady occupants such persons, being not less than fifty years of age and being either spinsters or widows, as they might consider most deserving of the charity; but a preference was to be given to ladies who were born in the parish in which the home was situate or who had resided in that parish for five years. Each lady occupant had to be in possession in her own right of an income not less than 20*l.* per annum. No candidate was to be ineligible by reason of her religious profession or opinion. Any lady occupant contracting marriage was to cease thenceforth to be entitled to any benefit under the charity. In pursuance of the deed of foundation the trustees built twelve houses with money left by the testator augmented by bequests, twelve in number, of varying amounts from other persons. In each of the houses a lady occupant resided under the conditions laid down in the deed of foundation. All the lady occupants possessed the qualifications required by the deed of foundation. A small portion of the furniture of each house was the property of the trustees; the rest of the furniture of each house was the property of the lady occupant of the house. All repairs were done and all rates and taxes were paid by the trustees; but each lady occupant paid for the gas and coals used by her and for medical attendance :—Held, that the houses were buildings exclusively used for the purposes of public charity within the meaning of section 168 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, and that therefore neither the trustees nor the lady occupants were liable to be rated in respect of them. Shaw v. Halifax Corporation, 84 L. 2. Mandamus to Enforce.

Agreement for Joint User of Hospital—Sharing of Expenses — Notice to Determine Agreement — Validity — Arrears of Establishment Expenses — Excusable Delay.] — Under section 210 of the Public Health Act, 1875, a general district rate may only be made and levied retrospectively in order to raise money to pay charges and expenses incurred within six months before the making of the rate, excluding from this period the time taken by any proceedings to enforce the same; but a judgment obtained in any such proceedings itself operates as a new charge within the meaning of section 210, and in a case when proceedings are not commenced until more than six months after the liability accrued the Court will grant a mandamus for the levying of a rate to satisfy the judgment, if the delay in commencing the proceedings was under the circumstances excusable. Woolstanton United Urban Council v. Tunstall Urban Council, 79 L. By an agreement dated June 1, 1885, the predecessors of the plaintiffs and of the defendants and a corporation were to have the use of a hospital and contribute rateably to the expenses of the same. By an agreement dated June 16, 1898, and made between the same parties or their successors, the provisions of the first agreement as to the management of the hospital were varied, and this agreement was made determinable on six months' notice. By the terms of a third agreement dated August 2, 1905, made between the plaintiffs, the defendants, and the corporation, and stated to be supplemental to the previous agreements, further alterations were made in the management of the hospital and provisions were made for discharging the corporation from all liabilities under the agreements. In April, 1906, the defendants gave notice under the second agreement to determine the agreements, and ceased to use the hospital. There were protracted negotiations between the parties which lasted until November, 1909, and in December, 1909, the plaintiffs brought an action to recover from the defendants their share of the expenses of the hospital up to March 31, 1909 :—Held, first, that the notice was invalid to determine the first and third agreements, which were still valid and subsisting; and secondly, that the third agreement constituted an agreement adjusting the liabilities of the parties within section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888, so that the defendants were not entitled to resort to arbitration under that section; and held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment as asked, and that, as the delay in commencing proceedings was excusable, a mandamus must go to enforce the levying of a rate to satisfy the judgment. Reg. v. Rotherham Local Board (27 L. J. Q.B. 156; 8 E. & B. 906) and Worthington v. Hulton (35 L. J. Q.B. 61; L. R. 1 Q.B. 63) applied. Ib.

Expenses — Sanction of Local Government Board to Expenditure in Connection with Royal Coronation—Injunction.]—On April 18, 1911, the Local Government Board, in exercise of their powers under the Local Authorities (Expenses) Act, 1887, s. 3, made a general order sanctioning any reasonable expenses to be incurred by a local authority in connection with the public local celebration of the Coronation of King George 5. In May, 1911, the defendants resolved to expend a sum not exceeding a certain amount upon the Coronation festivities in their district. On June 20, 1911, an action was commenced by the Attorney-General on the relation of two ratepayers seeking to restrain the defendants from making any order for payment out of the general district rates of this or any other sum towards the local Coronation festivities. On motion for an interim injunction in similar terms, it was contended that the only effect of the general order of the Local Government Board was to prevent the district auditor disallowing these expenses, and that notwithstanding that order the expenditure was illegal as being for purposes not authorised by statute :—Held, without deciding this point, that it was not a case in which the Court would interfere by injunction before the trial of the action. Att.-Gen. v. Merthyr Tydfil Union (69 L. J. Ch. 299; [1900] 1 Ch. 516) applied. Att.-Gen. v. East Barnet Urban Council, 9 L. G. R. 913; 75 J. P. 484—Neville, J.

Invalid Rate — Seizure under Distress — Liability of Rate Collector and County Council.]—Where a county council issues a warrant to a rate collector authorising and directing him to levy a rate which is invalid, and the rate collector, in pursuance of the warrant, levies the rate by distress in such manner that the distress would have been lawful had the rate been valid, the county council, as well as the rate collector, is liable to an action for damages in respect of the illegal seizure. Held, however, on the facts of the particular case, that the county council was not liable as no evidence was given of the issue of the warrant by them. O'Neill v. Drohan and Waterford County Council, [1914] 2 Ir. IX. LIABILITY OF AUTHORITIES.

1. Action.

a. Generally.

Action against Public Body—Naming Special Defendants.]—When misconduct in the performance of their duties is alleged against a public body, and it becomes necessary to take legal proceedings against them, the individual members who are principally responsible ought to be made special defendants for the purpose of visiting them with the costs of the action. O'Shea v. Cork Rural Council, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 16—M.R.

b. Negligence.

Damage by Flooding—Sewage Discharged into Burn—Overflow—Liability.]—Held, that the respondents, as the road and drainage authority of Edinburgh, were not protected by the provisions of the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900, from liability to the appellant for the flooding of his market garden by reason of an insufficient culvert for carrying away drainage. Hanley v. Edinburgh Corporation, [1913] A.C. 488; [1913] S. C. (H.L.) 27; 77 J. P. 233; 11 L. G. R. 766; 57 S. J. 460; 29 T. L. R. 404—H.L. (Sc.)

Fire-Plug Notice—Erroneous Statement as to Position of Fire Plug—Delay in Finding Fire Plug—Consequent Damage by Fire—Liability of Urban Council—Statutory Duty—Misfeasance.]—The Public Health Act, 1875, s. 66, requires every urban authority to provide fire plugs, and to "paint or mark on the buildings and walls within the streets words or marks near to such fire-plugs to denote the situation thereof." The defendants, an urban council, provided a fire plug and affixed to premises in the street a plate which purported to indicate the position of the fire plug, but did not in fact indicate its true position. The fire plug was covered with earth as the result of repairs to the street, but for this the defendants were not responsible, as the street was not vested in them and they had not done the repairs. A fire having broken out in premises of the plaintiffs fronting on the street, the fire brigade, owing to the plate being incorrect, were prevented for some time from finding the fire plug, and the premises were more seriously damaged than would otherwise have been the case:—Held, that the defendants in putting up the incorrect plate had been guilty of a breach of their statutory duty under the above section in the nature of a misfeasance, and that they were liable to the plaintiffs for the damage thereby done to the premises. Observations of James, L.J., in Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth Local Board (49 L. J. Ch. 89; 12 Ch. D. 102) held inapplicable. Dawson v. Bingley Urban Council, 80 L. J. K.B. 842; [1911] 2 K.B. 149; 104 L. T. 659; 75 J. P. 289; 9 L. G. R. 502; 55 S. J. 346; 27 T. L. R. 308—C.A.

Sewage Disposal — Liability of District Council for Negligence of Contractor—Terms of Contract—Emptying of Cesspools—Nuisance from Contents of Cesspool Deposited on Land by Contractor.]—An urban district council having undertaken, under section 42 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to empty the cesspools in a part of their district, employed a contractor for the purpose of emptying the cesspools, he using for that purpose the council's sewage van, but the disposal of the contents was left to the contractor, no express provision being made in the contract with reference thereto. The contractor, without the council's authority, deposited the contents of certain cesspools over lands in the neighbourhood without the permission of the landowners. In an action by the landowners claiming an injunction and damages,—Held, that the duty of the disposal of the sewage under the terms of the contract remained with the council, and that they were responsible for the wrongful acts of the contractor. Robinson v. Beaconsfield Urban Council, 80 L. J. Ch. 647; [1911] 2 Ch. 188; 105 L. T. 121; 75 J. P. 353; 9 L. G. R. 789; 27 T. L. R. 478—C.A.

Per Buckley, L.J.: Even if the contract had provided for the disposal of the sewage by the contractor, the council would have been equally liable on the ground that they were under a statutory duty to dispose of the sewage and could not escape from responsibility by delegating that duty to a contractor. Ib.

—— Effluent from Sewage Disposal Works—Liability of Persons Controlling Works although Sewer Vested in Local Authority.]—The defendants were the lessees of a number of cottages which drained into sewage disposal works, of which a firm of builders were the lessees. Sewage escaped from the disposal works into a stream which flowed through a farm belonging to the plaintiff, and injured cattle and pasturage belonging to him. In an action by the plaintiff for damages and an injunction evidence was given that at the time when the damage was caused the defendants were in control of the sewage disposal works. The local authority had passed the plans for the sewers "subject to the drainage being carried out to the satisfaction of the surveyor," but there was no evidence that the surveyor had ever expressed such satisfaction. The County Court Judge gave judgment for the plaintiff for 50*l.*:—Held, that, even assuming that the sewage disposal works and the pipes connected therewith were sewers vested in the local authority under section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, there being evidence upon which the learned Judge could come to the conclusion that it was by the act or default of the defendants themselves that the sewage was in fact being discharged into the brook, his decision could not be interfered with. Titterton v. Kingsbury Collieries, 104 L. Construction of Sewer in Street—Interference with Access to Premises.]—Where a person sustains damage by reason of an act done by a local authority in the exercise of the powers conferred upon them by the Public Health Act, 1875, and done reasonably and without negligence, that person is entitled to compensation under section 308 of the statute, notwithstanding that the act so done is lawful, if the act is one which, but for their statutory powers, would have rendered the local authority liable to an action at law. Lingke v. Christchurch Corporation, 82 L. J. K.B. 37; [1912] 3 K.B. 595; 107 L. T. 476; 76 J. P. 433; 10 L. G. R. 773; 56 S. J. 735; 28 T. L. R. 536—C.A.

A person is not disentitled to compensation under section 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875, by reason only that the state of matters causing him damage is temporary and during the construction of the works, provided it continues for more than a merely negligible time. Ib.

The defendants, a local authority, in exercise of their powers under the Public Health Act, 1875, laid down a sewer in a public street in which the plaintiff occupied premises consisting of a house and a shop in which she carried on the business of a furniture dealer. In the course of the work the defendants reasonably and without negligence opened the pavement and the roadway in front of the plaintiff's premises and threw up a heap of earth, thus obstructing the access to her house and shop and interfering with her business, and this state of matters continued for about three months:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover compensation from the defendants under section 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for the damage she had sustained by these acts. Ib.

Committee of Estate—Application by Person Found Incapable of Managing his Affairs to Attend Proceedings.]—In 1906 Lord T. was found to be a person incapable of managing his affairs, but capable of managing himself. A committee of the estate was appointed, and the person who in default of issue male to Lord T. was the next heir to the title and also tenant for life in remainder of the settled estates was given liberty to attend generally upon the proceedings. Since the management of the estate was taken over by the committee the income received by Lord T. had increased from a nominal sum to about 800*l.* per annum. In 1911 Lord T. and his wife applied that they or one of them might be at liberty to attend the future proceedings in the matter generally at the expense of the estate:—Held, that the application must be refused. Townshend (Marquess), In re, 28 T. Power to Bar Lunatic's Estate Tail—Jurisdiction of Master—Re-settlement of Proceeds of Sale.]—Where a lunatic is tenant in tail of land which it is desired to sell, the sale cannot be carried out merely under clause (a) of section 120 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, which authorises the sale of a lunatic's property, but it is competent for the Judge in Lunacy to order the committee under clause (l) to bar the entail with a view to sale, as the statutory right to bar an entail conferred by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, is a "power vested in the lunatic for his own benefit." The order may be made by a Master in Lunacy under section 27 of the Lunacy Act, 1891, which enables the Master to exercise the jurisdiction of a Judge in Lunacy as regards administration and management. Where the sale has taken place it should in ordinary cases be referred to the Judge to make a re-settlement of the proceeds of sale not applied under the powers of the Act, so that they should remain subject to trusts as if no disposition had been made and the interests of remaindermen should not be defeated. *E. Entry on Lands of Lunatics—New Letting.]—The doctrine applicable to entry on the lands of a minor applies also to entry on the lands of a lunatic. A person entering on the lands of a lunatic, with notice of the lunacy and of the rights of the lunatic, becomes a bailiff in respect of the lunatic's estate in the lands, and where the lands are held by the lunatic under a contract of tenancy, and a new tenancy is subsequently made to the person so entering, such new letting will be deemed a graft on the old tenancy. Smyth v. Byrne, [1914] 1 Ir. Appointment of Person to Act as Committee—Two Sisters of Unsound Mind—Separate Applications—Duplicate Evidence—Consolidation of Proceeding—Costs.]—Where two sisters are alleged to be of unsound mind, and application is made for the appointment of a receiver of their property and for directions for their maintenance under section 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, separate summonses are properly issued in the case of each sister; but if the evidence on which the applications are grounded is similar, it is improper to file separate affidavits with separate undertakings of the proposed receiver in each case, and only such costs should be allowed as if there had been only one set of affidavits and one undertaking in the two cases. Morris, In re, 81 L. J. Ch. 451; [1912] 1 Ch. 730; 106 L. T. 553—C.A.

Receiver Appointed to Exercise Powers of Committee—Solicitor Appointed by Receiver—Liability for Costs Incurred — Statute of Limitations.]—In 1900 an order was made under section 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, appointing F. G. (hereinafter called the receiver) to exercise certain of the powers of a committee of the estate of a person of unsound mind not so found. The receiver employed a solicitor, and certain costs were incurred in 1904, 1905, and 1906 in respect of the lunatic's estate. Some of these costs were directed to be taxed and paid, and some had not been taxed, but no payment had been made as to any of them. The solicitor died in 1906, and certain moneys having lately fallen into the lunatic's estate, his executor applied in lunacy for payment of the unpaid costs due to him. It was objected that the solicitor's proper remedy was to sue the receiver personally, and that the executor was not entitled to receive out of the lunatic's estate any costs barred by the Statute of Limitations as against the receiver:—Held, that the lunatic and not the receiver was the solicitor's client, and it was for the Judge in Lunacy to say what ought to be done. Even if the Statute of Limitations could be pleaded on behalf of the lunatic, this was not a case in which the Judge should allow it to be pleaded. The costs must therefore be paid out of the lunatic's estate. Plumpton v. Burkinshaw (77 L. J. K.B. 961; [1908] 2 K.B. 572) followed. E. G., In re, 83 L. J. Ch. 586; [1914] 1 Ch. 927; 111 L. Receiver — Purchase of Freehold Reversion of Lease under Order of Master in Lunacy—Conversion — Realty or Personalty.]—It is within the power of the Court in Lunacy to alter the nature and consequent devolution of the estate of a lunatic. Where a receiver of a lunatic's estate, acting on an order of the Master in Lunacy, purchases the freehold reversion of leasehold premises belonging to the lunatic the leasehold merges in the freehold reversion, and passes, on the death of the lunatic intestate, to the heir-at-law of the lunatic. Searle, In re; Ryder v. Bond, 81 L. Alleged Lunatic—Detention in Workhouse—Order of Relieving Officer for Temporary Detention—No Order of Justice—Certificate of Medical Officer—Further Detention—No Want of Good Faith or Reasonable Care—Action against Workhouse Master—Stay of Action—Legality of Further Detention.]—A relieving officer, acting under section 20 of the Lunacy

Act, 1890, removed the plaintiff as an alleged lunatic to a workhouse of which the defendant was the master, and she was received into it under an order of the relieving officer which required the defendant to receive and detain her in the workhouse for a period of three days. During that period she was visited and examined by a Justice, who made no order under section 13 or otherwise in regard to her. The medical officer of the workhouse, however, during that period made a certificate in writing under section 24 for the detention of the plaintiff for fourteen days from its date. The plaintiff was detained in the workhouse for a further period of nearly six days beyond the first three days, and was then discharged. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for false imprisonment, alleging that her detention for the further period was unauthorised, as no order of a Justice had been made in regard to her:—Held, that, assuming that, on the true construction of the Act, the further detention was unauthorised in the absence of a Justice's order, yet in the circumstances, and more particularly having regard to the certificate of the medical officer purporting to authorise the further detention, it could not be said that the defendant, in detaining the plaintiff, had acted otherwise than in good faith and with reasonable care, and therefore that the action should be stayed under section 330 of the Act. Shackleton v. Swift, 82 L. J. K.B. 607; [1913] 2 K.B. 304; 108 L. T. 400; 77 J. P. 241; 11 L. G. R. 462—C.A.

Semble, that the further detention was authorised by the certificate of the medical officer and that a Justice's order was unnecessary. Ib.

Necessaries — Advances by Bank to Procure.]—A person lending money to provide necessaries for a lunatic has an equitable right to stand in the shoes of the lunatic's creditors who have been paid out of the moneys lent. Beavan, In re; Davies, Banks & Co. v. Beavan, 81 L. J. Ch. 113; [1912] 1 Ch. 196; 105 L. T. 784—Neville, J.

A bank advanced money to a person who had taken upon himself the management of the affairs of a lunatic not so found. The money being applied for the necessary maintenance of the lunatic and his family and for the protection of his estate,—Held, that the bank could prove against the lunatic's estate for the money advanced, but not for interest or bank charges. Ib.

Will made before Lunacy—Specific Bequest of Chattels — Chattels Sold under Order in Lunacy—Recovery of Sanity shortly before Death—Ademption.]—P., who was possessed of considerable estate, by his will dated April 4, 1910, after bequeathing all his motor cars with their accessories to the defendant M., gave the residue of his estate to a charity, and appointed the plaintiff and the defendant M. his executors. In May, 1910, the testator became of unsound mind, and on an order of two magistrates was placed in a private asylum. On June 14, 1910, the Master in Lunacy made an order appointing a receiver of the income of the lunatic's estate, and authorised the receiver to sell the motor cars with their accessories. Under this order the receiver sold the motor cars and accessories and paid the proceeds into Court to a separate account in the lunacy, and they were invested in 1,014*l.* Consols. On October 14, 1910, a doctor certified that P. had recovered his sanity; but he was very ill, and, without leaving the asylum or resuming control of his affairs, he died at the asylum on November 5. The executors proved the will, and this summons was taken out to determine whether the specific bequest of the motor cars and accessories to the defendant M. was adeemed by the sale of those chattels under the order in lunacy so that the proceeds passed to the residuary legatee. The receiver did not pass his final accounts until December, 1910:—Held, that these chattels were sold under the order made under section 123 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, and that that section applied; there was no evidence that the testator, on recovering his sanity, elected to take his property into his own possession and management, and therefore the operation of the section continued until after his death, and that the specific legatee is entitled to the sum of Consols which represented the proceeds of sale of the chattels in question. Palmer, In re; Thomas v. Marsh, [1911] W. N. 171—Neville, J.

Order to Divide Surplus Income amongst Daughters — Death of Lunatic — Funds in Hands of Committee—Income Accrued but not Paid before Death—Claim by Daughters—Residuary Estate.]—Under orders made in Lunacy the net surplus income of the estate of a lunatic so found was divided by the committee between the daughters of the lunatic. Upon the death of the lunatic there was in the hands of the committee a certain sum representing surplus income which had not been distributed amongst the daughters. There was also a sum received by the administrator with the will annexed of the lunatic in respect of income accruing during the life of the lunatic, but not paid till after her death. The daughters claimed these sums as due to them under the orders in Lunacy:—Held, that the orders in Lunacy came to an end on the death of the lunatic, and that both these sums formed part of the capital of the residuary estate of the testatrix. Way, In re (30 L. Capacity—Settled Account—Expert Witness — Function of the Court.] — Where a married woman carries on a trade or business, and an action is brought by her next friend for an account against her trustee, who had managed her property, and her trustee, in defending the action, denied that she was of unsound mind and pleaded settled account, and the medical evidence as to her state of mind was conflicting,—Held, that it is the function of the Court in such a case to form an independent opinion with regard to the technical aspect. Richmond v. Richmond, 111 L. T. 273; 58 S. J. 784—Neville, J.

Arrears of Maintenance in Asylum.] — Arrears of maintenance of a lunatic in an asylum are an ordinary debt of the lunatic, to which the Statute of Limitations applies. Murphy, In re; Prendergast v. Murphy, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 504—Barton, J.

III. MENTALLY DEFECTIVE PERSON.

Petition for Order to Send to Institution—Petition by Mother—"The parent"—"Without visible means of support"—Jurisdiction as to Costs.]—Either parent of a defective person may, under section 2, sub-section 1 of the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913, present a petition for an order that the defective be sent to an institution; but where the mother presents the petition and the father is alive, his written consent must, under section 6, be produced unless it is proved that such consent is unreasonably withheld, or that he cannot be found. A defective is not "without visible means of support" within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 (b), merely by reason of the fact that he has no property of his own, and cannot earn his own living, and has no legal right to compel his parents to maintain him in their home. Where a judicial authority makes an order under section 2, it has jurisdiction, in a proper case, to order the costs to be paid by the local authority. Rex v. Radcliffe, 84 L. J. K.B. 2196; [1915] 3 K.B. 418; 13 L. G. R. 1192; 31 T. L. R. 610—D.

Conviction—Residence—Authority Liable for Care of Defective.]—H. L., a defective within the meaning of the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913, was found guilty of an offence committed in September, 1914, within the area of the London County Council. The county in which H. L., had she been a pauper, would have been deemed to have acquired a settlement within the meaning of the law relating to the poor was Kent. Subsequently to 1910 H. L. was in the care of a rescue society, who found situations for her, but she never retained any situation for more than a short time. In January and May, 1912, situations were found for her in London. Evidence was also given that in April, 1914, she was in service in London, that from April till July, 1914, she was living in London, and that after that date she was seen several times in London: —Held, that these facts did not constitute a case of doubt within the meaning of section 44, sub-section 4 of the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913, and that, therefore, H. L.'s residence must, by virtue of section 44, sub-section 1, be presumed to be within the County of London. Kent County Council v. London County Council, 84 L. J. K.B. 1781; 79 J. P. 486; 13 L. Person Given in Charge for a Particular Felony — Failure of that Charge — Proof of Committal of other Felonies—Reasonable and Probable Cause for Suspicion—Whether sufficient Justification for Imprisonment.]—In an action for false imprisonment the defendants, in order to justify the imprisonment, must prove that the particular felony for which the plaintiff was imprisoned has in fact been committed; and if that particular felony has not been committed, it is no justification for the defendants to prove that at the time of the plaintiff's arrest other felonies had been committed, and that they had reasonable and probable cause for suspecting the plaintiff of having committed them. Walters v. Smith, 83 L. Detention in Coal Mine—Contract to Work—Breach of Contract by Workman—Right to be Conveyed to the Surface.]—It is not false imprisonment to hold a man to conditions which he has voluntarily accepted. A workman went down into a coal mine upon the terms that he should work for a certain fixed period, and then be conveyed to the surface by machinery provided by the employers. Before the termination of his period of work the workman, in breach of his contract, refused to continue his work, and came to the bottom of the shaft and demanded to be conveyed to the surface at once. The machinery was available, but the employers refused to convey the workman to the surface immediately, and detained him in the mine for a certain time :—Held, that an action for false imprisonment would not lie against the employers. Herd v. Weardale Steel, Coal and Coke Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 121; [1915] A.C. 67; 111 L. T. 660; 30 T. L. R. 620—H.L. (E.)

Notice to Abate Nuisance—Summons before Justices — Dismissal — Criminal Offence — Malice—Absence of Reasonable and Probable Cause—Injury to Reputation or Liberty.]—The plaintiff was the occupier of a house within the Romford Urban District, and the defendant Bailey, as sanitary inspector thereof, served on the plaintiff a sanitary notice, under section 94 of the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring him to abate a nuisance in the house. With this notice the plaintiff refused to comply, alleging that it was the duty of his landlord to abate the nuisance. The defendant Bailey, on the instructions of the defendant council, then preferred a complaint before the Justices under section 95 of the Act, but the Justices dismissed the summons with costs. At the trial of an action for malicious prosecution brought by the plaintiff against the defendants, the Judge held on the evidence that the defendants had no reasonable and probable cause for preferring the complaint, whilst the jury found that the defendants had acted maliciously in so doing, that the plaintiff's reputation was thereby injured, and they awarded him 250*l.* damages as against the defendant council. On the case coming on for further consideration, Horridge, J., held that the co-defendants were joint tortfeasors, and that there must be judgment for 250*l.* against both defendants :—Held, on appeal, that a complaint under section 95 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for non-compliance with a notice to abate a nuisance, is not in itself a proceeding of such a nature as is calculated to involve damage to the fair fame, or liberty through danger of imprisonment, of the person against whom the complaint is made, sufficient to support an action by him for malicious prosecution, even if such complaint has been preferred maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause, and that consequently judgment must be entered for the defendants. Rayson v. South London Tramways (62 L. Absence of Reasonable and Probable Cause —No Evidence—Reasonable Care by Defendants to Inform themselves—Leaving Question to Jury.]—The plaintiff was a workman at a weekly wage in the employment of the defendants, and they were in the habit of buying skins by measurement from one Miller, by whom one Simmons was employed as manager. Miller ceased to employ Simmons, and the latter informed the defendants that he had been bribing the plaintiff to pass skins as of larger measurement and better quality than they really were, and that the money was obtained by an account being kept in Miller's books in fictitious names, and cheques being drawn in favour of these fictitious payees and cashed by Miller. Simmons also stated that the plaintiff used to go to Miller's house to arrange these matters, and he produced a letter in support of this statement. The plaintiff, on being sent for, denied Simmon's allegations, but a large proportion of the skins which should have been checked by the plaintiff were found to be wrongly marked. The defendants prosecuted Miller and the plaintiff, but Miller was acquitted, and the defendants then offered no evidence against the plaintiff. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for malicious prosecution the plaintiff put in the depositions, which shewed that the defendants had acted on the above information. The Judge declined to ask the jury whether the defendants took reasonable care to inform themselves of the facts and whether they honestly believed in the charge, and he dismissed the action on the ground that there was no evidence of the absence of reasonable and probable cause :—Held, that in the circumstances the Judge was right in refusing to leave the above questions to the jury, inasmuch as there was no evidence of the defendants not having made proper enquiries, and that there was no evidence of the absence of reasonable and probable cause, and therefore the Judge's decision must be affirmed. Bradshaw v. Waterlow & Sons, Lim., [1915] 3 K.B. 527; 31 T. MANDAMUS.

Right to—Specific Legal Right—Clause Inserted in Act of Parliament for Benefit of Applicant—By-law not in Accordance with Statute.]—In a bill promoted in Parliament by a corporation for the acquisition of certain tramways a clause was inserted at the instance and for the benefit of an insurance company requiring the corporation to make by-laws prescribing the distance at which carriages using the tramways should be allowed to follow one after the other. The company, however, was not mentioned in the Act :—Held (Avory, J., doubting), that the insurance company, although they were not mentioned in the Act, had such an interest in regard to the matter as entitled them to apply for a mandamus requiring the corporation to comply with the statute and to make by-laws specifying the distance at which one tramcar should follow another. Rex v. Manchester

Alternative Remedy—Employment Agency—Whether Mandamus Lies to London County Council to Hear Application for Licence.]—Whether a mandamus will lie to the London County Council to hear and determine an application for a licence to carry on an employment agency, quære. As section 22, sub-section 5 of the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1910, provides a remedy by appeal in the case of a person aggrieved by the refusal of the London County Council to grant a licence for an employment agency, the Court discharged a rule which had been obtained for a mandamus requiring the Council to hear an application for an employment agency licence. Rex v. London County Council; Thornton, Ex parte, 27 T. L. R. 422—D.

Income Tax Commissioners — Refusal to Hear Expert Evidence.] — The owner and occupier of licensed premises appealed to the Income Tax Commissioners against the assessment of his premises. He attended and gave evidence before the Commissioners, and his solicitor then stated that he wished to call an expert valuer. The Commissioners said they already had all the facts before them and did not think any further evidence would assist them, and they declined to hear the expert. A rule nisi was then obtained calling upon the Commissioners to shew cause why they should not hear and determine the appeal according to law:—Held, that mandamus would not lie for the purpose of appealing from the Commissioners' decision as to the non-necessity of hearing the evidence tendered, and that the rule should therefore be discharged. Rex v. Offlow Income Tax Commissioners, 27 T. L. R. 353—D.

To Repair Dangerous Bridge — Disused Canal.]—A canal company, the predecessors in title of the defendants, acting under powers conferred upon them by a private Act of Parliament, made a canal, and in so doing cut through an old highway, which they carried by a new bridge over the canal. The canal under the bridge was no longer used for navigation, and the bridge, owing to its steepness and narrowness, was very inconvenient for the traffic of the district. The bridge having fallen into disrepair and become dangerous, the Court granted a mandamus to compel the canal company to repair the bridge. Rex v. Wilts and Berks Canal Co.; Berkshire County Council, Ex parte, 82 L. J. K.B. 3; [1912] 3 K.B. 623; 107 L. T. 765; 77 J. P. 24; 10 L. G. R. 1033—D.

Variation between Writ and Order.] — Where the command in a writ of mandamus varies from that contained in the order allowing the issue of such writ, it is a matter of course to quash the writ so varying. There is no jurisdiction to amend a writ of mandamus that varies as aforesaid, unless the order giving leave to issue it is similarly amended either prior to or contemporaneously with the amendment of the writ. Where a mandamus commands several things the prosecutor must shew that he is entitled to enforce every one of such commands; and, if he fails to establish a right to enforce any one of such commands, a peremptory mandamus cannot go. Rex v. Cork County Council, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 206—K.B. D.

Irregular Affidavit — Other Adequate Remedy.]—A rule had been granted calling upon the Master of the Crown Office to shew cause why he should not summon a grand jury of Middlesex in the King's Bench Division under the Middlesex Grand Jury Act, 1872:—Held, that the rule must be discharged on the ground that the affidavit on which it was granted was irregular and because there was another remedy open to the applicant. Rex v. Crown Office Master, 29 T. L. R. 427—D.

No Affidavit Stating Name of Prosecutor.]—On an application for a mandamus, rule 65 of the Crown Office Rules (which provides that no order for the issuing of any writ of mandamus shall be granted unless, at the time of moving, an affidavit be produced, made by the applicant himself or his solicitor, stating at whose instance such motion is made as prosecutor) must be strictly complied with. Rex v. Andover Rural Council, 77 J. P. 296; 11 L. G. R. 996; 29 T. L. R. 419—per Avory, J.

Practice—Motion on Last Day of Term.]—The Court will not hear a motion for a mandamus on the last day of term. McBean, Ex parte, 27 T. L. R. 401—D.

Franchise — Market Days — Lost Grant — User of Streets—Obstruction—Legal Origin—Injunction — Tolls — Reasonableness — Payment of Tolls by Buyers.]—In 1682 a charter was granted by King Charles 2 for the holding of a market on Thursday and Saturday in each week in or near Spittle Square. The defendant was the lessee of the market lands and premises and of the franchise rights, and had for many years held markets and taken tolls in the market place and certain adjoining streets on every day of the week except Sunday. In an action brought by the Attorney-General at the relation of the City Corporation,—Held, first, that the defendant was not entitled to hold markets or take tolls on any days of the week other than Thursday and Saturday, seeing that a lost grant from the Crown to hold markets on these other days of the week could not be presumed in view of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Att.-Gen. v. Horner (No. 1) (54 L. J. Q.B. 227; 14 Q.B. D. 245); secondly, that except on Thursdays and Saturdays the defendant had no right to use or authorise the use of the streets in or about the market for the sale of goods, and must be restrained from so doing by injunction; thirdly, that the tolls charged by the defendant need not be uniform, provided the amount charged was in all cases reasonable; and fourthly, that at common law tolls were payable by the buyers and not by the sellers, and that, apart from some contractual arrangement under which any individual seller agreed with the defendant to pay the tolls demandable from the buyer, the defendant was not entitled to obtain payment of tolls from the sellers instead of the buyers, and must be restrained from so doing. Att.-Gen. v. Horner (No. 2), 82 L. Sale of Cattle—Provision of Facilities for Weighing.]—The respondents had the exclusive use of a portion of the Chichester cattle market as a cattle sale yard, such portion consisting of a covered shed, inclosed from the rest of the market. On a particular day there was no weighbridge which could be used in the respondents' portion of the yard, but there was a weighbridge provided in the market by the corporation, and any animal sold in the respondents' sale yard could be weighed on the market weighbridge on payment. The respondents were summoned for selling cattle at a mart, where cattle were periodically sold, without providing facilities for weighing same as required by the Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Acts, 1887 and 1891:—Held, that the Acts only required weighing facilities to be in or near the market, and as there were weighing facilities close to the respondents' premises the respondents had committed no offence. Quære, whether such an inclosure as that occupied by the respondents, being within a market, came within the Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Acts, 1887 and 1891. Knott v. Strides, 109 L. Market Overt—Custom of City of London—Sale in Auction Room.]—It is a question of fact in each case whether premises in which goods are sold constitute a "shop" within the custom of market overt in the City of London. A watch was sold in an auction room which was on the first floor of a building in the City of London. In the auction room, sales, largely of unredeemed pledges, were periodically held:—Held, on the facts, that the auction room was not a "shop" and that the sale of the watch there was not a sale in market overt. Clayton v. Le Roy, 81 L. B. DISTURBANCE OF MARKET.

Disturbance—Prohibition against Sales—Exception in Case of Sales "on any land or in any building belonging" to a Seller or in his Occupation.]—By the Hailsham Cattle Market Act, 1871, the plaintiffs were incorporated and empowered to carry on a market for the sale of certain cattle and other live-stock within the limits therein mentioned. By section 2 of the Act the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, was incorporated with the Act of 1871, except where expressly varied. By section 42 of the Act every person who should on the days appointed for holding markets sell or expose for sale at any place within the market limits, "except on any land or in any building belonging to him or in his occupation," any animals in respect of which tolls were by the Act authorised to be taken, should forfeit and pay to the plaintiffs a sum not exceeding 40*s*. The defendant had acquired land within the market limits, and there erected buildings in which he held auction sales of cattle and other livestock on days other than market days. The defendant or his clerks acted as auctioneers and salesmen :—Held, that section 42 of the private Act was an express variation of section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, and was alone applicable; that upon the construction of the whole private Act the only protection given to the plaintiffs against sales within the market limits was that contained in section 42 thereof; and that, although, if the plaintiffs' market had been an ancient market by franchise the defendant's acts would have been restrained as amounting to a disturbance of the market, yet that these acts came within the exception in section 42, with the result that the defendant was exempted not only from the penalty imposed by the section, but also from the liability of being restrained from doing them. Hailsham Cattle Market Co. v. Tolman, 84 L. Difference between Market Franchise at Common Law and Statutory Markets.]—The permissions given to statutory markets are not subject to any vague overriding prohibition arising from a monopoly ordinarily incident to a grant of market rights or a franchise of market at common law. Ib.

Warehouse—Sale in "own shop."]—The Southwark Market was originally founded by a charter of Edward 6, granting the manor to the Corporation of London with the right to hold the market, and was confirmed by 29 Car. 2. c. 4. In 1754 the market had become a nuisance to the traffic, and in that year the old market was abolished by 28 Geo. 2. c. 9; and by another statute in the same year (28 Geo. 2. c. 23) a new market was granted to new grantees on a site provided by them, section 4 of which made it unlawful for any person "to erect or hold any other market" within the borough. An amending Act (30 Geo. 2. c. 31) by section 10 imposed a penalty "if any poulterer, country chapman, lader, kidder, victualler, gardener, fruiterer, fish-seller, or any other person or persons, shall sell, utter, or put to shew or sale, by way of hawking, or as a hawker, or otherwise any . . . fruit, herbs . . . or other victuals or provision whatsoever, in any private house, lane, alley, inn, warehouse, street, . . . or other place . . . within 1,000 yards" of the market, but excepted from this provision sales by a person in his "own shop." For many years the market had been carried on as a fruit and vegetable market, where salesmen sold goods wholesale, and where, besides selling their own goods, they sold those of other persons on commission. In 1909 the defendant gave up his stalls in the market and took large premises near the market on lease for twenty-one years, where he carried on a wholesale business similar to that of salesmen in the market, using the greater part of his premises to expose goods for sale and store them with a view to a sale. In an action by the market trustees for an injunction to restrain him from so carrying on his business, —Held, that the defendant was carrying on business in his "own shop" within the permissive part of section 10 of 30 Geo. 2. c. 31, and had therefore incurred no penalty under the Act, and that no injunction ought to be granted. Haynes v. Ford, 80 L. J. Ch. 490; [1911] 2 Ch. 237; 104 L. T. 696; 75 J. P. 401; 9 L. G. R. 702; 27 T. L. R. 416—C.A.

Selling within Prescribed Limits—Tollable Article—"Sell."]—By section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, "After the market place is open for public use every person other than a licensed hawker who shall sell or expose for sale in any place within the prescribed limits, except in his own dwelling place or shop, any articles in respect of which tolls are by the special Act authorized to be taken in the market, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty . . ." The appellant, who was a farmer, at his dwelling house, which was within the prescribed limits of the town of Ilfracombe, agreed to sell to a butcher in Ilfracombe two pigs at the rate of 10*s*. 6*d*. per score. They were to be at the appellant's risk until delivered. The appellant subsequently killed the pigs and delivered the carcasses to the butcher at his shop, which was within the prescribed limits of the town, but outside the market, where they were weighed, and the price ascertained. The appellant, having refused to pay toll in respect of the pigs, was convicted of an offence under section 13 :— Held, that in construing the section the niceties of the law relating to the sale of goods must be disregarded; that the section applies to an agreement which would popularly be called a sale; that the sale of the pigs was therefore at the appellant's "dwelling place," and not at the shop where the carcasses were subsequently delivered, and that the appellant was wrongly convicted. Lambert v. Rowe, 83 L. Sale in Street—Hawker's Licence—Licence of Corporation—Exemption—Sale otherwise than as Hawker.]—By section 53 of the Derby Corporation Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 118) it is provided that if any person sells or exposes for sale, except in his own dwelling house or shop, or in the dwelling house or shop of the buyer or intended buyer, or carries about for sale any article in respect of the sale or exposure for sale whereof in any market place or market hall, or fair, or in respect of the user of any stall or other convenience for the sale or exposure for sale whereof in any market place or market hall, or fair, the corporation are entitled to take any toll, stallage, or rent, he shall be liable to a penalty unless he is duly licensed for that purpose under the Act by the corporation. By section 55 of the same Act it is provided that nothing in the Act shall interfere with the lawful exercise of their calling by pedlars and hawkers duly licensed or certificated under any Act relating to such calling. An information was laid against the respondent under the Derby Corporation Act, 1877, for selling tomatoes from a hand-barrow in a street in the county borough of D. without having obtained a licence as required by the Act from the corporation. Under the Act tomatoes were included amongst the articles in respect of the sale of which in a market place the corporation were entitled to take a toll. The respondent had taken out a licence under the Hawkers Act, 1888 :—Held, that the mere fact that the respondent had taken out a hawker's licence under the Hawkers Act, 1888, was not sufficient to relieve him from the necessity of taking out a licence from the corporation of D. under the local Act for the sale of the articles in question, since in selling the same he was not acting under his hawker's licence, and that the exemption granted by section 55 of the Act did not apply to hawkers as a class, but only to hawkers in the lawful exercise of their calling as hawkers. Lee v. Wallocks, 111 L. T. 573; 78 J. P. 365; 12 L. G. R. 1221; 24 Cox C.C. 398—D.

Sale by Agent—Unauthorised and Contrary to Instructions—Liability of Principal.]—By a market Act it was provided : " For preventing any encroachments . . . on the said market, be it further enacted . . . that it shall not be lawful . . . to vend or expose to sale any . . . meat . . . in any shop . . . and every person who shall so vend or expose to sale " such meat, on conviction shall forfeit 5*l.* to be recovered by distress; and in default of distress imprisonment could be inflicted. The respondent, who had only a pork licence for his shop, brought some sheep carcasses to such shop for storage, intending to remove them to his stall in the market next morning. His wife, contrary to his instructions, and without his knowledge or authority express or implied, sold some of the mutton to a customer at the shop :—Held, that the respondent was not liable to the penalty. Wake v. Dyer, 104 L. Sale of Milk.]—By a table of tolls of a certain market there was to be a toll " for every cart containing milk, fish, or other goods, provisions, marketable commodities, or articles, 6*d.*" The respondent sold milk from a cart within the prescribed limits, and was summoned under section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, which was incorporated in the local Act, for unlawfully selling, within the prescribed limits, milk in respect of which toll was duly authorised to be taken in the market :—Held, that the toll was a toll on every cart containing milk and not on the sale of milk, and the respondent could not be convicted for unlawfully selling milk within the prescribed limits. Jenkins v. Thomas, 104 L. Servant's Right to Salary when Absent through Illness—Headmistress.]—The plaintiff, a married woman, was the headmistress of one of the defendants' schools. By the terms of her employment she was entitled in case of absence through illness to full pay for a month, after which time the defendants were entitled to take into consideration the circumstances of the case as to whether she was entitled to anything further:—Held, first, that "absence through illness" was not confined to a period of absence during actual illness, but included the period of convalescence and also absence occasioned by approaching illness; but secondly, that the absence of the plaintiff for a period of three months before her child was born, because in the defendants' view it was not desirable that the elder school children should see the plaintiff in her then condition, was not absence through illness, and as such absence was due to the defendants' request, they were liable for her salary during that period. Davies v. Ebbw Vale Urban Council, 75 J. Wages — Trade Scheduled under Trade Boards Act, 1909 — "Outworker" — Person Employing Workmen.]—A person may be an "outworker" within the meaning of the Trade Boards Act, 1909, notwithstanding that he himself employs workmen. Street v. Williams, 83 L. Tailoring Trade—Occasional Employment in Tailoring Work.]—The Board of Trade made an Order under section 5, sub-section 2 of the Trade Boards Act, 1909, making minimum rates of wages obligatory for certain branches of the tailoring trade engaged in making garments for male persons. The schedule to the Order provided that the rates were to apply to all male workers who were "engaged during the whole or any part of their time" in any branch of the ready-made and wholesale bespoke tailoring trade which is engaged in making garments to be worn by male persons, but that they should not apply to "persons engaged merely as clerks, messengers, . . . and to others whose work stands in a relationship to the trade similar to that of the above excluded classes":—Held, that, where a worker is engaged for any substantial part of his time in work in the tailoring trade, he is entitled to be paid at the minimum rate of wages for such part of his time, notwithstanding that he may be employed in other work for the rest of his time. Board of Trade v. Roberts, 85 L. Wages of Miners.]—See Mines.

Truck Act—Payment of Wages in Coin—Deduction for Rent.]—A company let to its employees houses for the period of their employment with the company. At each fortnightly pay day the employees signed receipts for their wages, which contained a clause authorising the deduction of their house rent from their future wages, and also this clause: "In the event of my leaving your employment I authorise you to retain whatever moneys are in your hands until I remove from your house." On March 1, 1912, the employees left the employment owing to a strike, and from the wages payable on that day the company, in virtue of the authority granted in the receipts signed on the preceding pay day, February 16, withheld in the case of each employee a sum as against what might thereafter become due for the occupation of his house:—Held, that the contract of February 16 and the retention of part of the wages on March 1 were both illegal in respect, first (following Williams v. North's Navigation Collieries, 75 L. J. K.B. 334; [1906] A.C. 136), that they were in contravention respectively of sections 2 and 3 of the Truck Act; and secondly (following M'Farlane v. Birrell, 16 R. (J.) 28), that they did not fall within the exception in section 23, seeing that, the tenancies having determined with the employment, any sums due after March 1 were not rent, but damages for illegal occupation. Summerlee Iron Co. v. Thomson, [1913] S. Confidential Employment—Trade Secrets—Disclosure to New Employer — Contract to Preserve Secrecy — Injunction — Nature of Secret not Disclosed to Court.]—The Court will restrain an ex-servant from publishing or divulging anything which has been communicated to him in confidence, or under a contract by him, express or implied, not to do so; and generally from making improper use of information obtained in the course of a confidential employment; also from using, to his late master's detriment, information and knowledge surreptitiously obtained from him during the term of service. The Court will grant an injunction to restrain the disclosure of a secret process although the process has not been disclosed to the Court, provided it is satisfied that the process exists, and can be disclosed if necessary. Amber Size and Chemical Co. v. Menzel, 82 L. Misconduct of Servant — Suspension from Work—Right of Master.]—The appellant was a workman in the employ of the respondents under a contract of service determinable by fourteen days' notice on either side. On Sunday, June 14, 1914, he absented himself from work without the respondents' leave, and as a result on Monday, June 15, the respondents suspended him from work for that one day. On June 29 the appellant preferred a summons against the respondents under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, on the ground that he had been wrongfully dismissed by the respondents on June 15 without having given or received the necessary notice, and he claimed damages:—Held, that the respondents had a right either to dismiss the workman for his misconduct in absenting himself from work without leave, and thus put an end to the contract of service, or to treat the contract as continuing (subject to their right to claim damages against the workman), but that they had no right to suspend the workman for one day and thus prevent him from earning wages for that period. Hanley v. Pease and Partners, Lim., 84 L. —— Powers of Court of Summary Jurisdiction.]—A Court of summary jurisdiction, when dealing with a dispute between master and servant under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, is not strictly confined to the consideration of the claim made before it, but can deal with all disputes which may appear in the course of the hearing to have arisen between master and workmen. Ib.

Indemnity for Losses Incurred by Servant in Performance of Duty—Employee of Company — Costs of Libel Action Brought in Consequence of Report—Provision in Articles for Indemnity of Officers and Servants.]—A mining engineer was employed by a company, on certain terms as to remuneration and travelling and other expenses, to visit and report on property of the company abroad. While carrying out this commission he discovered matters relating to the conduct of a director, which matters he had not been employed to investigate, but which, having discovered them, it was his duty to report to the company. He made such a report and incurred large costs in defending successfully a libel action brought against him in consequence by the director. One of the company's articles of association provided that its officers and servants should be indemnified by it against loss, and that all costs, losses, and expenses which any officer or servant might incur or become liable to by reason of acts or deeds done by him as such officer or servant should be paid out of the company's funds. Sargant, J., held, distinguishing The James Seddon (35 L. J. Adm. 117; L. R. 1 A. & E. 62), that the engineer as a servant of the company was not entitled either at common law or under the articles of association to be indemnified by the company in respect of the costs:—Held, by the Court of Appeal on the facts, that the engineer was an agent of the company and not a mere servant. On well settled principles he was entitled as such agent to be indemnified against all liability reasonably occasioned by his employment. Famatina Development Corporation, In re, 84 L. J. 3. Termination of.

Engagement for a Year — Condition as to "satisfaction of directors"—Honest Dissatisfaction—Right of Dismissal Within the Year.]—By an agreement in writing the defendants engaged the plaintiff as shop superintendent. The agreement provided that the engagement should be for one year, subject to the plaintiff's carrying out his duties "to the satisfaction of the directors." Before the expiration of the year the defendants dismissed the plaintiff on the ground that he had not carried out his duties satisfactorily. In an action brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for wrongful dismissal the jury found—first, that the defendants were genuinely dissatisfied with the plaintiff's discharge of his duties; but, secondly, that they had no good grounds for such dissatisfaction. The County Court Judge entered judgment for the defendants:—Held, that upon the findings of the jury judgment was properly entered for the defendants, inasmuch as genuine dissatisfaction was sufficient to entitle them to terminate the agreement, and their reasons for such dissatisfaction were immaterial. Diggle v. Ogston Motor Co., 84 L. Domestic Service—First Month's Service—Custom to Determine by Fortnight's Notice—Judicial Notice of Custom—Right of Servant to Wages for Month's Service.]—The plaintiff entered the defendant's employment as a domestic servant on November 3, 1910, at the yearly wage of 23*l.*, payable monthly. No special agreement was made as to the length of notice required to determine the contract. On November 17, 1910, the plaintiff gave the defendant notice of her intention to leave at the end of a month's service, and accordingly she left on December 3. The defendant having declined to pay the plaintiff any wages upon the ground that she had broken the contract by failing to give a month's notice, the plaintiff sued the defendant in the County Court to recover her wages for the month she had served. At the trial the plaintiff relied upon a custom that either master or servant may determine such a contract at the end of the first month by notice given at or before the expiration of the first fortnight. No evidence was given in support of this custom, but the County Court Judge said he would take judicial notice of it, adding that he had done so upon previous occasions. He accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiff for the month's wages :—Held, first, that the County Court Judge having had the question before him on previous occasions was entitled to take judicial notice of the custom; and secondly, that in any view the plaintiff was entitled to be paid for the month she had served. Moult v. Halliday (67 L. Action for Wrongful Dismissal — Prima Facie Case of Misconduct—Burden of Proof—Condonation.]—Where a master dismissed his servant on the ground of the servant taking a secret commission, and established a prima facie case, the burden of proof held to be shifted and to lie on the servant to prove the innocence of the transaction. A man cannot condone a wrong which he does not believe that servant to have committed, and of which he accepts the servant's denial, without making enquiries which would have disclosed the truth. The master does not waive his rights by postponing action until he is fully satisfied of the servant's guilt. Federal Supply and Cold Storage Co. v. Angehrn, 80 L. J. P.C. 1; 103 L. T. 150; 26 T. —— Contract of Service — Restriction on Trade—Dismissal.]—It is not competent for a servant to contend that he has been wrongfully dismissed when, instead of being given a week's notice to quit, in accordance with the terms of his contract, he is paid a week's salary and dismissed. Such a transaction does not amount to a wrongful dismissal, coupled with a tender of damages. Dennis v. Tunnard, 56 S. J. 162—Swinfen Eady, J.

Common Employment—Hiring for Particular Service—Control of Servant—Negligence — Injury to Hirer's Servant.] — The Belfast Harbour Commissioners have, under their statutory powers, the control of the harbour and of all piers, docks, and quays belonging to it; and it is their duty to assign a berth to a vessel to be discharged in the port; they have power to provide cranes for the unloading of such vessels, and it is their duty to provide proper servants and labourers for working such cranes for the use of the public. The master of a vessel hired a crane from the commissioners for the purpose of her discharge. He signed a request for its use, subject to the commissioners' regulations, containing an agreement that he was to be responsible for all loss or damage arising from any improper use of the crane while so employed. The crane was put in position by the craneman, and the vessel was moved to a berth opposite it. The practice is that the buckets are filled by the hirer's servants in the hold, one of whom directs the craneman to raise and lower each bucket and to swing round the arm of the jib. The craneman regulates by a brake the speed of ascent and descent of each bucket, and he alone works the machine. While the plaintiff, being employed for that purpose by the shipmaster, was filling a bucket in the hold, an empty bucket, while being lowered by the crane, descended with great speed and violence and struck the plaintiff, who was seriously injured. The craneman was employed and paid by the commissioners, who alone could dismiss him. Except in directing buckets to be raised or lowered, neither the hirer nor his servants had any control over the craneman. If the shipmaster was dissatisfied, his only remedy would be to direct the craneman to stop working, and to apply to the commissioners to send another in his place, which they might or might not do. In no event could the hirer employ a servant of his own to work the crane, or procure a crane workable on the pier from any one but the commissioners. In an action by the plaintiff, against the commissioners to recover damages for personal injuries, the jury found that the hirer had no authority to control the craneman otherwise than in respect of the time and place of movement of the crane, and the time of raising and lowering the buckets; that the bucket which injured the plaintiff got out of the control of the craneman through his negligence; and that this negligence was the cause of the accident:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict; that the agreement of the hirer to be responsible for any improper use of the crane afforded no defence to the plaintiff's action, and that the plaintiff and craneman were not at the time of the accident fellow servants engaged in a common employment. Donovan v. Laing (63 L. —— Negligence of Fellow Servant—Infant.]—The plaintiff, a boy of fourteen, who had been invited by the defendants' firemen to assist along with other boys in pulling the defendants' fire escape home after it had been used in fire drill, was injured in so doing. In an action claiming damages from the defendants the jury found, first, that the defendants were not themselves guilty of negligence; secondly, that the fire escape was a fit and proper one for its purpose; thirdly, that the defendants' servants were guilty of negligence in the management of the fire escape or in allowing the plaintiff to pull it; and fourthly, that the plaintiff was not aware of the danger:—Held, that the doctrine of common employment applied, and that judgment should be entered for the defendants. Bass v. Hendon Urban Council, 28 T. —— Licensee—Person Assisting Another in Executing Work—Injury to Person Assisting — Common Employment.]—The plaintiff's employers engaged the defendants to repair a linotype machine. The defendants sent one of their servants to the premises of the plaintiff's employers for that purpose. The plaintiff, at the request of the defendants' servant, was assisting in the work when a chip of metal flew into his eye and injured him. In an action brought by the plaintiff to recover damages from the defendants in respect of the injury, the jury found that the defendants' servant was guilty of negligence in executing the work; that the plaintiff did not voluntarily assist the defendants' servant for the benefit of the defendants, but that he assisted him for the benefit of his own employers in order to expedite the work:—Held, that, having regard to the findings of the jury, the doctrine as to common employment was not applicable, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Williams v. Linotype and Machinery, Lim., 84 L. —— Statutory Duty — Common Law Liability.]—The defence of common employment cannot be pleaded to an action for breach of a statutory duty. Butler or Black v. Fife Coal Co., 81 L. J. P.C. 97; [1912] A.C. 149; 106 L. T. 161; 28 T. L. R. 150—H.L. (Sc.)

—— Accident Caused by Breach of Statutory Duty by Employer.]—The breach of a statutory duty by an employer is not one of the risks which a servant must be assumed to have undertaken to run when he entered the employer's service, and therefore, where an employer has employed an unqualified person in breach of his statutory duty, he cannot rely on the defence of "common employment" in the case of an accident to a servant caused, or contributed to, by the conduct of such unqualified person. Jones v. Canadian Pacific Railway, 83 L. J. P.C. 13; 110 L. T. 83; 29 T. L. R. 773—P.C.

A railway company employed a person who had not passed the tests required by an order of the Railway Commissioners, which had the force of a statute, to work a train. He allowed the train to run past danger signals, and an accident resulted:—Held, that there was evidence that the breach of the statutory duty caused, or contributed to, the accident. Ib.

Condition of Plant—Failure to Use Safety Appliance — Common Law Liability of Master.]—At common law a master does not warrant the condition of his plant, and is not liable for an accident caused by a defect which could not have been discovered by him by reasonable diligence, and he is not bound to adopt all the latest improvements and appliances; but where an accident had occurred, and the master had made enquiries as to safety appliances which might have prevented such an accident in the future, but had not adopted any of them, and afterwards a similar accident occurred,—Held, that there was evidence on which a jury might find in the second case that there was an absence of reasonable care on the part of the master. Toronto Power Co. v. Paskwan, 84 L. "Non-textile factory"—Bottling Beer by Machinery—"Bottle-washing works."]—On the first floor of premises occupied by a firm of wholesale and retail grocers, wine merchants, and Italian warehousemen, there was a portable bottle-filling machine used for bottling beer, and on the ground floor another machine used for washing the firm's bottles, both machines being worked by electricity:—Held, first, that the premises on the first floor were not a "non-textile factory" within section 149, sub-section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, in respect that the process of bottling beer was neither an "adapting for sale of any article" nor a "manufacturing process"; and secondly, that the premises on the ground floor were not "bottle-washing works" within the meaning of the same section and sub-section and Schedule VI. Part II. (28), in respect that the bottle washing was merely incidental to the firm's proper business. Keith, Lim. v. Kirkwood, [1914] S. C. (J.) 150—Ct. of Just.

—— Workshop on One Floor — Factory on Floor Above.]—A building was occupied by a tenant who used the ground floor as a shop, the first floor partly as a shop and stock room and partly as a millinery room for the trimming of hats, no mechanical power being used; the second floor as a factory for dressmaking, where mechanical power was used; and the third floor as a storeroom. The floors were connected by internal staircases:—Held, that the millinery room was not a factory or part of a factory within section 149, sub-section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. Vines v. Inglis, [1915] S. C. (J.) 18—Ct. of Just.

Carpet-beating Works — "Manufacturing process."]—By section 149, sub-section 1 (b) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, "non-textile factory" means any premises or places named in Part II. of the Sixth Schedule "wherein steam, water or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there." Part II. of the Sixth Schedule includes carpet-beating works. The respondents carried on in a part of their premises the business of carpet beaters, carpets being there beaten by means of a machine driven by a gas engine within the premises:—Held, that the premises were a "factory" within the meaning of the above enactment. Johnston v. Lalonde, 81 L. J. K.B. 1229; [1912] 3 K.B. 218; 76 J. P. 378; 10 L. G. R. 671—D.

Men's Workshop — Out-worker — Non-furnishing of Statement of Rate of Wages Applicable.]—By reason of the provisions of section 157 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, which enacts that the provisions of section 116 of the Act shall not apply to men's workshops, a Secretary of State has no power under the provisions of sub-section 5 of section 116 to apply the provisions of the section to out-workers employed in connection with a men's workshop; and in such a case an employer, who carries on business as a tailor, is under no obligation to furnish to a person who is an out-worker a written or printed statement of the particulars of the rate of his wages applicable to the work to be done by him. Seal v. Alexander, 81 L. J. K.B. 628; [1912] 1 K.B. 469; 106 L. T. 121; 76 J. P. 156; 22 Cox C.C. 697; 28 T. L. R. 196—D.

Laundries—Affixing of Abstract of Factory and Workshop Act in Laundry — "Public institution."]—An orphan asylum, although it receives no Government grant, and is subject to no public control, but is maintained in its own private premises and grounds by subscriptions and donations, for which appeals are made to the general public, is nevertheless a "public institution" within section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1907, and an abstract of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, must accordingly be affixed in the laundry of the asylum, as prescribed by section 128 of the last-mentioned Act. Seal v. British Orphan Asylum, 104 L. T. 424; 9 L. G. R. 238; 75 J. P. 152; 22 Cox C.C. 392—D.

—— Laundry Carried on "incidentally to the purposes of any public institution."] — The Royal Masonic Institution for Boys is almost entirely maintained by the subscriptions of freemasons belonging to the English constitution of freemasons. No appeal is made to the general public, though the trustees are ready to accept and do receive voluntary contributions from persons other than freemasons. The election of boys is confined to the sons of subscribing freemasons and decided by vote. The management and control are in the board of management, consisting of thirty freemasons who are life governors. In 1910 the institution received a grant from the Board of Education as a secondary school, Division A. The grounds and premises are strictly private. A building on the premises is used as a laundry with machinery driven by mechanical power. Six resident servants are employed in the laundry, but none of the inmates of the institution is so employed. Upon an information for not affixing at the laundry the abstract prescribed by section 128 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901,—Held, that the school was a public institution within the meaning of section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1907, and that the laundry was carried on "incidentally to the purpose of a public institution," and was therefore a "factory" within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and that the trustees had committed an offence in not having the abstract affixed to the premises. Royal Masonic Institution v. Parkes, 82 L. J. K.B. 33; [1912] 3 K.B. 212; 106 L. T. 809; 76 J. P. 218; 10 L. G. R. 376; 22 Cox C.C. 746; 28 T. L. R. 355—D.

—— Laundry Attached to Hotel—Necessity of Compliance with Factory and Workshop Acts—"Laundry carried on as ancillary to another business."] — The respondent, the occupier of a hotel where he carried on the business of a hotel proprietor, on a certain day employed two women in a laundry in such circumstances as to constitute breaches of the Factory and Workshop Acts if the laundry was, within the meaning of section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1907, carried on as ancillary to the business of hotel proprietor. The laundry was not used for the washing of visitors' linen, but was used only for washing the table linen, sheets, &c., used in and for the purposes of the hotel, for which purpose two women were exclusively employed during the summer and one during the winter. Upon informations for offences under the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 and 1907, the Justices, being of opinion that the laundry was not carried on as ancillary to the hotel business, dismissed the informations :—Held, that, assuming that the place was in fact a laundry, as the Justices must be taken to have found as a fact, the laundry was, within the meaning of the section, carried on as "ancillary" to the hotel business, and was a "laundry" to which the section applied, and that therefore the respondent ought to have been convicted. Sadler v. Roberts, 105 L. T. 106; 75 J. P. 342; 22 Cox C.C. 520—D.

2. Offences under the Acts.

"Occupier" of Factory — Limited Company.]—A limited company, as the occupier of a factory, may be proceeded against for a contravention of section 137 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, in employing persons contrary to the Act. Rex v. Gainsford, 29 T. L. R. 359—D.

Proceedings against Master — Abstract of Statute Affixed in Factory — No Notice to Produce Abstract—Admissibility of Secondary Evidence of Abstract.]—By section 128, sub-section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, there shall be affixed in every factory and be constantly kept so affixed the prescribed abstract of the Act, including the notice required by section 32 specifying the period of employment and times allowed for meals in the factory. By sub-section 2 the occupier of the factory is liable to a fine not exceeding 40*s.* for contravention of the section. The respondents were charged on an information preferred by the appellant, an inspector of factories, with allowing a young person in their employment to remain in a room in their factory, in which a manufacturing process or handicraft was being carried on, during a part of the time allowed for meals in the factory. On the hearing of the information the appellant proposed to give secondary evidence of the printed abstract of the Act and notice affixed in the respondents' factory, although no notice to produce it had been given. He admitted that the abstract and notice was a printed form hung up in the factory and was movable. Objection being taken to the admission of such secondary evidence, the Justices upheld the objection and dismissed the summons. On a Case stated,—Held, that as by reason of the statute the abstract must be continually affixed in the factory, and its removal by the respondents would be a breach of the statute subjecting them to a penalty, this was an exception to the rule requiring a notice to produce, and secondary evidence was admissible of the contents of the abstract. Mortimer v. M'Callan (9 L. J. Ex. 73; 6 M. & W. 58) followed. Owner v. Beehive Spinning Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 282; [1914] 1 K.B. 105; 109 L. T. 800; 78 J. P. 15; 12 L. G. R. 42; 23 Cox C.C. 626; 30 T. L. R. 21—D.

Hoist or Teagle—Fencing of Machinery—Liability of Master to Fence.]—Section 10, sub-section 1 (a) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, provides that "Every hoist or teagle and every fly-wheel directly connected with . . . mechanical power, . . . must be securely fenced" :—Held, that the words "directly connected with . . . mechanical power" do not apply to the words "hoist or teagle," and that there is an absolute obligation to fence every hoist in a factory whether worked by mechanical power or not. Jackson v. Mulliner Motor Body Co., 80 L. J. K.B. 173; [1911] 1 K.B. 546; 104 L. T. 181; 75 J. P. 103—D.

Employment of Women—Prohibited Hours—Machine in Motion for Purpose of Cleaning—Manufacturing Process also Carried on.]—By section 24, sub-section 3 (b) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, the period of employment of women in a textile factory on a Saturday must end at half-past eleven o'clock in the forenoon "as regards employment in any manufacturing process," and at noon as regards employment for any purpose. In the respondents' cotton-spinning factory an inspector found at 11.50 A.M. on a Saturday two women engaged in cleaning the machines at which they were working, and which it was their duty to tend and clean. The machines had not been in motion from 11.30 A.M. till immediately before 11.50 A.M., and they were then in motion merely for the purpose of being cleaned, and not for the purpose of manufacturing. The machines could not be properly cleaned without setting them in motion for that purpose; and they performed the manufacturing process completely without the intervention of the women, except for the purpose of feeding, cleaning, and regulating. While the women were cleaning the machines the machines were apparently working and performing the manufacturing process as if the women had not been cleaning them. Upon informations against the respondents for employing the women in a "manufacturing process" during the prohibited time,—Held, that, inasmuch as the machines were in motion merely for the purpose of being cleaned, and not for the purpose of manufacturing, the women were not employed in a "manufacturing process" within the meaning of the sub-section, and no offence thereunder had been committed. Crabtree v. Commercial Mills Spinning Co., 103 L. T. 879; 75 J. P. 6—D.

Employment of Children — Cleaning Machinery while in Motion.]—In the course of spinning woollen yarn part of the material which is being spun is stripped off and becomes a species of fluff which adheres to the revolving rollers. Unless the fluff is removed—which has to be done while the machine is in motion by the aid of mechanical power—the rollers become choked and the process stops :—Held, that the removal of the fluff from the rollers by a child is a cleaning of part of the machinery within the meaning of section 13, sub-section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and therefore prohibited, notwithstanding that the fluff which is removed has a saleable value, and is in fact sold. Taylor v. Dawson, 80 L. J. K.B. 102; [1911] 1 K.B. 145; 103 L. T. 508; 75 J. P. 5; 27 T. L. R. 45—D.

Fire Escape—Houses Belonging to Different Owners Adapted by Tenant as One Factory—"Owner."]—Four houses—90, 88, 84, and 82 G. Road—had been adapted and were used by one tenant as a boxmaking factory. The four houses were let in sets of two by two different owners, the respondent being the owner of Nos. 90 and 88. To obtain fire escape facilities for the factory workers by the provision of an additional staircase, the London County Council, under section 14, sub-section 2 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, summoned the respondent as owner of the whole factory to provide the required staircase:—Held, that "owner" in section 14, sub-section 2, could not be read as "owners." The prosecution had been launched against the respondent as owner of a factory consisting of four houses, and it was sufficient to defeat it when it was proved that he was only owner of part of the factory. London County Council v. Leyson, 110 L. T. 200; 78 J. P. 91; 12 L. G. R. 253—D.

Per Darling, J.: Had the procedure been taken, with the proper assents, under section 149, sub-section 2, there was nothing to prevent Nos. 90 and 88 being a separate factory, the owner of which, if it gave occupation to more than forty people, could be compelled to provide means of escape in case of fire. Ib.

3. Liability to Actions.

Injury to Servant—Negligence—Breach of Statutory Duty—Liability of Factory Owner.]—The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, provides, by section 10, sub-section 1, that with respect to the fencing of machinery in a factory the following provisions shall have effect: "(c) All dangerous parts of the machinery and every part of the mill gearing must either be securely fenced or be in such position or of such construction as to be equally safe to every person employed or working in the factory as it would be if it were securely fenced." A workman in the employment of the defendants was injured whilst working on a milling machine in the defendants' factory. The machine, which was constructed for working downwards, was, on the direction of the defendants' foreman, being worked by the plaintiff in an upward direction, and no guard or fence had been provided. In an action claiming damages for negligence the jury found, in answer to questions, that the milling machine was in fact dangerous to the workman when working upwards; that it was so dangerous to the knowledge of the defendants' authorised agent; that the accident was due to the negligence of the defendants, and was due to the dangerous part of the machinery not being securely fenced:—Held, that the section imposed an unqualified obligation on the defendants to provide proper fencing so as to make the machinery safe to the workman in whichever direction it was used, and that as they had failed to do so they were liable in damages. Watkins v. Naval Colliery Co., Lim. (81 L. J. K.B. 1056; [1912] A.C. 693), applied. Pursell v. Clement Talbot, Lim., 111 L. T. 827; 79 J. P. 1—C.A.

1. Generally.

Limited Company Occupier of Shop.] — A limited company which is the occupier of a shop is liable to be convicted under section 4, sub-sections 1 and 7 of the Shops Act, 1912, for not closing the shop for the serving of customers not later than one o'clock in the afternoon on one weekday in every week. Evans & Co. v. London County Council, 83 L. J. K.B. 1264; [1914] 3 K.B. 315; 111 L. T. 288; 78 J. P. 345; 12 L. G. R. 1079; 24 Cox C.C. 290; 30 T. L. R. 509—D.

Two Closing Orders—Grocers and Provision Dealers Closed on Thursdays—Butchers Closed on Mondays—Dripping Sold both by Butchers and by Grocers—Sale of Dripping by a Butcher on a Thursday.] — Where an article is sold in the ordinary course of two different businesses having different closing days under the Shops Act, 1912, the sale of such article in the ordinary course of one business on a day on which shops in which the other class of business is carried on are closed does not amount to a carrying on of such other business by the vendor of the article so as to render him guilty of an offence against the Shops Act, 1912. Schuch v. Banks, 83 L. J. K.B. 1168; [1914] 2 K.B. 491; 111 L. T. 44; 78 J. P. 229; 12 L. G. R. 512; 24 Cox C.C. 187; 30 T. L. R. 378—D.

No Day Fixed by Order of Local Authority for Half-holiday—Day Agreed upon by Shopkeepers—Change of Day.]—Where no weekly half-holiday order has been made by a local authority and the shopkeepers of a town have themselves fixed the day and specified it in notices affixed in their shops in accordance with section 4, sub-section 3 of the Shops Act, 1912, a change of the day in one week and the reversion in the subsequent week back to the original closing day is a contravention of the sub-section which goes on to enact that "it shall not be lawful for the occupier of a shop to change the day oftener than once in any period of three months." Owen v. Parry, 79 J. P. 64; 12 L. G. R. 1228—D.

Bank Holiday—Christmas Day—Weekday—Two Bank Holidays in One Week.]—H. was employed as an assistant in the appellants' shop on each weekday of the week ending Saturday, December 21, 1912, after half-past one. In the following week he was not employed on Christmas Day or the following day, but was employed on every other weekday of that week after 1.30 P.M. :—Held, it being assumed that Christmas Day was a Bank holiday within the meaning of the Shop Hours Act, 1912, that the expression "Bank holiday" in section 1, sub-section 1, must be read in the singular only; that the expression "weekday" was used in contradistinction to Sunday, and not to holiday; and that therefore the case came within the proviso in sub-section 1, and the appellants could not be convicted of the offence charged. Whether Christmas Day is a Bank holiday within the meaning of the Act, quære. Todd, Burns & Co. v. Dublin Corporation, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 397—K.B. D.

2. Shops.

Railway Bookstall.]—By section 1, sub-section 1 of the Shops Act, 1912, "On at least one weekday in each week a shop assistant shall not be employed about the business of a shop after half-past one o'clock in the afternoon," and by sub-section 4, in case of any contravention of the provisions of the section the occupier of the shop is guilty of an offence against the Act. The respondents were the owners of a railway bookstall which was under the control of one of their clerks. It was a movable structure which would take an hour and a half to take down and fix up again. It was not separately rated. The respondents had affixed to the bookstall the statutory notice stating that Wednesday was taken as the half-holiday. During a particular week the clerk was engaged or otherwise employed at the bookstall on every day of the week and did not take the half-holiday, notwithstanding that the respondents had sent him a notice requiring him to do so :—Held (Phillimore J., and Bankes, J.; Avory, J., dissenting), that, assuming the bookstall to be a "shop" within the meaning of section 19 of the Act, an offence had been committed under section 1, sub-section 1, for which the respondents would be liable unless they could bring themselves within the provisions of section 14 by shewing that the offence had in fact been committed by a "manager, agent, servant, or other person." Ward v. Smith, 82 L. J. K.B. 941; [1913] 3 K.B. 154; 109 L. T. 439; 77 J. P. 370; 11 L. G. R. 741; 23 Cox C.C. 562; 29 T. L. R. 536—D.

Sale by Automatic Machine.]—The shops Act, 1912, enacts by section 4, sub-section 1, that "Every shop shall, . . . be closed for the serving of customers not later than one o'clock in the afternoon on one week day in every week," and by section 9 that "It shall not be lawful in any locality to carry on in any place not being a shop retail trade or business of any class at any time when it would be unlawful in that locality to keep a shop open for the purposes" of such retail trade or business. The respondent, a dairyman, had had affixed to the door of his shop an automatic machine, from which by the insertion of a penny in a slot and the turning of a handle any person in the street outside the shop could obtain milk during the hours in which under the Act the shop had to be closed. The milk thus procured was contained in a reservoir situated within the shop. This reservoir was filled with a supply of milk before the hour of closing, and the attendance of a shop assistant after the closing hour was unnecessary. The door of the shop was locked, and no customer could obtain entrance to the shop. The respondent was summoned for offences, first, under section 4, sub-section 1, and, secondly, under section 9 :—Held, that the place where the sale of milk occurred was a "shop" within the meaning of the Act, and therefore that section 9 had no application. Held, also (Avory, J., dubitante), that as regards section 4, sub-section 1, there was present no element of personal service on a customer which, in view of the object of the Act being to insure a weekly half-holiday for shop assistants, would be necessary before there could be a "serving of customers" within the section, and that, consequently, there was no offence under the section. Willesden Urban Council v. Morgan, 84 L. J. K.B. 373; [1915] 1 K.B. 349; 112 L. T. 423; 79 J. P. 166; 13 L. G. R. 390; 59 S. J. 148; 31 T. L. R. 93—D.

Employment about Business of Shop—"A" Shop.]—Three assistants, employed in one of the shops of Lipton, Lim., of which the appellant was manager, volunteered to distribute handbills in the streets and at houses "in their spare time." Their offer was accepted and they were paid for this service. They in fact distributed the bills on the weekly half-holiday rendered obligatory by the Shops Act, 1912. The bills advertised "Lipton's Margarine Overweight," and contained a statement that "We sell" this margarine at specified prices; but they contained no address of any particular shop or shops :—Held, that the assistants were "employed about the business" of the shop in question within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Act, which prohibits such employment on the said half-holiday, and that the words "a shop" in the sub-section mean the shop in which the assistant in question is an assistant within the meaning of the Act. George v. James, 83 L. J. K.B. 303; [1914] 1 K.B. 278; 110 L. T. 316; 78 J. P. 156; 12 L. G. R. 403; 24 Cox C.C. 48; 30 T. L. R. 230—D.

3. Trading Elsewhere than in Shop.

Carrying on Retail Trade in a Place not a Shop at a Time when it would be Unlawful to Keep a Shop Open.]—The respondent sold groceries on Wednesday afternoon after 1 P.M., in her house, which on all the other days of the week was used solely as an ordinary dwelling house. Under an order made by the local authority all shops to which the order applied were obliged to close for serving customers on Wednesday in each week from 1 P.M., but the order contained a proviso that the occupier of a shop might elect to close his shop for the weekly half-holiday on a Saturday instead of Wednesday. No notice under the Shops Act was affixed to the respondent's house :—Held, that the respondent had committed the offence under section 9, sub-section 1 of the Shops Act, 1912, of carrying on a retail trade in a place not a shop at a time when it would be unlawful to keep a shop open for the purposes of retail trade, and that the fact that the occupier of a shop could elect to close his shop on a Saturday instead of Wednesday afforded no answer to the charge. Cowden v. McEvoy, 83 L. J. K.B. 1249; [1914] 3 K.B. 108; 111 L. T. 549; 24 Cox C.C. 377; 78 J. P. 336; 12 L. G. R. 1216—D.

4. Shop Assistants.

Kitchen Maid in Restaurant—Employment "in connection with the serving of customers" —"Shop"—"Shop assistant."]—The appellant kept a restaurant, and employed a kitchen maid in the kitchen, which was connected with the restaurant and on the same level with it. She attended to the fires, washed the china and dishes, and prepared vegetables for cooking for the customers :—Held, that there was evidence upon which the magistrate could find that the restaurant and the kitchen together formed one shop, and that the kitchen maid was a shop assistant employed about the business of a shop within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Shops Act, 1912, because employed therein in connection with the serving of customers within the meaning of section 19, sub-section 1. Melluish v. London County Council, 83 L. J. K.B. 1165; [1914] 3 K.B. 325; 111 L. T. 539; 24 Cox C.C. 353; 78 J. P. 441; 12 L. G. R. 1086; 30 T. L. R. 527—D.

Licensed Premises—Potman "Person . . . mainly employed . . . in connexion with the serving of customers."]—The appellant, the licensee of licensed premises, employed a potman, who was mainly employed in putting up tables for customers' dinners and taking them down again; cleaning knives in so far as they were for subsequent use at the customers' tables; polishing pewter and copper measures used thereafter for measuring or serving out drinks to customers; collecting glasses, after they had been used by customers, from various parts of the bar for cleaning by the barmen; and cleaning and tidying the premises for use for customers at various times of the day :—Held, that each of these employments was sufficiently proximate to the serving of customers to justify the finding of the magistrate that the potman was employed in connection with the serving of customers, and was therefore a shop assistant within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1, and section 19, sub-section 1 of the Shops Act, 1912, and consequently that the appellant was bound to allow him a half-holiday on one weekday in each week. Prance v. London County Council, 84 L. J. K.B. 623; [1915] 1 K.B. 688; 112 L. T. 820; 79 J. P. 242; 13 L. G. R. 382; 31 T. L. R. 128—D.

5. Exemptions.

Area — Resolution of Local Authority that Area not "unreasonably small" — Majority of Shopkeepers in Favour of Exemption.]—On April 3, 1912, a local authority resolved that area A was unreasonably small for the purposes of an exemption order under section 4, sub-section 4 of the Shops Act, 1912. On June 5 they resolved that area B, which was smaller than and contained within area A, should be exempted. In the latter part of June a poll of the shopkeepers in area B was taken, which resulted in a majority in favour of exemption. On July 3 the local authority rescinded the resolution of June 5, and no exemption order was made. It was contended, in support of a rule nisi ordering the local authority to grant an exemption order, that, there being a time when the two necessary conditions precedent were fulfilled, the local authority were bound to grant an exemption order :—Held, that under the circumstances the Court in its discretion would not issue a mandamus to the local authority to make an exemption order. Rex v. Manchester City Council: Batty, Ex parte, 107 L. T. 617; 77 J. P. 43; 10 L. G. R. 1081; 29 T. L. R. 28 —D.

Exempted Trade — Confectioners Making and Selling Sausages as Incidental to their Main Business — Pork Butchers.] — By the Exempted Shops (Weekly Half-holiday) Bradford Order, 1912, made by the council of that city, the provisions of section 4 of the Shops Act, 1912, were extended to such parts of the retail trade or business of (among others) pork butchers as were exempted by sub-section (6) of that section and the Second Schedule to the Act; and pork butchers were ordered to close their shops on and after 1 P.M. on Wednesday in each week throughout the year. The respondents were confectioners and refreshment-room proprietors, and, besides selling confectionery on and off the premises, made sausages composed of pork, bread, and other materials. On a Wednesday afternoon they sold some pork sausages to a customer, not to be consumed on the premises, and were summoned for keeping their shop open for the trade or business of a pork butcher after 1 P.M., contrary to the statute and the Order : —Held, that the respondents had not contravened the Order. The case was not one of more than one trade carried on in their shop. Upon the findings of the Justices their main trade was that of confectioners—an exempted trade—and as incidental to that trade they sold sausages. By doing so they did not become pork butchers. Margerison v. Wilson, Sale of Run Honey — "Confectionery" — Sale of Butter — "Articles of a perishable nature."]—By section 4, sub-section 1 of the Shops Act, 1912, every shop, save as otherwise provided by the Act, must be closed for the serving of customers not later than one o'clock in the afternoon on one weekday in every week. By sub-section 6 of section 4 the section is not to apply to any shop in which the only business carried on is, under Schedule II., the sale of (inter alia) "confectionery" or "articles of a perishable nature":—Held, that butter is an article of a perishable nature and (Ridley, J., dissentiente) that run honey—that is, honey which has been run from the comb without mixture or any process except extraction—is not confectionery within the meaning of the schedule, and that a shop—in which the notices required by section 10, sub-section 1, and the Shops Regulation Order, 1912, have not been exhibited—selling both these articles was not exempt under sub-section 6. London County Council v. Welford's Surrey Dairies, 82 L. J. K.B. 669; [1913] 2 K.B. 529; 108 L. T. 998; 77 J. P. 206; 11 L. G. R. 831; 23 Cox C.C. 428; 29 T. L. R. 438—D.

"Sale of motor, cycle, and aircraft supplies and accessories to travellers."] —The words "sale of motor, cycle, and aircraft supplies and accessories to travellers" in the Second Schedule of the Shops Act, 1912, refer to the sale of supplies and accessories to travellers relating to motors, cycles, or aircraft, and not to the sale of all supplies and accessories to travellers. Williams v. Gosden, 83 L. Seduction — Wife Living with Husband — Girl Adopted by Wife — Girl Rendering Domestic Services—Right of Wife to Maintain Action.]—The plaintiff, a married woman living with her husband, adopted a girl, who lived in the house and performed the ordinary domestic services. The plaintiff gave the girl 5*s*. a week for pocket money and supplied her with clothes, the plaintiff's husband providing the money. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for the seduction of the girl,—Held, that in order to maintain an action for seduction the relation of master and servant must subsist between the plaintiff and the person seduced, that the domestic services rendered by the girl must be taken to have been rendered to the plaintiff's husband, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the action. Hamilton v. Long ([1903] 2 Ir. R. 407; [1905] 2 Ir. R. 552) approved and followed. Peters v. Jones, 83 L. J. K.B. 1115; [1914] 2 K.B. 781; 110 L. T. 937; 30 T. L. R. 421—Avory, J.

—— Loss of Service — Service at Time of Seduction—Service at Time of Confinement.] —In an action by a father to recover damages for the seduction of his daughter, it appeared that the daughter had been engaged by the defendant's wife as a domestic servant, one of the terms of the employment being that during any absence from home of the defendant's wife the girl was to return to her father's house and remain there unless called on to perform household duties in the defendant's house. During one of these periods of absence she was called to the house by the defendant and there seduced by him. She was subsequently, while in the service of the defendant's wife, confined of a child, the confinement taking place in the defendant's house:—Held, that a verdict directed for the defendant was sustainable—per O'Brien, L.C., on the ground that the girl was not in the service of the plaintiff at the time when the confinement took place; per Cherry, L.J., on the ground that she was not in the plaintiff's service at the time of the seduction; per Holmes, L.J., on either of these grounds. Barnes v. Fox, [1914] 2 Ir. Employing a Person in Breach of His Contract of Service with another Employer — Damages.] — Where A under a contract of service with B for a term of years wrongfully leaves and in breach of the obligation of such contract before the end of the term enters the service of C and is employed by him with a knowledge of A's contract with B, C is liable for the damages occasioned by reason of A leaving his employment and being employed by C, in breach of his agreement with B. De Francesco v. Barnum (No. 2) (60 L. B. Liability of Master.

Negligence of Servant — Scope of Employment—Servant having General Authority to take out Motor Cars belonging to Employer.] —I., the manager of the department for the sale of secondhand motor cars in the defendant firm, while driving on a Saturday evening in a secondhand motor car belonging to the defendants, ran over and killed G. B. In an action by G. B.'s widow against the defendants, under Lord Campbell's Act, evidence was given that I. frequently took out secondhand cars from the department of the business of which he was the manager without accounting to any one for so doing, and that the petrol used by I. in so taking out these cars was charged to the secondhand department of the business. I. admitted that he took out the cars without accounting for so doing, and in his evidence he stated that his being on the road gave him better opportunities for doing business for the firm: that on one or two occasions, of which that of the accident was not one, he had himself paid for the petrol he used in taking out the cars, but that upon the occasion of the accident he was driving solely for his own pleasure. The jury found that at the time of the accident I. was acting within the scope of his employment as the servant of the defendants:—Held, that there was evidence to justify the verdict, and that the defendants were liable. Boyle v. Ferguson, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 489—K.B. D.

Quære, whether, where a servant has a general authority to take out his master's vehicles, not only for the purposes of the master, but also for his own pleasure, it is to be inferred that every user of the vehicles under such general authority is a user by the servant as such within the scope of his employment. Ib.

—— Servant under Control of Manager — Unauthorised Order Given to Servant by Manager—Duty of Servant to Obey Manager —Act Done in Course of Employment.]—A driver in the employment of the defendants, who let out motor cars for hire, was ordered by the defendants' manager to drive him in a car to a named destination on his (the manager's) private business. The manager had no authority, without the permission of the defendants, to give the order in question. The driver was not aware that the manager had given him an order which the latter had no right to give, but it was his duty to obey orders as to driving given by the manager. The driver, whilst carrying out the manager's order, caused injury to the plaintiff by negligent driving. In an action by the plaintiff to recover damages for the injuries sustained by him,—Held, that, it being the duty of the driver to obey an order given by the manager with regard to driving, the negligent act done by him was an act done in the course of his employment, and consequently the defendants were liable for his negligence. Irwin v. Waterloo Taxicab Co., 81 L. J. K.B. 998; [1912] 3 K.B. 588; 107 L. T. 288; 56 S. J. 720; 28 T. L. R. 567—C.A.

—— Motor Omnibus Driven by Conductor—Driver Seated beside Conductor—Duty to Control Driving.]—A motor omnibus belonging to the defendants, having arrived at the end of one of its journeys, was being driven by the conductor to the point at which it was to commence its return journey, and the driver was sitting on the box beside the conductor. Owing to the negligent driving of the conductor the omnibus mounted the pavement and caused personal injuries to the plaintiff, who brought an action against the defendants for damages for these injuries. At the trial the Judge held that the fact that the conductor was driving the omnibus was no evidence that he had authority from the defendants to drive it, that the fact that the driver was sitting beside the conductor was no evidence that he was exercising control over the driving within the scope of his authority as driver, and that there was thus no evidence that the accident had been caused by the negligence of any servant of the defendants acting within the scope of his authority, and he therefore withdrew the case from the jury and gave judgment for the defendants:—Held, on appeal, that the fact that the driver was sitting beside the conductor was some evidence to shew that he was exercising control over the driving within the scope of his authority as driver, that the questions ought to have been left to the jury whether the driver was exercising such control, and whether the accident arose from any failure on his part to exercise such control properly, and that there ought to be a new trial of the action. Ricketts v. Tilling, Lim., 84 L. J. K.B. 342; [1915] 1 K.B. 644; 112 L. T. 137; 31 T. L. R. 17—C.A.

—— Assault by Tramway Conductor — Mistaken Impression.]—A tramway conductor in the employment of the defendants ran after and injured the plaintiff, a boy of nine years of age, under the mistaken impression that he was one of several boys who had been in the habit of jumping on to his car. It was admitted that the act of the conductor was done not to prevent the plaintiff from there and then entering the car or otherwise infringing the defendants' by-laws, or to prevent other boys from doing so, but to punish the plaintiff or other boys who had broken the by-laws with a view to prevent them doing so in the future. The plaintiff sued the defendants to recover damages for the injuries he had received:—Held, that the act of the conductor was not done within the scope of his authority, and therefore that the defendants were not liable. Abrahams v. Deakin (60 L. J. Q.B. 238; [1891] 1 Q.B. 516) followed and applied. Radley v. London County Council, 109 L. T. 162; 11 L. G. R. 1035; 29 T. L. R. 680—D.

—— Passenger in Tramcar Suspected of Avoiding Payment of Fare—Ejected by Conductor — Action for Assault — Liability of Tramway Authority.]—The conductor of a tramcar belonging to the respondents, a tramway authority, thinking that the appellant, a passenger in the car, was attempting to avoid payment of his fare, ejected him from the car with such force that he suffered injuries. The appellant brought an action in the County Court against the respondents, claiming damages for the assault committed on him by their servant. The respondents denied their liability on the ground that sections 51 and 52 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and their by-laws gave them power to detain and bring before a magistrate, who might impose a fine on a person who had committed the offence alleged against the appellant, but that they had no power to eject such a person from a car, and could not therefore delegate the power to eject him to their servant, who had acted outside the scope of his authority:—Held, on appeal, that the remedies given to the respondents by sections 51 and 52 of the Tramways Act, 1870, being in addition to, and not exclusive of, their common law right as owners of the tramcar to eject a trespasser from their property, using no more force than might be necessary for the purpose, the respondents had power to eject from one of their cars a person who refused to pay his fare; that they could delegate that power to a servant; that the tort of the conductor was consequently committed in the course of his service; and that the appellant was therefore entitled to recover his claim against the respondents. Whittaker v. London County Council, 84 L. J. K.B. 1446; [1915] 2 K.B. 676; 79 J. P. 437; 13 L. G. R. 950; 31 T. L. R. 412—D.

—— Knife Left About by Gas Inspector—Injury to Infants.]—The plaintiff, a boy of three or four, was injured while playing with an open knife which had been left about by F., who was a gas inspector and not a repairer of meters, who had been called to the plaintiff's father's house to remedy an automatic gas meter, and had gone away to get proper tools to repair it. In respect of his injuries the plaintiff sued the defendants. The jury found that the inspector ought not reasonably to have anticipated that if he left the knife where he did some such accident as happened might result therefrom; that it was negligence on the inspector's part to leave the knife where he did; that the accident was caused by such negligence; that the act done by the inspector was done by him in the course of his employment; and that those in charge of the plaintiff were not negligent :—Held, that there was no evidence to support the finding that the inspector was acting in the course of his employment, and that the defendants were not liable to the plaintiff. Forsyth v. Manchester Corporation, 107 L. T. 600; 76 J. P. 465; 29 T. L. R. 15—C.A.

—— Person Injured while Assisting Servant—Authority of Servant to Invite Assistance—Emergency.]—The plaintiff, at the invitation of the defendant's servant, got into a cart belonging to the defendant for the purpose of rendering assistance to another servant of the defendant, who had been injured. The servant then negligently caused the horse to start, and the plaintiff was thrown out and injured. The plaintiff claimed damages against the defendant :—Held, that the servant had no implied authority, as the result of the emergency which had occurred, to invite the plaintiff into the cart, and that the defendant was not liable. Cox v. Midland Railway (18 L. J. Ex. 65; sub nom. Cox v. Midland Counties Railway, 3 Ex. 268) followed. Houghton v. Pilkington, 82 L. J. K.B. 79; [1912] 3 K.B. 308; 107 L. T. 235; 56 S. J. 633; 28 T. L. R. 492—D.

—— Contractor and Sub-contractor—Injury by Negligent Act of Sub-contractor's Servant—Liability of Contractor.]—The defendants were employed to erect certain premises, and the contract involved the employment by the defendants of sub-contractors to execute the special work of putting metallic casements into the windows. While one of these casements was being put in, an iron tool was placed by a servant of the sub-contractors on the window sill; and the casement having been blown to by the wind, the tool fell and struck the plaintiff, who was passing along the street. The tool was not placed on the window sill in the normal course of doing the work which the sub-contractors were employed to do. The plaintiff sued the defendants, claiming damages in respect of his injuries :—Held, that the injuries were caused to the plaintiff by an act of collateral negligence on the part of a workman who was a servant of the sub-contractors and not of the defendants, and that the latter were therefore not liable for the consequences of that negligence. Padbury v. Holliday and Greenwood, 28 T. L. R. 494—C.A.

Liability of Corporation for Slander by Servant—Scope of Employment—Relevancy of Averments.]—An employer is not liable in damages for the conduct of a servant which is outside the scope of the servant's employment. A rate collector of the appellants, in demanding payment of an instalment of rates due by the respondent's husband, requested the production of the receipts of the previous instalments. These were shewn, and the collector, in the presence of a third person, said that one of the receipts had been fraudulently altered :—Held, that this statement was not a relevant averment in an action for slander against the corporation, it being no part of a rate collector's duty to express an opinion of the conduct of the persons with whom he had to deal in the course of his work. Glasgow Corporation v. Lorimer, 80 L. J. P.C. 175; [1911] A.C. 209; 104 L. T. 354—H.L. (Sc.)

Fraud of Servant.]—A master is not liable in respect of the fraudulent appropriation of money by his servant unless the servant had actual authority from the master to accept the money, or the master has held out the servant as having such authority and the person entrusting the money to the servant reasonably believed the servant to have authority and relied upon it. Terrill v. Parker, 32 T. L. R. 48—Lush, J.

Dishonest Servant—Ratification of Acts.]—Ratification of the acts of a dishonest servant must be presumed when the master has had cause to suspect the servant's honesty and has refrained from making full enquiry into the facts. Morison v. London County and Westminster Bank, 83 L. Unauthorised Post-mortem Examination.]—In an action of damages brought against a doctor by the widow and children of a deceased miner the pursuers averred—first, that the defender had made an unauthorised post-mortem examination of the body of the deceased; and secondly, that in consequence of the method in which it had been performed and of certain other actings of the defender, difficulty, delay, and expense had been incurred in prosecuting a claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Some of the pursuers were not persons entitled to compensation under the Act:—Held, that while the action was competent in so far as founded on the wrong done to all the pursuers jointly by the unauthorised post-mortem examination, it was incompetent in so far as founded on the second wrong, which affected certain of them only. Hughes v. Robertson, [1913] S. Fees — Custom to Attend Family of Deceased Medical Man without Fee.]—Although there is not a binding custom, there is a very general practice among medical men not to charge the widow and children of a deceased medical man for attendance. If, therefore, a doctor intends to charge in such a case he must say so, and thus give the patient the opportunity of declining his services and of going to another doctor who will not charge. Corbin v. Stewart, 28 T. 2. DENTISTS.

See also Vol. IX. 1000, 2342.

Unregistered Person—Description—Using Name or Title Implying Registration.]—By section 3 of the Dentists Act, 1878, "a person shall not be entitled to take or use the name or title of 'dentist' . . . or of 'dental practitioner,' or any name, title, addition, or description implying that he is registered under this Act or that he is a person specially qualified to practise dentistry, unless he is registered under this Act." The appellant, a schoolmaster under the London County Council, went to a dental institute carried on by the respondent, an unregistered person, and shewed an operator there a form which he had received from the Council stating that it would be necessary for the appellant to obtain a dental certificate shewing that his teeth were in a satisfactory condition, and concluding with the words "only the certificate of a Registered Dentist can be accepted." The appellant had some teeth extracted. Two days afterwards he went again to the institute and saw the respondent, to whom he handed the form. The respondent stated that he had granted hundreds of such certificates and that he would give the appellant the certificate required when he returned on a subsequent date. The respondent did not in writing or orally use the name or title of dentist. Upon an information charging the respondent with an offence under section 3 of the Dentists Act, 1878, the magistrate declined to convict:—Held, that there was evidence that the respondent had used a name, title, or description implying that he was registered under the Act, and that the magistrate ought to have convicted him. Robertson v. Hawkins, 82 L. J. K.B. 97; [1913] 1 K.B. 57; 107 L. T. 795; 77 J. P. 63; 23 Cox C.C. 239; 29 T. L. R. 32—D.

—— "The United Dental Service, Limited" —Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies—Discretion to Register.]—Application was made to the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies to register the memorandum and articles of association of a company called "The United Dental Service, Limited," which proposed to carry on the business of practitioners in dentistry. The signatories to the memorandum and articles were all unregistered practitioners in dentistry. The Registrar refused to register, on the ground that the object of the company was not lawful:—Held, that the words "United Dental Service" were not a description implying that the persons using it were qualified by diploma, &c., to be or were registered under the Dentists Act, 1878, and that, consequently, the object of the company was not unlawful. Held, further, that the Registrar had no discretion to refuse to register, on the ground that, even though not unlawful, the title of the company was calculated to mislead the public into the belief that the persons using the title were so qualified. Bellerby v. Heyworth (79 L. Description—Unqualified Person—Description of Business Premises — "Canine surgery."]—By section 17, sub-section 1 of the Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1881, "If . . . any person, other than a person who for the time being is on the register of veterinary surgeons, or who at the time of the passing of this Act held the veterinary certificate of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland, takes or uses . . . any name, title, addition, or description stating that he is a veterinary surgeon or a practitioner of veterinary surgery or of any branch thereof, or is specially qualified to practise the same, he shall be liable to a fine. . . .'' The respondent, who had neither of the specified qualifications, exhibited over the door of his premises a red-glass lamp on which were the words " A. E. Kennard, Canine Surgery " :—Held, that the words so used were merely a description of the respondent's premises, and did not amount to a statement that he was " specially qualified to practise " veterinary surgery within the meaning of the sub-section. Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons v. Kennard, 83 L. C. PHARMACY ACTS.

Poisons—Insecticide—Sale by Unlicensed Assistant of Qualified Person.]—The effect of section 2 of the Poisons and Pharmacy Act, 1908, is to add to the category of persons who may sell poisons persons licensed by a local authority under that section, but it does not confer upon an unlicensed assistant of such a licensed person the right to sell a poisonous substance mentioned in the section on behalf of his master. Pharmaceutical Society v. Nash, 80 L. —— Sale in Unlabelled Receptacle by Person Registered by Local Authority — Civil Liability of Person Selling.]—Where a person who is licensed by a local authority under the Poisons and Pharmacy Act, 1908, to sell poisonous substances to be used exclusively in agriculture or horticulture sells such substances in breach of the regulations made under section 2 of that Act, by selling them in receptacles not duly labelled, he may be sued in the County Court, under section 15 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868, for the statutory penalty or sum of 5*l.* imposed by that section in respect of the sale of poison by an unregistered person. Pharmaceutical Society v. Jacks, 80 L. D. MIDWIVES.

See also Vol. IX. 2347.

Removal of Name from Roll — Midwife Alleged to be Living in Adultery — " Misconduct " — Hearing by Central Midwives Board — Evidence Considered in Breach of Statutory Rules.]—Misconduct in a midwife within the meaning of section 3, V. of the Midwives Act, 1902, justifying the removal of her name from the roll of midwives, is not confined to misconduct in the discharge of her duties as a midwife, but must be such as in the opinion of the Central Midwives Board tends to unfit her for the performance of those duties. Hence, to live in adultery may be such misconduct, and the board is the body most fit to deal with each case as it arises. Stock v. Central Midwives Board, 84 L. J. K.B. 1835; [1915] 3 K.B. 756; 113 L. T. 428; 79 J. P. 397; 13 L. G. R. 1227; 31 T. L. R. 436—D.

The board, in dealing with a charge of misconduct against a midwife, considered evidence in her absence which was not, as required by the rules made by them under section 3, I. (a) of the Act, verified by statutory declaration, and of which no copy had been served on her; and, influenced by that evidence, removed her name from the roll of midwives :—Held, that the decision could not stand. Ib.

Semble, an appeal from the decision of the board to the High Court under section 4 of the Act is as full a right of appeal as is given by any statute to the Court, and the Court is absolutely unfettered in any investigations it may think it right to make on such an appeal. Ib.

Devise to Widow for Life — Remainder to Son—Executory Gift over on Death of Son—Conveyance of Life Interest to Son—Death of Son in Lifetime of his Mother.]—A testator devised a farm to his widow for life, with remainder to his son in fee, with an executory gift over in case his son died unmarried in the lifetime of his mother. The widow conveyed her life interest to her son, who afterwards died unmarried in the lifetime of his mother :—Held, that the fact that the executory gift over took effect before the determination of the life estate did not prevent a merger, and that there had been a merger both at law and in equity. Attkins, In re; Life v. Attkins, 83 L. J. Ch. 183; [1913] 2 Ch. 619; 109 L. T. 155; 57 S. J. 785—Eve, J.

Extinguishment of Charge on Inheritance—Estate for Life and Ultimate Remainder in Fee—Interposed Contingent Remainder in Favour of Issue—Possibility of Issue Extinct.] —Lands were limited by will to A for life, with remainder to her issue as she should appoint, with remainder as she should appoint generally, with an ultimate remainder to A in fee. On the testator's death A also became absolutely entitled to a charge on the lands. A died a spinster, aged over seventy years, having by her will devised her real estate and bequeathed her personal estate to different persons without mention of the charge, and without having indicated any intention during her life either to keep the charge subsisting or to extinguish it:—Held, that A had, at the date of her death, such an estate in the lands as to admit of the making of the presumption that the charge had become extinguished, and that, as it was a matter of indifference to her during her life whether the charge was kept subsisting or not, the presumption of extinguishment should be made. Toppin's Estate, In re, [1915] 1 Ir. R. 330—C.A.

Settled Land—Incumbrances—Payment off by Tenant for Life out of Income—Intention to Keep Charge Alive.]—In 1904 the plaintiff became entitled as tenant in tail to the family estates, which were subject to heavy incumbrances. With his consent a considerable part of the income was applied in the reduction of the charges. In February, 1909, the plaintiff came of age and disentailed and re-settled the estate, becoming the first tenant for life. The same course as to payment off of incumbrances out of income was continued:—Held, that the presumption in favour of a limited owner who pays off incumbrances had not been rebutted, and that the payments out of income were a charge on the inheritance in favour of the plaintiff. Williams v. Williams-Wynn, 84 L. Borough Council Officer—Superannuation—Person "designated an officer in an established capacity by a resolution of the Council"—Warrant Officer—Absence of Resolution "designating" him an Officer—Eligibility for Pension.] — The St. Marylebone Borough Council (Superannuation) Act, 1908, provides a scheme under which every officer of the council who shall have completed a certain length of service or attained a certain age shall be entitled to a superannuation allowance. By section 2: "Officer" is defined to mean "every officer in the service of the Council designated an officer in an established capacity by a resolution of the Council passed or to be passed." In 1876 the plaintiff was, by a resolution of the vestry of the parish of St. Marylebone, the defendants' predecessors, appointed the broker to execute warrants of distress for the recovery of the parochial rates, and acted in that capacity for many years. In 1899 the powers of the vestry were transferred to the defendants by the London Government Act, 1899, and the plaintiff passed into their service as an officer to collect rates. From time to time resolutions were passed by the council, and entered in their minutes, in which the plaintiff was referred to as their warrant officer. The plaintiff, on leaving the defendants' employment, claimed to be entitled to a pension under the Act of 1908, as being an officer within the meaning of section 2 :—Held, that the word "designated" in section 2 did not mean "incidentally referred to," but meant "pointed out with particularity," and that, in the absence of any resolution designating the plaintiff an officer in an established capacity, he was not entitled to participate in the superannuation scheme. Newton v. Marylebone Borough Council, 84 L. B. TRANSFER OF AREAS.

Adjustment—Transfer of Statutory Liability to Contribute to Maintenance of Bridge.]—By section 46 of the Metropolitan Street Improvement Act, 1883, the expenses of the maintenance, &c., of a certain footbridge over the Grand Junction Canal in a detached portion of the parish of St. Luke, Chelsea, were to be borne as to three-sixths by the vestry of that parish, as to two-sixths by the vestry of the parish of Kensington, and as to one-sixth by the vestry of the parish of Paddington. Under the London Government Act, 1899, the parishes became Metropolitan boroughs, and as from the appointed day, November 9, 1900, the property and liabilities of the vestries were transferred to the borough councils. By the London (Chelsea Detached) Order in Council, 1900, a portion of the detached part of Chelsea in which the footbridge with its approaches was situated was annexed to the Metropolitan borough of Paddington, and the remainder was annexed to the royal borough of Kensington. In 1903 by a scheme of adjustment between the Paddington and Chelsea Borough Council, to which the Kensington Council was not a party, and which did not refer to the footbridge, all property belonging to the former vestry of Chelsea within the area annexed to the borough of Paddington was transferred to the council of that borough :—Held, that by section 4 of the London Government Act, 1899, which was distributive in its operation, the property and liabilities in and relating to the footbridge were, apart from the adjustment scheme of 1903, transferred to the Paddington Borough Council as from November 7, 1900; and consequently that the right to receive contribution towards the expenses of the footbridge was vested in the Paddington Borough Council, and the liability of the former Kensington Vestry to contribute two-sixths of those expenses was transferred to the Kensington Borough Council, and that the latter council must therefore pay to the former the same proportion of the expenses. Paddington Borough Council v. Kensington Borough Council, 105 L. C. JURISDICTION.

1. STREETS.

Power to Take Part of a House for Widening.]—Part only of a house cannot be taken against the wish of the owner for the purpose of street widening under the provisions of the Metropolitan Paving Act, 1817, where such taking will substantially interfere with the enjoyment of the house by the owner and destroy the identity of the premises. Where the tenant is willing to allow a part to be taken, but the freeholder wishes the whole house to be taken, the wishes and intentions of the freeholder must be taken into account by the local authority. Gibbon v. Paddington Vestry (69 L. J. Ch. 746; [1900] 2 Ch. 794) followed. Beyfus v. Westminster Corporation, 84 L. J. Ch. 838; 112 L. T. 119; 79 J. P. 111; 13 L. G. R. 40; 59 S. J. 129—Sargant, J.

—— House—Notice to Take Part—Injunction—"Necessary."]—When a local authority, acting under the powers conferred upon it by Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, is acquiring property for the purpose of street widening it is competent to that authority to adjudge that the purchase of a part only of a house is necessary for the purpose of the widening. But in order to justify the taking of a part only the facts must be such that persons acting in a quasi-judicial capacity can honestly come to the conclusion that it is unnecessary to take the whole. There is no reason for confining the word "necessary" in section 80 of Michael Angelo Taylor's Act to physical necessity. The wishes and intention of the owner as well as the physical condition of the house may be circumstances to be taken into account by the authority in making its adjudication. Davies v. London Corporation, 82 L. J. Ch. 286; [1913] 1 Ch. 415; 108 L. T. 546; 77 J. P. 294; 11 L. G. R. 595; 57 S. J. 341; 29 T. L. R. 315—Warrington, J.

—— House Used as Factory.]—In order to justify a local authority in taking part only of premises (instead of the whole premises) under the powers conferred on them by sections 80 and 82 of the Metropolitan Paving Act, 1817, it is necessary for them to shew that the taking of the part will not substantially injure the use of the premises as at present actually enjoyed. It is not sufficient for them to shew merely that what remains of the premises can still possibly be used in a similar manner, though perhaps on a diminished scale. Green v. Hackney Corporation, 80 L. J. Ch. 16; [1910] 2 Ch. 105; 102 L. T. 722; 74 J. P. 278; 9 L. G. R. 427—Neville, J.

—— Proviso Against Interference with Main Structure—Destruction of Access to Chapel.]—By section 18 of the London County Council (Tramways and Improvements) Act, 1913, the Council were given power in connection with certain street improvements to take the parts of properties specified in the Third Schedule to the Act without being required or compelled to purchase the whole of such properties, but there was a proviso that the section was not to "entitle the Council to take or interfere with the main structure of any house, building or manufactory." Under this section the Council served notice to treat for the acquisition of the "forecourt, walls, gates and railings" of a Baptist chapel specified in the Third Schedule. The result of the taking of this forecourt and the lowering of its level for the purpose of a street widening would be to make access to the chapel impossible without extensive alterations to the main structure:—Held, that the taking of the forecourt amounted to an interference with the main structure of the chapel, and that section 18 of the special Act was therefore inapplicable, and that the Council could not acquire compulsorily the lands specified in the notice without taking the whole building. Genders v. London County Council, 84 L. Paving—Power of Local Authority to Alter Width of Carriage-way and Footway.] — A local authority in the formation of a new street under section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, has no power to alter the dedication of the road by altering the width of the carriage-way or footways forming such street. Robertson v. Bristol Corporation (69 L. 2. Buildings.

a. General Line.

See also Vol. IX. 1069, 2376.

Buildings Erected before 1894 beyond General Line with Consent.] — A consent given by the Metropolitan Board of Works, predecessors of the London County Council, to transgress the general building line does not alter that line or prevent the refusal of consent in the future—each consent being an exception and assuming that the building line remains. Fleming v. London County Council; Metropolitan Railway v. London County Council, 80 L. J. K.B. 35; [1911] A.C. 1; 103 L. T. 466; 8 L. G. R. 1055; 75 J. P. 9; 55 S. J. 28—H.L. (E.)

A road in London was laid out under an Act of 1756, which provided that no buildings should be erected on new foundations in the road within fifty feet of the highway. That provision continued in force down to the passing of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), which provided by section 75 that no building should, without the consent in writing of the Metropolitan Board of Works, be erected beyond the general line of buildings in any street in case the distance of such line from the highway did not exceed fifty feet. Before 1862 a line of buildings had in fact been erected on the north side of a part of the road in question at a distance of about fifty feet back from the roadway, and in front of these buildings, on what had been originally their forecourts, another discontinuous row of buildings had been erected, there being no evidence to shew that these latter buildings were erected on old foundations which had existed before 1756. In 1867 the Metropolitan Board of Works passed a resolution approving and adopting a line of frontage in that part of the road almost corresponding to the actual frontage of the existing projecting buildings, and coming up to eleven feet from the roadway; and for some years that resolution was acted upon, and buildings were erected upon that line. Subsequently the London County Council, the successors of the Metropolitan Board of Works, required the superintending architect to define the general line of buildings in that part of the road under the London Building Act, 1894:—Held, that, in fixing the general line of buildings, he was entitled to disregard and treat as non-existent the buildings brought up to the inner line. London County Council v. Clode, 84 L. Building Erected on Railway Company's Land—Powers Conferred by Special Act of Parliament for Railway Purposes—Exemption from General Provisions.]—By their special Act of 1866 the appellants were empowered to enter upon, take, and use (inter alia) two houses in Euston Road as they might require them for the purposes of their Acts. In 1867 the appellants purchased those houses, and in 1882 placed on the forecourts thereof a ventilating shaft. By their special Act of 1898 the appellants were empowered to enter upon, take, and use a large number of lands, including the two houses in Euston Road, and to make and maintain thereon openings and other works for the purpose of ventilating their railway. That Act also contained a provision that nothing therein contained should authorise the erection of any building beyond the general building line without the consent of the respondents. In 1909 the appellants erected on the forecourts of the said two houses in Euston Road, and on the site of the ventilating shaft which was done away with, an accumulator shed in which were placed accumulators used in connection with the electrical signalling on their railway. This was erected beyond the general building line without the respondents' consent. In proceedings against the appellants for contravening section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894, by the erection of the accumulator shed, the magistrate found as a fact that the accumulators used therein were used for railway purposes, but he was of opinion that the appellants were not protected by section 31 of the London Building Act, 1894, and he accordingly convicted the appellants :—Held, that the accumulator shed was erected by the appellants under powers conferred upon them by their special Act of 1866 for railway purposes, and therefore that they were protected by section 31 of the London Building Act, 1894. Metropolitan Railway v. London County Council, 82 L. J. K.B. 542; [1913] 2 K.B. 249; 108 L. T. 420; 77 J. P. 190; 11 L. G. R. 494; 29 T. L. R. 361—D.

Meaning of "Structure" — Projections from Building — Open Ironwork and Glass Advertisement Frame Tailed into Wall of Building.] — For advertising purposes the appellants without the consent of the London County Council had placed immediately over the main entrance to their premises in Oxford Street an open iron framework filled in at the sides and centre with glass and illuminated by electric lamps. This framework weighed 15 cwt., and two stay rods supporting part of its weight were "tailed" or fastened by plugs and cement into holes cut in the wall of the building. It measured eighteen feet from side to side, five feet four inches from front to back, and one foot eight inches from top to bottom. It was sixteen feet above the pavement, and projected some five feet six inches beyond the general line of buildings. It was found by a Metropolitan police magistrate that this framework was a "structure" within section 22, sub-section 1 of the London Building Act, 1894, and also a "projection" within section 73, sub-section 8, and had become part of the main building by the way in which it had been "tailed" into the wall; and he therefore convicted the appellants on information charging them with having contravened those enactments :—Held, affirming the convictions, that there was evidence upon which the magistrate could find, as he did, that the framework was part of the main building and not merely something hanging on it, and that he had not misdirected himself, but had addressed his mind to the right facts, in taking into consideration the weight of the frame, the strength and rigidity of the iron rods supporting the structure, and the permanent character of the "tailing" adopted in fastening them to the wall of the main building. Pears v. London County Council, 105 L. Appeals to Tribunal of Appeal—Statement of Separate Case for Opinion of the Court on Each Appeal.]—Where several appeals have been made to the tribunal of appeal by owners of different properties on one side of a street, against a general building line defined for that side of the street by the certificate of the superintending architect, the tribunal can in their discretion state separate Cases for the opinion of the High Court under section 182 of the London Building Act, 1894, in respect of each of such appeals, and need not state one Case, and one only, with respect to the whole of the appeals. Rex v. Tribunal of Appeal; London County Council, Ex parte, 76 J. b. Notice to Set Back.

Forecourt or other Space—Old Wall.]—The London County Council has no power under section 3, sub-section 1 of the London Building Act, 1894 (Amendment) Act, 1898, to serve a notice on the owner or occupier of land, who has erected a new building thereon, to set back an old boundary wall which forms the boundary of the forecourt or space then created between the new building and the street, so that it shall be at not less than the prescribed distance from the centre of the roadway of the street. Rea v. London County Council, 80 L. c. Party Walls.

External Wall — Wall a Party Wall for Portion of its Height.]—Under the London Building Act, 1894, a wall which is used for the separation of adjoining buildings is a party wall for such part of the height of the wall as is so used; and therefore a wall may be a party wall as to a portion, but cease to be a party wall as to the rest, of its height. London, Gloucestershire, and North Hants Dairy Co. v. Morley, 80 L. Defect — Damp — Past History of Party Structure.] — The right conferred on the building owner by section 88 of the London Building Act, 1894, is confined to making good the party structure so as to make it effective in those respects in which it is defective for the purposes for which it is actually used or intended to be used. Dampness in a wall is not a "defect" within the meaning of the Act unless its existence renders the wall less effective for such purposes. The previous history and user of the wall ought not to be taken into consideration. Work entailing inconvenience on the adjoining owner ought not to be directed if it is possible to direct other works equally effective, and not involving considerable extra cost, which would cause no such inconvenience. Barry v. Minturn, 82 L. Means of Escape from Fire — Conditional Approval of Plans — Failure to Appeal — Refusal of Certificate—Appeal to Tribunal of Appeal — Jurisdiction to Determine Reasonableness of Condition.]—On an appeal from the refusal of the London County Council to issue a certificate that a building which is within the provisions of section 7 of the London Building Acts (Amendment) Act, 1905, has been provided with means of escape therefrom in case of fire in accordance with plans approved by the London County Council (subject to compliance with certain conditions), or (on appeal) by the tribunal of appeal, the tribunal of appeal has jurisdiction only to enquire whether means of escape have been provided in fact in accordance with the approved plans and conditions, and, where the means actually provided are not in accordance therewith, has no jurisdiction to enquire whether the building has been provided with all such means of escape therefrom in case of fire as can reasonably be required under the circumstances of the case. London County Council v. Clark, 81 L. —— Means of Access to Roof—Public House Fronting Two Streets—Main Front—Projecting Shops — "Dwelling house occupied as such by not more than two families"—Members of Public House Staff.]—A fully licensed public house had an elevation of four storeys above the basement. Nearly the whole of the ground floor was used as a bar. There were two sitting rooms on the first floor and six bedrooms on the second and third floors. The house was inhabited by thirteen persons—namely, the tenant, his wife, three children, their servant, and the seven members of the public house staff—all of whom slept and had their meals there. Upon a summons for failing to comply with the requirements of section 12 of the London Building Acts (Amendment) Act, 1905, the magistrate held that the public house did not come within section 12 of the Act of 1905, because it was "a dwelling house occupied as such by not more than two families," inasmuch as the thirteen persons formed only one family:—Held, that upon the facts the decision of the magistrate was right, inasmuch as it was impossible to draw any distinction between the servant of the tenant and the members of the public house staff, and to say that the latter were not equally members of the same "family" as the former. London County Council v. Cannon Brewery Co., 80 L. Erection as a Public Elementary School—Building Notice — "Provision in local Act dealing with construction of new buildings."] —Section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894, provides that, when a building or structure is about to be begun, then two clear days before it is begun the builder or other person causing or directing the work to be executed shall serve on the district surveyor a building notice respecting the building or structure as therein prescribed. Section 200, sub-section 11, provides that any person who, being a person who ought to serve a building notice, fails to do so is liable to a penalty. Section 3 of the Education (Administrative Provisions) Act, 1911, enacts that the provisions of any by-laws made by any local authority under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as amended by any other Act, with respect to new buildings (including provisions as to the giving of notices and deposit of plans and sections), and any provisions in any local Act dealing with the construction of new buildings, shall not apply to the case of any new buildings being school premises to be erected, or erected, according to plans which are required to be and have been approved by the Board of Education. A firm of builders, in pursuance of a contract made by them with the London County Council as the education authority for the County of London for the erection of some new buildings to be erected as a public elementary school according to plans approved by the Board of Education, commenced the work without giving any notice thereof in accordance with section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894, and were convicted under section 200, sub-section 11 of that Act for failing to give notice:—Held, that section 145 of that Act was a "provision in a local Act dealing with the construction of new buildings " within the meaning of section 3 of the Education (Administrative Provisions) Act, 1911, and did not apply to the buildings in question. The conviction, therefore, was wrong. Holliday & Greenwood v. District Surveyors' Association, 83 L. J. K.B. 1482; [1914] 2 K.B. 803; 110 L. T. 983; 78 J. P. 262; 12 L. G. R. 633; 30 T. L. Public Elementary Schools Added to by London County Council—District Surveyor's Duties and Fees—New Building.] — The exemption of education authorities in section 3 of the Education (Administrative Provisions) Act, 1911, as regards the giving of notice to the district surveyor in respect of new buildings, being school premises, does not extend to alterations or additions to old buildings such as the remodelling of the infants' department of a public elementary school: and a district surveyor, having received a building notice under section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894, which imposes duties upon him in respect of such an alteration, is consequently entitled to the fees provided for him under section 154 and Schedule III., Parts I. and III. of that Act. Galbraith v. Dicksee (102 L. T. 890; 8 L. G. R. 800, 869) applied. Akers v. Daubney, 79 J. P. 516; 13 L. G. R. 1201—D.

Semble, that if a case should occur in which the notice served on the district surveyor imposed no duties upon him whatever, he could not, by reason of the service of such a notice on him, recover fees. Ib.

Erection of Hoarding — Licence — School Premises Approved by Board of Education—Exemption from Necessity for Licence.] — Section 121 of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, enacts that a person building, taking down, or repairing any building, in cases where the footway is thereby obstructed or rendered inconvenient, shall erect a hoarding to the satisfaction of the borough council. By section 122 it shall not be lawful to erect in any street any hoarding " for any purpose whatever " without the licence first had and obtained of the borough council :—Held, that a person erecting a hoarding under the mandatory provisions of section 121 must first obtain the licence of the borough council. Higgs & Hill, Lim. v. Stepney Borough Council, 83 L. J. K.B. 294; [1914] 1 K.B. 505; 110 L. T. 377; 78 J. P. 134; 12 L. G. R. 395; 30 T. L. R. 198—D.

Section 3 of the Education (Administrative Provisions) Act, 1911, enacts that any provision in any local Act (which it was admitted that the Act of 1855 was) dealing with the construction of new buildings shall not apply in the case of any new buildings being school premises erected according to plans approved by the Board of Education (which the building in question was) :—Held, that the section did not apply to exempt the appellants from the necessity of obtaining a licence for the erection of a hoarding, as the provisions of sections 121 and 122 of the Act of 1855 did not deal with the construction of new buildings, but only with the consequences to the public arising from the construction of new buildings. Ib.

g. Dangerous Structures.

Uninhabited — Structure not Adjoining Highway—Structure Temporarily Shored up by Local Authority—Structure not Dangerous Owing to Shoring—Structure Dangerous only to Trespassers — Ruinous and Neglected Structure.] — Two buildings in a row in Islington, which were separated from the highway by a forecourt and were uninhabited, were certified by the district surveyor under sections 103 and 105 of the London Building Act, 1894, to be dangerous structures. The London County Council caused each of the buildings to be temporarily shored up. Notice was served upon the owners under section 106 of the Act to execute certain specified repairs, which, however, were not carried out. The County Council thereupon took proceedings against the owners under section 107 to enforce compliance with the notice. The magistrate found as a fact that the premises were not dangerous at the moment owing to the fact that they had been temporarily shored up, and that apart from the shoring they were not dangerous to any persons except to trespassers. He held that the buildings were not dangerous structures, and refused to make any order on the owners to carry out the works specified :—Held, that the fact that the buildings were not at the moment dangerous owing to the temporary shoring did not prevent them from being " dangerous structures " within the meaning of the Act; that a building might be at the same time both a ruinous and neglected structure and also a " dangerous structure "; that it was not necessary that a building should be dangerous to any person in order that it should be a " dangerous structure," but that it was sufficient if there was a possibility of danger to person or property arising from the fall of the structure; that a building might be a " dangerous structure " even though the only person to whom it might be dangerous was a trespasser. London County Council v. Jones, 81 L. J. K.B. 948; [1912] 2 K.B. 504; 106 L. T. 872; 76 J. P. 293; 10 L. G. R. 471—D.

Party Wall a Dangerous Structure—Magistrate's Order to Pull Down—Compliance therewith—Building Owner and Adjoining Owner—Right of Building Owner to Contribution.] — Section 90, sub-section 1 of the London Building Act, 1894, provides that a building owner shall not, except (inter alia) in cases where any wall is dangerous (in which case the provisions of Part IX. of the Act shall apply), exercise any of his rights under the Act in relation to any party wall, unless at least two months before doing so he has served on the adjoining owner a party wall notice, stating the value and particulars of the proposed work, and the time at which the work is proposed to be commenced. In the course of rebuilding a house of which the plaintiffs were the building owners within the meaning of the above statute, they were served with a magistrate's order to pull down the party wall as being a dangerous structure, which they did, and, presumably under the powers of section 88, sub-sections 2, 6, or 7 contained in Part VIII. of the Act, rebuilt it, but higher and thicker than the old one, and without complying with the provisions of section 91 contained in Part VIII. of the Act as to the settlement of any difference which might arise in the rebuilding thereof between the plaintiffs and the defendant, the adjoining owner. In an action in which the plaintiffs claimed contribution for a share of the expenses incurred in pulling down and rebuilding the party wall, —Held, first, that, as the building owner and adjoining owner were each liable under Part IX. of the Act for the expenses of pulling down the party wall, the plaintiffs' claim for contribution for such expenses succeeded; but secondly, that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs had not complied with the above provisions of Part VIII. of the Act, their claim for contribution for expenses in rebuilding the party wall failed. Spiers & Sons, Lim. v. Troup, 84 L. Sewer or Drain — Order for Combined Drainage—Order not Carried Out—Notice to Builder to make Drains in Accordance with Approved Plan—Work Carried Out by Local Authority—Liability of Purchaser to Repair Combined Drain.]—A sewer vests in a local authority only for the purpose of enabling that authority to perform the duty imposed upon it, and if at any time that duty is shifted from the local authority to an individual and the pipe ceases to be a sewer, it also ceases to be vested in the local authority, notwithstanding that the statute which imposes the duty on the local authority contains no divesting clause. Kershaw v. Smith, 82 L. J. K.B. 791; [1913] 2 K.B. 455; 108 L. T. 650; 77 J. P. 297; 11 L. G. R. 519—D.

In 1884 an order was made by the vestry of a Metropolitan parish, on the application of the builder, for the drainage of twelve houses by a combined operation according to a plan which was approved by the vestry; seven houses were to be drained into one sewer and five houses into another sewer, the drainage from one of the groups of houses being carried by a combined drain passing under one of the houses, No. 178, into the public sewer. In 1887 No. 178 was purchased by S., and was subsequently assigned to the respondents for valuable consideration and without notice that the drainage was in contravention of the approved plan. In 1912 the local authority discovered that the drainage of the houses had not been carried out in accordance with the approved plan, the houses being grouped differently and the drainage from a workshop and certain gullies being without the permission of the local authority drained into the combined drain passing under No. 178, that line of pipes being thereby converted from a drain into a sewer. The local authority served upon the original builder of the twelve houses a notice under section 83 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, requiring him to cause the drains of the twelve houses to be altered in accordance with the approved plans. As the builder did not comply with the notice the local authority themselves carried out the work, disconnecting the drain from the workshop and gullies and bringing the drainage of the twelve houses into conformity with the approved plan. The local authority then served upon the respondents a notice under section 85 of the Act of 1855 requiring them to take up the combined drain under No. 178 and remedy a nuisance therein :—Held, by Ridley, J., and Avory, J. (Pickford, J., dissenting), that after the work had been carried out by the local authority under section 83 of the Act of 1855, the combined drain passing under No. 178, which by the wrongful act of the builder had become a sewer, was re-converted into a drain, and thereupon ceased to be vested in the local authority, and that therefore the respondents were liable to a penalty under section 64 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, for not complying with the notice served upon them under section 85 of the Act of 1855. St. Leonard, Shoreditch (Vestry) v. Phelan (65 L. —— Pipe Carrying Internal Drainage of One House and Rain Water from Roofs of Adjoining Houses.]—A pipe (not being a drain for the drainage of a block of houses by combined operation) which carries off the internal drainage of one house only, but which also receives and carries off the rain water from the roofs of the adjoining houses on either side, is a sewer and not a drain within section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. Silles v. Fulham Borough Council (72 L. "Combined drains"—Application and Payment for Communication between Drain and Sewer.]—In the absence of any minutes of a Metropolitan local authority with respect to the drainage of a group or block of houses by a combined operation, the production of a written application of January 28, 1858, addressed by a building owner to the local authority (then the vestry) to connect up the drainage of his group or block of houses to their sewer, coupled with an entry in the vestry's cash book of February 8, 1858, of payment to the vestry by the building owner of the cost of their having made the connection, is enough to shew that the method of the system of drainage was within the knowledge of the vestry through its officials, and to allow the inference to be drawn that the vestry had sanctioned the application, and that therefore the houses had been drained by a combined operation by order of the vestry, so as to prevent the combined drain from being a "sewer" vested in the local authority. The principle laid down in High v. Billings (1 L. G. R. 723), Geen v. Newington Vestry (67 L. J. Q.B. 557; [1898] 2 Q.B. 1), and Bateman v. Poplar District Board of Works (56 L. J. Soil Pipe—Construction of.]—A by-law of the London County Council required that a person who provided a soil pipe in connection with a new building or who should construct a soil pipe in connection with an existing building should, whenever practicable, cause such soil pipe to be situate outside the building and should construct the pipe in drawn lead or heavy cast iron; and that when it was necessary to construct the soil pipe within the building it was to be constructed of drawn lead with proper joints and so as to be easily accessible:—Held, that the by-law applied where the soil pipe was partly outside and partly inside a building. Marylebone Borough Council v. White, 76 J. Repair of Sewer in Street under Jurisdiction of Crown Paving Commissioners.]—The Commissioners for executing the Crown Estate Paving Act, 1851, were, as successors of Commissioners under an Act of 1824, authorised and empowered to repair and maintain the streets within a certain area, including a street one-half of the breadth of which is now in the Metropolitan borough of St. M. and the other half in the Metropolitan borough of St. P. Their predecessors had been, under the Act of 1824, Commissioners of Sewers for the same area; a sewer under the half of the street in St. M. had been repairable by them, but under an Act of 1848 became vested in and repairable by the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, and ultimately vested in and was repairable by the borough council of St. M. In December, 1909, the sewer, having perished for want of repair, fell in and the road above it subsided. In March, 1910, the Commissioners called upon the council to repair the sewer, and on their default repaired it and made good the road, completing the work in the month of May following. In July of the same year they paid the expenses incurred by them in executing the work, and demanded repayment from the council; and in the following September they commenced an action against the council to recover the amount of the expenses:—Held, that the Commissioners were in the discharge of their statutory duty obliged to repair the sewer, and that they were therefore entitled to recover the amount so expended from the council as money paid at the council's request. Hart v. Marylebone Borough Council, 76 J. Sewer and Highway Authority—Gully in Road Negligently Constructed — District Divided—Creation of Local Authority for Part of District—Act to be Read as if New Body had been Named in Act—Accident through Defective Condition of Gully — Transfer of Liability of Original Authority—Liability of New Authority as Sewer Authority.]—A gully in a road in the parish of Battersea was negligently constructed in 1883 by the Wandsworth District Board of Works, which body was, by sections 31, 68, 69, and 96 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, constituted the sewer and highway authority for the district. In 1888 the parish of St. Mary, Battersea, was by section 4 of the Metropolis Management (Battersea and Westminster) Act, 1887, separated from the parishes mentioned in Schedule B of the Act of 1855 as forming the Wandsworth district, and the vestry of that parish was duly incorporated. The section provided that the Act of 1855 should be read and have effect as if the parish of St. Mary, Battersea, had been named in Schedule A of the Act of 1855. Under section 4 of the London Government Act, 1899, the defendants became the successors of the vestry of St. Mary, Battersea, and the property and liabilities of the vestry were transferred to them. An accident happened to the plaintiff, who was riding her bicycle along the road, through the defective condition of the gully, and she was severely injured. The jury found that the gully was negligently constructed, and that the defendants were liable both as sewer authority and also as highway authority for not remedying the defect in the gully:—Held, that the liability of the Wandsworth District Board of Works in respect of the negligent construction of the gully was not transferred to the vestry of the parish of St. Mary, Battersea, by section 4 of the Act of 1887, and consequently was not transferred to the defendants; but that the defendants were liable in their capacity as sewer authority, although not in their capacity as highway authority, for their negligence in not remedying the defect in the gully. Papworth v. Battersea Borough Council (No. 1), 83 L. J. K.B. 358; [1914] 2 K.B. 89; 110 L. T. 385; 78 J. P. 172; 12 L. G. R. 308—Horridge, J. New trial ordered, 84 L. J. K.B. 1320; [1915] 1 K.B. 392; 112 L. T. 681; 79 J. P. 105; 13 L. G. R. 197; 59 S. J. 74; 31 T. L. R. 52—C.A.

A gully in a road in the parish of Battersea was negligently constructed in 1883 by the Wandsworth District Board of Works, which body, under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, constituted the sewer and highway authority for the district. In 1888 the parish of St. Mary, Battersea, was, by section 4 of the Metropolis Management (Battersea and Westminster) Act, 1887, separated from the parishes forming the Wandsworth district, and the vestry of that parish was duly incorporated. The defendants became the successors of the vestry of St. Mary, Battersea, under section 4 of the London Government Act, 1899, and the property and liabilities of the vestry were transferred to them. An accident happened to the plaintiff as she was riding her bicycle along the road, through the defective condition of the gully, and she was severely injured. At the first trial the jury found that the defendants were liable both as sewer authority and also as highway authority for not remedying the defect in the gully, and Horridge, J., held (83 L. J. K.B. 358; [1914] 2 K.B. 89) that although the liability of the Wandsworth District Board of Works in respect of the negligent construction of the gully was not transferred to the vestry of the parish of St. Mary, Battersea, and consequently was not transferred to the defendants, yet the defendants were liable in their capacity as sewer authority for their negligence in not remedying the defect in the gully. The Court of Appeal (84 L. J. K.B. 1320; [1915] 1 K.B. 392) ordered a new trial, and the jury on the second trial found that the accident was caused by the frame of the grating of the gully hole being broken and by there being an excessive depression; that the grating over the gully formed part of the road and was controlled and maintained by the highway authority, but that the highway authority did not at the time of the accident know of the defect:—Held, following the decision of Horridge, J., that the liability of the Wandsworth District Board of Works in respect of the original negligent construction of the gully was not transferred to the defendants; and that, as the grating formed part of the road and was controlled and maintained by the defendants as highway authority and not as sewer authority, the plaintiff's action failed, as all that had been proved was the failure of the defendants to remedy the defects in works done by their predecessors, and not actual misfeasance on the part of the defendants themselves. Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board (62 L. J. Q.B. 65; [1892] A.C. 345) applied. Papworth v. Battersea Borough Council (No. 2), 84 L. J. K.B. 1881; 79 J. P. 309—Scrutton, J. Affirmed, 60 S. J. 120—C.A.

4. Employment Agency.

Lecture Agency—Necessity for Licence.]—Section 20 of the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1910, which provides that, from and after January 1, 1911, "no person shall carry on an employment agency without a licence from the licensing authority authorising him so to do," applies to agencies for the employment of persons in any capacity, and not only to those which create the relationship of master and servant. The section therefore applies to an agency which carries on the business of engaging lecturers. Lecture League, Lim. v. London County Council, 108 L. T. 924; 77 J. P. 329; 11 L. G. Fish Unfit for Food of Man—Exposure for Sale—Condemnation by Magistrate—Condition Precedent to Prosecution.]—Upon an information under section 47, sub-section 2 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, charging the defendant with having exposed for sale an article unfit for the food of man, it is not necessary to prove as a condition precedent to the prosecution that the article has been previously condemned by a magistrate:—So held by Lord Alverstone, C.J., and Avory, J.; Pickford, J., dissenting. Hewett v. Hattersley, 81 L. 6. Smoke.

Black Smoke—Meaning of "Recurrence of nuisance."]—On November 5, 1910, the occupiers of an electric-power station were required by notice under section 4 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, to abate a nuisance which occurred on October 24 from a chimney sending forth black smoke. From that time until April 9, 1911 (with a few exceptions in March), no further nuisance due to the chimney was observed, but on the latter date the chimney again sent forth black smoke; whereupon the occupiers were summoned for an alleged breach of the notice of November 5, 1910. The magistrate dismissed the summons, holding that the nuisance of April 9, 1911, was a recrudescence and not a continuance of the nuisance of which the notice of November required the abatement, and that the occupiers had not made default in complying with the requisitions of the notice:—Held, that no connection between the nuisance of October 24, 1910, and that of April 9, 1911, having been established by evidence before him, the decision of the magistrate must be upheld. Greenwich Borough Council v. London County Council, 106 L. D. RATES.

Rateable Value — Deductions from Gross Value — Maximum Rate of Deductions — "Houses or buildings let out in separate tenements."]—A building divided into flats each of which is let separately, and is separately inserted in the valuation list as a rateable hereditament, is a "house or building let out in separate tenements" within the meaning of the footnote to Schedule III. of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, and therefore the maximum rate of deductions prescribed by that schedule does not apply to it. Western v. Kensington Assessment Committee (77 L. Provisional Valuation—Quinquennial List —"Subsequently made."]—A valuation list is not "made" within the meaning of section 47, sub-section 8 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, until it has been finally approved by the assessment committee. Parrish v. Hackney Borough Council, 81 L. J. K.B. 304; [1912] 1 K.B. 669; 105 L. T. 859; 10 L. G. R. 3; 76 J. P. 89; 56 S. J. 140; 28 T. L. R. 110—C.A.

A provisional valuation list came into operation on June 30, 1910, and in that list certain licensed premises were assessed at the rateable value of 266*l.* The new quinquennial valuation list was sealed by the overseers on May 30, 1910, was finally approved by the assessment committee on October 31, 1910, and came into operation on April 6, 1911, and in that list the premises were assessed at the rateable value of 150*l.* No other list had in the meantime been made. On April 12, 1911, the overseers made a general rate and charged the occupier of the premises on the higher value at which they were assessed in the provisional list. Between June 30, 1910, and the coming into force of the new list the occupier had paid certain rates on the higher value of the premises:—Held, that the quinquennial list was the first list "subsequently made" to the provisional list within the meaning of section 47, sub-section 8 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, and that, therefore, by that sub-section, the provisional list ceased to have effect when the quinquennial list came into operation on April 6, 1911; and consequently that the overseers were only entitled to rate the occupier on the smaller value appearing in the quinquennial list, and were bound, under sub-section 10, to repay to him the excess rates paid by him beyond what he would have paid on the lower value. Ib.

Structural Alterations in Tramways—Jurisdiction of Quarter Sessions to Entertain Appeal against Rate Based on Provisional List.]—The appellants, as owners of tramways in a Metropolitan borough, had constructed a new curve for relieving congestion of traffic, and reconstructed certain tramway lines for electric traction. In consequence of this alteration the respondents as overseers raised the rateable value of the tramway lines by a provisional valuation list to the extent of 1,000*l.* The appellants appealed to the quarter sessions for the county of London against a general rate based upon the provisional list:—Held, that as there was evidence before the assessment committee of alterations in the hereditament, the question whether they had rightly come to the conclusion that such alterations had resulted in an increase of value was not one which could properly be raised on appeal to the quarter sessions. London County Council v. Shoreditch Borough Council, 105 L. T. 515; 9 L. G. R. 939; 75 J. P. 386—D.

Semble, that if there had been no evidence at all upon which the assessment committee could have come to the conclusion that there had been an increase in value the provisional list would have been a nullity and might have been quashed upon certiorari. Ib.

Reduction in Value of Hereditament—Basis of Comparison.]—Where a requisition is made to the overseers of a parish under section 47 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, to make a provisional valuation list, on the ground that a hereditament in the parish has been from some cause increased or reduced in value, the basis of comparison is with the value appearing in the existing valuation list, and not with the value at the close of the immediately preceding year. London County Council v. Islington Assessment Committee, 84 L. J. K.B. 1942; [1915] A.C. 762; 113 L. T. 289; 79 J. P. 353; 13 L. G. R. 785; 31 T. L. R. 348—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal affirmed on this point. Ib.

The duty of the overseers (or of the assessment committee on their failure to do so) to prepare a provisional list on the requisition of a ratepayer is purely ministerial, and they are bound to comply with such requisition if it is made bona fide and is not frivolous, and a mandamus will be granted to compel them to make such list. Ib.

—— Licensed Premises—Increase of Licence Duty — "Any cause" — Refusal to Appoint Valuer—Mandamus.]—When a prima facie case of a reduction in the value of a hereditament is shewn, it is the duty of the assessment committee, on a proper requisition being made to them, under the provisions of section 47, sub-section 2 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, on the overseers making default in sending them a provisional list, to appoint a person to make such list:—Held, that the fact that the licence duty on fully licensed premises had, in consequence of the provisions of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, been increased from 35*l.* to 130*l.*, constituted such prima facie case. Held, also, that the refusal of the assessment committee to appoint a valuer on the ground that no sufficient "cause" was stated in the requisition was wrong, that their action involved a mistake in law, and that consequently the tenant of the licensed premises was entitled to a mandamus. Rex v. Southwark Assessment Committee (78 L. J. K.B. 319; [1909] 1 K.B. 274) applied. Rex v. Shoreditch Assessment Committee; Morgan, Ex parte, 80 L. J. K.B. 185; [1910] 2 K.B. 859; 103 L. T. 262; 74 J. P. 361; 8 L. G. R. 744; 26 T. L. MINES AND MINERALS.

I. WHAT ARE MINERALS.

See also Vol. IX. 1168, 2435.

Substance not Regarded as a Mineral at Date of Acquisition of Lands—Oil Shale.]—A private Act passed in 1817, authorising the construction of a canal, reserved to the owners of any lands through which the canal should be made "the mines and minerals lying within or under the said lands." A statutory form was also provided by which lands acquired for the purpose of making the canal might be conveyed to the canal company, the registration of which was declared to have the same effect as a formal disposition followed by charter and sasine. The price of certain lands required for the formation of the canal was agreed upon and consigned in 1818, in which year the canal company entered into possession of them, and the canal was constructed and opened for traffic in 1822. The statutory conveyance of these lands, however, was not completed and registered until 1862. In 1909 the representative of the vendor of the lands brought an action against the canal proprietors, in which he sought a declaration of his right of property in a seam of oil shale subjacent and adjacent to the canal within the lands in question. It was admitted by the defenders that by 1862 oil shale had become recognised as a "mineral" in the sense of the reservation, but they denied that it was recognised as a "mineral" in 1818:—Held (Lord Johnston dissenting), first, that what was denoted by the term "mineral" was to be ascertained as at 1818, the date when possession of the lands passed to the defenders, and not at 1862, the date of the statutory conveyance; and secondly, that in 1818 oil shale was not described as a mineral in the vernacular of the mining world, the commercial world, and landowners, and therefore that the action failed. Linlithgow (Marquis) v. North British Railway, [1912] S. C. 1327—Ct. of Sess.

See s.c. in H.L. (infra).

Decision of the Court of Sessions ([1912] S. C. 1327) affirmed on the construction of the private Act of 1817, the House expressing no opinion upon the question whether shale was a mineral. Linlithgow (Marquis) v. North British Railway, [1914] A.C. 820; [1914] S. C. (H.L.) 38—H.L. (Sc.)

Freestone — Proof — Sufficiency of Averment.]—Whether or not a particular substance—such as freestone—is a "mineral" within the meaning of sections 70 and 71 of the Railways Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845, is a question of fact; and averments that the substance in question is a mineral in the vernacular of the mining and commercial worlds and the world of landowners, exceptional in use, value, and character, and not the common rock of the district or substratum of the soil, are sufficiently specific to justify a proof. Symington v. Caledonian Railway, 81 L. J. P.C. 155; [1912] A.C. 87; 106 L. T. 193; 56 S. J. 87—H.L. (Sc.)

Decision of the Court of Session ([1911] S. C. 552) reversed. Ib.

"Coal, ironstone, slate, or other minerals" —Fireclay.]—"Minerals" which by the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, are excepted from the conveyance of lands to a railway company include seams of fireclay and anything exceptional in use, character, or value which can be embraced within the term "minerals" in the vernacular of the mining and commercial worlds and of the landowners. Caledonian Railway v. Glenboig Union Fireclay Co., 80 L. J. P.C. 128;

[1911] A.C. 290; 104 L. T. 657; 75 J. P. 377—H.L. (Sc.)

II. MINING COMPANIES.

Stannaries — Partnership — "Company" — Winding-up — Jurisdiction — High Court — County Court.]—A partnership "formed for working" mines within the Stannaries is by virtue of the definition of "company" in section 2 of the Stannaries Act, 1887, a "company" within section 28 of that Act over which the Court of the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries had jurisdiction in winding-up. This jurisdiction which by section 28 is to be the same as that formerly exercised by the Vice-Warden's Court under section 81 of the Companies Act, 1862, over incorporated companies "engaged in working" mines within the Stannaries, was exclusive, and is now by virtue of the Stannaries Court (Abolition) Act, 1896, vested exclusively in the County Courts of Cornwall. Dunbar v. Harvey, 83 L. J. Ch. 18; [1913] 2 Ch. 530; 109 L. T. 285; 20 Manson, 388; 57 S. J. 686—C.A.

Decision of Neville, J. (82 L. J. Ch. 452; 20 Manson, 269), affirmed. Ib.

The High Court has jurisdiction under section 133, sub-section 1 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, to transfer to the Court exercising the Stannaries jurisdiction a petition to wind up a company formed to work mines within the Stannaries. Quære, whether the High Court has jurisdiction to retain such a petition. Radium Ore Mines, In re, 110 L. T. 57; 30 T. L. R. 66—C.A.

III. LEASES OF MINES.

Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Will Directing Sale of Real Estate—Power to Postpone—Direction as to Payment of Rents and Profits till Sale—Rents and Royalties under Mining Leases—Open Mines.]—Testator gave his real and personal estate to a trustee upon trusts for sale and conversion and investment of the proceeds of sale, and gave one fourth part of his residuary trust fund in trust to pay the income thereof to A. during his life and after his death upon trusts in favour of his children, and gave another fourth part on similar trusts in favour of B. and her children; and the testator empowered his trustee to postpone the sale and conversion of any part of his real and personal estate for so long as he should think fit, and directed that the "rents, profits and income" of such parts of his estate as should remain unsold and unconverted should be paid to the persons to whom the income of the proceeds of such sale and conversion would be payable under his will if such sale and conversion had been actually made. The testator's estate comprised open mines which were leased to lessees and were still unsold:—Held, that under the terms of the will A. and B. were respectively entitled to receive the whole of the rents and royalties attributable to their respective shares, no part being retained as capital. Morgan, In re; Vachell v. Morgan, 83 L. J. Ch. 573; [1914] 1 Ch. 910; 110 L. T. 903—Sargant, J.

Testator in 1889 granted a lease of part of a mineral area and entered into negotiations with the lessees for a lease of the adjoining part. He died in March, 1912, and the trustee of his will continued the negotiations, and in October, 1912, granted a lease to the same lessees of such adjoining part which was intended to be worked through the shaft sunk on the part comprised in the lease of 1889:—Held, that the minerals comprised in the lease of October, 1912, must be treated as an open mine at the date of the testator's death. Chaytor v. Trotter (87 L. T. 33) applied. Ib.

In 1883 a lease of minerals was made to lessees, who worked them through a shaft sunk on other land. In 1897 the lessees surrendered this lease to the testator owing to the working becoming unprofitable, and the minerals remained unworked till the testator's death in 1912, though the testator had entered into negotiations for continuing or resuming their working. In December, 1912, the trustee of the testator's will granted a new lease of these minerals to new lessees, who worked them through a shaft sunk on other land:—Held, that these minerals must be treated as an open mine at the date of the testator's death. Ib.

1. Rights and Obligations of Adjoining Owners.

Grant of Land, Reserving Minerals—Right to Work them "in as full and ample a way" as before Grant—No Express Reservation of Right to Let Down Surface—Necessary Implication of Right.]—In 1829 a vendor who was then owner in fee of certain lands conveyed them to a purchaser, but excepting and reserving all the minerals thereunder and the means and power of working them "in as full and ample a way and manner as if these presents had not been made and executed." There was a compensation clause, but only for damage by surface workings. The deed gave no express right in terms to let down:—Held, that by necessary implication from the words "in as full and ample a way and manner" the right to let down the surface in working the minerals was reserved. Beard v. Moira Colliery Co., 84 L. J. Ch. 155; [1915] 1 Ch. 257; 112 L. T. 227; 59 S. J. 103—C.A.

Restricted Interpretation of Words "in as full and ample a way" in Inclosure Acts—Not Applicable to Construction of Deeds.]—The restricted interpretation of such words in the construction of Inclosure Acts is not applicable to the construction of deeds. Ib.

2. Under and Adjoining Railways.

Lateral Support—Mines Lying beyond the Forty Yards Limit — Natural Right.] — The right to lateral support is not an easement arising out of grant or by implication. It is a natural right of property. In order to take away such a natural right of property there must be something more than a conjectural intention on the part of any statute which may affect it: there must be a plain indication of intention. The statutory mining code contained in sections 78-85 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, has no application outside the limit of forty yards or other limit prescribed by the special Act, and the railway company's common law right to lateral support from minerals outside the limit is unaffected thereby. Howley Park Coal and Cannel Co. v. London and North-Western Railway, 82 L. J. Ch. 76; [1913] A.C. 11; 107 L. T. 625; 57 S. J. 42; 29 T. L. R. 35—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal (80 L. J. Ch. 537; [1911] 2 Ch. 97) affirmed. Ib.

V. COAL MINES.

See also Vol. IX. 1280, 2453.

1. Regulation and Inspection of.

Negligence—Duty of Owners—Competence of Managers.]—A miner lost his life in consequence of the presence in the mine of carbon mon-oxide gas, of which there had been previous indications. The managers, for whose competence the owners are by the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, made responsible, had no special knowledge of this obscure and noxious gas:—Held, that the mine owners were liable in damages at common law for negligence for failure to appoint managers with the requisite knowledge. Butler or Black v. Fife Coal Co., 81 L. J. P.C. 97; [1912] A.C. 149; 106 L. T. 161; 28 T. L. R. 150—H.L. (Sc.)

Decision of the Court of Session ([1909] S. C. 152) reversed. Ib.

Breach of Statutory Duty — Duty of Mine Owner.] — Section 16, sub-section 1 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, provides that "the owner . . . of a mine shall not employ any person in the mine . . . unless . . . (c) proper apparatus for raising and lowering persons at each shaft . . . shall be kept on the works belonging to the mine; and such apparatus . . . shall be constantly available for use." The manager of the respondent colliery increased from twenty to twenty-six the number of men authorised to be lowered or raised in a cage at a time. The brake power on the winding engine was adequate for twenty, but not for twenty-six men. The appellant's husband was killed in consequence of the breakdown of the winding engine by the snapping of the spanner bar, which was defective, and the insufficiency of the brake, with the result that a cage fell:—Held, that the respondents had been guilty of a breach of an absolute statutory obligation imposed by section 16, for which they were liable, and that no question of negligence or of the doctrine of common employment was relevant. Britannia Merthyr Coal Co. v. David (79 L. J. K.B. 153; [1910] A.C. 74) explained. Watkins v. Naval Colliery Co., 81 L. J. K.B. 1056; [1912] A.C. 693; 107 L. T. 321; 56 S. J. 719; 28 T. L. R. 569—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal (80 L. J. K.B. 746; [1911] 2 K.B. 162) reversed. Ib.

"Mechanical haulage"—Haulage Worked by Gravity—Safeguards.]—A system of haulage was in use in a mine by which an empty tub was drawn up an incline by the weight of a loaded tub descending on a parallel set of rails and attached to the empty tub by a chain passing round a pulley situated at the top of the incline:—Held, that this was not a system of "mechanical haulage" within section 46, sub-section 4 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, and that accordingly the mine owners were not bound to provide certain safeguards which under the section were compulsory "on every haulage road where mechanical haulage . . . is used." Soutar v. Reid, [1913] S. C. (J.) 84—Ct. of Just.

Explosives—Price to Workmen—"Actual net cost to the owner."]—Section 61, sub-section 2 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, provides that "No explosives shall be taken into or used in any mine except explosives provided by the owner, and the price, if any, charged by the owner to the workman for any explosives so provided shall not exceed the actual net cost to the owner":—Held, that the words "actual net cost to the owner" were not limited to the sum paid by the owner for the explosives up to the time when they were delivered into his possession, but included a charge incurred by him in respect of the delivery of the explosives to the workman. Evans v. Gwendraeth Anthracite Colliery Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 1312; [1914] 3 K.B. 23; 110 L. T. 959; 30 T. L. R. 376—C.A.

Decision of the Divisional Court (82 L. J. K.B. 983; [1913] 3 K.B. 100) reversed. Ib.

Maximum Period of Consecutive Underground Employment of Workman — Exceptions — "Meeting danger or apprehended danger."]—The Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908, enacts (section 1, sub-section 1) that a workman shall not be below ground for more than eight hours during any consecutive twenty-four, but (sub-section 2) that no contravention of this provision shall be deemed to take place in the case of any workman who is below ground for the purpose (inter alia) of "meeting any danger or apprehended danger":—Held, that "danger" was limited to danger arising out of some abnormal occurrence, and accordingly that workmen engaged on a Sunday night and Monday morning in repairing falls, such as were expected to occur, and normally did occur, every week when the pit was idle between Saturday and Monday, did not fall within the exception. Thorneycroft v. Archibald, [1913] S. C. (J.) 45—Ct. of Just.

—— Firemen—Shifts.]—Sub-sections 1 and 2 of section 1 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908, apply to firemen (with the modification that in their case nine and a-half hours is to be substituted in each sub-section for eight hours), and accordingly that there had been no contravention of the Act in the case of two firemen members of a shift who had been underground for more than fifteen hours, in respect that less than nine and a half hours had elapsed between the time when the last member of the shift left the surface and the first member returned thereto. Roger v. Stevenson, [1913] S. C. (J.) 30—Ct. of Just.

Observed, that the question whether men are working in shifts or not is a question of fact for the Judge who tries the case, and is to be determined on a strict view of the definition of a shift contained in section 1 of the Act. Ib.

—— "Connivance" at Contravention of Statutory Provision.]—The respondent, the manager of a colliery, was convicted by Justices on a charge of conniving at the failure of a workman working below ground in a mine to comply with section 1 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908. On appeal to quarter sessions it appeared that the respondent took no action when the Act was not complied with except sometimes cautioning the men and sometimes threatening that they should be suspended for a day. It was admitted that he had not aided or encouraged the workmen to disobey the law; and the only statutory duty which he had failed to perform was to enter in the register required to be kept by section 2 of the Act the reason why the workman was below ground for more than the period fixed; but he explained that this omission was due to his inability to ascertain a definite reason for the workman failing to reach the surface in proper time. Quarter sessions allowed the appeal, holding that the respondent had not connived at a breach of the Act:—Held, that upon the evidence it was open to quarter sessions to come to that conclusion. Gregory v. Walker, 77 J. P. 55; 29 T. L. R. 51—D.

Special Rules—Refusal to Obey Lawful Command.]—Under the powers given by section 51 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, special rules were made for a mine providing that all persons employed in the mine should be under the control of the manager, under-manager, and deputies, and should at all times obey their lawful commands, and that any person committing a breach of any of the special rules should be guilty of an offence against the Act. A number of trammers in a mine, whose duty was to convey tubs when filled with coal to the "straight road," and bring back the empty tubs, their pay varying with the number of tubs conveyed by them, after being at work for some hours stopped work, and asked to be drawn out of the mine. They were ordered by the under-manager to return to work, but they refused to do so, saying that they had not a sufficiency of tubs, and owing to their stopping work certain miners were also compelled to leave work. One of the trammers having been summoned under one of the above special rules, and convicted,—Held, that the conviction under the special rule was right. Colbeck v. Whitwham, 107 L. T. 22; 76 J. P. 291; 23 Cox C.C. 50—D.

Accumulation of Coal Dust — Clearing Away "as far as practicable"—Responsibility of Manager.]—On an information against the manager of a colliery for not causing the floor, roof, and sides to be systematically cleared so as to prevent, as far as practicable, coal dust from accumulating, conformably with the provisions of section 62, sub-section 3 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, the Justices found that it was not practicable to carry out the provision of the sub-section, and that all that was reasonably practicable under the circumstances had been done:—Held, that the manager was exempted by sub-section 3 of section 102 from the penalty for non-compliance with the provisions of sub-section 3 of section 62. Atkinson v. Shaw, 84 L. J. K.B. 1748; [1915] 2 K.B. 768; 113 L. T. 485; 79 J. P. 376; 31 T. L. R. 421—D.

Ventilation—Cavity Caused by Fall of Roof—Responsibility of Manager.]—The manager of a coal mine is responsible for adequate and constant ventilation under section 29, sub-section 1 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911; and he is not relieved from responsibility by virtue of section 75, because a competent staff of firemen has been appointed. Where by a fall in the roof in a level a cavity was formed, and to repair it timbering was used which prevented the air current reaching it and sufficiently diluting inflammable and noxious gases, the manager was held responsible for not producing adequate and constant ventilation in accordance with section 29 of the Act, although work was not at the time being carried on in the mine. Atkinson v. Morgan, 84 L. J. K.B. 1431; [1915] 3 K.B. 23; 113 L. T. 488; 79 J. P. 378—D.

—— Fireman Failing to Inspect—Responsibility of Owners and Agent—Exemption from Penalty.]—Section 102, sub-section 1 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, is intended to afford an additional protection to that given by section 75 to the owner or agent of a mine. If they have not been "in the habit of taking" part in the management of the mine, and have not taken part in its management in regard to the particular matter in question, protection is not limited to the case under section 75, which makes exemption depend on having taken means to prevent contravention of, or non-compliance with, the provisions of Part II. of the Act. The question of the habit of management in the particular instance is one of fact for the Justices. Atkinson v. Jeffreys, 84 L. J. K.B. 1739; 113 L. T. 492; 79 J. P. 373—D.

Informations were preferred respectively against the fireman of a mine for having failed to inspect the mine immediately before the commencement of work conformably with section 64 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, and against the agent and owners for failing to enforce the regulations providing for such inspections in accordance with sections 64 and 75 of the Act. The Justices convicted the fireman of an offence under section 64, but dismissed the informations against the agents and owners:—Held, that the decision of the Justices was right. Ib.

Control of Detonators.]—The Explosives in Coal Mines Order of September, 1913, provides, section 1 (e): "(i) Detonators shall be under the control of the manager of the mine, or some person or persons specially appointed in writing by the manager for the purpose, and shall be issued only" to shot firers appointed in terms of Part II. of the Order, "or (in mines to which Part II. of this Order does not apply) to officials specially authorised in writing by the manager. (ii) Shot firers and other authorised persons shall keep all detonators issued to them, until about to be used for the charging of a shot hole, in a suitable case or box, securely locked, separate from any other explosives. . . ." In a mine to which Part II. of the Order did not apply, two of the firemen were given written authority from the manager to have charge of detonators. On a certain morning one of these firemen, in obedience to verbal orders, went to the store and took out a case of detonators, which he handed at the pit bottom to the other fireman, who then proceeded to distribute them, one or two hours before they would be required for firing shots, among a number of miners who were proceeding to their work. Each of these miners was authorised in writing by the manager to fire shots, and each had a case in which he kept the detonators locked until they were actually required for firing a shot. In a charge against the manager of the mine for a contravention of the Order it was contended for the prosecution that there ought to have been a special official in control of the detonators in the store, who should have issued them to officials (other than ordinary miners) specially authorised in writing, who in their turn should have retained them in their keeping and given them to the miners only when the shots were about to be fired:—Held (Lord Ormidale dissenting), that the manager had not been guilty of a contravention of the Order, in respect that the firemen were persons specially appointed in writing to have "control" of detonators within the meaning of the Order, and that the miners to whom the detonators had been issued were "officials specially authorised in writing" also within the meaning of the Order. Tennant v. Allardice, [1915] S. C. (J.) 9—Ct. of Just.

Electric Cables in Coal Mines.]—Regulation 129 (c) of the General Regulations dated July 10, 1913, made under the Coal Mines Act, 1911, provides (inter alia) that where roadways conveying electric cables are also used for mechanical haulage the electric cables must be protected by a metallic covering. Regulation 137 (b) exempts from this provision "any apparatus which was in use before June 1, 1911," and which conformed to the requirements then in force. Unprotected electric cables, which had been in use in a ventilating road in a coal mine prior to June, 1911, and conformed to the requirements at that date, were transferred in 1914 to a mechanical haulage roadway:—Held, that they did not fall within the exemption in Regulation 137 (b) in respect that, in view of their changed environment, they were no longer an "apparatus which was in use" before June, 1911; and accordingly, that they constituted a contravention of Regulation 129 (c). Shotts Iron Co. v. Thomson, [1915] S. C. (J.) 29—Ct. of Just.

Prosecution with Consent in Writing of the Secretary of State — Proof of Consent.]—Under section 102, sub-section 5 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, prosecutions for offences under the Act must in certain circumstances be "with the consent in writing of the Secretary of State":—Held, that evidence of the consent is unnecessary and incompetent, the statement of the Lord-Advocate or of his representative that it has been obtained being sufficient. Semble, that if evidence were required and competent, a letter requesting that proceedings should be taken, signed by an Under-Secretary of the Home Department, was sufficient, and that the signature of the Secretary of State himself was unnecessary. Stevenson v. Roger, [1915] S. C. (J.) 24—Ct. of Just.

Check Weigher — Appointment to Inspect Mine on Behalf of Workmen—Eligibility.]—A person holding the office of check weigher at a mine under section 13 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, is eligible to be appointed by the workmen employed in the mine to inspect the mine on their behalf under section 16 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911. Date v. Gas Coal Collieries, 84 L. J. K.B. 1529; [1915] 2 K.B. 454; 113 L. T. 205; 31 T. L. R. 341—C.A.

Judgment of Bailhache, J. (83 L. J. K.B. 1827; [1914] 3 K.B. 1175), affirmed. Ib.

2. Miners' Wages.

Minimum Wage—Butty System—Payment of Holer's Wages by Contractor or Stallman—Liability of Mine Owner for Deficit.]—Section 1, sub-section 1 of the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, which came into operation on March 29, 1912, provides that, subject to certain conditions, it shall be an implied term of every contract for the employment of a workman underground in a coal mine that the employer shall pay to that workman wages at not less than the minimum rate settled under the Act and applicable to that workman. The plaintiff was a "holer" in the employment of the defendant company under an agreement to observe certain rules and regulations, rule 3 of which provided that he should be deemed to be a servant of the company to the extent only that he should be bound to obey these rules and regulations. Another rule reserved to the company the exclusive right of dismissing him and of receiving notice from him. The holer's work consisted in removing the earth from the coal obtained by the "stallman" or contractor, whilst a filler's duty consisted in filling the tubs with the coal. The "stallman" or contractor arranged with the company to receive a certain sum of money (known as the tonnage rate) per ton of coal obtained by him from a "stall" or certain area of the mine, and out of this sum he paid the holer and filler respectively certain amounts per "stint" (a portion of the said area), and which amounts were based on prices known as district rates. The tonnage and district rates had been in force for some years, in accordance with agreements made between the colliers (including the stallmen, holers, and fillers) or their representatives, and the company. The stallman had no choice of the men working in the stalls, who were appointed by the company, and the company, in paying to the stallman his tonnage rate, deducted therefrom the fines, &c., contributions for sick club and under the Insurance Act, 1911, payable respectively by the holer and filler, but paid their own contribution under that Act. The rule as to dismissal and notice was observed in practice. After the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, came into operation, but before the minimum wage was ascertained in accordance with its provisions, the plaintiff continued to work as a holer, receiving from the stallman his wages based on the district rate; and on the publication of the minimum wage it was found that there was a deficit to which he was entitled, and he claimed the same from the company. The company contended that he must look to the stallman for payment. In an action, brought in the County Court against the company for the difference between the district rate and the minimum wage, the Judge awarded the plaintiff the amount of his claim, and his decision was affirmed by the Divisional Court:—Held, that the contract between the parties was contained in written documents, and oral evidence was not admissible to vary the written documents; that, having regard in particular to rule 3, there was no evidence of any contract by the company to pay wages to the plaintiff, and that, although for the proper working and safety of the mine the plaintiff was the disciplinary servant of the company, the company were not his paymasters; and that as there was no contract to pay, there was no implied term to pay the minimum wage. Hooley v. Butterley Colliery Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1969—C.A.

"Dayman"—Wages—Liability of Colliery Owner—Statutory Contract.]—The defendants were the owners of a colliery in which the colliers worked in gangs, each gang working in a separate "stall" and consisting of one or more "stallmen" or "contractors" to whom the stall was assigned by the defendants, and usually also of several "daymen" who assisted the stallmen. The plaintiff was employed at the mine aas a dayman, and, like the other employees, he had entered upon his employment by signing a form of contract which provided that he would serve the defendants (inter alia) on the terms of the contract rules in force at the colliery. The plaintiff worked in a stall for several days, and the amount of his wages and of other wages earned in the stall was paid by the defendants to one of the stallmen, who absconded without paying the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendants in the County Court claiming his wages for these days at the minimum rate fixed for the district. The evidence went to shew that the practice at the colliery was that the defendants paid to a stallman on the fortnightly pay day the net aggregate amount due for the work done in the stall, and that out of that amount the stallman paid to each dayman whatever wage, not less than the minimum wage, the latter, in the opinion of the stallman, was worth. The County Court Judge, having regard to the terms of the form of contract, and of the contract rules, and to the evidence, held that the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants did not impose any obligation on the defendants to pay the plaintiff his wages; and, further, that if it did impose any such obligation on the defendants, they were to be discharged therefrom on paying the stallman: and he gave judgment for the defendants. The Divisional Court affirmed the judgment of the County Court Judge. The plaintiff appealed:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, first, that there was evidence to support the conclusions of the County Court Judge as to the nature of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants; and secondly, that as there was no already existing contract between the plaintiff and the defendants as to payment of wages, section 1, sub-section 1 of the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, did not create such a contract. Richards v. Wrexham and Acton Collieries (83 L. J. K.B. 687; [1914] 2 K.B. 497) discussed and followed on both points. Higginson v. Blackwell Colliery Co.; Pitchford v. Same, 84 L. J. K.B. 1189; 112 L. T. 442; 31 T. L. R. 95—C.A.

Decision of Divisional Court (30 T. L. R. 175) affirmed. Ib.

"Filler"—Wages—Liability of Colliery Owner—Privity of Contract—Statutory Obligation.]—The defendants were the owners of a colliery in which the plaintiff was employed as a filler. The colliers employed at the colliery worked in "setts." To each sett of colliers at least one filler was attached, whose duty it was to load into tubs the coal got by the colliers of the sett. For many years before the passing of the Act mentioned below the practice as to payment of wages in the colliery had been as follows: The colliers were paid by the defendants weekly wages according to the quantity of coal got by them, the colliers of each sett appointing one of their number, called the contractor, to receive from the defendants the wages due each week to the colliers of the sett. The filler was paid a weekly wage at the fixed rate of 5*s.* 11*d.* a day, which was received by him from the contractor of his sett out of the colliers' wages; and, except under a special arrangement which it is not material to consider the defendants had never made any allowance to the colliers in respect of the amount so paid to the fillers. The Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, provided by section 1, sub-section 1, that it should be an implied term of every contract for the employment of a workman underground in a coal mine that the employer should pay him wages at not less than the minimum rate settled under the Act (unless in certain circumstances which it is not material to specify), and that any agreement for the payment of wages in so far as it was in contravention of this provision should be void, and by section 2, sub-section 1, that nothing in the Act should prejudice any agreement or custom existing before the Act for the payment of wages at a rate higher than the minimum. For the district in question the minimum wage of a collier was fixed at 6*s.* a day, and of a filler at 4*s.* 10*d.* a day. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendants in the County Court claiming 4*s*. 4*d*., the balance of wages alleged to be due to him for four days' work, being the difference between four days at 5*s*. 11*d*. a day and four days at 4*s*. 10*d*. a day, which had been paid to him by the defendants. The evidence went to show that the fillers were engaged, controlled, sent to work with a particular sett, and might be dismissed by the defendants' manager, but that they were paid their wages by the contractor of the sett and had always received them without deduction, even though the colliers went short. The County Court Judge found that there was a custom to pay the filler a wage of 5*s*. 11*d*. a day, that this had always been paid by the contractor on behalf of the colliers, and that there was no privity of contract in regard to wages between the plaintiff and the defendants, and he gave judgment for the defendants. The Divisional Court reversed this decision, holding that the evidence was conclusive of privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendants:—Held, first, that, apart from the Act of 1912, there was evidence on which the County Court Judge could properly find that there was no privity of contract in respect of wages between the plaintiff and the defendants; secondly (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting on this point), that the Act of 1912 did not create such privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, inasmuch as it did not apply in the case of persons between whom there did not exist independently of the Act a contract for employment at wages, and therefore that the defendants were not liable and that the appeal should be allowed. Richards v. Wrexham and Acton Collieries: Davies v. Same, 83 L. J. K.B. 687; [1914] 2 K.B. 497; 110 L. T. 402; 30 T. L. R. 228—C.A.

Minimum Wage in Coal Mine — Rules — Validity.]—The chairman of a joint district board created by the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, acting under section 4, subsection 2 of the Act, settled the minimum rates of wages and the district rules for the purposes of the Act for the district. Rule 5 provided that if at any time any workman should in consequence of circumstances over which he alleged he had no control be unable to perform such an amount of work as would entitle him to a sum equal to the daily minimum rate, he should forthwith give notice thereof to the official in charge of the district, and that if he acted in contravention of this rule he should forfeit the right to wages at the minimum rate for the pay in which such contravention took place. Rule 7 provided that, in ascertaining whether the minimum wage had been earned by any workman on piecework, the total earnings during two consecutive weeks should be divided by the number of shifts and parts of shifts he had worked during such two weeks, so that the average actual earnings thus ascertained might be compared with the minimum wage. The plaintiffs, who were colliers employed at the defendants' colliery within the district, where the men were paid weekly, claimed a declaration that rules 5 and 7 were ultra vires:—Held, that rule 5 was intra vires and rule 7 was ultra vires. Davies v. Glamorgan Coal Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 831; [1914] 1 K.B. 674; 110 L. T. 224; 58 S. J. 184; 30 T. L. R. 161—C.A.

—— District Rules — Earnings of Miner — Method of Ascertaining Earnings—Certificate —Right of Miner to Sue for Minimum Wage.]—Rule 4 of the district rules made under the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, by a joint district board, provided that "for the purpose of ascertaining what sum (if any) is due to a workman for any pay week in respect of his right to wages at a minimum rate, regard shall be had to the amount of his actual earnings during" a period consisting "of the pay week in question and as few preceding pay weeks as shall be necessary to make up a period during which the colliery has worked not less than ten full days, provided nevertheless that the period shall not be longer than four pay weeks in all." Rule 7 provided that if any question shall arise: (a) whether any workman in the district is a workman to whom the minimum rate of wages is applicable, or (b) whether a workman has complied with the condition laid down by these rules, or (c) whether a workman who has not complied with such conditions has forfeited his right to wages at the minimum rate, such question shall be decided in the last resort by a board, and failing a settlement by the board the independent chairman shall be called in and he shall have power to decide the question, and the decision of the board or the independent chairman shall in every case be final and binding, and a certificate of the decision shall be drawn up which shall be conclusive evidence of the decision arrived at. A strike of miners took place at the defendant company's colliery in February, 1912. On April 15, 1912, the miners returned to work, but only worked one day during the week ending April 16. On April 17, 1912, the plaintiff, who was a miner in the employ of the defendant company, returned to work along with the other miners, and during the week April 17 to 23, 1912, the defendants' colliery worked five and a half days. The plaintiff was paid 19*s*. 4*d*. for the week April 17 to 25. He claimed to be paid the difference between that amount and 1*l*. 11*s*. 8*d*., the amount due to him according to the minimum rate as settled under the Act for his district. The dispute went before the district board and finally before the independent chairman, who decided the dispute and gave a certificate that the plaintiff was a person excluded under the district rules from the operation of section 1 of the Act, and that he was not a workman to whom the minimum rate of wage was applicable in respect of the pay week ending April 23, 1912. The plaintiff then brought an action against the defendants in the County Court for wages due to him under the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912:—Held, that it was a condition precedent to the right of a workman to bring an action in the County Court to recover from his employer a minimum wage as settled under the Act; that he should have obtained a certificate from the district board or from the independent chairman certifying that he was a workman to whom the minimum rate of wages was applicable; and that as the plaintiff had not obtained such certificate he could not recover :—Held, further, that rule 4 of the district rules was not ultra vires. Davies v. Glamorgan Coal Co. (82 L. J. K.B. 956; [1913] 3 K.B. 222) discussed. Randle v. Clay Cross Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 167; [1913] 3 K.B. 795; 109 L. T. 522; 29 T. L. R. 624—D.

—— Work in Abnormal Places in Mine.]—By the rules regulating the management of a colliery the minimum standard of wages for colliers working in hard or difficult places was fixed at 6*s.* a day. The plaintiffs, who were colliers engaged at the particular colliery, had worked at a place in the mine which was a hard or difficult one within the meaning of the rules. In an action by the plaintiffs to recover their wages the County Court Judge awarded them the difference between what they actually earned and what they would have earned if the place had been a normal one, and he fixed the latter sum at 5*s.* per day :—Held, that the County Court Judge was wrong, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to be paid at the rate of 6*s.* per day. Jones v. Phœnix Colliery Co., 28 T. L. R. 374—D.

—— Action to Recover Wages — Condition Precedent—Certificate that Workman is Excluded—Production of Certificate.]—A miner brought an action in the County Court, under the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, to recover wages alleged to be due. At the trial it was admitted on his behalf that a dispute between him and his employers had been properly submitted to an umpire in accordance with a district rule made under the Act, that the certificate of the umpire could not be put in in support of his case, and that the case of Randle v. Clay Cross Co. (83 L. J. K.B. 167; [1913] 3 K.B. 795) was fatal to him in that Court. The learned Judge thereupon gave judgment for the defendants, and his decision was affirmed by a Divisional Court :—Held, that it was not a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to sue that he should, at the stage which the proceedings had reached, put in the certificate of the umpire, and that the action must be remitted to the County Court for further hearing. Randle v. Clay Cross Co. (83 L. J. K.B. 167; [1913] 3 K.B. 795) overruled on this point. Barwell v. Newport Abercarn Black Vein Steam Coal Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1105; [1915] 2 K.B. 256; 112 L. T. 806; 59 S. J. 233; 31 T. L. R. 136—C.A.

—— Wages Exceeding Minimum—Regularity and Efficiency.] — A County Court Judge, whose decision was affirmed by the Divisional Court, held that the provisions of the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, are applicable, notwithstanding that a workman may be receiving an amount for wages in excess of the minimum rate settled under the Act, and that the powers of the domestic tribunal to decide a dispute as to the regularity and efficiency of a miner's work are not thereby ousted :—Held, on appeal, that the County Court Judge had in fact found, and there was evidence on which he could find, that the workman's wages were based on the statutory minimum rate, and were not the subject of a common law contract. Fairbanks v. Florence Coal and Iron Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1115; [1915] 2 K.B. 714; 112 L. T. 1013—C.A.

Where a miner is suing for his minimum wage, and a dispute under the Act is before the domestic tribunal, the proper course is for the Court to adjourn the trial in order that the dispute may be decided. Barwell v. Newport Abercarn Black Vein Steam Coal Co. (84 L. J. K.B. 1105; [1915] 2 K.B. 256) followed. Ib.

—— Agreement that in Certain Circumstances Workmen should Get Full Day's Pay although Full Day not Worked—Effect of.]—By an agreement made prior to 1912 between the defendants and their workmen it was agreed that if a fatal accident occurred in the defendants' mine before twelve o'clock, the day wagemen in the district in which the accident happened, if they came out, should be paid a full day's wage :—Held, that in the case of a workman who was getting a higher wage than the minimum rate, this agreement was not superseded by a rule made under the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, which provided that, in the event of any interruption of work during a shift due to an emergency over which the management had no control, the workman should only be paid such a proportion of the minimum rate as the time he worked bore to the total number of hours of the shift. Mackinnon v. North's Navigation Collieries, 29 T. L. R. 615—Pickford, J.

—— Construction of Award — Meaning of "Pits."]—The Joint District Board for West Yorkshire constituted under the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, were empowered by section 2, sub-section 5 of the Act to subdivide West Yorkshire into two or more districts, if desirable, for the purpose of settling minimum rates of wages. The masters and men upon the board were unable to agree as to the division, and the chairman of the board divided the district into two parts, fixing the Great Northern main line to Leeds as the line of division. By an award dated June 10, 1912, the eastern subdivision was to include all pits situate on the east of the Great Northern line, as therein described, and the western subdivision was to include all pits situate on the west of the same railway, as similarly described, and by the same part of his award minimum rates of wages were fixed for each subdivision. The plaintiffs, who were the owners of the mine, claimed that their collieries were in the western, and the defendant, who represented the miners, claimed that they were in the eastern subdivision, the importance of the matter being that the rates of wages applicable to the western subdivision were lower than those applicable to the eastern subdivision. The question of construction was the sense in which the word "pits" was used in the chairman's award. The Judge found as a fact that the word "pits" was used to denote (a) the shaft; (b) the underground workings, with or without the shafts; and (c) the colliery as a whole; and that the primary meaning of

"pits" was the shafts:—Held, first, that the Court had jurisdiction under Order XXV. rule 5 to put a construction upon the award to the extent of declaring the rights of the parties under it; and secondly, that the word "pits" was used to mean the shafts by which the men came up and went down, and that upon the true meaning of the word "pits" the plaintiffs' colliery was in the eastern subdivision of West Yorkshire. Lofthouse Colliery v. Ogden, 82 L. —— Application for Revision of Minimum Rates—Right of Applicants to Present their Case to Joint District Board.]—Where an application is made under section 3, subsection 2 of the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, upon behalf of any workmen or employers, as representing a considerable body of opinion amongst either the workmen or employers concerned, for the variation of the existing minimum rate of wages as fixed by the joint district board, the applicants are entitled to present their case to the board independently of their representatives on the board. Rex v. Amphlett, 84 L. Banker—Money Paid under Mistake of Fact—Liability of Banker to Refund.]—The position of a banker does not differ from that of any other recipient of money acting as factor or agent; and money paid to a banker under a mistake of fact can be successfully redemanded from the banker by the person who so paid it. Kerrison v. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co., 81 L. J. K.B. 465; 105 L. T. 721; 17 Com. Cas. 41; 56 S. J. 139; 28 T. L. R. 106—H.L. (E.)

The appellant, who lived in England, was the English manager of a mine in Mexico. By a system of revolving credit, he agreed to pay to the respondents moneys paid to the New York bankers of the mine. For this purpose he had paid 500*l.* to the respondents. The New York bank stopped payment, and the appellant immediately demanded repayment of the 500*l.* The New York bank was largely indebted to the respondents, who claimed to retain the 500*l.*:—Held, that the appellant was entitled to be repaid the 500*l.* Ib.

Money Paid by Mistake—Right to Recover—Agreement for Water Supply—Ignorance of Consumer of his Rights—Condition Precedent to Right to Supply.]—The claimants were the owners of a colliery and of certain brick and tile works for which a supply of water was necessary. By an agreement entered into in 1910 between the claimants and the respondents, who were the local water authority, it was agreed that in the event of the claimants being unable to obtain sufficient water for the purposes of their works from all their available sources of supply, the respondents would supply the claimants with water at cost price not exceeding 2*d.* per 1,000 gallons. The claimants' supply of water from their available resources proving insufficient for their requirements, from the date of the agreement until June 30, 1910, they used over 81,000,000 gallons of water supplied by the respondents. The claimants did not call upon the respondents to supply them at the rate of 2*d.* per 1,000 gallons, but paid the usual charge of 8*d.* per 1,000 gallons. The arbitrator found that the claimants were, during the period between June 24, 1900 (the date of the agreement), and December 30, 1909, when they discovered their rights under the agreement, bona fide ignorant of the existence of legal rights of any nature or extent whatsoever whereby they could require the respondents to supply them with water under the agreement; that they were ignorant of the covenants in the conveyance which related to such rights, and that the sums paid in respect of the water consumed were paid by inadvertence and in ignorance of any legal rights entitling them as aforesaid. In these circumstances the claimants sought to recover the sum of 6*d.* upon each 1,000 gallons of water paid by them in excess of the agreed price. Bailhache, J., held that whether the ignorance of the claimants was ignorance of the fact that the agreement contained the covenant in their favour, or whether their ignorance consisted of what the meaning of the covenant was, they were not prevented from obtaining relief in respect of the money overpaid by them if they were otherwise entitled to it. He held upon the facts that the claimants were entitled to recover 1.426*l.* of the amount claimed by them. Stanley v. Nuneaton Corporation, 108 L. T. 986; 77 J. P. 349; 11 L. G. R. 902; 57 S. J. 592—C.A.

Held, on appeal, that the claimants were not entitled under the agreement to a supply of water at the rate of 2*d.* per 1,000 gallons unless they gave notice to the respondents that their sources of supply were insufficient; that such a notice was a condition precedent to the claimants being entitled to the supply, and, as no such notice had been given, the claimants were not entitled to the supply, and therefore had no claim to be repaid the money which they had already paid. Ib.

Tithe Rentcharge—Payment in Error—Mistake of Fact—Right to Recover—Principal and Agent.]—Where certain moneys payable as tithe rentcharge had been demanded in error by a sequestrator of the property of a bankrupt rector, and had been paid by mistake by the trustees of the estate out of which they had formerly been properly payable after the right to demand them had ceased,—Held, that the destination of the money could not be assumed beyond the sequestrator, and that the sequestrator was liable to refund such moneys, he being something more than an agent of the trustee in bankruptcy of the bankrupt rector. Baylis v. London (Bishop), 81 L. Money Had and Received—Tolls—Payment under Threat of Distress—Right to Recover.]—If a person, with knowledge of the facts, pays money which he is not in law bound to pay, not in order to avoid litigation, but under the threat of and in order to avoid a distress on and seizure of his goods, and in circumstances which imply that he is not paying voluntarily in order to close the transaction, he can recover it back again as money had and received to his use. The fact that he paid under protest is evidence only that he did not intend to close the transaction. Maskell v. Horner, 84 L. J. K.B. 1752; [1915] 3 K.B. 106; 113 L. T. 126; 79 J. P. 406; 13 L. G. R. 808; 59 S. J. 429; 31 T. L. R. 332—C.A.

The plaintiff, a produce dealer, from time to time paid tolls to the defendant, the lessee of a market, which it was subsequently held the latter had no right to demand. The plaintiff had refused to pay on the first demand, but under a threat to distrain his goods had eventually paid; and all the subsequent payments were made under protest. In an action by him to recover the sums paid for tolls,—Held, that he was entitled to recover the sums so paid by him to the defendant during the last six years immediately preceding the action as money had and received to his use, and earlier payments being barred by the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

Decision of Rowlatt, J. (30 T. L. R. 343), reversed. Ib.

Holding out—Estoppel.]—The appellant had been in the habit of personally ordering goods from the respondents, and he had an employee named Cox who had no authority to order goods. The appellant dismissed Cox, and the latter subsequently obtained goods from the respondents on the representation that the appellant had sent him for them. When the appellant was paying the respondents' account he did not notice the items for these articles, and he paid the account in full. A second account containing charges for further articles fraudulently obtained by Cox in the name of the appellant was looked over by the appellant's clerk, but was not properly checked, and the appellant paid it in full. The appellant claimed to recover back from the respondents the sum overpaid:—Held, that the appellant was entitled to recover the sum, as he had not held out Cox as his agent and there was no estoppel. Bailey & Whites, Lim. v. House, 31 T. L. R. 583—D.

Deed of Separation—Marriage Unlawful—Belief in its Lawfulness—Validity.]—If the parties to an agreement make a mutual mistake of fact which is material to the existence of an agreement the agreement is void. The plaintiff and the defendant, believing (as was not the fact) that they were lawfully married, entered into a deed of separation:—Held, that the deed of separation was void. Galloway v. Galloway, 30 T. L. R. 531—D.

Hire-Purchase—Impressment of Article by War Office—Compensation—Division between Owner and Bailee.]—The plaintiffs delivered to the defendants a motor chassis under a hire-purchase agreement, by which the property in the chassis was to remain in the plaintiffs until payment had been made in full. Payment was to be made in three instalments, subject to the defendants' right to pay in full at any time. The defendants fitted the chassis with a body, and, after two instalments had been paid, the War Office impressed the lorry and paid compensation to the defendants. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants to recover a proportion of the compensation,—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an amount equal to that of the last instalment, together with interest. British Berna Motor Lorries, Lim. v. Inter-Transport Co., 31 T. II. REGISTRATION OF MONEY-LENDERS.

See also Vol. IX. 2465.

"Usual trade name"—Carrying on Business in More than One Name.]—A bill of sale taken in the registered name of a money-lender is not void although the name was improperly registered. So long as the name remains on the register, contracts in that name are not to be held void or the money-lender's action in making such contracts punishable by fine or imprisonment. Whiteman v. Sadler, 79 L. J. K.B. 1050; [1910] A.C. 514; 103 L. T. 296; 17 Manson, 296; 54 S. J. 718; 26 T. L. R. 655—H.L. (E.)

It is a breach of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, for a money-lender to carry on business alone under one name and in partnership with another under a different name. Ib.

A name assumed for the first time for the purpose of registration cannot be described as the money-lender's usual trade name. (Lord Mersey dissenting on this point.) Ib.

Members of Firm Incorrectly Registered—Mortgage—Assignment—Bona Fide Holder for Value without Notice — Invalidity of Security.]—A bona fide holder for value without notice of a security given to a money-lender which is invalidated by reason of non-compliance with the provisions of section 2 of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, is in no better position than the original holder of the security. Robinson, In re; Clarkson v. Robinson (No. 1), 80 L. J. Ch. 309; [1911] 1 Ch. 230; 103 L. T. 857; 27 T. L. R. 182—C.A.

A firm was registered under the Money-lenders Act, 1900, in the firm name, and was stated to consist of two partners, C. A. B. and J. C. B. C. A. B. was in fact not a partner, but merely a nominee of G. C. B., who supplied all the capital of the firm, which consisted of himself and J. C. B.:—Held, that securities given to the firm in respect of money-lending transactions were void, as the money-lenders were not properly registered, and that an assignee of the securities for value without notice was in no better position than the original lenders, and could obtain no benefit from the securities. Ib.

Carrying on Business in other Name—Immaterial Variance.]—A money-lender registered her name under the Money-lenders Act, 1900, as the W. Loan and Discount Office. In a promissory note which she took from a borrower in respect of money lent by her she was described as of the W. Loan and Discount Co.:—Held, that the substitution of the word "company" for the word "office" did not constitute a carrying on by her of the money-lending business in a name other than her registered name within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 (b) of the Money-lenders Act. Peizer v. Lefkowitz, 81 L. J. K.B. 718; [1912] 2 K.B. 235; 106 L. T. 776; 28 T. L. R. 334—C.A.

S. P. was registered as a money-lender under the name of the "Wentworth Loan and Discount Office, of 27, Stafford Houses, Wentworth Street, E." She lent money to the defendants on promissory notes, which were upon printed forms and which described her as S. P., of the "Wentworth Loan and Discount Company, of Stafford Houses, Wentworth Street, E." In an action by the plaintiff on the promissory notes, the defendants contended that as the word "company" appeared on the notes instead of the word "office," the plaintiff was not trading in her registered name within section 2 of the Money-lenders Act, 1900. The County Court Judge gave judgment for the plaintiff on the ground that the variation in the description of the plaintiff had not deceived the defendants. The defendants appealed:—Held, dismissing the appeal, that it was open to the County Court Judge to say that the distinction was so small as not to amount to a difference in the description, and, further, that he was entitled to say that he was not satisfied that the single transaction was sufficient to force him to the conclusion that the plaintiff was carrying on business in any other than her registered name. Wentworth Loan Co. v. Lefkowitz, 105 L. T. 585; 56 S. J. 54; 28 T. L. R. 31—D.

Carrying on Business in more than one Registered Name.] — The prohibition from carrying on the business of a money-lender "in more than one name" in sub-section 2 of section 2 of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, applies whether all the names or either of them are registered or unregistered. Whiteman v. Director of Public Prosecutions, 80 L. J. K.B. 681; [1911] 1 K.B. 824; 104 L. T. 102; 75 J. P. 136; 27 T. L. R. 180—D.

Loan by Unregistered Money-lender in Course of his Business — Mortgage — Failure of one Defendant to Plead Act—Illegal Transaction—Unenforceable Deed.]—The plaintiff lent money to trustees upon the security of a mortgage of their trust property. The Court, having come to the conclusion on the evidence that the plaintiff was a money-lender who had lent the money at a time when he was not registered as a money-lender under the Money-lenders Act, 1900, held the mortgage to be void, and refused to enforce it even against one of the defendants, who had failed to plead the Act by way of defence. Scott v. Brown & Co. (61 L. J. Q.B. 738; [1892] 2 Q.B. 724) applied. Robinson's Settlement, In re; Gant v. Hobbs, 81 L. J. Ch. 393; [1912] 1 Ch. 717; 106 L. T. 443; 28 T. L. R. 298—C.A.

—— Action for Debt — Final Judgment in Default of Defence — Arrangement for Payment of Debt by Instalments—Order Staying Proceedings—Debtor made Bankrupt—Proof Based on Arrangement — Agreement with Respect to Advance and Repayment of Money —Unlawful Transaction.]—A solicitor, an unregistered money-lender, being the holder of certain promissory notes given to him by the debtor in respect of a loan which was a money-lending transaction, brought an action on the notes against the debtor, and obtained final judgment under Order XIV. in default of defence. An arrangement was thereupon come to between the parties under which the debt was to carry interest at 9 per cent. reducible to 7½ per cent., and the debtor agreed to pay the debt by instalments; and an order was subsequently made staying all further proceedings against the debtor on the terms of the arrangement. The debtor having become bankrupt, the creditor tendered a proof in the bankruptcy based on the arrangement:—Held, that, notwithstanding that the arrangement was not executed before the advance, it was an agreement entered into by a money-lender in the course of his business as a money-lender with respect to the advance and repayment of money within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 (c) of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, and that the original contract with the unregistered money-lender was not only void, but unlawful, and that therefore neither the judgment nor the subsequent arrangement prevented the Court of Bankruptcy from going behind the transaction, on the objection of the trustee in bankruptcy, and rejecting the proof. Campbell, In re; Seal, ex parte, 81 L. J. K.B. 154; [1911] 2 K.B. 992; 105 L. T. 529; 19 Manson, 1—C.A.

—— Onus—Volume of Business to be Considered.]—Where in an action for money lent the defendant raises the defence that the plaintiff is an unregistered money-lender, the onus of proof that the plaintiff is a money-lender within the meaning of section 6 of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, lies in the first instance on the defendant. In considering whether the defendant has discharged that onus the tribunal must take into consideration the total volume of business of money-lending carried on by the plaintiff, including the exceptions mentioned in section 6. Fagot v. Fine, 105 L. T. 583; 56 S. J. 35—D.

A person carried on business as a jeweller and lent money to customers who came into contact with him in connection with his jewellery business:—Held, that such loans were not made in the course and for the purposes of a business not having for its primary object the lending of money within the meaning of section 6 (d) of the Money-lenders Act, 1900. Ib.

Security taken in other than Registered Name.]—R., the beneficiary under a will, in consideration of 400*l.* paid to him by one Levine, a money-lender, who carried on business under the registered name of Leslie, transferred to Levine 800*l.*, part of the share to which he was entitled under the will. The deed purported to be an out-and-out transfer of the 800*l.* to Levine in his individual name, and contained no covenant by R. to pay the 800*l.* or any sum of money or interest:—Held, that, notwithstanding the form of the deed, it was a security for money given to Levine in the course of his business as a money-lender, and, as it had not been taken by him in his registered name of Leslie, it was void under section 2, sub-section 1 (c) of the Money-lenders Act, 1900. Robinson, In re; Clarkson v. Robinson (No. 2), 104 L. T. 712; 27 T. L. R. 441—C.A.

—— Carrying on Business at Registered Address—Excessive Interest—Harsh and Unconscionable Transaction.] — Section 2, sub-section 1 (c) of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, which provides that a money-lender, as defined by the Act, shall not take any security for money in the course of his business as a money-lender otherwise than in his registered name, does not prohibit him from taking a security in which his names does not appear at all, but prohibits him from taking it in a name other than his registered name. Shaffer v. Sheffield, 83 L. J. K.B. 817; [1914] 2 K.B. 1; 110 L. T. 1023; 58 S. J. 363; 30 T. L. R. 276—Channell, J.

The plaintiff carried on business as a registered money-lender at Manchester, and prior to the loan the subject-matter of this action had had several money-lending transactions with the defendant Sheffield. Sheffield sent a letter to the plaintiff's registered address at Manchester asking him to come to London for the purpose of granting a loan on the security of certain furniture belonging to the defendant Moore, who knew of the suggested visit and its object. The plaintiff accordingly interviewed the defendant at the St. Pancras Hotel, London, and there lent Sheffield 150*l.*, taking as security a bill of exchange for 175*l.*, payable one month after date, drawn by Sheffield upon, and accepted by, Moore as surety, and indorsed in blank to the plaintiff: —Held, first, that the plaintiff had not taken the security "otherwise than in his registered name"; secondly, that he had not carried on business otherwise than at his registered address; but thirdly, that interest would only be allowed at the rate previously charged by the plaintiff—namely, 5*l.* on a loan of 50*l.* for a month. Ib.

Judgment in Registered Name against Debtor — Bankruptcy Petition — Change of Registered Name—Agreement for Payment of Debt — Agreement Entered into by Money-lender under First Registered Name.] — The plaintiff, a money-lender, obtained judgment in his registered name against C., his debtor, and, as the judgment was not satisfied, he presented a bankruptcy petition, in the same registered name, against C. When the petition was about to be heard, and in consideration of it being withdrawn, an arrangement was entered into between the plaintiff, in the same registered name as that in which he had obtained judgment, and the defendant H. by which H. paid a portion of the debt, and agreed to redeem certain shares for 50*l.* within fourteen days. At the time this agreement was entered into, but after he had obtained judgment against C., the plaintiff had changed his registered name. H. not having paid the 50*l.*, the plaintiff sued him to recover same:—Held, first, that the agreement was one "with respect to the advance and repayment of money" within section 2, sub-section 1 (c) of the Money-lenders Act, 1900; secondly, that, as it was ancillary to the bankruptcy petition, it was rightly entered into on the part of the plaintiff in the registered name under which he had obtained judgment and presented the bankruptcy petition; and thirdly, that H. was liable. Blair v. Holcombe, 28 T. L. R. 198—Scrutton, J.

III. RE-OPENING AND AVOIDANCE OF TRANSACTIONS.

See also Vol. IX. 2470.

"Harsh and unconscionable" — Excessive Interest.]—The Court being of opinion that the interest charged by the money-lender for a loan was, in view of the borrower's financial position, excessive, re-opened the transaction of loan and reduced the rate of interest. Stirling v. Musgrave, 29 T. L. R. 333—Bankes, J.

Where on a loan by a money-lender the rate of interest charged is grossly excessive as compared with the risk, having regard to the facts as to the financial position of the borrower known to the lender, or which would have been known to him if he had made proper enquiries, the Court may re-open the transaction as being harsh and unconscionable within section 1 of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, although the borrower is competent, and there is no element of fraud or other unfairness in the transaction. Thomas v. Ashbrook, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 416—K.B. D.

Interest charged at the rate of 80 per cent. per annum where the Court was of opinion that the reasonable rate, having regard to the risk and all the circumstances, should not have exceeded 25 per cent.:—Held, sufficient of itself to entitle the borrower to have the transaction re-opened. Ib.

The defendant borrowed from the plaintiff, who was a money-lender, the sum of 1,000*l.*, and gave a promissory note for 1,600*l.*, which was payable in instalments spread over twelve months, the first payment to be 150*l.* at the end of three months, and there was the usual default clause. The defendant made default in paying the first instalment, and the plaintiff brought an action to recover the 1,600*l.* The defendant gave evidence that the plaintiff agreed that the interest should be 60 per cent. per annum, but did not explain the default clause and that it was agreed that he should be at liberty to pay off the whole amount at any time and only pay interest at 60 per cent. After action the defendant paid the principal and offered to pay 60 per cent. interest:—Held, that the note did not contain all the terms of the bargain, that the defendant did not understand the effect of the default clause, that the transaction was harsh and unconscionable, and that the plaintiff should have judgment for 60 per cent. on 1,000*l.* up to the date when the offer was made. Stirling v. Rose, 30 T. L. R. 67—Avory, J.

The Court, being of opinion that the interest charged was, in the circumstances, excessive, reduced it to 50 per cent. Fortescue v. Bradshaw, 27 T. L. R. 251—Pickford, J.

The Court, being of opinion that the rate of interest charged was, in the circumstances, excessive, reduced it to 30 per cent. Wheatley v. Part, 27 T. L. R. 303—Pickford, J.

In cases under the Money-lenders Act, 1900, where the Court is asked to re-open a transaction on the ground that the interest charged is excessive, all the circumstances, such as time and risk, and, further, whether the interest was deducted in cash or still remained in the region of speculation, have to be taken into consideration. Merely to say that the percentage of interest is too high affords no assistance to the Court in determining the question. Whether the equitable rule that in money-lending transactions with an expectant heir the onus is on the money-lender to prove that the transaction is fair, and that if it is not fair only 5 per cent. interest is allowed, applies where the expectant heir is of full age, quære. King v. Hay Currie, 28 T. L. R. 10—Scrutton, J.

Where loan transactions between a borrower and a money-lender, consisting of promissory notes, under which principal and interest are repayable by instalments and containing a default clause, are so involved that the borrower cannot understand the rate of interest charged, which is in fact excessive, the Court will re-open the transactions and grant the borrower relief on the ground that the dealings are "harsh and unconscionable" within the Money-lenders Act, 1900, s. 1, sub-s. 1. Halsey v. Wolfe, 84 L. J. Ch. 809; [1915] 2 Ch. 330; 113 L. T. 720—Joyce, J.

—— Request for Terms—Sending Money—Avoidance of Negotiation.]—When a person who has recently refused a loan from a money-lender writes to him shortly afterwards in order to ascertain his terms, and the money-lender induces a transaction by sending him money and thereby avoiding the negotiation of terms, the transaction may be re-opened under section 1 of the Money-lenders Act, 1900. Lewis v. Mills, 30 T. L. R. 438—Rowlatt, J.

—— Nature of Risk.]—The plaintiff, a registered money-lender, sued the defendant for money lent. The defendant contended that under the Money-lenders Act, 1900, s. 1, the transaction ought to be re-opened on the ground that, in view of the high rate of interest charged, it was harsh and unconscionable. The plaintiff submitted that excessive interest was not, in itself, sufficient ground for the re-opening of the transaction :—Held, in considering whether to re-open a transaction under section 1 the Court must have regard to all the facts in the case—for instance, the financial embarrassment of the borrower at the time of the making of the loan. Glaskie v. Griffin, 111 L. T. 712—Sankey, J.

—— Secured Advance—Nature of Risk—Sum Adjudged to be "fairly due."]—Where an advance granted to a borrower by a registered money-lender was on the security of certain real estate, interest at the rate of 50 per cent. —or, in one view, 40 per cent.—being charged for the same, it was held that as a secured advance stood in a different position from an unsecured advance, the interest was so excessive as to render the transaction "harsh and unconscionable" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1, of the Money-lenders Act, 1900; that the transaction ought, therefore, to be re-opened; and that, having regard to all the circumstances, it was reasonable that the money-lender should receive interest at the rate of 20 per cent. as "fairly due" within the meaning of the sub-section. Salaman v. Blair; Blair v. Johnstone, 111 L. T. 426—C.A.

—— Questions of Law for Judge.]—Where proceedings are taken in any Court by a money-lender for the recovery of money lent, or the enforcement of any agreement or security in respect of money lent, the questions under section 1 of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, whether the transaction is harsh and unconscionable, and whether the interest charged is excessive, are questions of law for the Judge, and ought not to be left to a jury. The jury may, however, be asked to find any facts which the Judge may think necessary for his decision of the questions of law. Abrahams v. Dimmock, 84 L. J. K.B. 802; [1915] 1 K.B. 663; 112 L. T. 386; 59 S. J. 188; 31 T. L. R. 87—C.A.

Decision of the Divisional Court (83 L. J. K.B. 1033; [1914] 2 K.B. 372) affirmed. Ib.

—— Expectant Heir—Excessive Interest.]—The plaintiff, who was a money-lender, advanced 1,000*l.* to the defendant on July 29, 1914, and received from him a promissory note for 1,600*l.* payable in four monthly instalments of 400*l.* each, the first instalment to be paid on October 1, 1914. There was a default clause to the effect that if any instalment was unpaid the whole amount was to become payable and interest at 60 per cent. was to be paid from the date of default. Default was made in the payment of the first instalment. The defendant had an income of about 2,000*l.* a year, and was entitled to the reversion of certain property worth about 4,000*l.* a year. The defendant had had previous transactions with the plaintiff and had settled them voluntarily. In an action on the promissory note,—Held, that in the circumstances the defendant was not entitled to relief under the equitable doctrine as to catching bargains made with expectant heirs and that the past transactions ought not to be opened up, but that as the terms on which the money was lent in the present case were out of all reason the transaction must be opened up under the Money-lenders Act, 1900, s. 1, and the plaintiff would have judgment for the principal with interest at 30 per cent. Wolfe v. Lowther, 31 T. L. R. 354—Rowlatt, J.

MORATORIUM.

Banker and Customer—Dishonour of Cheque—Breach of Contract—Libel.]—The plaintiff, who was a newsagent, had an account with the defendant bank, and on August 5, 1914, she drew a cheque for 4*l.* 5*s.* in favour of the company from whom she was in the habit of buying newspapers. On August 6 a moratorium proclamation was issued, providing that all payments of not less than 5*l.* due and payable before August 6 or any day before September 4 in respect of any cheque drawn before August 4 "or in respect of any contract made before that time" should be deemed due and payable one month after the original due date or on September 4. The cheque was presented on August 10 and returned with the words "Refer to drawer" upon it. On August 10 the plaintiff had 6*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* to her credit on the pre-moratorium account and 3*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* on the post-moratorium account. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for breach of contract and libel,—Held, that the defendants were protected by the moratorium, as the case was one of a payment in respect of a contract made before August 4, and that in the circumstances the words "Refer to drawer" were not capable of a libellous meaning, and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Flach v. London and South-Western Bank, 31 T. L. R. 334—Scrutton, J.

—— Deposits—Agreed Interest—Moratorium Rate—Meaning of "if not otherwise carrying interest."] — In July, 1914, the plaintiffs deposited with the defendant bank two sums, repayable on August 14 with interest at 3¼ and 3½ per cent. per annum respectively. On August 6 a Royal proclamation set up a moratorium and provided that payments postponed thereunder should, "if not otherwise carrying interest, and if specific demand were made for payment, and payment was refused, carry interest until payment at the Bank of England rate current on August 7, 1914"—namely, 6 per cent. per annum. On August 14 repayment was demanded, but it was not made till October 31. The deposits fell within the class of payments to which the proclamation applied:—Held, that between August 14 and October 31 the plaintiffs were only entitled to interest at the agreed rates and not at 6 per cent., as at the date of the proclamation the deposits were carrying interest otherwise than by virtue of the proclamation. Coats, Lim. v. Disconto Gesellschaft, 31 T. L. R. 446—Bailhache, J.

—— Overdraft—Moneys Paid in by Customer—Appropriation in Discharge of Overdraft—Dishonour of Customer's Cheque—Liability of Banker.] — The defendants on February 11, 1914, agreed to allow the plaintiff, who was a customer of the bank, an overdraft for a period of six months. On August 6, 1914, when the plaintiff's account was overdrawn, a moratorium was proclaimed. On August 28 the plaintiff, without making any express appropriation, paid a sum of money into his account, and the defendants applied a part of it in discharge of the overdraft. On the following day the plaintiff drew a cheque upon the bank, but in consequence of the discharge of the overdraft his balance was not sufficient to meet it. The cheque was dishonoured, and returned to the holder marked "R.D." In an action brought by the plaintiff against the bank for damages for breach of contract and for libel,—Held, that the effect of the moratorium was to postpone the date of payment of the overdraft for a month, that the defendants were not entitled under the circumstances to refuse payment of the plaintiff's cheque, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Allen v. London County and Westminster Bank, 84 L. J. K.B. 1286; 112 L. T. 989; 31 T. L. R. 210—Lord Coleridge, J.

Contract—Date of Making—Applicability of Moratorium.] — The moratorium proclaimed under the Postponement of Payments Act, 1914, does not extend to contracts made after August 4, 1914. Softlaw v. Morgan, 31 T. L. R. 54—C.A.

Sale of Goods — C.i.f. Contract — Payment against Shipping Documents — Tender of Documents — Refusal to Pay.] — The defendant sold to the plaintiff opium, shipment during July, 1914, payment cash against documents upon arrival of steamer. The steamer arrived in London on August 14, after the outbreak of the war with Germany and the proclamation of August 6, 1914, postponing payments due and payable (inter alia) before September 4, 1914. The defendant offered to tender the shipping documents on payment; the plaintiff claimed delivery of the goods without present payment, contending that under the above proclamation he was entitled to postpone payment:—Held, that the proclamation did not apply to a c.i.f. contract, and that the plaintiff could only get the documents, if tendered, on payment under the contract. Happe v. Manasseh, 84 L. J. K.B. 1895; 113 L. T. 177—Sankey, J. Affirmed, 32 T. L. R. 112—C.A.

Payment of Cash in London for Roubles in Russia—Effect of Proclamations.]—The plaintiff bank and the defendant bank entered into a contract by which in exchange for the payment of sovereigns in London by the defendant bank on August 31, 1914, the plaintiff bank were to pay roubles in Petrograd at the exchange rate of 95.25. On August 6, 1914, a moratorium proclamation was issued under the Postponement of Payments Act, 1914, in regard to "payments . . . which will become due and payable on any day before the beginning of the 4th day of September, 1914, . . . in respect of any contract made before that time," and it postponed payment until September 4, or until a month after the day on which the payment became due, whichever was the later date. The proclamation also provided for interest. Just before August 31 the defendant bank claimed that under the proclamation they had a right to postpone payment, but the plaintiff bank did not agree to a postponement. Further extensions of the moratorium were made by a second and a third proclamation, but the third differed from the other two in that it provided that the moratorium of a month could only be obtained if within three days after the date to which payment had been already postponed interest was paid up to that date, and within a day or two after the second postponed date the defendant bank paid the sovereigns, and the roubles were handed over. The plaintiff bank then brought an action against the defendant bank to recover interest either under the proclamations or as damages or under the Civil Procedure Act, 1833:—Held, that the proclamations did not apply to the contract, as they must be construed as being limited to payments which automatically became due without the condition precedent of a tender by the payee, and that the defendant bank broke their contract by not paying on the due date, but that as the rouble was worth less in sovereigns on the date of the actual performance of the contract than on the contract date, the plaintiff bank were only entitled to recover a nominal sum. Credito Italiano v. Swiss Bank-Verein, 31 T. L. R. 554—Scrutton, J.

Goods Sold and Delivered—Several Consignments of Goods—Aggregate Prices Exceeding Five Pounds—Separate Prices not Exceeding Five Pounds—Setting Aside Writ.]—Under the powers conferred by the Postponement of Payments Act, 1914, a proclamation was made on August 6, 1914, which provided that all payments which had become due and payable before a certain date in respect of contract should be deemed to be due and payable on a specified later date; but that the proclamation should not apply to "any payment in respect of a liability which when incurred did not exceed five pounds in amount." Between the above dates the plaintiffs issued and served upon the defendants a writ specially indorsed with a claim for a sum of upwards of 61*l*., made up of the prices of thirty-four parcels of goods alleged to have been sold and delivered under separate contracts of sale, all these prices having become due before the earlier of the above dates, and twenty-eight of them being individually though not in the aggregate below 5*l*., while the remaining six were individually above that amount. The defendants took out a summons to set aside the writ on the ground that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by the moratorium created by the proclamation:—Held, that the defendants' liability for each of the prices which was below 5*l*. was a liability which came within the words of the above exemption, and that the plaintiffs' claim so far as it consisted of these prices was not barred, and therefore that the writ could not be set aside, notwithstanding that the total claims or the other individual prices were above 5*l*. Auster, Lim. v. London Motor Coach Works, 84 L. J. K.B. 580; 112 L. T. 99; 59 S. J. 24; 31 T. L. R. 26—C.A.

Promissory Note — Issue of Writ — Subsequent Suspension of Remedy—Termination of Moratorium — Right to Judgment.]—When, after money has become due, a writ has been issued in an action to recover the amount, the fact that after the issue of the writ a statutory moratorium temporarily suspended the plaintiff's remedy is not a defence, if before the trial of the action the temporary moratorium has ceased to apply to the plaintiff's claim. Glaskie v. Petry, 59 S. J. 92; 31 T. L. R. 40—Scrutton, J.

Rent — Distress — Removal of Goods.]—Though a landlord who had levied a distress for rent before the date of the proclamation of a moratorium under the Postponement of Payments Act, 1914, but who had not sold the goods before that date, was not entitled to sell the goods during the currency of the moratorium, yet he was entitled to remove the goods from the demised premises for the purpose of securing his possession of the goods. Shottland v. Cabins, Lim., 31 T. L. R. 297—Shearman, J.

—— Non-payment—Recovery of Possession.]—By section 1, sub-section 1 of the Postponement of Payments Act, 1914, and a proclamation issued in pursuance thereof, the payment of any sum due and payable before the date of the proclamation in respect of a contract made before that time was postponed to a specified date:—Held, that rent due and payable before the date of the proclamation could not be recovered in an action in which the writ was issued after the proclamation and before the specified date, because not due and payable at the date of the writ; and that as the right, given by the agreement of tenancy, to re-enter for non-payment of rent was only a security for the rent, it followed that that right also did not exist at the date of the writ and could not be enforced in the action. Durell v. Gread, 84 L. J. K.B. 130; 112 L. T. 126; 59 S. J. 7; 31 T. L. R. 22—Scrutton, J.

—— Shares—Forfeiture for Non-Payment of Calls — Validity of Resolution — Attempt to Take Possession of Property.]—A call upon shares which is payable on a date falling within the moratorium proclaimed under the Postponement of Payments Act, 1914, is a debt within the moratorium, and consequently a resolution of the directors of the company purporting to forfeit the shares for non-payment of the call during the currency of the moratorium is invalid. Such a resolution is also an attempt without the leave of the Court to take possession of property within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 (b) of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914. Burgess v. O.H.N. Gases, Lim., 59 S. J. 90; 31 T. L. R. 59—Neville, J.

Suspension of Payment.]—A debtor commits an act of bankruptcy by suspending payment of his debts within the period of the moratorium proclamations issued under the Postponement of Payments Act, 1914, and a debt within those proclamations is payable at a certain future time, and forms a good petitioning creditor's debt. Sahler, In re, 84 L. J. K.B. 1275; 112 L. T. 133; [1915] H. B. R. 119; 59 S. J. 106—D.

Writ Issued during Suspensory Period—Default of Appearance.]—The effect of the proclamations made under the Postponement of Payments Act, 1914, was to give a statutory credit for the period mentioned therein, so that during such period no action was maintainable in respect of a debt coming within the proclamations. If during the suspensory period a writ has been issued, the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment, although no appearance has been entered; and the Court, on the facts being brought to its notice, will of its own motion either dismiss the action or remove the writ from the files of the Court. If judgment has been inadvertently allowed to be signed, it will be set aside by the Court when brought to its notice without requiring the defendant to institute a motion for the purpose. Gramophone Co. v. King, [1914] 2 Ir. R. 535—K.B. D.

MORTGAGE.

I. THE CONTRACT.

Land Held on Trust for Sale—Proceeds—"Interest in land"—Period of Limitation.]—An interest in the proceeds of sale of land held on trust for sale is an "interest in land" within the meaning of the Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833 and 1874; and the period of limitation applicable to a claim by a mortgagee of such an interest is therefore twelve years. Kirkland v. Peatfield (72 L. J. K.B. 355; [1903] 1 K.B. 756) and Hazeldine's Trusts, In re (77 L. J. Ch. 97; [1908] 1 Ch. 34), followed. Fox, In re; Brooks v. Marston, 82 L. J. Ch. 393; [1913] 2 Ch. 75; 108 L. T. 948—Warrington, J.

Agreement not to Call in Principal on Punctual Performance of Covenants — Breach of Covenants—Receipt of Interest—Waiver.]—A mortgagee agreed with a mortgagor that if the mortgagor punctually performed the covenants contained in the mortgage deed he would not call in the mortgage money for five years. The mortgagor during the first year committed several breaches of covenant. About one year and a half after the last of these breaches, and before the expiration of the five years, the mortgagee gave notice calling in the mortgage money, alleging the breaches aforesaid. During this period of a year and a half the mortgagee had duly received the interest on the mortgage money on each quarter day as it accrued due:—Held, that the receipt of interest was one of the facts receivable in evidence in determining whether the plaintiff had waived his right to call in the money before the expiration of the five years accruing to him on the commission of the breaches of covenant by the mortgagor. Seal v. Gimson, 110 L. T. 583—Lord Coleridge, J.

Assignment of Equity of Redemption — Death of Mortgagor — Payment of Interest Continued by Assignee — Failure to Repay Principal—Insufficient Security—Mortgagor's Estate—Claim to Follow Assets—Delay.]—Where a mortgagor dies after assigning the equity of redemption, a default is made in repaying the principal, and the security proves insufficient, the fact that the mortgagee has continued to receive interest from the assignee for a number of years, and has delayed enforcing his security, does not debar him from following the assets of the mortgagor's estate, such delay not amounting to laches. Blake v. Gale (55 L. J. Ch. 559; 32 Ch. D. 571), Ridgway v. Newstead (30 L. J. Ch. 889), and Leahy v. De Moleyns ([1896] 1 Ir. R. 206), considered and distinguished. Eustace, In re; Lee v. McMillan, 81 L. J. Clogging of Equity of Redemption—Debentures — Floating Charge — Licence to Work Mines—Charter—Monopoly.]—In April, 1892, the appellant company advanced to the respondents 112,000*l.*, to be repaid in manner provided. It was also provided that in the event of the respondent company issuing debentures the appellant company should be at liberty to require debentures to be issued in satisfaction of the debt; that in the event of there being no issue of debentures or of the appellant company not exercising their option to take debentures, but of desiring the exclusive right to work diamondiferous mines in the respondent company's territory, the appellants might decline to accept repayment for five years of the 112,000*l.*, and be entitled to a grant in perpetuity of such exclusive right or licence. By a supplemental agreement dated December 7, 1892, the appellants agreed to advance a further 100,000*l.*, to be repaid as provided, to be secured on a contemplated issue of 250,000*l.* debentures, which was to be a floating charge on all the property of the respondent company, and that the respondents should grant to the appellants the exclusive right or licence above mentioned. The debenture trust deed was executed in June, 1894, and debentures to the value of 212,000*l.* taken by the appellants. They were paid off long before the action was brought:—Held, that the debenture issue and floating charge were wholly separate from the licence to work the mines, and that the latter did not operate as a clog on the equity of redemption, or as a monopoly within the meaning of the respondent's charter. De Beers Consolidated Mines v. British South Africa Co., 81 L. J. Ch. 137; [1912] A.C. 52; 105 L. T. 683; 56 S. J. 175; 28 T. L. R. 114—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal (80 L. J. Ch. 65; [1910] 2 Ch. 502) reversed. Ib.

—— Stipulation for Collateral Advantage.]—There is no rule in equity which precludes a mortgagee from stipulating for any collateral advantage, provided that such collateral advantage is not either unfair and unconscionable, in the nature of a penalty clogging the equity of redemption, or inconsistent with or repugnant to the right to redeem. Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Co., 83 L. J. Ch. 79; [1914] A.C. 25; 109 L. T. 802; 58 S. J. 97; 30 T. L. R. 114—H.L. (E.)

The appellants advanced money to the respondents upon the security of a floating charge over all their property present and future, and agreed not to demand repayment for a period of five years, but the respondents were to be at liberty to repay the debt at an earlier period on giving notice. The agreement also contained a provision that the borrowers should not sell any sheepskins to any purchasers other than the lenders for a period of five years from the date of the agreement so long as the lenders were willing to purchase the same at an agreed price. The loan was paid off before the expiration of the five years: —Held, that the option of purchasing the sheepskins was not terminated, but continued for the period of five years. Ib.

—— Equal Payments—Validity—Tied Public House.]—It is now fully established by the House of Lords that the old rule that a mortgage cannot be made irredeemable still prevails and that equity will not permit any clause or contrivance, being part of the mortgage transaction or contemporaneous with it, to prevent or impede redemption. Fairclough v. Swan Brewery Co., 81 L. J. P.C. 207; [1912] A.C. 565; 106 L. T. 931; 28 T. L. R. 450—P.C.

The appellant, in consideration of a mortgage of licensed premises granted to him by the respondents, borrowed 500*l.*, to be repaid by 208 monthly instalments. The mortgagor was not to be at liberty to pay off the debt otherwise than by instalments without the express consent in writing of the respondents, and the premises, which were to be a tied house during the continuance of the security, were held for a term of years which exceeded by six weeks only the actual expiration of the lease. On the failure of the respondents on one occasion to supply beer in accordance with their covenant, the appellant assumed to treat the tie as at an end, and the respondents brought an action for damages and an injunction. The appellant counterclaimed to redeem:—Held, that the mortgage being obviously meant to be irredeemable, the provision as to repayment of the debt could not be enforced, and the appellant was entitled to redeem. Ib.

—— Sale of—Liability of Purchaser to Indemnify the Mortgagor against Mortgage Debt—Contingent Reversionary Interest—Construction of Purchase Deed.] — The doctrine of Waring v. Ward (7 Ves. 332)—namely, that the purchaser of an equity of redemption is bound to indemnify the vendor against all personal liability in respect of the mortgage debt—is one which bends to the circumstances of any particular case, and is inapplicable where the terms of the purchase deed are themselves inconsistent with any such indemnity being intended. Semble, the doctrine is not limited to the case where the purchaser is in possession of the property, but applies to the purchase of the equity of redemption in a contingent reversionary interest before it falls into possession. Per Farwell, L.J.—The doctrine is based upon an equity binding on the conscience, and not upon implied contract. Mills v. United Counties Bank, 81 L. J. Ch. 210; [1912] 1 Ch. 231; 105 L. T. 742; 28 T. L. R. 40—C.A.

The plaintiff was the owner of a contingent reversionary interest subject to a first mortgage to the defendants and to a second mortgage in favour of a second mortgagee. The defendants having commenced an action against the plaintiff and his co-partners, an agreement was come to which involved the purchase by the defendants of the plaintiff's contingent reversionary interest, which was carried out by an indenture of assignment (to which the second mortgagee was not a party), whereby (after certain recitals shewing an intention by the defendants to protect themselves against the second mortgage) the contingent reversionary interest was assigned to the defendants with an express provision against the merger of their mortgage by way of protection against the second mortgage only, and the defendants thereby expressly covenanted to indemnify the plaintiff against succession and other duties, and it was provided that any moneys to arise from a sale of the property should be applied in payment of the amount owing on the defendants' mortgage, and the residue so far as it would go in payment of the amount owing on the second mortgage, and the balance (if any) should be paid to the defendants. The second mortgagee having demanded payment from the plaintiff under his covenant, the latter brought an action claiming to be indemnified by the defendants:—Held, that the terms of the deed excluded the notion of any larger indemnity than was there expressed, and that it was not the intention of the parties that the defendants should indemnify the plaintiff against his personal liability in respect of the second mortgage, and that therefore they were not liable to do so. Ib.

Decision of Eve, J. (80 L. J. Ch. 334; [1911] 1 Ch. 669), affirmed on the effect of the deed, but doubted so far as he decided that the doctrine of Waring v. Ward (supra) is limited to the case where the purchaser is in possession of the property. Ib.

Proviso for Redemption — Effect of, in Charging Prior Mortgage Debts on Additional Property.]—By deed dated April 15, 1872, A. mortgaged certain lands to B. (a corporate body) to secure 32,000*l.* By deed dated October 31, 1872, A. mortgaged the same lands to B. to secure a further sum of 5,000*l.* The deed contained a proviso for redemption on payment of the said sums of 32,000*l.* and 5,000*l.* By a third deed dated July 9, 1874, reciting the two prior mortgages, A. mortgaged the lands therein, together with other lands at N., to B. to secure a further sum of 6,000*l.* The habendum in the last mentioned deed was "to have and to hold the said lands and hereditaments hereinbefore expressed to be firstly granted"—that is, the lands mortgaged in 1872—"to B., its successors and assigns, to the use of B., its successors and assigns for ever, but subject nevertheless" to the said recited mortgages, "and also to the proviso for redemption hereinafter mentioned, and to have and to hold the said lands and hereditaments and all other the premises hereinbefore expressed to be hereby secondly and thirdly granted"—that is, the additional lands at N. —"to B., its successors and assigns, to the use of B., its successors and assigns for ever," subject to the rents and covenants in certain fee-farm grants, "and subject to the proviso for redemption hereinafter contained; that is to say, provided, and it is hereby agreed and declared that if the said A., his executors, administrators or assigns, shall on October 4, 1874, pay to B., its successors and assigns, the said sum of 6,000*l.* with interest at the rate of 5*l.* 10*s.* per cent. per annum . . . then the said B., its successors or assigns, shall at any time thereafter upon the request and at the costs of the said A., his executors, administrators or assigns and upon payment also of the said sum of 32,000*l.* and interest, so secured as aforesaid by the said indenture of April 15, 1872, and also of said sum of 5,000*l.* and interest, so secured as aforesaid by the said indenture of October 31, 1872, reconvey the said lands, hereditaments, and premises, hereinbefore expressed to be granted and released, unto and to the use of the said A., his heirs and assigns, or as he or they shall direct"; and it contained a proviso that, notwithstanding anything therein contained, B. should not be compelled to reconvey the lands or any part thereof until the aforesaid sums of 32,000*l.* and 5,000*l.*, as well as the said sum of 6,000*l.*, should be fully paid and satisfied:—Held, that by the deed of July 9, 1874, all the three mortgage deeds were charged on the additional lands at N. Mostyn v. Lancaster (52 L. J. Ch. 848; 23 Ch. D. 583) applied. Thomson's Estate, In re, [1912] 1 Ir. R. 460—C.A.

Property Comprised in—Exception of "logs on the way to the mill."] — A mortgage granted over the whole assets, real and personal, and the property of a company now owned by it, or which may hereafter be acquired, "excepting logs on the way to the mill," must be construed to except not only logs on the way to the mill at the date of the mortgage, but also all logs on the way to the mill from time to time. Imperial Paper Mills of Canada v. Quebec Bank, 83 L. Title of Mortgagor—Tenant in Occupation of Property Proposed to be Mortgaged — No Enquiry of Tenant by Proposing Mortgagee—Mortgagee Bound by Rights of Tenant.]—By a lease in writing a house was demised to the defendant for a term of four years at a yearly rent payable quarterly: and the defendant entered under the lease. Soon after the commencement of the term the lessor agreed to accept, and the defendant paid, a lump sum in satisfaction of all rent reserved by the lease during the term. The lessor then mortgaged the premises to the plaintiff. The plaintiff knew nothing of the payment of rent in advance by the defendant, and had only seen the counterpart lease; but she had made no enquiry of the defendant before the mortgage was completed:—Held, that the plaintiff was bound by the arrangement made between the defendant and the lessor, and could not recover from the defendant any part of the rent reserved by the lease. Green v. Rheinberg, 104 L. T. 149—C.A.

Set-off—Lessee and Mortgagee of Reversion — Action by Mortgagee for Rent — Counterclaim by Lessee for Damages against Lessor —Damages for Breach of Covenant in Building Agreement.]—The rule that an assignee of a chose in action can set off a claim for damages against the assignor arising out of the same transaction has no application as between a lessee and a mortgagee of the reversion. Reeves v. Pope, 83 L. J. K.B. 771; [1914] 2 K.B. 284; 110 L. T. 503; 58 S. J. 248—C.A.

The rule that a purchaser is bound by all the equities which a tenant in possession can enforce against the vendor only applies to an interest of the tenant in the land and does not therefore enable a lessee to set off against a mortgagee of the reversion suing for rent damages which the lessee claims against the lessor for breach of covenant in a building agreement. Ib.

Mortgage by Sub-demise — Concurrent Leases — Validity of Second Lease — Legal Term — Surrender — Not Applicable to Sub-demises of Leaseholds.]—A second mortgage by demise of leasehold premises for a term concurrent with that granted under a prior mortgage is not a mere equitable charge, but passes a legal term, which is an incumbrance for the discharge of which a formal surrender under seal is necessary. Moore and Hulme's Contract, In re, 81 L. J. Ch. 503; [1912] 2 Ch. 105; 106 L. T. 330; 56 S. J. 89—Joyce, J.

The term passed by a second mortgage by demise does not become a satisfied term under section 2 of the Satisfied Terms Act, 1845, when the money due under the mortgage is paid off without formal surrender. Ib.

Chattels—Inclusion by Mistake of Chattel not Owned by Borrower — Sale — Claim by Owner to Proceeds.] — A company became surety for a borrower, and he gave the company a charge on the proceeds of the sale of a number of pictures, which by mistake included a Vandyck. The Vandyck belonged not to the borrower, but to his wife, who did not know of the charge until after it had been executed. The pictures, including the Vandyck, were sold, and on the following day the borrower's wife claimed her picture. The company having gone into liquidation,—Held, that in the circumstances the liquidator was not entitled to retain the proceeds of the sale of the Vandyck. Chaplin, Milne, Grenfell & Co., In re (No. 2), 31 T. IV. ASSIGNMENT AND TRANSFER.

Transferee for Value without Notice — Negligence of Mortgagor — Fraud of Mortgagee — Equities as between Mortgagor and Transferee.]—A. a solicitor in 1897 mortgaged certain property to P. to secure 600*l.* In 1905 P. advanced a further sum of 317*l.* to A., and a new mortgage was executed for 917*l.* of the lands subject to the mortgage of 1897 and additional lands. This mortgage contained no reference to the mortgage of 1897, nor was the deed affecting that mortgage handed over to A., it being alleged by P. to have been lost. In 1907 P. transferred the 1905 mortgage to himself and H. as joint trustees of a trust fund by way of sub-mortgage to secure 1,500*l.*, the circumstances being such as to constitute P. and H. transferees for value. The principal sum of 917*l.* was then due under the mortgage of 1905, and H. had no notice of the mortgage of 1897. A. acted as P.'s solicitor in connection with the transfer, and approved of the transfer deed. In 1908 P. transferred the mortgage of 1897 to a bank, which subsequently realised the amount. The sub-mortgage of 1907 was afterwards transferred to H. and M., as the then trustees of the trust fund, and they instituted the present proceedings for a sale of the lands comprised in the mortgage of 1905, alleging that the sum of 917*l.* was due under the mortgage. A. claimed to be entitled to credit in respect of the moneys realised under the mortgage of 1897:—Held, that in consequence of A. having left the mortgage of 1897 outstanding in the hands of P., it was not open to A. to say that the whole amount secured by the mortgage of 1905 was not due. Ambrose's Estate, In re, [1913] 1 Ir. Order for Possession — Delivery of Possession by Mortgagor to Mortgagee—Exercise of Jurisdiction.]—The words "delivery of possession by the mortgagor" in Irish R.S.C. Order LV. rule 7 [corresponding to Order LV. rule 5A] are not to be read as merely ancillary to a sale ordered by the Court. The Court will in a proper case make an order for the delivery of possession of the mortgaged premises by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, apart from any proceedings for sale. Semble, such an order will not be made as a matter of course. Bank of Ireland v. Slattery, [1911] 1 Ir. Mortgagor in Possession—Receipt of Rent—Effect of Judicature Act, 1873, and Conveyancing Act, 1881.]—The principles laid down in Moss v. Gallimore (1 Dougl. 279) and Rogers v. Humphreys (5 L. J. K.B. 65; 4 Ad. & E. 299)—namely, that the rent payable under a lease bearing date anterior to a mortgage is only received by the mortgagor in possession by leave and licence of the mortgagee; that the mortgagee is the reversioner expectant on that lease, and if by going into possession he puts an end to the leave and licence under which the mortgagor collects and receives the rents he is entitled to the rent payable in respect of the mortgaged premises—have not been overruled or set aside by section 25, sub-section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and section 10 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881. Those two provisions do not alter the rights of the parties as they were established at common law; all those sections do is to create a mode of procedure. Ind, Coope & Co., In re; Fisher v. The Company, 80 L. J. Ch. 661; [1911] 2 Ch. 223; 105 L. T. 356; 55 S. J. 600—Warrington, J.

Mortgagees' Right to Grant Licence to Work Minerals—Sale by Instalments.]—In the course of foreclosure proceedings, but before any order as to foreclosure had been made, mortgagees of a country estate containing deposits of peat valuable for a certain chemical process asked the Court to sanction a grant by them to a third party of an exclusive licence to work the peat for fifty years upon certain royalties. The mortgage was prior and not subject to the Conveyancing Act, 1911. The application was based on the ground that such a licence was in effect a series of deferred sales of part of the land and that the Court could therefore by virtue of section 25, sub-section 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, in the exercise of its discretion, authorise such a transaction:—Held, that the Court had no power to sanction such a licence as proposed, and that the application must be refused. Stamford, Spalding, and Boston Banking Co. v. Keeble, 82 L. J. Ch. 388; [1913] 2 Ch. 96; 109 L. T. 310—Sargant, J.

Quære, however, whether under section 25 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the Court could not in its discretion direct a sale of minerals apart from surface, or vice versa. Ib.

—— Power to Grant Lease — Delivery of Counterpart to Mortgagee — Non-delivery — Effect against Lessee.]—Where a mortgagor in possession grants a lease, and fails to deliver a counterpart to the mortgagees, as provided by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the failure to deliver does not invalidate the lease; and the same rule applies where the terms of the mortgage have given the mortgagor an extended power of leasing, unless a contrary intention appear in the mortgage deed. Public Trustee v. Lawrence, 81 L. Misrepresentation by Mortgagor—Estoppel.]—Where a mortgagor makes false representations as to existing facts, relying on which a mortgagee lends him money, those who claim through the mortgagor for value, but with notice of the representations, are estopped from denying the truth of the representations, and must if possible make them good. Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Crowther, 83 L. Trust for Sale—Power of Postponement—"Land"—Registration.]—An incumbrancer on a share of the proceeds of real estate in Yorkshire settled upon trust for sale, though with power to postpone, obtains no priority over other incumbrancers of such share by registering his mortgage deed, and the priorities of such incumbrances rank according to their respective notices to the trustees. This is so even though the land is in fact never sold. Arden v. Arden (54 L. J. Ch. 655; 29 Ch. D. 702) followed. Ib.

Conveyance of Portion of Mortgaged Lands "free from incumbrances"—Right of Indemnity — Notice — Indemnifying Lands Mortgaged without Notice—Right of Contribution.]—If the owner of lands A and B, on which a charge exists, conveys lands A for value, and gives a covenant that the lands are "free from incumbrances," the purchaser is entitled to throw the charge on lands B so long as lands B remain in the hands of the mortgagor or of volunteers under him, but the equity ceases on a conveyance of lands B to a purchaser for value without notice. Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation v. Collum, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 337—Ross, J.

The owner of lands A and B, subject to an annuity and a mortgage, conveyed lands A for value, with a covenant that the lands were free from incumbrances. He subsequently mortgaged lands B to a mortgagee without notice of the conveyance:—Held, that the mortgagee of lands B was entitled to make lands A contribute rateably with lands B towards the payment of the superior charges. Ib.

Mortgage to Bank to Secure Present and Future Advances—Subsequent Mortgage by Mortgagor "as beneficial owner"—Appropriation of Payments.]—Q. in 1894 mortgaged certain lands and a policy of assurance to a bank to secure all moneys then due or to become due, with interest. In 1897 he, "as beneficial owner," mortgaged the lands, but not the policy, to F. to secure 700*l.* and interest. F. had notice at the time of the prior mortgage to the bank. Notice of the mortgage to F. was given by F. to the bank on March 17, 1897, when a sum of 1,963*l.* was due by Q. to the bank, for which he had given them promissory notes payable three months after date. The bank continued the account with Q. as one unbroken account, instead of opening a fresh account. The notes had been originally given in 1895 and 1896, and were renewed from time to time down to 1903, and since remained unpaid. The practice had been that when the notes became due they were debited to Q.'s current account, were at once renewed, and the amount credited to the account. Subsequent to March 17, 1897, Q. paid into his current account in the bank 4,000*l.* in cash. His account with the bank was closed on June 30, 1904, and then shewed an overdraft due to the bank of 1,654*l.*, in addition to the amount due on the outstanding notes. Q. died in 1908:—Held, that the rule in Clayton's Case (1 Mer. 572) was not excluded by the conduct of the parties, and that F.'s mortgage had priority as against the lands to the bank's charge. Chute's Estate, In re, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 180—Ross, J.

On Q.'s death the bank received the amount of the policy moneys, and claimed to be entitled to apply them towards the discharge of the amount of the overdraft due on June 30, 1904, with interest, leaving the sum of 1,963*l.* and interest still charged on the mortgaged lands:—Held, that F. had the right to compel the bank to discharge pro tanto the debt due to them on March 17, 1897, out of the policy moneys, in exoneration of the lands subject to F.'s mortgage. Ib.

Reconveyance and New Mortgage without Notice of Intermediate Charge—Constructive Notice — Fraud — Registration.]—O. gave a first mortgage on his property to A., and a second mortgage on the same property to M., and a further third charge to A. A. pressed O. for payment, and he offered to sell the property to the appellant W., and she agreed to purchase it conditionally on being able to find some one to pay off the money due to A. The appellant F. agreed to advance sufficient to pay A. off on the security of a first mortgage on the property. O. did not disclose the existence of the charge in favour of M. The transaction was carried out by three deeds. By the first A. reconveyed the property to O. in fee-simple free from all incumbrances; by the second O. conveyed the property to W. in fee-simple free from all incumbrances; by the third W. mortgaged the property to the appellant F. All the deeds, including the mortgage to M., were duly registered in the Yorkshire Registry:—Held, that as the three latter deeds were framed in ignorance on the parts of W. and F. of the existence of the mortgage to M., and consequently no provisions were inserted to preserve A.'s priority for the benefit of W. and F., they would be entitled to invoke the assistance of a Court of equity in rectifying the deeds on the ground of common mistake; and in any case that neither O., nor any one claiming through him, could take advantage of his misrepresentations against them; and the provisions of the Yorkshire Registry Act, 1884, which gives priority to deeds according to date of registration, did not operate to assist M.'s claim to priority, which consequently failed. Toulmin v. Steere (3 Mer. 210) considered and distinguished. Whiteley v.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal (81 L. J. Ch. 457; [1912] 1 Ch. 735) reversed. Judgment of Parker, J. (80 L. J. Ch. 696; [1911] 2 Ch. 448), restored. Ib.

Expectancy—Bankruptcy and Discharge of Mortgagor before Falling into Possession of Expectancy—Effect on Mortgage.]—In 1905 L. mortgaged to the defendants, the N. society, his then expectant share in the estate of his mother as security for an advance. In 1908 he mortgaged to the defendant A. his said expectant share, subject to the mortgage of 1905, as security for an advance. In 1908 L. was adjudicated a bankrupt, and in 1910 he obtained his discharge, neither the N. society nor A. having proved in the bankruptcy. In 1911 L., by deed as beneficial owner, assigned to the plaintiffs his said expectant share. In February, 1914, L.'s mother died intestate, and his share thereupon came into existence: —Held, by Warrington, J., and by the Court of Appeal, that the mortgages of 1905 and 1908 were not mere contracts to assign the then expectant share of L., but were actual assignments of that share directly it came into existence on the death of L.'s mother; that the rights of the N. society and of A. were not therefore discharged by their having failed to prove in the bankruptcy of L.; and that the N. society and A. were entitled in respect of the share in priority to the plaintiffs. Thompson v. Cohen (41 L. J. Q.B. 221; L. R. 7 Q.B. 527), Cole v. Kernot (41 L. J. Q.B. 221; L. R. 7 Q.B. 534*n.*), and Collyer v. Isaacs (51 L. J. Ch. 14; 19 Ch. D. 342) explained and distinguished. Lind, In re; Industrials Finance Syndicate v. Lind, 84 L. J. Ch. 884; [1915] 2 Ch. 345; 59 S. J. 651—C.A.

Contingent Interests—Advances by Trustee on Account of Contingent Share—Subsequent Assignee—Bound by State of Accounts.]—D. was entitled to a share of residue contingently on attaining twenty-five. During the contingency H., one of the trustees, made advances to D., who subsequently executed a mortgage to A., the money being lent without enquiry: —Held, that H. was entitled to recoup his advances out of the share in priority to A.'s mortgage. Goddard, In re; Hooker v. Buckley, 57 S. J. 42—C.A.

Negligence—Equitable Charge by Deposit —Subsequent Legal Mortgage—No Notice to Equitable Charge — Equitable Charge Paid off—Deeds Surrendered to Mortgagor—Deeds Subsequently Pledged.]—Title deeds of leasehold property were deposited at a bank as security. A legal mortgage was subsequently created, expressly subject to the equitable charge. No notice of the legal mortgage was given to the bank, with whom the deeds remained. The mortgagor subsequently discharged the prior equitable chargee with a cheque received from a solicitor who was the son of the legal mortgagee and who knew that part of the proceeds were to be so applied. The mortgagor without the knowledge of this solicitor obtained the title deeds from the bank and deposited them with the defendants as security without disclosing the legal mortgage. In an action by the representatives of the legal mortgagee to establish priority,—Held, that there had been no misconduct or negligence or want of caution for which the legal mortgagee was directly or indirectly responsible, and that, though the discharge of the prior mortgage and the recovery of the deeds by the mortgagor might have been due to the failure of the legal mortgagee to give notice of his incumbrance to the prior mortgagee, he was not bound to give any such notice, and this discharge therefore enured for the benefit of the legal mortgagee, who retained priority over the subsequent equitable incumbrance. Grierson v. National Provincial Bank of England, 82 L. J. Ch. 481; [1913] 2 Ch. 18; 108 L. T. 632; 57 S. J. 517; 29 T. L. R. 501—Joyce, J.

Demised Premises — Second Mortgagee — Right to Receive Rents and Profits — Receiver—Appointment not Notified to Tenant — Judgment against Mortgagor — Garnishee Summons on Tenant for Rent — Claim to Rent by Second Mortgagee — Payment into Court by Tenant—Issue between Execution Creditor and Second Mortgagee.]—The freeholder of a farm subject to a legal mortgage and let to a tenant executed a second mortgage thereon. The second mortgagee appointed a receiver, and notice of the appointment was given to the mortgagor, but not to the tenant. Execution creditors of the mortgagor having issued a summons in the County Court calling upon the tenant to shew cause why he should not pay to them a sum which was owing from him to the mortgagor for rent, the second mortgagee gave notice to the tenant to pay rent to him. No notice whatever was given by the receiver to the tenant. The tenant paid into Court the sum which was due from him for rent and obtained an order on the second mortgagee to appear as claimant and support his claim as against the execution creditors:—Held (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), that, as the notice for payment of rent had been given by the second mortgagee himself, and not by the receiver, the second mortgagee was not in possession and was not entitled to the rent; and that therefore the execution creditors were entitled to have the money in Court paid out to them. Vacuum Oil Co. v. Ellis, 83 L. VII. MARSHALLING.

Successive Charges on Both or One of Two Funds—Deficiency—Notice.]—B. was entitled to a first charge on two funds, "A" and "B," appearing on the final schedule of incumbrances affecting the purchase money of lands sold under the Land Purchase Acts. C. was entitled to a second charge on fund "B" only. B. subsequently took a further charge on funds "A" and "B"; and after that L. acquired a charge on fund "A" only.

Each had notice of all the prior charges. It appeared that if B.'s first charge were paid rateably out of both funds the residue of fund "B" would be insufficient to pay C.'s second charge in full:—Held, that C. was entitled to marshal B.'s first charge and to have so much of it paid out of fund "A" as would leave sufficient of fund "B" to pay his own second charge in full, notwithstanding the fact that L.'s puisne charge would be thereby prejudiced. Archer's Estate, In re, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 285—Wylie, J.

VIII. PAYMENT OFF, RECONVEYANCE, AND DEEDS.

See also Vol. IX. 1636, 2513.

Payment off—Reconveyance—Tender—Redemption Action — Interest and Costs.]—Where a mortgagee refused to hand over a reconveyance on tender of the money due, and subsequently the mortgagor paid the money with additional interest and mortgagee's costs under protest, the mortgagor, in a redemption action, was held entitled to recover the additional interest and costs, and the mortgagee was ordered to pay the costs of the action. Rourke v. Robinson, 80 L. J. Ch. 295; [1911] 1 Ch. 480; 103 L. T. 895—Warrington, J.

—— Refusal of Mortgagee to Reconvey — Appointment of Master to Reconvey.]—Where a mortgagee refuses, upon the payment off of the mortgage debt, to reconvey the mortgaged property, the Court may appoint a Master to execute the reconveyance on his behalf. Holme v. Fieldsend, 55 S. J. 552—Warrington, J.

Tender of Mortgage Debt — Obligation of Mortgagee to Transfer — Second Mortgage — Consent of Second Mortgagee — Company — Debentures.] — A mortgagee is not safe in transferring to the mortgagor or his nominee without the consent of puisne incumbrancers, of whose charges he has notice. Section 15 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and section 12 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, have not altered the pre-existing rule in this respect. Statement of the law in Fisher on Mortgages (6th ed.), § 1978, p. 989, approved upon this point. Magneta Time Co., In re; Molden v. The Company, 84 L. J. Ch. 814—Neville, J.

Application for Lodgment of Title Deeds by Prior Mortgagee.] — A prior mortgagee having been served with notice of the order for sale of the mortgaged lands, the plaintiff—a puisne mortgagee—applied for an order that the prior mortgagee should lodge the title deeds in his possession in Court, and that they should be delivered to the plaintiff's solicitors. The prior mortgagee was willing to produce the deeds and let copies be taken pursuant to section 16 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. No steps had been taken under the order for sale. The Court, having regard to the offer of the prior mortgagee, declined to make any order. Armstrong v. Dickson, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 435—M.R.

IX. REDEMPTION.

See also Vol. IX. 1663, 2516.

Notice Demanding Payment off — Tender after Expiration of Notice—Interest in Lieu of Notice—Interest until Actual Payment—Keeping Money Idle.]—Where a notice has been given requiring repayment of mortgage money, the mortgagor may, at any time, whether on or after the expiry of the notice, tender the money with interest to date of tender. If the time named in the notice has expired, the mortgagor need not give any further notice, or pay interest in lieu of notice. Edmondson v. Copland, 80 L. J. Ch. 532; [1911] 2 Ch. 301; 105 L. T. 8; 55 S. J. 520; 27 T. L. R. 446—Joyce, J.

If the mortgagor's tender is improperly refused, in order to avoid payment of interest thereafter until actual payment the mortgagor must either pay the money into Court, if there are any proceedings in which this can be done, or keep the money ready, and either make no profit on it, or, if he make a profit—for example, by obtaining interest on deposit—account for such profit to the mortgagee. Bartlett v. Franklin (36 L. J. Ch. 671; 15 W. R. 1077) explained and distinguished. Ib.

Transfer of Mortgage without Notice to Mortgagor—State of Accounts between Mortgagor and Mortgagee—Transfer of Stock to Mortgagee as Collateral Security—Fraudulent Pledge of Stock by Mortgagee—Mortgagor's Right to Redeem on Payment of Amount Due from Him.]—The plaintiff borrowed 4,000*l.* from his solicitor on a mortgage of a freehold property, and he also gave his solicitor 3,000*l.* debenture stock as collateral security. The solicitor was to obtain, and in fact obtained, the money from his bank. The solicitor fraudulently induced the plaintiff to execute a memorandum giving the stock to the bank as collateral security, not for the 4,000*l.*, but for all advances of the bank to the solicitor. The bank were unaware of this fraud. The solicitor subsequently, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, sub-mortgaged the land to the bank by way of equitable deposit to secure his own general indebtedness to the bank, which greatly exceeded 4,000*l.* The bank gave the plaintiff no notice at the time of this sub-mortgage. They subsequently obtained a legal transfer of the mortgage. They claimed to retain the debenture stock and also to hold the mortgage as full security for 4,000*l.* against the solicitor's indebtedness to them:—Held, that the transferee of a mortgage takes subject to the state of accounts between the mortgagor and mortgagee at the date when the mortgagor receives notice of the transfer, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to redeem the mortgage on payment of 1,000*l.*, being 4,000*l.* less the value of the stock transferred to the bank and retained by them against the solicitor's indebtedness to them. De Lisle v. Union Bank of Scotland, 83 L. J. Ch. 166; [1914] 1 Ch. 22; 109 L. T. 727; 58 S. J. 81; 30 T. L. R. 72—C.A.

Trustee Mortgagees—Legal Estate—Vesting Order—Tender of Principal, Interests, and Costs of Reconveyance—Validity of Tender—Costs of Vesting Order—Costs of Action.]—The ordinary rule that a mortgagor must bear the costs of reconveyance involves the payment of the costs of a vesting order where, without such an order, the mortgagees are unable to make a good title. Webb v. Crosse, 81 L. J. Ch. 259; [1912] 1 Ch. 323; 105 L. T. 867; 56 S. J. 177—Parker, J.

A mortgagee is not guilty of misconduct so as to relieve the mortgagor of liability for interest or costs, merely because he transfers the mortgage debt, retaining the property subject to redemption as trustee for the person to whom the debt is transferred. Ib.

A tender of principal, interest, and costs by a mortgagor to a mortgagee, to be good, need not be such a tender as would afford a defence to an action at law. But where a tender is made conditional on the execution of a conveyance, a reasonable time must be allowed to obtain the execution of the conveyance, especially where the conveying parties are not the parties to whom the tender is made. Ib.

Trustees advanced trust moneys on the security of a mortgage in fee-simple of certain house property. Subsequently one of the trustees disappeared and could not be found. The remaining trustee appointed a new trustee to be co-trustee with him, and the appointment contained a vesting declaration, the effect of which was to vest the moneys secured by the mortgage and the right to receive the same in the appointor and the appointee, but to leave the legal estate still vested in the appointor and the trustee who had disappeared. The appointor and the appointee eventually gave notice to the mortgagor to pay the debt. Upon the mortgagor offering to redeem, questions arose as to who should bear the costs of the vesting order which would be necessary in order to get in the legal estate vested in the trustee who had disappeared. The mortgagor declined to pay for such an order, but tendered through his solicitors principal, interest, and costs. The tender was made by the mortgagor's solicitors to the managing clerk of the mortgagee's solicitor without previous appointment. The managing clerk had no authority to act in the matter and refused the tender:—Held, in a redemption action, first, upon the facts, that the tender was not good, and that interest on the mortgage debt did not cease to run in favour of the mortgagees as from the date of the tender; secondly, that the costs of the vesting order and of the action must be borne by the mortgagor, there being nothing which would justify the Court in varying the usual terms upon which a mortgagor is allowed to redeem. Rourke v. Robinson (80 L. J. Ch. 295; [1911] 1 Ch. 480) discussed and distinguished. Ib.

X. FORECLOSURE.

See also Vol. IX. 1708, 2519.

Order for Sale in Default of Payment—Default of Payment—Valuation of Mortgaged Property — Deficient Security — Foreclosure Ordered instead of Sale.]—In an action for foreclosure in which the mortgagor did not appear the Master certificated that a certain sum was due to the plaintiff under the memorandum of charge, and the usual order nisi was made fixing a day for payment by the mortgagor, and in default for sale of the mortgaged property and application of the proceeds of sale in payment of what was due to plaintiff. Default was made in payment of what was due on the day appointed. The plaintiff adduced evidence that the property was of less value than the amount certified to be due to him on the security of the mortgage, and asked for foreclosure instead of sale. The defendant had not appeared to the action, nor did he appear on this application:—Held, that, it not being for the benefit of either party that the costs of a sale or attempted sale should be incurred, foreclosure would be ordered instead of sale. Lloyds Bank v. Colston, 106 L. T. 420—Warrington, J.

Necessary Parties — Joint Mortgage of Shares in Estate — Each Co-mortgagor Primarily Liable for Part of Debt—Mutual Indemnities—Foreclosure Proceedings against one Mortgagor by Prior Mortgagee of His Share—Co-mortgagors Necessary Parties to Proceedings.]—A co-mortgagor, by way of collateral security, as distinguished from a mere surety by covenant, is a necessary party to foreclosure proceedings brought against the principal mortgagor by a prior mortgagee of the principal mortgagor's share in the mortgaged property. Stokes v. Clendon (3 Swanst. 150*n.*) followed. Gee v. Liddell, 82 L. J. Ch. 370; [1913] 2 Ch. 62; 108 L. T. 913—Warrington, J.

A, B, and C were entitled as tenants in common in equal shares to the residuary estate of a testator. In 1881 A mortgaged his share to X. In 1882 A, B, and C joined in a mortgage to Y to secure an advance to B. B alone covenanted to repay the money; but A, B, and C assigned their respective shares in the estate to the mortgagee, subject to a proviso for redemption by the three or any of them. The mortgage deed provided that as between A, B, and C and the respective premises mortgaged by them each should be primarily liable to the payment of a specified portion of the mortgage debt, and that each should accordingly contribute in those proportions towards the payment of the debt, and indemnify the others against payment of the portion in respect of which he was to be primarily liable. In 1884 X obtained a foreclosure order absolute in proceedings against A, to which B and C were not parties:—Held, that B and C were necessary parties to the foreclosure proceedings, and not having been made parties were not bound by them, though they were binding on A; and that the persons entitled to their shares were accordingly entitled to contribution from A's share in respect of the mortgage of 1882. Ib.

Right of Contribution—Sales of Parts of Share by Prior Mortgagee — Purchasers not Liable to Contribution.]—The executor of X assigned to purchasers shares in the premises comprised in the mortgage by A to X in 1881, retaining the remainder of the property:—Held, that the purchasers took the shares without any deduction in respect of the contribution to which the holders of B's and C's shares in the testator's residuary estate were entitled. Ib.

XI. SALE.

See also Vol. IX. 1757, 2522.

Power of Sale — Duty of Mortgagees — Alleged Undervalue on Sale.]—The purchaser of mortgaged property sold under a power of sale is entitled, unless there is proof of fraud or collusion with the vendor, to the full benefit of his purchase unless the price is so low as in itself to be evidence of fraud or collusion or knowledge of the existence of facts which would invalidate the sale. Haddington Island Quarry Co. v. Huson, 81 L. J. P.C. 94; [1911] A.C. 722; 105 L. T. 467—P.C.

It is the duty of a mortgagee when realising the mortgaged property by sale to behave in conducting such realisation as a reasonable man would behave in the realisation of his own property, so that the mortgagor might receive credit for the fair value of the property sold. But such a doctrine recognises as a necessary corollary the right of the mortgagee to treat the reasonable expenses of such realisation as a deduction from the amount realised, and, indeed, unless that is done, the sale price does not truly represent the value of the property sold, because it is a sum which the owner could not have obtained for it without paying the necessary costs of realisation. McHugh v. Union Bank of Canada, 82 L. J. P.C. 65; [1913] A.C. 299; 108 L. T. 273; 29 T. L. R. 305—P.C.

Order for Sale of Lands—Service of Notice on Prior Mortgagee.]—Order XVI. rule 40, applies in the case of an order for sale of lands made in an action brought by a puisne mortgagee against the mortgagor for the sale of the mortgaged lands, and the Court has jurisdiction under this rule to direct the prior mortgagee to be served with notice of the order. Armstrong v. Dickson, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 435—M.R.

XII. RECEIVER.

See also Vol. IX. 1797, 2526.

Second Mortgagee's Action — Appointment of Receiver—Rents Paid to Receiver—Rights of First Mortgagee.]—When a receiver has been appointed by the Court in an action by a second mortgagee to which the first mortgagee was not a party, the receiver is entitled to the rents of the property until the first mortgagee intervenes. For this purpose mere notice by the first mortgagee to the tenants to pay rents to himself will not divest the possession of the receiver: application to the Court is necessary, and the receiver is entitled to retain as against the first mortgagee any rents received by him prior to the date of such application, although the tenants have already had notice to pay rent to the first mortgagee or a receiver appointed by him. Thomas v. Brigstocke (4 Russ. 64) and Preston v. Tunbridge Wells Opera-House, Lim. (72 L. Mortgagee's Costs—Realisation of Security — Surplus — Action for Account — Action in Nature of Redemption Action.]—The rule that a mortgagee is entitled by contract to the costs properly incident to a redemption action does not apply to an action for account against the mortgagee after he has realised his security by sale. Tanner v. Heard (23 Beav. 555) and Charles v. Jones (56 L. I. NATURE OF ACT.

A. IN MANAGEMENT OF RAILWAY.

See also Vol. X. 31, 1662.

Sparks from Locomotive Engine—Negligent Use of Engine.]—In an action against a railway company for damages for personal injuries to certain children, it was alleged that while the children were standing on a railway platform the driver of the engine of a train, finding it necessary to put on steam while passing the platform, did so carelessly, unnecessarily, and unskilfully, in such volume that large quantities of live cinders and soot were driven from the funnel and fell upon the children, causing the injuries complained of. It was also alleged that the defenders or their servants were in fault in not having the funnel properly cleaned from time to time, and in not having a cage at the mouth of the funnel, or adopting other means to prevent such an occurrence:—Held, that the averments did not disclose a relevant case of improper construction, but did disclose a relevant case of improper use of the engine. Gray v. Caledonian Railway, [1912] S. C. 339—Ct. of Sess.

Passenger on Railway Platform Struck by Open Door of Train in Motion.]—The pursuer, while walking along one of the platforms of the defenders' station, was struck by an open door of a train which entered the station from behind her. The door, which had no handle on the inside, was on the side of the train which was next the platform only at the station of departure and at the station in question; at the ten intermediate stations the opposite side of the train had been next the platform. There was evidence to shew that the door was swinging open and that the compartment was empty when the train entered the station in question, but it was not proved how the door came to be open, or whether the compartment was occupied in the course of the train's journey. In an action claiming damages the jury found for the pursuer:—Held, first (diss. Lord Salvesen), that there was evidence on which the jury might infer negligence on the part of the defenders; and secondly, that the pursuer had not, as the defenders alleged, been guilty of contributory negligence in walking too near the edge of the platform. Burns v. North British Railway, [1914] S. C. 754—Ct. of Sess.

Collision—Trespasser.] — The respondent, being in the station of the appellant company, entered without leave or payment a car belonging to another company for the purpose of conveyance into the latter company's station. As he stood in a precarious position with one foot on the platform step a freight train of the appellants backed into the train on which he was standing, and he was thrown off the car platform and seriously injured:—Held, that, as the respondent was a trespasser both on the premises of the appellants and on the other company's train, he was not entitled to damages. Grand Trunk Railway v. Barnett, 80 L. J. P.C. 117; [1911] A.C. 361; 104 L. T. 362; 27 T. L. R. 359—P.C.

Level Crossing—Duty of Railway Company to Give Adequate Warning of Approaching Trains.]—A man while driving a horse and cart over a crossing on the defendants' railway—the crossing being habitually used for vehicular traffic to the knowledge of the defendants without hindrance by them—was killed by a train belonging to the defendants. The line curved before coming to the crossing, and at a point 183 yards above it there was a board directing engine drivers to whistle. A train travelling at twenty-five to thirty miles an hour would take about 12½ seconds from this point to the crossing. There were trees along the side of the line which prevented the signal being easily seen, and to some extent might prevent any one approaching the crossing from hearing a whistle. In an action against the defendants the jury found that the defendants had not provided sufficient safeguards for vehicular traffic, having regard to the character of the neighbourhood:—Held, that there was evidence justifying this finding. Jenner v. South-Eastern Railway, 105 L. T. 131; 75 J. P. 419; 55 S. J. 553; 27 T. L. R. 445—D.

—— Railway Crossing Road — Omission to Give Warning—Injury to Foot Passenger.]—A person passing from one side to the other of a street across which a railway passed on the level was injured by an engine belonging to the railway company. By the Canadian Railway Act, in the case of a train approaching a highway crossing on the level the duty is imposed of giving warning by whistling and the ringing of a bell. In an action to recover damages by the person who was injured the jury found that he had not taken sufficient precautions in crossing the track, and that the company's servants had not given warning of the approach of the engine:—Held, that to make the railway company liable it must be shewn that the omission to whistle or give the other warning, or both combined, and not the folly and recklessness of the person injured, caused the accident. Grand Trunk Railway of Canada v. McAlpine, 83 L. J. P.C. 44; [1913] A.C. 838; 109 L. T. 693; 29 T. L. R. 679—P.C.

Platform — Fog — Insufficient Lights — No Adequate Warning of Danger to Intending Passengers.]—The plaintiff sued the defendant company to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by her at one of their railway stations. She intended travelling from that station. The night was very foggy, and the lamps on the platform did not shew through the fog. While walking along the platform the plaintiff fell on to the rails and was injured. Several other people had fallen off the platform earlier on the same evening. The jury found that the accident was due to the negligence of the defendants:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, as the circumstances imposed upon the defendants a duty to take all reasonable precautions to protect the plaintiff effectively from the dangers besetting all movement on the platform on the night in question, and that there was evidence which entitled the jury to find the defendants had failed to discharge the duty that rested upon them. London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway v. Paterson, 29 T. L. R. 413—H.L. (E.)

Company's Private Dock—Shunting Operations—Duty to Close Gates or Give Warning before Shunting Commenced.] — In a dock owned by a railway company three lines of rails connecting the quays with the main railway system crossed the road leading into the dock on the level at a point inside and opposite the dock gate. A seaman entered the dock by the gate, which was open, and attempted to pass between two waggons which were standing on the crossing. While he was doing so the waggons were shunted, and he was caught between the buffers and injured. In an action by him against the railway company, claiming damages, he averred that the defenders were at fault in neither shutting the gate nor giving warning before beginning to shunt the waggons:—Held, that there was no duty on the railway company either to shut the gate or to give warning before beginning to shunt the waggons, and action dismissed. Clark v. North British Railway, [1912] S. C. 1—Ct. of Sess.

Persons other than Passengers Permitted to be in Railway Station.]—A person who goes upon premises as a mere licensee is not there at his own risk if he suffers injury through the negligent act of the servants of the owner, committed in the course of their employment, after the licensee has entered the premises. So where a person, who had been permitted to go upon a railway platform to see friends off by a train, was injured through the fault of the station employees in starting a train without closing the doors, the railway company were held liable in damages. Tough v. North British Railway, [1914] S. C. 291—Ct. of Sess.

Duty towards Persons Using Company's Premises — Unfenced Bank — Horse Left Unattended.]—The duty of a railway company towards persons coming upon their premises as of right to do business with them is no higher than that of an occupier of private premises towards persons whom he invites to come upon them, being in both cases a duty to take reasonable care that the premises are reasonably safe for persons using them in the ordinary and customary manner and with reasonable care. Norman v. Great Western Railway, 84 L. J. K.B. 598; [1915] 1 K.B. 584; 112 L. T. 266; 31 T. L. R. 53—C.A.

The defendants were in occupation of a railway station, comprising a goods yard. As a person entered the yard there was on the right a wall, and backing against this wall, about sixty feet from the entrance, there was a weighing office for goods. Beyond the office the wall came to an end, and on that side of the yard there was an unfenced grass bank about seven feet high, sloping down to a culvert at the foot. On the left of the yard, opposite to the wall and the bank, was the railway line, the distance between the line and the top of the bank being about thirty-five feet. Goods having been consigned by the defendants' railway to the plaintiff, he sent his driver with a horse and cart to fetch them, the driver having often been to the yard before and being well acquainted with it. The goods having been transferred to the cart from some trucks which were standing on the railway line at a point further from the entrance to the yard than the weighing office, the driver brought the horse and cart back to a point near the weighing office, and he left them there unattended while he went into the office for the purpose of signing for the goods. While he was in the office the horse backed the cart to the bank, and both of them fell over it, the horse being so badly injured that it had to be killed. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendants in the County Court, claiming damages for alleged breach of duty on the part of the defendants in not having fenced the bank, and at the trial, on proof of the above facts, the jury found for the plaintiff, and the Judge entered judgment for him. In the Divisional Court Bray, J., was of opinion that there was, and Lush, J., that there was not, evidence of a breach of duty on the part of the defendants, the result being that the judgment of the County Court Judge was affirmed :—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that there was no evidence of any breach by the defendants of the duty which they owed to the plaintiff, and that the decisions of the Courts below should be set aside and judgment entered for the defendants. Ib.

Decision of the Divisional Court (83 L. J. K.B. 669; [1914] 2 K.B. 153) reversed. Ib.

Child Straying on Line — Knowledge of Company—Leave and Licence—Liability.]—An infant two and a half years old, whose parents lived in a house close to the defendants' line, went on the main line of the railway and was injured. The jury found that the child got on the line through a fence separating the railway from a high road; that some of the railway servants knew that children were in the habit of playing on a pile of sleepers inside the fence, but did not know they were in the habit of getting on the main line; that the fence was not reasonably fit for separating the railway from the high road, having regard to the proximity of the houses; and that the children were in the habit of getting on to the pile of sleepers by the leave or licence of the defendants :—Held, that the leave and licence found by the jury did not extend to make the defendants liable for what happened to a child going beyond the pile of sleepers on to the line, and that judgment was rightly entered for the defendants. Cooke v. Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland (78 L. 1. Tramways and Omnibuses.

Tramcar—Overcrowding—Precautions to be taken by Tramway Owners.]—On the occasion of a football match to be played in the suburb of B. the plaintiff boarded a tramcar of the defendants labelled "Linfield" (the football ground) "or Windsor Avenue." When the plaintiff took his seat on the top there was plenty of room, but as the car proceeded passengers continually got on, and the car became overcrowded. On reaching a stopping-place within a short distance of Windsor Avenue some passengers alighted, descending by the front steps to the motor man's platform, the collapsible gate by which it was guarded being then opened, and the step to the road being let down. As the car was approaching Windsor Avenue, the usual stopping-place for the Linfield grounds, the plaintiff rose from his seat, descended by the front steps, and told the motor man to go on, which he did, and the pressure of the descending crowd behind the plaintiff threw him off the car and he was severely hurt. At the trial the defendants, at the close of the plaintiff's case, asked for a direction, and did not offer any evidence or suggest any questions to be left to the jury. In answer to the questions left to them the jury found that the defendants should have expected that at Windsor Avenue, having regard to the overcrowding, passengers would leave the car hurriedly by the front platform: that they did not take proper precautions to prevent injury to any passengers so proceeding: and that it was by reason solely of failure to take such precautions that the injuries to the plaintiff occurred, it having been explained to the jury by the Judge that they should not find the last point in favour of the plaintiff if there was contributory negligence on his part: —Held, that the circumstances justified the verdict, and that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment thereon. Pickering v. Belfast Corporation, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 224—C.A.

—— Failure to Stop when Insufficient Room to Pass Another Vehicle.]—A was killed by being crushed between a truck, which he was pushing, and a wall, owing, as was alleged, to the negligent driving of one of the defendants' tramcars. The driver of the tramcar was going dead slow just before the accident, and it appeared that after the first part of the car had safely passed the truck A was pushing some one, who had a better opportunity than the driver of seeing whether there was room for the car to pass altogether, told the driver to go on, which he then did, with the result that A was crushed as above stated. In an action by A's widow under Lord Campbell's Act,—Held (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), that on these facts there was no evidence to go to the jury of negligence on the part of the defendants' tramcar driver. Learer v. Pontypridd Urban Council, 76 J. P. 31; 56 S. J. 32—H.L. (E.)

—— Passenger Stepping Out from Behind Tramway Car without Looking.]—A passenger who had alighted from a northward-bound car, and who had passed immediately behind it with the object of crossing to the further side of the street, was knocked down and injured by a southward-bound car at the moment when she reached the nearest rail of the line on which it was travelling. In an action for damages against the tramway company she admitted in evidence that she had not looked to see if any traffic was approaching from the north, but contended that the defenders were liable in respect that the driver of the southward-bound car had neither sounded his bell nor slowed down in passing the stationary car, as he was bound to do. The jury having returned a verdict for the pursuer, the Court set aside the verdict and gave judgment for the defenders, holding that, even on the assumption that the driver was to blame as alleged, the pursuer's evidence shewed that the accident was due to her own negligence in failing to take the ordinary precaution of looking for approaching traffic, it being clear that the southward-bound car must have been so close to the pursuer when she stepped into the danger zone that neither sounding the bell nor slowing down could have prevented the accident. Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway v. Slattery (3 App. Cas. 1155) distinguished. Macleod v. Edinburgh and District Tramways Co., [1913] S. C. 624—Ct. of Sess.

—— Statutory Duties and Powers — Latent Defect—Liability.]—The plaintiff was a passenger on the outside of an uncovered tramway car belonging to the defendants, which was propelled by means of overhead electric traction. The wheel at the head of the trolly arm was detached from the electric wire and the trolly arm was plucked away from the standard at its socket and fell upon the plaintiff's head. Such an occurrence was extremely rare, and no contrivance had been discovered to prevent it. The system of electric traction adopted by the defendants was the best and most widely used; the apparatus on that particular car on which the accident occurred was in perfect order; and there was no negligence on the part of the defendants' servants. An action was brought by the plaintiff against the defendants claiming damages in respect of the injuries sustained by him. At the trial before Channell, J., and a special jury the learned Judge in his summing-up said that the plaintiff could only be entitled to recover damages if there was negligence on the part of the defendants in carrying him as a passenger; that the defendants were not insurers; and that they were bound to take every reasonable precaution that could be taken to secure the safety of their passengers, but not as insurers. The jury found for the plaintiff, but stated that no one of the alleged acts of negligence of the defendants was established to the satisfaction of the jury. The defendants applied for judgment or a new trial:—Held (dissentiente Farwell, L.J.), that the verdict of the jury shewed that the defendants discharged the burden which rested upon them, and that the only negligence was disproved notwithstanding the plaintiff's prima facie case. Newberry v. Bristol Tramways and Carriage Co., 107 L. T. 801; 11 L. G. R. 69; 57 S. J. 172; 29 T. L. R. 177—C.A.

Per Cozens-Hardy, M.R.: As to the standard of care required in the case of a carriage of passengers, it is sufficient that the carrier should adopt the best-known apparatus, kept in perfect order, and worked without negligence by the servants he employed. If he does that he ought not to be responsible for the consequences of an extremely rare and obscure accident which cannot in a business sense be prevented by any known means. Ib.

Omnibus — Onus of Proof of Soundness — Defendants Liable in the Alternative—Nonsuit as against one Defendant—New Trial.]—An omnibus belonging to T. upset owing to a wheel being wrenched off by tramlines belonging to C., so that the plaintiff, a passenger, was injured. In an action against T. and C. in the alternative the Judge nonsuited the plaintiff as against T., and the jury found in favour of C., after evidence had been called by the plaintiff to prove that the omnibus was sound and that the accident was due to a defect in the tramline:—Held, that there was some evidence of negligent driving, and that the onus lay on T. to prove that the omnibus was sound, and that the attempt of the plaintiff to prove in the first trial that the omnibus was sound was no objection to granting him a new trial. Lilly v. Tilling, 57 S. J. 59—C.A.

2. Motor Cars.

Control of Owner—Responsibility for Damage.]—The defendant was the owner of a motor car which was being driven by his son. The defendant was not in the car, but his driver was sitting beside his son. A collision occurred between the defendant's car and a car belonging to the plaintiff owing to the negligent driving of the defendant's son. In an action for damage caused by the collision the defendant stated that he permitted his son to use the car, but never allowed him to go out without the driver:—Held, that there was evidence that the defendant was responsible for his son's negligence. Reichardt v. Shard, 31 T. L. R. 24—C.A.

Collision—Plaintiff on Wrong Side of Road—Plaintiff Misled by Defendant's Failure to Shew Proper Light.]—A motor car was travelling at night on its proper—that is, the near or left—side of a country road, but, in contravention of the Motor Cars Order, 1904, without having a light burning upon the off or right side of the car. An approaching motor bicyclist, seeing only one light, mistook the car for a bicycle, and imagining that the dark mass of the car was a cart travelling in the same direction as himself, swerved into the middle of the road to enable him to pass the cart when he overtook it. In consequence of this manœuvre he collided with the motor car and was injured. When the collision occurred he was about three feet on his wrong side of the centre of the road. In an action at the instance of the motor bicyclist against the driver of the car,—Held, that the pursuer had not been guilty of contributory negligence, in respect that the error which he had committed in going over to the wrong side of the road had been induced by the fault of the defender in not having his off side light burning; and accordingly that the defender was liable in damages. Pressley v. Burnett, [1914] S. C. 874—Ct. of Sess.

—— Car Diverging from Proper Side of Road to Avoid Oncoming Car—Contributory Negligence.]—The driver of a motor car A. while driving along a road on his proper side—the north side—observed another car B coming towards him on the same side—that is, on its wrong side. The latter car continued on this side until the two cars were so close that the driver of A car was persuaded that a collision was unavoidable unless the course of one or other car was immediately altered; and, believing that the driver of B car did not mean to give way, he deflected his car towards the south side of the road. At the same moment the driver of B car also deflected his car from the north side of the road, and thereupon the two cars collided on the southern portion of the road :—Held, that the collision was due to the fault of the driver of B car in continuing for so long on his wrong side of the road; and that the action of the driver of A car in leaving his proper side of the road immediately before the collision could not in the position of difficulty in which he was placed by the conduct of the driver of B car be deemed contributory negligence. Wallace v. Bergius, [1915] S. C. 205—Ct. of Sess.

Article Dangerous in Itself — Liability of Manufacturer for Injury to Person not Party to Contract.]—The plaintiff was injured by the explosion of a brazing lamp manufactured by the defendants and by them supplied to a retail dealer from whom it was purchased by the plaintiff :—Held, that the question of whether the lamp was an article dangerous in itself so as to impose a duty upon the defendants in regard to it to a person to whom they supplied it or into whose hands it came was a question of law for the Judge and not of fact for the jury. Blacker v. Lake and Elliot, 106 L. T. 533—D.

Per Lush, J.—The manufacturer of an article dangerous in itself has a duty to the person to whom he supplies it to warn him of its character, and a breach of that duty may render him liable to the recipient, or to a third person into whose hands he ought to contemplate it may come, if he is injured whilst using it. Ib.

The manufacturer of a dangerous article, the nature of which he has disclosed or the danger of which is apparent on the face of it, is under no obligation to a third person who is injured owing to its imperfect manufacture. George v. Skivington (L. R. 5 Ex. 1) dissented from. Ib.

Defective Ginger-beer Bottle—Bottle Purchased from Retailer — Injury to Purchaser through Bursting of Bottle — Liability of Manufacturer of Ginger Beer in Absence of Knowledge of Defect in Bottle—Defect Discoverable by Exercise of Reasonable Care and Skill.]—The defendants, who were manufacturers of ginger beer, sold a bottle of ginger beer to a shopkeeper, who re-sold it to the plaintiff. The bottle, which had been purchased by the defendants, was defective, but the defendants when they sold it had no knowledge of the defect. The plaintiff, who was injured through the bursting of the bottle when it was being opened, brought an action against the defendants in which the jury found that the accident was caused by the defect in the bottle; that the defect was not a latent defect which could not have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable care and skill, and that the defect was owing to the negligence of the defendants :—Held, that as the defendants had in fact no actual knowledge of the defect in the bottle they were not liable, notwithstanding that such defect was discoverable by the exercise of ordinary care. White v. Steadman (82 L. J. K.B. 846) distinguished. Bates v. Batey & Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 963; [1913] 3 K.B. 351; 108 L. T. 1036; 29 T. L. R. 616—Horridge, J.

Poisonous Cattle Dip—Wrong Quantity on Labels.] — The appellants, who owned an estate in South Africa, ordered from the respondents, who were chemists and druggists, 5 cwt. of arsenite of soda for the purpose of dipping cattle, and it was delivered in ten drums, on which were labels with the word "Poison," and the statement that the tin contained 8½ lb. of 80 per cent. arsenite of soda, and that the whole contents of the tin were to be dissolved in 400 gallons of water to make the dip. Each drum in fact contained 56 lb. of arsenite, and the labels were meant for tins and not for drums. The manager of the appellants' estate, after communicating with the respondents, believed that each drum contained only 8½ lb. of arsenite, mixed with something else, and the whole of the contents of the ten drums were placed in 4,350 gallons of water. The dip so made was too strong and some of the appellants' cattle were killed and others injured. In an action by the appellants against the respondents for negligence the respondents denied negligence and pleaded contributory negligence. The Judge at the trial found in favour of the appellants :—Held, that there was evidence on which the Judge could reasonably so find. British Chartered Co. of South Africa v. Lennon, Lim., 31 T. L. R. 585—P.C.

Misdelivery of Dangerous Article—Failure of Consignee to Notice Error — Liability of Carrier.]—A steamship company, which had received for carriage two barrels of paraffin oil consigned to a shopkeeper, negligently delivered along with them a third barrel containing naphtha, which had been consigned to some one else. All three barrels were similar in appearance, but each had stencilled on one end a notice of its contents. The barrels were delivered at the shopkeeper's store to one of his assistants, who did not know how many barrels had been ordered, and who receipted the entry in the carrier's delivery book, in which all three barrels were stated to contain paraffin. The assistant without noticing the stencilling on the barrels, and believing them to contain paraffin, placed them in the store. It was not brought to the notice of the shopkeeper that three barrels had been delivered. More than three weeks after the delivery of the barrels one of the assistants, desiring to obtain paraffin, went to the store with a lighted candle and tapped the barrel of naphtha, whereupon an explosion ensued, which destroyed the store and its contents. In an action of damages at the instance of the consignee against the carriers the Court, repelling a plea of contributory negligence, held that the defenders were liable for the loss occasioned to the pursuer through the explosion. Macdonald v. Macbrayne, Lim., [1915] S. C. 716—Ct. of Sess.

Lift Accessible to and Allowed to be Operated by Members of the Public — Accidents to Children.] — A father brought an action of damages against a railway company in respect of injuries sustained by his son, a boy of seven years of age, on a lift in one of the defenders' stations. The pursuer averred that the lift was used for the purpose of conveying luggage and goods between two levels of the station; that it was open to the public; and that, in the knowledge and with the acquiescence of the defenders' servants, members of the public were in the habit of going on the lift and of operating it, and boys were in the habit of going up and down therein for their own amusement; that on the occasion of the accident the lift was being used by a message boy on the invitation of one of these servants, for the purpose of delivering a parcel; that the pursuer's son entered the lift when it was being so used, and his foot, owing to the construction of the lift, was caught and crushed between the platform of the ascending lift and the stationary floor of the level which it was approaching. He further averred that the lift was a trap or dangerous attraction to children, and that the defenders had neglected the duty of insuring that the public had no access to the lift or to its operating mechanism, and of preventing the use of it by others than their own servants. There was no averment that the construction of the lift was of an unusual character:—Held (Lord Skerrington dissenting), that the pursuer had failed to make any relevant averment of fault against the defenders, and action dismissed. Wilson v. Glasgow and South-Western Railway, [1915] S. C. 215—Ct. of Sess.

D. Dangerous Premises.

Control of Premises—Duty towards Children Using.]—Per The Lord President: The duty of one having the control of premises is the same towards children as towards adults. Grant v. Fleming & Co., [1914] S. C. 228—Ct. of Sess.

Trap — Liability of Occupier.] — If an occupier of premises allows a man to come there to do work in which the occupier is interested, and the man is unacquainted with the existence of a hatchway, which, owing to the darkness, he cannot see, the occupier is bound either to give him reasonable notice of the danger or to fence the hatchway so as to render it harmless. Dickson v. Scott, Lim., [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 67; 30 T. L. R. 256—C.A.

Boarding-House Keeper—Goods of Guest—Theft.]—It is the duty of a boarding-house keeper to take reasonable care that the door of the premises should be kept shut, in order to prevent the entry of thieves, but such duty does not amount to a guarantee that the door will be kept shut. Paterson v. Norris, 30 T. L. R. 393—Lord Coleridge, J.

Heap of Stones Deposited by Landowner—Injury to Infant from—Infant Mere Licensee on Land—Non-liability of Landowner.]—A landowner who allows persons, whether adults or children, to come on to his land is not liable for an accident which happens to one of them there unless the coming on to the land was the result of allurement or invitation, or unless the accident was due to something in the nature of a concealed trap or to something dangerous and outside the ordinary use of the land which the landowner brought on to it without warning the licensee. Latham v. Johnson, 82 L. J. K.B. 258; [1913] 1 K.B. 398; 108 L. T. 4; 77 J. P. 137; 57 S. J. 127; 29 T. L. R. 124—C.A.

A child of two and a half years of age came unaccompanied on to land belonging to the defendants, who were aware that children were in the habit of coming there to play. Whilst on the land the child was injured by the fall of a stone from a heap of stones deposited there by the defendants:—Held (reversing the decision of Scrutton, J.), that the child was not entitled to recover damages from the defendants for negligence. The child was at most a mere licensee, while the use of the land by the defendants had been perfectly normal, and the heap of stones did not constitute a trap. Cooke v. Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland (78 L. J. P.C. 76; [1909] A.C. 229) explained and distinguished. Ib.

Street Lighting — Lamp Extinguished — Accident — Local Authority — Whether Negligent.]—The plaintiff, a taxi-cab driver, was driving his cab at night along a street which was under the control of the defendants, who were a borough council, and the cab collided with a refuge and was damaged. The refuge was generally lighted by a lamp controlled by a lighting company, but in an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for negligence the Judge found that though at the time of the accident the lamp was out, there was nothing to shew how it came to be extinguished, and that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants or of the lighting company:—Held, on appeal, that on the facts there was evidence to justify the Judge's finding. Brown v. Lambeth Borough Council, 32 T. L. R. 61—D.

Building Contractor — Permission to other Tradesmen to Use Scaffolding — Accident to other Tradesman's Employee—Whether Contractor Liable.]—The defendants entered into a contract with the London County Council to rebuild a school, and were to provide the plant and afford to any other tradesman employed by the Council the use of the scaffolding for his own purposes, the defendants having control of the premises and plant. The plaintiff, who was a hot-water engineer and was not in the defendants' employment, was engaged on the premises in fitting heating apparatus, and when using a gangway erected by the defendants fell and was injured. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for negligence, the jury found that the defendants were negligent in the mode in which the gangway was constructed, and that the negligence caused the accident. It was admitted for the plaintiff that there was no concealed trap:—Held, that the defendants were under no duty to the plaintiff to provide a gangway which was safe and were in the position of mere licensors, and therefore the plaintiff could not recover. Elliott v. Roberts & Co., 32 T. L. R. 71—Lush, J.

Highway—Cattle on—Open Gate—No Evidence as to by Whom Opened—Burden of Proof.] — The plaintiff was riding on a bicycle at 10.30 P.M. along a highway adjoining a field in which the defendant kept a hundred cows. The field in question communicated by a gate with the highway, and at the time when the plaintiff was passing the gate was open, and she saw some cows coming through it. A little further along were other cows which had come from the field, some of which threw the plaintiff down and injured her. At the trial no evidence was given as to by whom the gate had been opened. The learned Judge held that, in the circumstances, the fact that the defendant's gate was open and that his cows had strayed on to the road through the open gate and had caused the accident to the plaintiff afforded evidence of negligence, and that it was for the defendant to displace this evidence by shewing that the gate was not left open by reason of any negligence on his part or on that of his servants. Upon the evidence he held that the defendant had not displaced this prima facie case, and gave judgment for the plaintiff for 75*l*.:—Held, that there was no evidence upon which the County Court Judge could find that the defendant either by an act of his own, or by the neglect of a duty which he owed to the public, produced an obstruction of the highway by his cattle, and that judgment therefore should be entered for the defendant. Ellis v. Banyard, 106 L. T. 51; 56 S. J. 139; 28 T. L. R. 122—C.A.

—— Horse Straying—Damage to Cyclists—Obligation of Owner or Occupier of Land Adjoining Highway.]—A young horse which had been placed by the defendant in a field adjoining a highway escaped owing to a defective hedge and strayed upon the highway. The plaintiffs were riding a tandem bicycle along the highway, and on seeing the horse they slowed down, but the horse turned round suddenly and ran across the road, coming in contact with the bicycle. The horse fell down, and then, jumping up, lashed out and injured one of the plaintiffs and damaged the bicycle. In an action for damages by the plaintiffs the learned County Court Judge found that there was no evidence that the horse was vicious or in the habit of trespassing or attacking bicycles or any one upon the high road. He also found that the defendant was guilty of negligence in turning the horse into a field of which the hedges were defective, but that, as the act of the horse was not one which it was in the ordinary nature of a horse to commit, the defendant was not liable:—Held, that the injury to the plaintiffs not being the natural consequence of the defendant's negligence, if any, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover. Jones v. Lee, 106 L. T. 123; 76 J. P. 137; 56 S. J. 125; 28 T. L. R. 92—D.

Per Bankes, J.: The learned County Court Judge was wrong in law in holding that there had been negligence on the part of the defendant in turning the horse into a field with defective hedges, inasmuch as at common law there is no duty on the owner or occupier of land adjoining the highway to keep his animals off the highway. Ib.

—— Fence—Inadequacy—Sheep Straying on Highway—Collision with Motor-cab—Damage to Cab.]—Some sheep belonging to the defendant, owing to an inadequate fence, strayed out of a field in his occupation on to a highway, and when the plaintiffs' motor-cab was being driven along the highway, in daylight, at sixteen to twenty miles an hour, one of the sheep dashed out suddenly from the side of the road and collided with the steering apparatus, the result being that the cab was overturned and damaged. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendant to recover the amount of the damage the Judge at the trial held that the defendant was liable on the ground either of negligence or of a nuisance:—Held, that, assuming there to have been evidence of negligence or of a nuisance, nevertheless it was not the proximate or effective cause of the damage, and the damage was not its natural consequence, but the cause was either the driver's failure to avoid the sheep or an act of the sheep which the defendant, as a reasonable man, would not anticipate, and therefore the defendant was not liable. Heath's Garage, Lim. v. Hodges, 32 T. L. R. 134—D.

—— Sheep—No Light at Night.]—There is no rule of law that to drive sheep along the highway at night without a light is a negligent act. Catchpole v. Minster, 109 L. T. 953; 12 L. G. R. 280; 30 T. L. R. 111—D.

—— Employment of Independent Contractor—Whether Principal Liable.]—The appellants, who were the freeholders of a tied public house which was in the occupation of a tenant, engaged a contractor to deliver beer at the house. The contractor's man raised the cellar flap, which was in the highway, and the respondent fell into the cellar while the beer was being put into it. In an action by the respondent against the appellants and against the tenant to recover damages for negligence judgment was given against both defendants:—Held, on an appeal by the freeholders, that they were not liable, as they employed the contractor merely to deliver the beer and not to interfere with the highway by opening the cellar flap, and he could have delivered the beer through the door if the tenant had so wished. Wilson v. Hodgson's Kingston Brewery Co., 32 T. L. R. 60—D.

—— Leaving Steam-lorry in Road — Intentional Interference by Stranger — Accident — Evidence of Negligence—Proximate Cause.]—The defendants were the owners of a Foden steam lorry, and they used it for delivering beer at a public house. Three men travelled with the lorry, and they left it on the road in such a condition that it could not be set in motion without removing the safety pin and manipulating the gear, reversing, and starting levers. While the men were absent for a few minutes and were engaged in putting the beer in the cellar, a soldier climbed on the lorry and by pulling three levers succeeded in putting it in motion, with the result that the plaintiff was injured. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for negligence, the Judge decided in the plaintiff's favour :—Held, on appeal, that it was no negligence to leave upon the road a machine which would not move unless some one intentionally interfered with it, and consequently there was no evidence of negligence, and that even if there was negligence it was not the proximate cause of the accident, and therefore the defendants were entitled to judgment. Ruoff v. Long & Co., 32 T. L. R. 82—D.

Repair of Gas-pipe — Unguarded Fire.]—The defendants, who were a gas company, were repairing a gas-pipe in a highway, and for this purpose they had, on land immediately adjacent to the highway and accessible to the public, a fire over which there was a ladle containing molten lead. Children were playing about the road, and an employee of the defendants was usually beside the fire and kept them away from it, but he went for a moment to help the other men in a trench, and a boy who was passing spilled the lead accidentally and it burned the plaintiff, a little girl, who was playing close by. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants the Judge found that the defendants were negligent in leaving the fire unguarded, and he awarded the plaintiff damages :—Held, on appeal, that there was evidence to support the Judge's finding. Crane v. South Suburban Gas Co., 85 L. J. K.B. 172; 32 T. L. R. 74—D.

Door in Garden Wall Opening Outwards on to Street—Injury to Person on Street.]—In an action of damages against the magistrates of Edinburgh and against the proprietors of a tenement (which was let to tenants) in the city, the pursuer averred that while he was proceeding along a street which adjoined the garden wall of the tenement a door in the wall was suddenly opened outwards on to the street and struck him in the face, causing him serious injuries; that the door as constructed formed an obstruction to the street; and that it constituted a grave danger to the public and a danger which was obvious to both defenders. He averred fault against the proprietors for having on their premises a door of this dangerous construction, and he averred fault against the magistrates in failing to remove this dangerous obstruction to the street, which he alleged they had power to do under certain specified statutes :—Held, that the pursuer had not stated a relevant case against either defenders in respect (1) that having a door opening outwards upon a street did not per se infer negligence on the part of the proprietors, and there were no averments of special circumstances—such as previous accidents—to raise a case of negligence with regard to this particular door; and (2) that the statutes did not apply so as to make the magistrates liable. Evans v. Edinburgh Magistrates, [1915] S. C. 895—Ct. of Sess.

Ice on Foot Pavement — Overflow from Public Fountain — Responsibility of Road Authority.]—A person was injured from the effects of a fall on ice which had formed on the foot pavement opposite a public fountain under the defenders' control. It was averred that the ice was caused by an overflow from the fountain, but there was no allegation that there was a structural defect in the fountain, or that the defenders knew or ought to have known of the overflow, and had neglected to remedy it :—Held, that the pursuer's averments were irrelevant. Dictum of Pigott, B., in Shepherd v. Midland Railway (25 L. T. 879) approved. O'Keefe v. Edinburgh Corporation, [1911] S. C. 18—Ct. of Sess.

Pavement — Defect in — Opening in Pavement Covered by Metal Disc—Liability of Proprietor of Disc — Liability of Road Authority.]—A woman, while walking on the foot pavement of a public street in A., in front of P. & W.'s property, placed her foot on a metal disc in the pavement covering an opening into a cellar, with the result that the disc tilted, and her leg was caught in the opening and injured. The tilting of the disc was due to the worn condition of the bevel in the flagstone of the pavement on which it rested. The disc was the property of P. & W., and the opening which it covered led into their cellar. Under certain local Acts P. & W. were bound to keep the covering of the opening in repair, but the pavement was vested in the town council and could not be altered without their consent or other lawful authority. In an action of damages by the injured woman against the town council and against P. & W.,—Held, first, that the town council being bound to keep the pavement in a safe condition for the public, and having failed to do so were liable to the pursuer; but secondly, that P. & W. were not liable, as they had no control of, and could not interfere with, the pavement. Laing v. Paull & Williamsons, [1912] S. C. 196—Ct. of Sess.

—— Defective Stopcock Box—Obligation of Water Board.]—Section 8 of the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, is not retrospective in character. The plaintiff caught her foot in a stopcock box in a street outside a house, and fell and sustained injuries. The stopcock box in question, which had been constructed by the defendants' predecessors, was connected with the communication pipe which carried the supply of water from the defendants' main to the house outside which the accident occurred :—Held, that section 8 of the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, not being retrospective, the stopcock box was repairable by the defendants, and that, having become a source of danger, and the plaintiff having been injured thereby, the defendants were liable. Batt v. Metropolitan Water Board, 80 L. J. K.B. 521; [1911] 1 K.B. 845; 104 L. T. 385; 9 L. G. R. 307; 75 J. P. 174; 55 S. J. 330; 27 T. L. R. 258—D. Reversed, post, WATER.

The plaintiff was injured by catching her foot in one of the defendants' stopcock boxes placed in the pavement. In an action claiming damages in respect of those injuries it was proved that it was the practice of the defendants to fill up the space between the top of the stopcock and the pavement with a wisp of straw. The instructions of the defendants were that the whole of the boxes should be re-wadded when necessary three times a year. At the time of the accident to the plaintiff there was no proper wisp of straw over the stopcock, and on the evidence the Judge came to the conclusion that a sufficient wisp of straw had not been put in on the last occasion when the stopcock box was dealt with by the defendants:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, inasmuch as the stopcock box was in fact dangerous through not having the protection which the public had become accustomed to expect, due to the failure of the defendants to put a sufficient wisp of straw in the hole. Held, further, that there was a duty on the defendants to keep the plugging of the stopcock box in order. Rosenbaum v. Metropolitan Water Board, 103 L. T. 284; 8 L. G. R. 735; 74 J. P. 378; 26 T. L. R. 510—Channell, J. New trial ordered, 103 L. T. 739; 75 J. P. 12; 9 L. G. R. 315; 27 T. L. R. 103—C.A.

School Playground — Leaving Dangerous Material Unguarded in—Injury to Scholar—Liability of Education Authority and Contractor.]—A contractor, who was to carry out certain repairs at a public elementary school, left a quantity of rough stuff composed of sand and lime in a truck in a corner of the school playground. The headmaster of the school gave instructions to the school caretaker to have the stuff removed, as he considered it was dangerous, and the caretaker telephoned to the contractor asking him to remove it. The stuff, however, was not removed. When the boys came out of school the stuff was left unguarded, and one of the boys threw a portion of the stuff at the plaintiff, who was also a scholar at the school, injuring his eye. In an action by the plaintiff against the education authority and the contractor for damages,—Held, that there was evidence upon which the jury could find that both the education authority and the contractor had been guilty of negligence. Jackson v. London County Council, 10 L. G. R. 348; 76 J. P. 217; 56 S. J. 428; 28 T. L. R. 359—C.A.

Public Fountain in Highway—Unsafe Condition of.]—Whilst a procession was passing through a street a man climbed on to a public fountain, and in doing so dislodged the top stone, which fell on to the plaintiff and injured him. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant corporation, to whom the fountain belonged, claiming damages, there was conflicting evidence as to the condition of the fountain at the time of the accident, and the jury found for the plaintiff. On an application by the defendants for a new trial,—Held, dismissing the application, that the question was entirely for the jury. McLoughlin v. Warrington Corporation, 75 J. P. 57—C.A.

Rubbish Heap in Field Frequented by Public — Injury to Child.]—A child under three years of age was injured through her clothes becoming ignited in a fire burning upon a rubbish heap where the burgh rubbish or "coup" was deposited. In an action against the burgh the pursuer averred that this coup was situated in a grass field in the neighbourhood of his house and was not fenced off from the field nor was the field sufficiently fenced to exclude the public, who in fact used it as a public park, and that children were in the habit of playing upon the coup, all of which was known to the defenders. The pursuer further averred that it was the practice of the defenders, or of those for whom they were responsible, to collect and burn inflammable material upon the coup, and that this practice had been followed by rag-pickers, with the acquiescence of the defenders. The pursuer alleged fault on the part of the defenders, in respect that they had failed to fence the coup or field or to take other precautions to exclude the public therefrom, and had failed, the coup being unfenced, to watch and properly extinguish fires which might be lighted thereon:—Held, that these averments were irrelevant to found an issue against the defenders in respect, first, that it appeared therefrom that the defenders were not the owners of the field or coup, and had therefore neither the right nor the duty to fence them; and secondly, that the material which they put upon the ground was not dangerous in itself, but only became so when ignited, and there was no averment that the defenders, or those for whom they were responsible, had kindled the fire in question. Lowery v. Walker (80 L. J. K.B. 138; [1911] A.C. 10) distinguished. Johnstone v. Lochgelly Magistrates, [1913] S. C. 1078—Ct. of Sess.

Sun Blind in Front of Shop and Over Highway—Sun Blind Pulled Down by Mischievous Act of Two Trespassers—Injury to Passer-by — Liability of Occupier of Shop — Duty to Take Reasonable Precautions.]—The plaintiff was walking along a highway under a sun blind outside the defendant's shop, when two men jumped up from the pavement to one of the iron supports, which was seven feet six inches from the ground, and mischievously pulled the blind down on the defendant, with the result that he was injured. The blind was properly constructed and in a good state of repair. There was evidence that accidents of the kind had happened on other occasions to blinds of similar construction, the cause in each case being that some person jumped up to the iron support of the blind and pulled it down:—Held, that there was no evidence on which the Court could properly hold that there was a duty on the defendant to have the blind fixed and secured so as to prevent its being brought down on the plaintiff by the action of the two men, and that the plaintiff was not therefore entitled to damages. Wheeler v. Morris, 84 L. J. K.B. 1435; 113 L. T. 644 —C.A.

Shopkeeper and Customer — Cat Rearing Kittens Kept in Shop—Vicious towards Dogs —Owner of Dog Attacked—Duty of Owner of Cat to take Reasonable Care to Provide for Safety of Customers. —The plaintiff and her husband went into a tea shop belonging to the defendants, accompanied by a dog, with the defendants' permission or acquiescence. A cat belonging to the shop, which was rearing kittens, came out of a store room and attacked the dog. The plaintiff picked up the dog and handed it to her husband. The cat then sprang upon the plaintiff and bit her. The plaintiff brought an action claiming damages for the injury done to her and also for the injury done to the dog. The jury found that the cat had, to the knowledge of the defendant, whilst rearing kittens a disposition to attack a dog and a person holding a dog; that the cat attacked the dog unprovoked; and that the defendants had not taken reasonable precautions for the safety of their customers. On appeal by the defendants,—Held, that a cat did not cease to be a domestic animal and become dangerous to mankind merely because, when she had kittens, she attacked a dog and, by accident, a person who happened to be there; and secondly, that, though the defendants were under a duty to take reasonable care to provide for the safety of their customers, they were not liable for what happened, because it was not the ordinary consequence of their act in keeping a cat on the premises, and was not such as would have been foreseen by a person of ordinary sense and prudence. Clinton v. Lyons, 81 L. J. K.B. 923; [1912] 3 K.B. 198; 106 L. T. 988; 28 T. L. R. 462—D.

—— Article Left in Shop Found by Shop Assistant—Disappearance of Article—Breach of Rule as to Lost Articles.]—The plaintiff went to the defendants' shop on a Saturday to buy a coat. She was wearing a coat fastened with a diamond brooch, and she took the coat off and put it on a glass case with the brooch by the side of it. When leaving she forgot the brooch, and it was handed by an assistant to the shopwalker, who put it in his desk. On the following Monday morning it could not be found. By the defendants' rules it ought to have been taken to their lost property office. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for negligence the Judge at the trial found that the defendants had not exercised proper care, and he awarded the plaintiff damages:—Held, that there was evidence to support the Judge's finding. Newman v. Bourne & Hollingsworth, 31 T. L. R. 209—D.

Hospital—Unskilful Treatment of Patient—Liability of Hospital Authority.]—Apart from special contract the managers of a public hospital are not responsible to the patients whom they receive (whether paying or non-paying) for unskilful or negligent medical treatment, provided they have exercised due care in the selection of a competent staff. Hillyer v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital Governors (78 L. J. K.B. 958; [1909] 2 K.B. 820) followed. Foote v. Greenock Hospital Directors, [1912] S. C. 69—Ct. of Sess.

Unskilful Treatment by Doctor—Ground of Action.] — The ground of action in a claim for damages against a medical man for unskilful treatment is breach of his duty to his patient and not breach of contract with his employer. Accordingly, a married woman held to have a title to maintain such an action, although the medical man had been employed to attend to her by her husband and not by herself. Edgar v. Lamont, [1914] S. C. 277 —Ct. of Sess.

Death by Fire of Prisoner in Lock-up Provided by Municipality.]—M., the husband and father of the appellants, was arrested by a constable employed by the respondents, and placed in a cell in the lock-up, which was provided and maintained by the respondents. While the constable, who was also the gaoler, was absent from the lock-up, no one being then in the building except M. and another prisoner, a fire broke out, and M. died from suffocation. It appeared that the constable was absent in the performance of some of his other duties at the time the fire broke out. The appellants did not shew how the fire was caused or that any one could reasonably expect that a fire might take place. In an action by M.'s widow, son, and daughter, under Lord Campbell's Act, claiming damages from the respondents for the death of M.,—Held, that the action failed, as the appellants had not shewn any breach of duty on the part of the respondents which caused or contributed to the death of M. McKenzie v. Chilliwack Corporation, 82 L. J. P.C. 22; [1912] A.C. 888; 107 L. T. 570; 29 T. L. R. 40 —P.C.

Sale of Food Unfit for Human Consumption —Action against Medical Officer and Sanitary Inspector for Non-communication of Condition of Food.]—The plaintiff, who carried on business in Stepney, had consigned to him certain tins of corned beef from Glasgow as "rejects"—that is, food unfit for human food, and to be used only for feeding poultry. The Glasgow sanitary authorities notified the defendant T., who was the Stepney medical officer of health, as to the nature of the consignment, and T. communicated it to the defendant A., the Stepney sanitary inspector. The defendants did not see the plaintiff on the subject. The plaintiff having sold some of the corned beef for human food was convicted in respect thereof. In an action for damages against the defendants for negligence in omitting to communicate to him the information received from Glasgow as to the condition of the corned beef :—Held, that the plaintiff had failed to establish any cause of action, and further, that as more than six months had elapsed since the alleged neglect of the defendants, the defendants were protected by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. Weir v. Thomas, 79 J. P. 54—Darling, J.

Employment of Contractor — Liability of Principal—Dangerous Work on Building Adjoining Highway — Absence of Precautions against Danger to Public.]—By an agreement between a railway company and a firm of contractors the latter were to build a superstructure over the railway company's station, and were to have a ninety-nine years' lease of same. The new building, which adjoined a public street, required scaffolding and hoardings, which the contractors were to erect in such a way as should be reasonably approved by the railway company. A gantry was also necessary by means of which building materials might be raised to the top of the existing building, and this gantry could only be erected in a particular manner as provided by the agreement. During the progress of the building operations the plaintiff, while walking on the pavement outside the station, was injured by some timber falling on her from the building, and in respect of her injuries she sued both the railway company and the contractors. Neither of the defendants called any evidence as to how the timber fell. The jury found that the accident was caused by negligence, as there was not sufficient protection to the public on the footpath, and the Judge gave judgment against both defendants :—Held, on an appeal by the railway company, that the agreement created no relationship of principal and agent, that the railway company were mere reversioners, that that fact of their having a right to approve plans did not make them responsible for the gantry being defective, and that therefore they were not liable for damages. Decision of Scrutton, J. (29 T. L. R. 514), reversed. Hurlstone v. London Electric Railway, 30 T. L. R. 398—C.A.

III. ACTIONS FOR NEGLIGENCE.

A. Under Lord Campbell's Act.

Negligence Causing Death—Death of Child — Damages — Reasonable Expectation of Pecuniary Benefit.]—In order to sustain an action for damages under Lord Campbell's Act for the death of a child it is not necessary to prove actual pecuniary loss in the present, but only the reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit if the child had lived. Taff Vale Railway v. Jenkins, 82 L. J. K.B. 49; [1913] A.C. 1; 107 L. T. 564; 57 S. J. 27; 29 T. L. R. 19—H.L. (E.)

The respondent's daughter, a girl of sixteen, then approaching the end of her apprenticeship to a dressmaker, was killed in an accident for which the appellants were liable. She was earning no money, but the evidence shewed that she might expect to earn 3*s.* or 4*s.* a week as a dressmaker's improver at the end of her apprenticeship, and later to earn substantial wages and possibly to establish herself in business. She also assisted her mother in a small business. The jury awarded 50*l.* damages to the father and 25*l.* to the mother. The appellant company appealed, and in the Court of Appeal, Vaughan Williams, L.J., was for dismissing the appeal, Farwell, L.J., for allowing it, and Kennedy, L.J., for ordering a new trial, and the appeal was dismissed. The House dismissed the appeal. Ib.

—— Loss of Wife's Services — Expenditure by Husband in Consequence — Damages.]—An action is maintainable under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, by a husband to recover damages for monetary loss incurred by him in replacing services rendered gratuitously by his wife, who has been killed through the negligence of the defendants' servants, there being reasonable ground for believing that such services, but for the death, would have been rendered gratuitously in the future. Berry v. Humm & Co., 84 L. Death by Railway Accident — Time for Bringing Action.]—An action under Lord Campbell's Act is a new action, not a suit for an indemnity for damages or injury sustained by the deceased person, and therefore the provision in section 60 of the British Columbia Consolidated Railway Company's Act, 1896, that "All actions or suits for indemnity for any damage or injury sustained by reason of the tramway or railway, or the works or operations of the company, shall be commenced within six months next after the time when such supposed damage is sustained" does not apply to proceedings under the Families Compensation Act, the provisions of which are identical with the English statute—the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846. Markey v. Tolworth Joint Hospital District Board (69 L. J. Q.B. 738; [1900] 2 Q.B. 454) disapproved. British Columbia Electric Railway v. Gentile, 83 L. J. P.C. 353; [1914] A.C. 1034; 30 T. L. R. 594—P.C.

Burden of Proof—Prisoner Burnt in Cell—No Evidence of Cause of Fire.]—In an action for damages by the widow and children of a man who was burnt to death in a lock-up from a fire which arose from an unascertained cause, —Held, that the burden of proof of negligence in the defendants lay upon the plaintiffs, and had not been discharged in the absence of proof that the death of the deceased was in any way attributable to, or materially contributed to by, any negligent act or omission on the part of the defendants. Rule as to burden of proof laid down by Lord Halsbury, L.C., in Wakelin v. London and South-Western Railway (56 L. J. P.C. 22; [1912] A.C. 888; 107 L. T. 570; 29 T. L. R. 40—P.C.

Apportionment of Damages Paid into Court under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846—Adult and Minor Plaintiffs.]—Where money is paid into Court under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, and accepted in full satisfaction by the plaintiffs, one of whom is a minor, the Court has jurisdiction to apportion the money between the adult and the minor plaintiff. Davy v. Gray (48 Ir. Personal Injuries — Obligation not to Augment Consequences of Injuries.] — A person who is suffering from the effects of an accident, in respect of which he is claiming damages, is not entitled to do everything that an ordinary person might reasonably do. He need not act with perfect knowledge and ideal wisdom, but he cannot claim damages for such injuries as are really due to wanton, needless, or careless conduct on his own part. If, however, what he does, reasonably and carefully, augments the injuries, that may be regarded as a natural consequence of the accident. Jones v. Watney, Combe, Reid & Co., 28 T. L. R. 399—Lush, J.

Joint Tortfeasors — Indemnity by One of Joint Tortfeasors.] — A contractor was employed by a district council to do certain work which involved an excavation by the side of a road. A person having fallen into this excavation and sustained injuries from which he died, his widow and daughter sued the contractor and district council under Lord Campbell's Act, claiming damages. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs. The district council thereupon claimed that under the terms of the contract between them and the contractor they were entitled to an indemnity from him:—Held, that it was not against public policy that the district council should take an indemnity from the contractor and be allowed to enforce it against him, and therefore a declaration should be made that they were entitled to such indemnity, which should include the costs of the action. Newcombe v. Yewen and Croydon Rural Council, 29 T. L. R. 299—Darling, J.

NEGOTIABLE SECURITIES.

Holders for Value.]—H. received from the defendants bearer bonds to the amount of 20,000*l.* to use for a specific purpose. Instead of so using them H. employed them in his own business. On becoming aware that H. was financially involved the defendants claimed repossession of the securities, and they in fact received back securities of equivalent amount and of equivalent class although not the identical bonds originally handed by them to H. Some of these bonds were claimed by the plaintiffs:—Held, that as the defendants had a civil claim against H. for conversion, the defendants took the securities so received back from H. for value within the principle of the decision in London and County Banking Co. v. London and River Plate Bank (57 L. J. Q.B. 601; 21 Q.B. D. 535). The defendants lent money to H., a billbroker, on bearer securities to the value of 15,000*l.* That loan having been called in by the defendants, the latter, in accordance with the usual practice between bankers and billbrokers, handed back the securities to H. in exchange for his cheque for 15,000*l.* Ascertaining in the course of the same day that H. was financially involved and that his cheque would not likely be met at the end of the day, they claimed the return by H. of the securities, and they in fact received bearer securities to the value of 15,000*l.*, but not the identical securities they had returned to H. in the morning, although this was not known at the time. On receiving these documents the defendants returned to H. his cheque for 15,000*l.*:—Held, that as both parties knew and treated the cheque so returned by the defendants to be worthless, the defendants were not, as regards the securities for 15,000*l.* received back from H., holders for value. Lloyds Bank v. Swiss Bankverein, 107 L. Colliery — Coal Dust — Easement—Lease—Licence to Carry on Business but not to Commit Nuisance — Adjoining Property of Lessor Affected.]—Permission to carry on a business does not imply permission to carry it on in such a manner as to create a nuisance, unless it is proved either that the business authorised cannot possibly be carried on without committing a nuisance, or that some particular method of carrying it on has been authorised which necessarily results in a nuisance being committed; and if a nuisance has been committed it is no defence to say that the business was carried on in a reasonable manner, in the ordinary way in which such operations are usually carried on, without negligence. Pwllbach Colliery Co. v. Woodman, 84 L. The appellant company occupied land under a lease by which they were licensed to carry on the industry and trade of miners on the demised land. The respondent occupied adjoining land under a lease of later date from the same lessor "subject to all rights and easements belonging to any adjoining or neighbouring property." The respondent erected buildings on his land, which he used in his trade as a butcher. The appellants afterwards erected buildings on their land, which they used for breaking and screening coal. The respondent complained that coal dust blew from the appellants' buildings and created a nuisance. In answer to questions a jury found that the coal dust was a nuisance to the respondent, but that the appellants' operations were carried on in a reasonable manner, and in the way in which such operations were usually carried on in the district, and that there was no negligence on their part:—Held, that the appellants' lease did not authorise them to carry on their business in such a way as to create a nuisance, and that a claim to be entitled to allow their coal dust to be blown anywhere over the neighbouring land was too indefinite to be an easement. Ib.

Fumes from Gasworks — Injunction or Damages — Injury to Trees — No House on Area Affected.]—The owner and occupier of a house and park adjoining a corporation's gasworks brought an action claiming an injunction to restrain the corporation from carrying on their works so as to cause a nuisance to his property. It appeared from the evidence that fumes and smoke from the gasworks were carried by the prevailing wind for a distance of one hundred to two hundred yards over the plaintiff's property, and that they had injuriously affected a plantation of trees adjoining the gasworks to such an extent that the tops of the trees were dying, while in some cases the trees were dead. There was no house on the part of the plaintiff's property affected:—Held, that the fumes were discharged on to the plaintiff's property in such a way as to be a nuisance causing serious growing and permanent injury to the plaintiff's property, and that it was a case where the proper remedy was an injunction and not damages. Per Buckley, L.J.: If the owner of property is so substantially injured in his reasonable enjoyment of it that he sustains what is equivalent to a legal nuisance, he is entitled to an injunction to stop it, although the property affected is only a garden or park and has no house or structure upon it. Sturges v. Bridgman (48 L. J. Ch. 785; 11 Ch. D. 852) distinguished. Wood v. Conway Corporation, 83 L. J. Ch. 498; [1914] 2 Ch. 47; 110 L. T. 917; 78 J. P. 249; 12 L. G. R. 571—C.A.

Market Garden—Manure Heap—Flies.]—The occupiers of a dwelling house adjoining a market garden, where intensive culture was practised, suffered physical inconvenience from the smell and from flies bred in a large heap of manure. The locality was one where market gardening was carried on, but the collection of manure in question was in excess of what might be expected in the locality :—Held, that the manure heap was a serious inconvenience and interference with the comfort of the occupiers of the dwelling house according to notions prevalent among reasonable English men and women, and that it amounted to a nuisance in law. Bland v. Yates, 58 S. J. 612—Warrington, J.

Noise—Annual Feast.]—On the evidence, held, that the annual feast held on W. Moor in 1912, and as it was likely to be conducted in the future, fell short of being an actionable nuisance. Bedford v. Leeds Corporation, 77 J. P. 430—Sargant, J.

—— Building Operations — Pile Driving at Night.]—In conducting building operations it is not reasonable and proper to do pile driving by night so that residents in an adjoining building cannot sleep, and such conduct is liable to be restrained by injunction. De Keyser's Royal Hotel v. Spicer, 30 T. L. R. 257—Warrington, J.

—— Exhibition—Side Shows.] — Where the noise from side shows at an exhibition interfered with the comfortable occupation of the plaintiff's house and injuriously affected the health of his family,—Held, that the noise amounted to a nuisance, and that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction and damages. Becker v. Earl's Court, Lim., 56 S. J. 73—Eve, J.

—— Singing and Dancing at Night—Reasonable User of Premises.]—Among the noises which, if they do not cause substantial discomfort, residents in large industrial cities may have to put up with, is a certain amount of noise which accompanies and is incident to the reasonable recreation of a crowded population. The question in every such case is whether such noises amount to a sensible or substantial interference with the comfort of neighbouring dwellers, according to ordinary common sense standards. New Imperial and Windsor Hotel Co. v. Johnson, [1912] 1 Ir. R. 327—Barton, J.

Offensive Smell—Fried-fish Shop—Physical Discomfort to Neighbours — Injunction.] — Where it is proved that the odour from a fried-fish shop escapes so as materially to interfere with the ordinary comfort of an adjoining occupier and his family, a sufficient case of nuisance is made out in law and an injunction will be granted. Tod-Heatley v. Benham (58 L. J. Ch. 83; 40 Ch. D. 80) followed. Adams v. Ursell, 82 L. J. Ch. 157; [1913] 1 Ch. 269; 108 L. T. 292; 57 S. J. 227—Swinfen Eady, J.

—— Fish-Guano Works.]—Injunction granted restraining the defendants from so using their fish-guano factory as to cause a public nuisance by the giving off of offensive and noxious smells. Att.-Gen. v. Plymouth Fish-Guano and Oil Co., 76 J. P. 19—Parker, J.

Sewage Farm.] — The plaintiffs, who respectively owned and occupied a dwelling house, obtained an injunction against the defendants, owners of a sewage farm about 800 yards south-west of the plaintiffs' premises, restraining the defendants from conducting their sewage farm so as to cause offensive smells and vapours in the plaintiffs' premises. Bainbridge v. Chertsey Urban Council, 84 L. High-pressure Water Mains under Surface of Roadway—Escape of Water—Damage to Electric Cables—Statutory Powers—Construction of Statute — Two Statutes to be Read Together as One.]—The defendants laid high-pressure water mains under certain streets, and subsequently the plaintiffs laid electric cables under the same streets, both acting under statutory powers. Four of the defendants' mains, without any negligence on the part of the defendants, burst and injured the plaintiffs' cables :—Held, that the defendants were liable for the damage done to the plaintiffs' cables by the bursting of their mains; for the doctrine of Rylands v. Fletcher (37 L. J. Ex. 161; L. R. 3 H.L. 330) is not limited to the case of neighbouring landowners or occupiers of neighbouring closes, but is applicable as between companies which have independently obtained licences to lay apparatus for their undertakings under the surface of the same street. Midwood & Co. v. Manchester Corporation (74 L. J. K.B. 884; [1905] 2 K.B. 597) followed. Charing Cross, West End, and City Electricity Supply Co. v. London Hydraulic Power Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 1352; [1914] 3 K.B. 772; 111 L. T. 198; 78 J. P. 305; 12 L. G. R. 807; 58 S. J. 577; 30 T. L. R. 441—C.A. Affirming, 83 L. J. K.B. 116; [1913] 3 K.B. 442—Scrutton, J.

Two of the four mains had been laid under a private Act which did not contain a clause providing that nothing in the Act should exempt the defendants from liability for nuisance. The other two were laid under a later Act which did contain such a clause, and further provided that the two Acts should be read together as one Act :—Held, that, as the Acts were to be read together, the privilege which the defendants would have enjoyed under the earlier Act of not being liable as for a nuisance in respect of the two first-mentioned mains was taken away, and consequently the defendants were without statutory protection in respect of all four mains. Ib.

Electric Cables and Gas Mains Laid in Same Street—Leakage of Gas into Electric Chamber—Explosion—Injury to Passer-by—Non-liability of Electric Undertakers.] — A local authority, authorised by statute to supply electricity within their district, placed under the pavement of a highway a brick chamber, inside of which was a box through which wires passed, but the box did not occupy the whole space within the brick chamber. The wires, or some of them, were connected by fuses in the box. Owing to an unusually strong electric current a fuse might occasionally emit a spark which would escape through the cover of the box into the unoccupied space in the brick chamber. Gas from an adjacent gas main not belonging to the local authority had leaked through the soil and thence into the unoccupied space in the brick chamber and there collected. A spark emitted from a fuse in the inner box exploded the gas, with the result that a passer-by on the pavement was injured by the explosion. In an action brought by him against the local authority to recover damages for personal injuries the jury, in answer to questions left to them by consent of both parties, found that the chamber did not constitute a nuisance, and that the local authority had not been guilty of negligence:—Held, that the defendant local authority were entitled to judgment. The gas had escaped from a main in or over which they had no interest or control. They were incapable of excluding it from their apparatus. They were not bound, because they kept an apparatus which might become dangerous if ignited by being combined with something else, to compensate any one hurt by its being ignited without possibility of their preventing its ignition. Goodbody v. Poplar Borough Council, 84 L. J. K.B. 1230; 79 J. P. 218; 13 L. G. R. 166—D.

There was nothing in the case to extend the principle laid down in Rylands v. Fletcher (37 L. J. Ex. 161; L. R. 3 H.L. 330) as to not allowing mischief to escape to the land of another, to keeping the mischief on other persons' land from their own. In the circumstances the case was distinguishable from the later decisions of Midwood & Co. v. Manchester Corporation (74 L. J. K.B. 884; [1905] 2 K.B. 597) and Charing Cross, West End, and City Electric Supply Co. v. London Hydraulic Power Co. (83 L. J. K.B. 1352; [1913] 3 K.B. 442), because it was not the defendants' own gas which escaped. Ib.

2. On Highways.

Area Adjoining Highway — Defective Railings — Liability of Owner in Possession — Knowledge of Nuisance—Permission of Continuance of Nuisance.]—The defendant was the owner in possession of an empty house with an area adjoining a public street. The area was fenced off from the street by railings, but one of the rails had been removed by trespassers, leaving a gap in the railings of a width of ten and three-quarter inches. The plaintiff, a child of the age of three years and nine months, while playing in the street, passed through the gap and was clambering along a ledge inside the railings when he fell into the area and was injured. In an action to recover damages the jury found that the area was a nuisance to persons using the highway, but that the defendant did not at the time of the accident know that the rail had been removed, neither had such time elapsed that he would have known it if he had used reasonable care, and that he had used reasonable care to prevent his premises becoming dangerous to persons using the highway:—Held, that the action failed on the ground that the defendant neither created the nuisance nor with knowledge of its existence permitted its continuance. Per Fletcher Moulton, L.J., and Farwell, L.J.—The action also failed on the ground that the injury was not the direct result of the nuisance. Barker v. Herbert, 80 L. J. K.B. 1329; [1911] 2 K.B. 633; 105 L. T. 349; 75 J. P. 481; 9 L. G. R. 1083; 27 T. L. R. 488—C.A.

Quarry Adjoining Road—Land Dug Out—Collapse of Fence and Road—Duty of Occupier to Restore—Remedy of Local Authority.]—There is a common law obligation on the possessor of land that has been subjected to excavation to keep it fenced off from any public place or right of way, whether the excavation was made before or after his possession, and whether he is or is not liable to his landlord, if he has a landlord. Att.-Gen. v. Roe, 84 L. J. Ch. 322; [1915] 1 Ch. 235; 112 L. T. 581; 79 J. P. 263; 13 L. G. R. 335—Sargant, J.

The defendant owned and occupied land which was in fact a worked-out quarry, and which immediately adjoined a public highway vested in an urban district council and repairable by the inhabitants at large, the excavation having been made in 1865 by a prior owner of the land in order to quarry for limestone, the surfaces of the road and land having up to that time been on the same level. The excavator, in order to protect the persons using the road from danger and the road itself from obstruction, had built alongside the road a wall the bottom of which rested on a ledge of limestone, left ungotten for the purpose, which served as a retaining wall for the subsoil of the road and as a fence wall above its surface. In 1913 a part of the wall collapsed and fell into the quarry, and in consequence a considerable part of the subsoil of the road and of its surface fell in:—Held, that in an action by the Attorney-General at the relation of the council and the council as plaintiffs a mandatory order should be made on the defendant to abate the nuisance by restoring the road to its condition prior to the subsidence, and by rebuilding the wall or providing some other reasonable fence between the road and the quarry. Greenwell v. Low Beechburn Colliery Co. (66 L. J. Q.B. 643; [1897] 2 Q.B. 165) distinguished. Ib.

Unlawful Erection in—Obstruction of View Special Damage.] — Where a nuisance is created by the erection of an unauthorised structure in a highway, and special damage is thereby caused to a person by reason of the view from his house being obstructed, he is entitled to recover damages from the persons creating the nuisance. Campbell v. Paddington Borough Council, 80 L. Tramway Company — Abandonment of Undertaking—Compensation—Claim in Respect of Breach of Covenant to Construct an Embankment.]—The appellant tramroad company, in contemplation of an application to Parliament for an Act to extend their tramroads, entered into an agreement with the respondent whereby they agreed (inter alia) that they would use their best endeavours to obtain power to construct, and in the event of their obtaining such power would construct, and afterwards maintain, a solid embankment on a part of certain marsh land of the respondent for the purpose of carrying one of their tramroads, such embankment to be formed so as to be sufficient to prevent the respondent's marsh land being inundated by certain tidal waters. An Act was accordingly obtained which authorised the making of (inter alia) such tramroad with all necessary embankments. The Act contained the usual provision with regard to the money deposited in respect of the application to Parliament—namely, that, if the company should make default in opening the tramroads, then the deposit fund should be applied towards compensating any landowners or other persons whose property should have been interfered with or otherwise rendered less valuable by the commencement, construction, or abandonment of the tramroads or any part thereof. The respondent conveyed to the company the right to construct and maintain the embankment on his land, and the company covenanted to construct, execute, and perform the works, matters, and things specified in the agreement. The company subsequently obtained an abandonment Act, and the proposed embankment was never made :—Held, that, inasmuch as the breach of the covenant to make the embankment was not the necessary result of the abandonment of the tramroads, the respondent was not entitled to claim against the deposit fund in respect of the diminution in the value of his land caused by the non-construction of the embankment. Ruthin and Cerrig-y-Druidion Railway Act, In re (56 L. J. Ch. 30; 32 Ch. D. 438), applied. Southport and Lytham Tramroad Act, In re; Hesketh, ex parte, 80 L. J. Ch. 137; [1911] 1 Ch. 120; 104 L. T. 154—C.A.

—— Claim in Respect of Abandonment of Street Widening—Statutory Obligation.]—A tramway company was authorised by its Act of Parliament to construct a certain tramway passing round the junction of two roads, and to effect a widening of the roads at their junction. The applicant was the owner of a property consisting of two adjacent shops, forming a quadrangular block at the junction of the two roads and fronting on both of them. He sold a triangular strip of it to the company, whereby his remaining property was cut off from all access to one of the roads until the widening should be carried out. There was no covenant by the company to widen. The undertaking was abandoned, the tramway was not constructed, nor was the widening effected. Section 81 of the Act provided that for the protection of a district council, and unless otherwise agreed between the council and the company, the company should within a limited time complete the tramway and concurrently with its construction, and before opening it for traffic, carry out the widening to the satisfaction of the council. There was no agreement between the council and the company varying the obligations of the section. Upon application by the owner for compensation out of deposited moneys as a landowner whose property had been rendered less valuable by the " abandonment of the tramways or any portion thereof " within section 67 of the Act,—Held, that section 81 imposed a statutory obligation upon the company to effect the widening; that it had not been carried out owing to the abandonment of the undertaking; and that if the applicant's property had thereby been rendered less valuable he was entitled to compensation. West Yorkshire Tramways Bill, In re, 82 L. J. Ch. 98; [1913] 1 Ch. 170; 108 L. T. 18; 11 L. G. R. 78; 57 S. J. 111; 29 T. L. R. 115—C.A.

3. ELECTION OF MEMBERS.

Disqualification of Member for Sitting and Voting—Contract with Secretary of State for or on Account of Public Service.]—The " public service " includes any service of the Crown anywhere. Therefore where a member of Parliament was a partner in a firm which had made contracts with the Secretary of State for India in Council for the service of the Crown in India, which contracts were to be paid for out of the revenues of India, he was held disqualified from sitting and voting in the House of Commons, as having " directly or indirectly " undertaken a contract " for or on account of the public service " within the meaning of section 1 of the House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1782. Samuel's (Sir Stuart) Seat, In re, 82 L. Contract with a Person or Persons for or on Account of the Public Service—Contract with Secretary of State for India.]—A member of the House of Commons was a partner in a firm which made a contract with the Secretary of State for India in Council for purchasing silver for the Indian currency :—Held, that he had thereby entered into a contract with a person or persons for or on account of the public service within section 1 of the House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1782, and was therefore disabled for sitting and voting in the House of Commons. Forbes v. Samuel, 82 L. Action for Penalties—Necessity for Affidavit from Common Informer—Prior Writ for Same Penalty—Wrong Statute Founded on.]—The plaintiff, as a common informer, claimed penalties from the defendant for having sat and voted in the House of Commons when incapacitated for so doing by reason of his interest in a Government contract, contrary to the provisions of the House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1782. Two writs by other common informers against the defendant for penalties for the same offence were issued prior to the writ in the plaintiff's action :—Held, first, that it was not necessary for the maintenance of the action that the plaintiff should first have made oath under section 3 of 21 Jac. 1. c. 4 that he believed in his conscience that the offence was committed by the defendant within a year before action brought; but secondly, that the action failed inasmuch as it was barred not only by the fact of the prior issue of the other writs for penalties, but also by the fact that the plaintiff had proceeded under the House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1782, instead of under the House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1801. Ib.

Wrong Statute Founded on — Leave to Amend.]—An action was brought by a common informer claiming penalties from the defendant for having sat and voted in Parliament when incapacitated for so doing. The Judge having held that the plaintiff had founded his action on the wrong statute, the plaintiff asked leave to amend by pleading the proper statute :—Held, that in the circumstances leave to amend must be refused. Burnett v. Samuel, 109 L. T. 630; 29 T. L. R. 835—Scrutton, J.

—— Amendment.]—A member of the House of Commons was partner in a firm which made a contract with the Secretary of State for India in Council for purchasing silver for the Indian currency. A common informer brought an action against the member for penalties, and alleged in the statement of claim that the defendant was elected to Parliament on January 10, 1910, and that he voted on various dates in 1912. In fact Parliament was dissolved on January 10, 1910, and was again dissolved in December, 1910, and the defendant was elected at a general election in December, 1910 :—Held, that the defendant had entered into a contract for or on account of the public service within section 1 of the House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1782, that the plaintiff was entitled to an amendment of the date alleged in the statement of claim as the date of the defendant's election, and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to recover the penalties sued for. Forbes v. Samuel (82 L. Jurisdiction—Joint Tenancy or Tenancy in Common—Indefeasible Interest in One Moiety of Estate—Defeasible Interest in Other Moiety —Subsisting Trusts.] — The existence of a joint tenancy or a tenancy in common is essential to the jurisdiction of the Court for the purposes of an order for partition. A person who is entitled, subject to a term of one thousand years, to an estate in fee-simple, but is liable as to one moiety to have his estate divested by the attaining of a vested interest by another person, is not entitled to succeed in an action for partition. The Court has no jurisdiction to order partition of an estate where there are subsisting trusts for management vested in trustees. Taylor v. Grange (49 L. J. Ch. 24, 794; 13 Ch. D. 223; 15 Ch. "Trading" Partnership — Cinematograph Entertainment.]—A partnership formed for the purpose of running a cinematograph entertainment is not a "trading" partnership within the meaning of the rule that a member of a trading partnership has ostensible authority to borrow money for the purposes of the partnership so as to bind the other partners, even though he is, as between himself and his co-partners, prohibited from borrowing money so as to bind the partnership. Per Lush, J.: A trading business is one which involves the purchase and the sale of goods. Higgins v. Beauchamp, 84 L. Test of Partnership.]—In order to determine whether there is or is not a partnership between persons the whole of the agreement between them must be looked at in order to see what is the intention of the parties, together with the surrounding circumstances at the time when the agreement was entered into. Subsequent conduct can only be looked at in order to shew that the agreement has been varied or a new agreement made. Beard & Co., In re; Trustee, ex parte, [1915] H. B. R. 191—C.A.

Betting Business—Account.]—The plaintiff and defendant had been in partnership as bookmakers and commission agents, the capital having been contributed by them in equal shares, and the plaintiff took proceedings against the defendant for an account of the partnership dealings:—Held, that the plaintiff could recover any balance of his capital which had not been applied in payment of bets, and that he was entitled to an account, it being left open to the defendant to object to any particular items and to object that anything in his hands consisted of profits. Keen v. Price, 83 L. Illegal Sale of Partnership Property — Repurchase from Bona Fide Purchaser for Value without Notice — Fiduciary Relation — Liability to Account.]—A partner who has improperly, and without the knowledge of his partner, sold partnership property to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, and has afterwards re-purchased it from him, stands in a fiduciary relation to his partner, and cannot take advantage of the rule which protects a purchaser with notice taking from a purchaser without notice, but is liable to account for profits made by subsequent dealings with the property. Knox v. Gye (42 L. J. Ch. 234; L. R. 5 H.L. 656) and Piddocke v. Burt (63 L. J. Ch. 246; [1894] 1 Ch. 343) distinguished. Gordon v. Holland, 82 L. J. P.C. 81; 108 L. T. 385—P.C.

Business Premises the Property of One Partner—No Special Provision as to Tenancy —Partnership to Pay all Rent—Tenancy Implied—Continuance of Partnership.]—Where business premises the property of one partner are occupied by the partnership and all the rent is paid out of the partnership account, but there is no provision as to the duration of the tenancy, the right inference is that the tenancy is a tenancy during the continuance of the partnership. Pocock v. Carter, 81 L. Authority of Partner to Borrow Money for Partnership Purposes.]—The rule of law that each member of a trading firm has implied authority to borrow money for partnership purposes on the credit of the firm does not apply to a partnership firm of cinematograph-theatre proprietors. The partnership deed of a firm of cinematograph-theatre proprietors provided that no partner should without the consent of the other partners contract any debt on account of the partnership or in any manner pledge its credit except in the usual and regular course of business. The managing partner borrowed moneys from the plaintiff, ostensibly for partnership purposes, but with the intention of misappropriating them, which he did. The plaintiff sued the defendant, a partner, for the moneys lent to the firm:—Held, that the defendant was not liable. Higgins v.

The defendants and H. had dealings on joint account in various bearer securities. For the purposes of the joint account the defendants entrusted H. with bearer securities to the amount of 20,000*l.* for the purpose of being deposited by him as margin in respect of a loan to be borrowed from a specified lender. H. did not borrow from that lender and he had the 20,000*l.* margins in his possession on September 15, 1911, on which day H. became indebted to the plaintiffs. On subsequently discovering the existence of the joint-account transaction between H. and the defendants the plaintiffs sued the defendants in debt on the ground that they were partners with H.:—Held, that the claim failed, inasmuch as H. had no authority to act for the joint adventure by borrowing from any one except the specified lender, and the plaintiffs did not at the material date know or believe H. to be a partner with the defendants. Watteau v. Fenwick ([1893] 1 Q.B. 346) distinguished. Lloyds Bank v. Swiss Bankverein, 107 L. Liability of Partnership for Money Received "in the course of its business."]—A partner in a firm of solicitors, who acted as secretary of a mining and exploring company, received and misapplied certain of the company's funds:—Held, that the firm were not liable under the Partnership Act, 1890, s. 11 (b), in respect that the moneys in question had not been received by the firm "in the course of its business." New Mining and Exploring Syndicate v. Chalmers & Hunter, [1912] S. Joint Adventure—Sale of Goods—Coals—Substituted Supplies.]—The plaintiff and defendants entered into an arrangement that they would endeavour to get the business of supplying coal to the Austrian Navy for 1911 on a basis of joint account as to profit and loss. The plaintiff put in a tender for 20,000 tons of certain Welsh coal, which was accepted. Subsequently it became obvious that the parties would suffer a heavy loss, and it was agreed that the plaintiff should cut his loss for a payment of 1,000*l.*, and that if a reduction in the loss was effected by the Austrian Admiralty giving permission to supply other coals which could be got at a cheaper rate, the 1,000*l.* was to be reduced by half the profit effected. The defendants supplied 20,000 tons of coal to the Austrian Admiralty at a lower price, which was supplied to them under a contract made by them for the supply of their own coaling depot:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an account on the terms that the defendants could not bring into the account the coal at a higher price than that at which they actually purchased it, on the principle that one co-adventurer cannot sell his own property to the adventure, so as to make a profit himself, unless before doing so he has made the fullest disclosure to his co-adventurer. Kuhlirz v. Lambert, 108 L. T. 565; 18 Com. Cas. 217—Scrutton, J.

—— Goods Purchased by One Adventurer—Bills of Exchange.]—Where persons enter into an agreement constituting a partnership limited to a joint trading adventure and goods are purchased, ostensibly by an individual adventurer but really for the purpose of the joint adventure, the adventurers are liable as partners; but there is no such responsibility for goods purchased upon the credit of an individual adventurer, though they are afterwards brought into stock as his contribution to the joint adventure. Gouthwaite v. Duckworth (12 East, 421) followed and applied. Saville v. Robertson (4 Term Rep. 720) distinguished. Karmali Abdulla Allarakhia v. Vora Karimji Jiwanji, L. Firm Name of Testator Used by Executors — Receiving Order against Firm — Whether Executors are Partners.]—Executors carrying on their testator's business under the powers of his will and in his own firm name are not partners within the meaning of section 1 of the Partnership Act, 1890, and cannot be adjudicated bankrupt as partners under section 115 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, but may be individually proceeded against as joint debtors. Fisher & Sons, In re, 81 L. J. K.B. 1246; [1912] 2 K.B. 491; 106 L. T. 814; 19 Manson, 332; 56 S. J. 553—Phillimore, J.

Instalments of Debt — Payment out of Partnership Assets — Judgment for Non-payment of Later Instalments — Satisfaction by One Partner—Contribution—Equitable Rights between the Joint Debtors.]—D. and H., who were partners, covenanted to be jointly and severally liable to P. for payment of a debt by instalments. The earlier instalments were paid out of the partnership assets, and later ones by D., after judgment for them had been recovered. D. demanded from P. that, in order to enforce his right to contribution against H., the judgments should be delivered to him, as provided by section 5 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856; but H. informed P. that D.'s right to contribution depended on the equitable rights between D. and himself in respect of a partnership action then pending between them, upon which P. declined to hand over the judgments. D. then brought an action against P. claiming (a) delivery of the judgments; (b) damages for non-delivery; (c) a declaration that by reason of the refusal to assign the judgments D. was released from all liability in respect of any future instalments:—Held, that the provisions of section 5 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, might be subject to the equitable relationship between the parties, and that, although P. had committed a breach of a statutory obligation in refusing to assign the judgments, yet, as D. could not have levied execution upon them without the consent of the Judge in the partnership action, and without taking into account the inter-partnership rights of himself and H., he had suffered no actual damage. Held, further, that D. was not released from liability in respect of future instalments, inasmuch as there had been no alteration of the original conditions as to the liability of the parties; and the failure to assign the judgments would have only operated to release him if and so far as the delay in handing over might have made them less valuable. Dale v. Powell; Powell v. Dale, 105 L. T. 291—Parker, J.

IV. DEATH OF PARTNER.

Purchase of Dead Partner's Share by Surviving Partner — Survivor Sole Executor of Deceased Partner — Conflict of Interest and Duty—Reopening of Transactions after Long Delay.]—By a clause in articles of partnership executed by two brothers in 1878 it was agreed that within thirty days after notice of the death of a partner "a general account in writing shall be made and taken of the partnership goods, wares, stocks, credits, and effects belonging, due, or owing to the said co-partnership; also all debts due, or owing to the said partnership . . . and in taking such account such stock and other assets as shall not consist of money shall be valued either by mutual agreement or valuation in the usual way, nothing being charged for goodwill; and the surviving . . . partner shall and will pay or cause to be paid unto the executors or administrators of the so deceased partner . . . his full share." One brother died in 1886, having appointed the other his sole executor. The survivor took an account of the assets in the same way as the half-yearly balance sheets had for several years been prepared when both partners were alive, consulting an intimate friend of the testator's, and appointed a man of high character and wide business experience to check the valuation. The testator's share, excluding goodwill, was paid with interest. Twenty years or more after the partner's death the residuary legatees brought an action against the survivor for an account:—Held, that there was a valid contract of sale and purchase which had been executed; that it was not necessary to appoint valuers for an exhaustive valuation; and that there was no ground for impeaching the transactions on the ground of the conflict between interest and duty in the executor which was created by the testator himself. Hordern v. Hordern, 80 L. V. DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP.

See also Vol. X. 633, 1734.

Deed of Dissolution—Construction—Loan to Partners Jointly—Share of Profit and Loss by Retiring Partner.]—J. and W. carried on business under a deed of partnership dated May 30, 1895. In October, 1907, a bank advanced the partners jointly the sum of 11,000*l*. On September 20, 1909, J. and W. purported to dissolve the partnership and W. retired from the business. By the deed of that date W. assigned his share and interest to J., and an account was to be taken of W.'s share as on December 31, 1909, and such share when ascertained was to be credited to W. in the books of the firm and was to remain a loan to the firm for ten years, at 5 per cent. per annum interest. If on the taking of this account there was found an insufficiency of assets to meet liabilities, W. was to pay to J. half of such deficit. On November 4, 1909, J. suspended payment, and was adjudicated bankrupt on January 7, 1910, and on July 25, 1910, W. was adjudicated bankrupt, the two bankruptcies subsequently being consolidated. The trustee of the separate estate of J. claimed a sum of 1,657*l*. lying on current account at the bank on November 4, 1909, in the name of the firm, which sum the bank claimed to retain and set off against the joint liability of W. and J. for 11,000*l*. advanced to the firm: —Held, that upon the true construction of the deed of September 20, 1909, there was a dissolution of partnership as from that date, and not as from December 31, 1909; so that the sum standing to the credit of the firm on November 4, 1909, belonged to the separate estate of J. Jane, In re; Trustee, ex parte, 110 L. T. 556—C.A.

Dissolution by Death—"Gains and profits"—Principles on which Accounts ought to be Taken.]—J. G., one of three partners in a colliery, charged his one-third share and the future gains and profits in the partnership, which was dissolved by his death on April 20, 1909, with the payment of 10,000*l*. and interest to trustees of a deed for the benefit of his wife and family, and also covenanted to pay to the trustees all the balance of residue remaining of his share in the gains and profits of the business, such excess of the interest on the 10,000*l*. to be divided as to two-thirds for his wife and one-third for himself:—Held, that as between them and J. G.'s estate the trustees under the covenant were not entitled to have paid to them out of his share of the partnership assets surplus income which, although appearing in the partners' accounts as excess of receipts over expenditure during a particular year, was, by the settled practice of the partners, treated otherwise than as distributable profits and devoted to colliery equipment and replacing assets that had been worn out. Held, further, that from the taking of the last annual account previous to dissolution there must, in the absence of evidence of the amount appropriated to depreciation year by year, be an enquiry as to the amount to be so appropriated since the last account, the proper amount being ascertained by valuers appointed by the parties or by the Court. Garwood v. Garwood, 105 L. T. 231—C.A.

Expired Contract of Partnership Continued as Partnership at Will—Application of Pre-emption Clause in Original Contract.]—A contract of copartnery in a wine and spirit business between three parties, entered into for five years, contained a clause providing that "in the event of the copartnery not being renewed at the expiry thereof the licence shall then be valued by a neutral party mutually appointed, and the first party as holder of the licence shall in his option be entitled to pay out the second and third parties the amount due to them respectively," or that otherwise the licence should be sold in open market, and the proceeds divided among the parties. After the expiry of the term created by the contract the partnership was carried on for several years as a partnership at will until dissolved by a notice from the first party :—Held, that the clause conferring the right of pre-emption was carried forward into the partnership at will, and that at its termination the first party was entitled to exercise the right. M'Gown v. Henderson, [1914] S. C. 839—Ct. of Sess.

Employment of Assets—Account—Interest.]—It is well settled that when on the dissolution of a firm one of the partners retains assets of the firm in his hands without any settlement of accounts and applies them in continuing the business for his own benefit, he may be ordered to account for those assets with interest thereon, and this apart from fraud or misconduct in the nature of fraud. Ahmed Musaji Saleji v. Hashim Ebrahim Saleji, L. R. 42 Ind. App. 91—P.C.

Receiver—Solicitors—Bills of Costs.]—In an action for dissolution of partnership between solicitors a receiver was appointed to get in outstanding costs due from clients, and the books of the firm were placed in his hands. The entries of attendances made by R., one of the partners, were not sufficiently detailed to enable the receiver to make out proper bills. R. refused to settle the bills unless remunerated by 5 per cent. on the amount thereof. The other partner thereupon took out a summons for an order that R. should be directed to settle the bills within one week :—Held, that the summons must be refused. Ray v. Flower Ellis, 56 S. J. 724—C.A.

VI. WINDING-UP OF LIMITED PARTNERSHIP.

Grounds on which Ordered.]—A general and limited partner entered into partnership. The limited partner contributed the capital; and it was agreed that the sum so contributed should be treated as a debt due from the partnership to the limited partner, and that interest should be paid thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. This interest had never been paid, and no part of the capital had been refunded to the limited partner. It was also agreed that the general account should be signed by both partners once every year, but the general partner had neglected to comply with this provision. The general partner had also, in breach of the partnership articles, habitually absented himself from the partnership business, and had also misapplied a sum of money advanced to him by the limited partner for a specific purpose in connection with the partnership business :—Held, that in these circumstances, and having regard to the provisions of the Limited Partnership Act, 1907, of section 268, sub-section 1, clause vii. of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, and of the Limited Partnership (Winding-up) Rules, 1909, the petitioner was entitled to a compulsory winding-up of the partnership. Hughes & Co., In re, 80 L. Subject-matter.]—A patent for the mere new use of a known contrivance without any additional ingenuity in overcoming fresh difficulties is bad and cannot be supported; but a patent for a new use of a known contrivance is good and can be supported if the new use involves practical difficulties which the patentee has been the first to see and overcome by some ingenuity of his own. An improved thing produced by a new and ingenious application of a known contrivance to an old thing is a manner of new manufacture within the meaning of the statute of James. Layland v. Boldy, 30 R. B. LETTERS PATENT.

1. Vesting Order.

Patent rights being choses in action, the Court has jurisdiction, under section 35 of the Trustee Act, 1893, to make an order vesting them in such persons as the Court may appoint. Heath's Patent, In re, 56 S. J. 538—Swinfen Eady, J.

2. Revocation.

Patent Worked "Exclusively" or "Mainly" Abroad—Cessation of Business.]—Where an application is made under section 27 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, for the revocation of a "patent on the ground that the patented article or process is manufactured or carried on exclusively or mainly outside the United Kingdom," the Court is bound to satisfy itself, before it can give relief under the section, that the patented article or process is manufactured or carried on exclusively or mainly outside the United Kingdom. In coming to that conclusion, however, the Court is not bound to say that at the precise minute, or on the precise day, or the precise day or two, or even in the precise week, when the application was lodged there was a manufacture of the article or a carrying on of the process; and the mere fact that the application is lodged at a moment when no process is going on will not disturb the jurisdiction of the Court. Green's Application, In re, 80 L. J. Ch. 484; [1911] 1 Ch. 754; 104 L. T. 629; 28 R. P. C. 423—Parker, J.

Where it appeared that for three months before the petition to revoke a patent granted in 1906 was lodged there had been no carrying on of the patented process outside the United Kingdom at all, a permanent stop having been put to the manufacture, which had previously taken place only in France, the application was refused. Ib.

—— Extent of Working within United Kingdom—Computation of—Inclusion of Working in Derogation of Patentee's Rights.]—In computing the extent to which a patented article or process is manufactured or carried on in the United Kingdom, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is manufactured or carried on "exclusively" or "mainly" outside the kingdom within section 27, sub-section 1 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, it is immaterial whether working which has taken place in this country is or is not in derogation of the patentee's rights; and working by infringers ought therefore to be included in the computation. Fiat Motors' Application, In re, 80 L. J. Ch. 48; [1911] 1 Ch. 66; 103 L. T. 453; 27 R. P. C. 762; 55 S. J. 64; 27 T. L. R. 74—Parker, J.

—— Revocability of Patent as Defence to Infringement Action.] — Observations on section 25, sub-section 2 of the Act, making the revocability of a patent a defence to an infringement action. Ib.

—— Satisfactory Reasons for not Working Patent in United Kingdom—Liability to Infringement Proceedings by Applicant for Revocation — Position and Conduct of Applicant.]—While the motive of an applicant for the revocation of a patent under section 27 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, is immaterial, his position and conduct, so far as they may have influenced the action of the owner of the patent, are material; and in considering whether a case for revocation has been made out the Comptroller-General or the Court must look primarily not to the interests of the individual, but to those of the public. Taylor's Patent, In re, 81 L. J. Ch. 438; [1912] 1 Ch. 635; 106 L. T. 600; 29 R. P. C. 296; 56 S. J. 415; 28 T. L. R. 293—Parker, J.

Applicants for the revocation of a patent under the section, on the ground that it had been worked exclusively or mainly outside the United Kingdom, were themselves the owners of a prior patent which would have been infringed by any working of the patent sought to be revoked. They had refused an offer of a licence under that patent, and its owners had not applied for a voluntary or compulsory licence under the prior patent. The prior patent would shortly expire, but the other patent had some years to run:—Held, that, notwithstanding the non-application for a licence by the owners of the patent sought to be revoked, the fact that it could not have been worked without the risk of infringement proceedings by the owners of the prior patent was a satisfactory reason for the patent not being worked in this country, and that it ought not therefore to be revoked. Ib.

Vagueness of Specification—Anticipation.]—The Court revoked a patent for an improvement in golf balls on the ground that the specification was so vague that it was impossible to say what invention was claimed, and that even if the claim was sufficient the patent had been anticipated. Gamage, Lim. v. Spalding, 31 T. L. R. 178—Warrington, J.

C. SPECIFICATION.

See also Vol. X. 724, 1749.

Claim too General—Colour Kinematograph—Ambiguity.]—A patent specification made the following claim: "In connexion with kinematograph apparatus, the employment of a succession of but two colour records, the records of one colour sensation alternating with those of the other colour sensation, so that the observer's persistence of vision causes him to see apparently super-imposition or blending of the colours received from series of two colour records." The essence of the invention was the employment of two colours, tri-red and tri-green, instead of the three colours, tri-red, tri-green, and tri-blue, by which a stationary colour picture can be obtained:—Held, that the patent was bad, first, because the claim was not confined to tri-colours and did not state that of them only red and green were claimed or that the picture would exclude blue; and secondly, owing to ambiguity. Natural Color Kinematograph Co.

Sufficient Description.]—The plaintiffs, as the registered legal owners of letters patent, granted to one N. for a "process for converting unsaturated fatty acids or their glycerides into saturated compounds," alleged that the defendants were infringing their letters patent, and they claimed an injunction and the usual ancillary relief. The defendants denied the validity of the letters patent on the ground that N.'s specification did not sufficiently describe the manner in which the process was to be carried out:—Held, that the specification was insufficient in this respect and that the plaintiffs' action failed. Crosfield v. Techno-Chemical Laboratories, 30 R. Leave to Amend—Infringement—Action to Restrain—Amended Specification to Describe Invention.]—Where leave to amend the specification of a patent has been made to the Comptroller before, and leave to amend granted after, the issue of a writ in an action for infringement, the proper specification to put in evidence and refer to at the trial is the specification as it stands after amendment. Andrew v. Crossley (61 L. D. INFRINGEMENT.

1. What is.

See also Vol. X. 756, 1754.

Substitution of Equivalent Part.]—No one who borrows the substance of a patented invention can escape the consequences of infringement by making immaterial variations. The question always is whether the infringing apparatus is substantially the same as the apparatus said to have been infringed. Where a patent is for a combination of parts or a process, and the combination or process, besides being itself new, produces new and useful results, every one who produces the same results by using the essential parts of the combination or process is an infringer, even though he has in fact altered the combination or process by omitting some unessential part or step, and substituting another part or step which is in fact equivalent to the part or step he has omitted. To ascertain the essential feature of an invention, the specification must be read and interpreted by the light of what was generally known at the date of the patent. Marconi v. British Radio-Telegraph and Telephone Co., 28 R. P. C. 181; 27 T. L. R. 274—Parker, J.

Wireless Telegraphy—Similar Apparatus—Introduction of Two Spark Gaps.]—The plaintiffs were the owners of a patent for improvements in wireless telegraphy apparatus, and the defendants sold an apparatus which for electrical purposes was identical with an apparatus previously held to be an infringement of the plaintiffs' patent, except for the introduction into the primary circuit of two additional spark gaps and a through charging coil, the presence of the latter being consequent on the introduction of the two spark gaps:—Held, that by the introduction of the two spark gaps the defendants had not produced an apparatus which did not come within the scope of the plaintiffs' patent, and that therefore the defendants' apparatus was an infringement of the plaintiffs' patent. Marconi v. Helsby Wireless Telegraph Co., 31 R. P. C. 399; 30 T. L. R. 688—Astbury, J.

2. Practice.

a. Account of Damages and Profits.

See also Vol. X. 805, 1763.

Measure of Damages—How Computed.]—In an action by patentees for damages in respect of the sale of articles infringing their patent it was proved that the defenders, the infringers, had sold such a number of the articles as would have yielded to the pursuers, had they effected the sales, a profit of approximately 5,000*l.* The Second Division of the Court of Session (recalling an award by the Lord Ordinary of 1,500*l.*) awarded the pursuers 3,000*l.*, which represented the profits on the proportion of the articles sold by the defenders which, in the opinion of the Court, the pursuers would themselves have succeeded in selling had there been no infringement. On appeal to the House of Lords the defenders asked the House to restore the Lord Ordinary's award, which they contended was well founded on the facts, and in any event was, like the verdict of a jury, only open to challenge if wholly unsupported by, or was contrary to, the evidence. The pursuers acquiesced in the figure arrived at by the Second Division. The House of Lords, holding that they were entitled to consider the question of damages on its merits, on a review of the whole evidence affirmed the judgment of the Second Division (Earl of Halsbury dissenting). Watson, Laidlow & Co. v. Pott, Cassells & Williamson, [1914] S. C. (H.L.) 18—H.L. (Sc.)

Per Lord Shaw: Legally the pursuers were entitled to damages in respect of all the articles sold by the defenders, irrespectively of whether they themselves could have sold them or not, and that in cases where they themselves could not have effected the sales, damages fell to be assessed by way of a royalty on the articles sold. Ib.

Whether Profits on Whole Machine or Infringing Parts only.]—The defendants sold 19,500 prepayment gas meters which contained two parts that constituted infringements of the two letters patent of the plaintiffs. The profit on the infringing parts represented about one forty-fourth of the whole profit on a meter. Under a judgment by consent an enquiry was directed as to what damages (if any) the plaintiffs had sustained by the defendants' infringements. The Master certified that the profit lost by the plaintiffs must be considered to be the profit on the sale of the whole of each meter. He was of opinion that 5,000 more meters would have been sold by the plaintiffs but for the defendants' sale of infringing meters; and he assessed the damages for loss of profit under this head at 13*s.* 4*d.* per meter (3,333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*), and for loss of profit on actual sales by the plaintiffs in consequence of a reduction in prices from the defendants' competition at 1,500*l.* The total was therefore 4,833*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The defendants applied to vary the Master's certificate by giving the plaintiffs only nominal damages; and the plaintiffs applied to increase the number of meters they would have sold to 10,000. It was decided by Eve, J., that the Master had rightly certified that the profit on the whole meter was the proper factor to be taken into calculation, and had rightly fixed the profit on the 5,000 meters at 13*s.* 4*d.* per meter; but that that figure ought on the evidence to be reduced to 3,500, and the damages to 2,333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; and that the finding that the plaintiffs' loss on actual sales was 1,500*l.* ought not to be disturbed. On appeal,—Held, that, it not having been shewn that the learned Judge had proceeded on any erroneous principle, his decision must be affirmed. Meters, Lim. v. Metropolitan Gas Meters, Lim., 104 L. b. Delivery up of Infringing Articles.

Judgment for the Plaintiff with Delivery up—Defendant's Right to Elect to Destroy.] —This was a motion to vary minutes of judgment delivered on June 17, 1911, whereby the defendants in the action were ordered, among other things, to make and file within fourteen days after service of the judgment upon them a full and sufficient affidavit (to be made by the secretary or other proper officer), stating what arc lamps or parts of arc lamps were in their possession or power made in infringement of the said letters patent, and within four days from the filing of such affidavit to deliver up to the plaintiffs the arc lamps or parts of arc lamps that should by such affidavit appear to be in their possession or power by adding to such minutes immediately after the words "deliver up to the plaintiffs" the words "or in the presence of the plaintiffs or their agents destroy or otherwise make unfit for use." The motion was refused. British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co. v. Electrical Co., 28 R. P. C. 530; 55 S. J. 689 —Swinfen Eady, J.

c. Discovery.

See also Vol. X. 812, 1764.

Defence of Manufacture Outside United Kingdom—Application for Discovery of Documents by Defendants—"Fishing" Enquiry.] —Defendants in an action for infringement of patents asked for discovery of documents against the plaintiffs. The defendants had pleaded, by way of defence, under section 25, sub-section 2 (b) of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (which incorporates section 27 of that Act), that the patents were manufactured mainly outside the United Kingdom, giving a list of firms in America, Germany, and Holland by whom the patent processes were carried on. Discovery was resisted on the ground that, in cases where a petition was brought to revoke a patent on the above grounds, a prima facie case must have been made out before the applicant could obtain particulars of the respondents' business, otherwise the application merely became a "fishing" enquiry in order to see trade books; and where the same plea was raised as a defence the same considerations applied. Neville, J., held that as the issues were defined by the particulars given by the defendants, discovery ought to be given:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the order was right as regards the plaintiffs' cause of action for infringement of the patents, but that as regards the defence pleaded under section 25, sub-section 2 (b) of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, discovery ought to be limited to documents shewing the imports from the firms or companies named in that defence, and documents shewing the amount of manufacture by the plaintiffs. British Thomson-Houston Co. v. Duram, Lim., 84 L. Judgment by Consent — Motion or Summons.] — In actions for the infringement of registered designs, or of patents, or of trade marks it is desirable that there should be some publicity given to the order of the Court. Accordingly, where defendants had consented to judgment in respect of an infringement of the plaintiffs' registered design:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the costs of moving for judgment in open Court, and not merely to such costs as would have been incurred had the application been made on summons in chambers. Smith & Jones, Lim. v. Service, Reeve & Co., 83 L. Threats Action — Infringement Action — Threats Action Discontinued.]—In February, 1911, the plaintiffs learned that the defendants were issuing warnings as to the use of certain patented goods of the plaintiffs' manufacture. On March 31 they took out the writ in this action to restrain the continuance of threats. On April 13 there was a notice of motion for an injunction in the threats action, and on April 21 the defendants issued a writ for infringement of their patent. On April 25 the motion in the threats action came before the Court, and it was arranged that the proceedings in the threats action should be stayed to abide the result of the infringement action, and that the costs of the threats action should be reserved, and the motion stood over with liberty to apply. The infringement action came on for trial on December 14, 1911, and judgment was given for the defendants in that action; this judgment was afterwards affirmed by the Court of Appeal. Upon the motion in the threats action being restored, it was admitted that the plaintiffs had no cause of action, the defendants having brought themselves within the proviso of section 36 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 :—Held, that although the threats action must be dismissed, the plaintiffs had taken the proper course with a view to the saving of expense, and therefore the Court should dismiss the action without costs. *Metropolitan Gas Meters v. Taxation—Action for Infringement of Three Patents—Action Abandoned in Respect of Two Patents at the Trial — Particulars of Objections.]—Where an action was commenced for the infringement of three patents, and at the hearing the plaintiffs abandoned the action in respect of two of the patents and fought out the action on one patent only,—Held, that the action had not proceeded to trial on the two patents as to which the case had been abandoned within the meaning of Order LIII.A, rule 22, and therefore that the costs of the defendants' particulars of objections to those patents were within the discretion of the Taxing Master. *Babcock & Wilcox v. —— Discontinuance with Leave of Court—Costs of Particulars of Objections.] — Order LIII.A. rule 22 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, which provides that the costs of particulars of objections, delivered by the defendant in an action for breach of patent, shall be in the discretion of the Taxing Master, will be applied to actions discontinued, whether with or without the leave of the Court. *Bibby & Baron v. E. PROLONGATION OF LETTERS PATENT.

1. Generally.

Registered Proprietor—Right to Sue for Infringements.] — Certain rights having been conferred by statute on a registered proprietor by sub-section 3 of section 71 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, the Court will from such fact draw the inference that there is in such registered proprietor a right to sue. *Duncan v. 2. Sale.

Rights of Patentee—Jobbers and Dealers—Conditions Imposed by Patentee.]—A prohibition in an agreement between patentees and a dealer against "Exchanging or tendering Edison phonographs or parts, records or blanks, in whole or part payment for privileges of any character, or for advertising, or for goods of some other maker or nature," is not violated by the exchange between one dealer and another of one class of goods for another, provided that the condition of the agreement is observed as to trade prices, under-cutting, and rival goods; but a dealer whose name has been removed from the list is still a restricted trader and bound by the conditions attached to his agreement as to the sale or disposal of the goods made with the patentees. National Phonograph Co. of Australia v. Menck, 80 L. J. P.C. 105; [1911] A.C. 336; 104 L. T. 5; 28 R. P. C. 229; 27 T. L. R. 239—P.C.

3. Licences and Royalties.

Petition for Grant of Compulsory Licence—Notice and Grounds of Opposition to Petition — Particulars of Grounds — "Written proceeding requiring particulars" — Obligation on Petition to make out Case.] — The grounds of opposition to a petition for a compulsory licence under section 24 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, which, with the notice of opposition, may be delivered to the Board of Trade under rule 70 of the Patents Rules, 1908, are not a "written proceeding requiring particulars" within rule 7 of Order XIX. of the Rules of the Supreme Court; and particulars of them cannot therefore be ordered. A petitioner under section 24 has to make out his own case, subject to the right of the Court to require the respondent to formulate his case if he sets up an affirmative case of his own. Robin Electric Lamp Co., In re (No. 1), 84 L. J. Ch. 49; [1914] 2 Ch. 461; 111 L. T. 1062; 31 R. P. C. 341—Warrington, J.

Compulsory Licence — Case Necessary for Petitioner for, to Establish—Form of Order.] —The words "the reasonable requirements of the public shall not be deemed to have been satisfied " in sub-section 5 of section 24 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, should be read " shall be deemed not to have been satisfied." Robin Electric Lamp Co., In re (No. 2), 84 L. J. Ch. 500; [1915] 1 Ch. 780; 113 L. T. 132; 32 R. P. C. 202; 31 T. L. R. 309—Warrington, J.

The mischief aimed at by the section is the failure of the patentee to satisfy the reasonable requirements of the public as distinguished from those of particular individuals; and in order to establish a case within the section a petitioner for a compulsory licence must prove default, not towards himself only, but towards the public generally, or that part of it interested in the matter in question. The expression " trade or industry " in the section is also used in a wide sense, and it is necessary for a petitioner to prove that a trade or industry as a whole, not a particular trade, is unfairly prejudiced; while the " establishment of a new trade or industry " is a different thing altogether from the entry of a particular person into an existing trade or industry, and the " demand " referred to at the end of sub-section 5 (a) of the section is the demand of the public at large, not that of a particular person. An order made under the section should not take the form of a general direction to grant licences, but that of a direction to grant a licence to the petitioner. Any other party desiring a licence must present a separate petition. Sub-section 5 of the section contemplates, as legitimate alternative modes of working a patent, the maintaining of an adequate supply by the patentee himself or the licensing others to do so; and a petitioner for a compulsory licence must prove that the patentee has made default in both these modes, not in one of them only. Ib.

Licensee—Alleged Infringement—Threats of Legal Proceedings—Whether Person Aggrieved has Remedy by Statute.] —A person who claims to be the licensee of a patent, but who does not claim to be the patentee is not liable to an action under section 36 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, for making groundless threats of legal proceedings in respect of an alleged infringement of the patent. Diamond Coal Cutting Co. v. Mining Appliances Co., 60 S. J. 42; 32 T. L. R. 47—C.A.

Contracts as to Licence to Use Process—Condition Requiring Licensee to Purchase Unprotected Articles from Patentee's Agent — Defence to Action—Defendant not a Licensee.] —The patentee of a process for increasing the keeping quality of compounds containing unstable oxygen, such as hydrogen peroxide and certain solutions, consisting in adding thereto alkali pyrophosphates, before 1913 granted licences for the use of the process for the term of the patent with a condition that the licensees should, during the continuance of the licence, purchase all the pyrophosphates used by them in their hydrogen peroxide baths for the bleaching of straw-plait hats, and other fibres, from the patentee's agent. In an action for infringement of the patent brought by the patentee against a person who was not a licensee the defendant pleaded by his defence as a point of law that the condition as to the purchase of pyrophosphates had been inserted in contracts made since January 1, 1908, and still in force, and he relied on section 38, sub-section 4 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907:—Held, that the patent was one for a process; that the condition in question was a condition the effect of which was to require the licensees to acquire from the licensor articles not protected by the patent, and was by virtue of section 38, sub-section 1 (b) null and void; that " protected by the patent " in that clause meant " claimed by the patent," that pyrophosphates being ordinary articles of commerce were not so protected; and that the insertion of the condition in the licences was available as a defence to the action under sub-section 4 of section 38 of the Act. Sarason v. Frénay, 83 L. J. Ch. 909; [1914] 2 Ch. 474; 111 L. T. 919; 31 R. P. C. 330—C.A.

Royalties—Licence—Transfer.] —A clause in a licence agreement for the use of certain patents provided that " the said licensee may . . . transfer the said licence to any limited liability company he may form to carry on his business, or the business connected with and arising out of said patents and this licence ":—Held, that the licensee could not under this clause rid himself of liability for royalties due under the licence agreement by transferring the licence to a company formed, not for the purpose of carrying on his business or for working the patents, but merely with the view of ridding himself of such liability. Cummings v. Stewart, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 236—M.R.

—— Lapse of Patent by Non-payment of Fees—Implied Covenant by Patentee to Pay Fees — Dependency of Covenant to Pay Royalties.]—A patentee of improvements for making re-inforced concrete called the Cummings system, patented in the United Kingdom, France, and Austria respectively, granted the exclusive right to work the patents during the full term for which they were granted; the licensee expressly admitted the validity of the patents and agreed to pay a royalty of 2½ per cent. on the total amount included in every contract for work executed on the Cummings system, and a minimum amount of 5,000 dollars each year during the continuance of the agreement. The patentee agreed to protect the patents against infringement and to defend any proceedings brought against the licensee for the infringement of other patents. There was no provision as to payment of the renewal fees. The patentee did not pay the renewal fees on the French and Austrian patents, and they lapsed owing to the non-payment. The licensee worked the invention in England only, and without success. The licensee paid the minimum royalty at first, but declined to pay at the end of the third year, and an action was brought by the patentee to recover the amount then due. The defendant resisted the claim on the ground, first, of want of novelty of the invention; secondly, that under the agreement the plaintiff was bound to pay the renewal fees, that owing to the failure to pay the fees in France and Austria the patents in those countries lapsed, and that the lapse of the patents relieved the defendant from liability to pay the royalty. The defendant counterclaimed for a declaration that the agreement was not binding and for a return of 52*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.* paid under a mistake. The plaintiff contended, first, that the agreement imposed no obligation on him to pay the fees; secondly, that even if it did, the breach of the agreement by him in that respect was no defence to the action, but only gave a right to damages to be recovered on a counterclaim; and thirdly, that as the United Kingdom patent remained valid, there was at most a partial failure of consideration which did not release the defendant from his agreement to pay the royalty :—Held, first, that the defence of want of novelty was not open to the defendant; secondly, that there was an implied covenant by the plaintiff to pay the renewal fees; thirdly, that the covenant to pay the royalties was not an independent covenant, but dependent on the performance by the plaintiff of the implied covenant to pay the fees; fourthly, that, owing to the lapse of the foreign patents, a substantial part of the subject-matter of the agreement was destroyed, and the agreement in a substantial part became impossible of performance and ceased to be binding; and fifthly, that as the royalty was a fixed sum, the consideration was indivisible, and the failure of part was equivalent to the failure of the whole. Mills v. Carson (10 R. G. APPEAL FROM COMPTROLLER.

Limit of Time — Long Vacation.] — The period of the Long Vacation is to be reckoned in computing the one calendar month within which, or such further time as the Court may under special circumstances allow, a petition of appeal from a decision of the Comptroller under sections 20, 26, or 27 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, must by Order LIII.A, rule 4, be presented. Beldam's Patent, In re, 80 L. Extension of Time—Special Circumstances —"Pleading."]—The fact that the delay in presenting an appeal was caused by the Long Vacation is not a "special circumstance" justifying an extension of time. Ib.

H. PATENT AGENT.

Description as Patent Agent by Unregistered Person.]—The respondent, who was not a registered patent agent, issued a circular in which he stated that he had wide experience in patent matters, and that he did, and was prepared to do, specified work in connection therewith. This work was such as is usually done by patent agents—for example, the preparation of specifications and of applications for patents. The respondent did not in terms state that he was a patent agent :—Held, that he had not described himself as a patent agent within the meaning of section 84 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907. Graham v. Tanner, 82 L. Unregistered Person Describing Himself as Patent Agent—"British and foreign" Patent Agent.]—A person who without being registered used the title of "British and foreign" patent agent,—Held, to have described himself as a patent agent within the meaning of section 84 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, and accordingly was guilty of a contravention of that section. Lockwood v. Chartered Institute of Patent Agents, [1913] S. "Patent agency."] — The appellant and another person carried on the business of a patent agent at certain premises, but neither of them was registered as a patent agent under the Patent and Designs Act, 1907. The words "Patent Agency" were affixed in prominent enamel letters to the window of the premises, and the words "Patents, Designs, Trade Marks" were on a plate fixed to the wall next to the window :—Held, that the appellant had not described himself as a patent agent within the meaning of section 84 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907. Hans v. Graham, 83 L. Appropriation of Payments—Rule in Clayton's Case — Mortgage to Secure Current Account — Subsequent Mortgage with Notice to the Bank.]—After notice to a bank holding a security from its customer of a subsequent mortgage by the customer, the debit of the customer is struck at the date of notice; and where a current account is merely continued and no specific appropriation of fresh payments is made, such payments are credited to the earliest items on the debit side of the account, and continue to be so credited until the first mortgage is extinguished. Deeley v. Lloyds Bank (No. 1), 81 L. J. Ch. 697; [1912] A.C. 756; 107 L. T. 465; 56 S. J. 734; 29 T. L. R. 1—H.L. (E.)

A customer of the respondent bank mortgaged his property to the bank to secure an overdraft limited to 2,500*l*. He then mortgaged the same property to the appellant for 3,500*l*. subject to the bank's mortgage. The bank on receiving notice of this further mortgage did not open a new account, but continued the old current account. The customer thereafter paid in moneys which at a particular date, if they had been appropriated in accordance with the rule in Clayton's Case (1 Mer. 572), would have extinguished the bank's mortgage. The customer's property was sold by the bank for a sum sufficient to satisfy the bank's debt, but not that of the appellant:—Held, that the evidence did not exclude the operation of the rule in Clayton's Case (supra), which must be applied. Ib.

—— Rule in Clayton's Case — Intention.] — By an agreement between the plaintiff and L. the plaintiff made advances on goods consigned to him by L., such advances being in account current, and each set of goods being subject to a general lien for all advances. The plaintiff also discounted bills for L., entering all his advances, discounts, and securities in one current account. In discounting bills for L. the plaintiff immediately credited him with their full amount without waiting till they were paid:—Held, that the plaintiff did not thereby appropriate the entries of the face value of discounted bills not yet due as payment of actual advances on other bills still unpaid. Galula v. Pintus, 104 L. —— No Alteration without Consent.] — The property in suit was put up for sale by the collector in respect of the unpaid balance of a kist of revenue payable in January, 1902. It appeared that the appellant had paid and the Government accepted the full amount thereof, both parties appropriating the payment to that kist; but that subsequently the Treasury officials had appropriated the same in the first instance to the kist payable in September, 1901, with the result that money was still due for the January kist:—Held, that the appropriation could not be varied without the consent of the appellant, that there was nothing due in respect of the January kist, and that the sale was without jurisdiction. Mahomed Jan v. Ganga Bishun Singh, L. R. 38 Ind App. 80—P.C.

—— Novation—New Limited Company.]—A and B formed themselves into a partnership called the Simpitrol Lighting Co., and entered into a written agreement with the plaintiffs upon which goods were supplied to the company. A few months after its inception the Simpitrol Lighting Co. was duly registered as a limited company, and the plaintiffs continued to supply goods under the said written agreement to the new limited company, and kept the account thereof in their ledgers as one continuous account. The company while unregistered made no payments to the plaintiffs, but made considerable payments while registered as a limited company. Finding difficulty in getting payment of their accounts, the plaintiffs divided and re-arranged the account in their ledger, appropriating the payments made as against the goods supplied to the new company, and sued A and B on the written agreement for the goods supplied to the company while it was unregistered:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed. Pitner Lighting Co. v. Geddis, [1912] 2 Ir. Liquidated Damages or Penalty—Principle.]—Where in a contract it is provided that the party committing a breach thereof shall pay a fixed sum "as liquidated damages and not as a penalty," the question is whether the construction contended for renders the agreement unconscionable and extravagant and one which no Court ought to enforce; and where in the circumstances the amount is reasonable, and the proof of damage difficult and costly, the sum may be recovered as liquidated damages. Webster v. Bosanquet, 81 L. J. P.C. 205; [1912] A.C. 394; 106 L. T. 357; 28 T. L. R. 271—P.C.

The question whether a sum stipulated for in a contract is a penalty or liquidated damages is a question of construction for the Court, to be decided upon the terms and circumstances of the particular contract at the time of the making, not of the breach. A presumption is raised in favour of a penalty where a lump sum is to be paid as compensation in respect of many different events, some of which occasion serious and some trifling damage, but that presumption may be rebutted by the fact that the damage so caused, though varying in importance, may be of such a nature that it cannot be accurately ascertained. In a case in which retail dealers had agreed not to sell goods of a wholesale manufacturer at prices less than the prices set out in the current price list of the manufacturers, and not to sell to certain persons whom the manufacturers had decided not to supply, and to pay 5*l.* for each and every article sold in breach of the agreement, "as and by way of liquidated damages and not as a penalty,"—Held, that the stipulation was to be construed as one for liquidated damages. Decision of the Court of Appeal reversed. Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. New Garage and Motor Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 1574; [1915] A.C. 79; 111 L. T. 862; 30 T. L. R. 625—H.L. (E.)

—— Agreed Damages for Various Breaches.]—The plaintiffs agreed with the defendant to sell to him their motor cars for sale by him in a certain district, the defendants undertaking not to sell any car or parts thereof below a certain price, and agreeing to pay to the plaintiffs 250*l.* for every breach of this undertaking, "such sum being the agreed damages which the manufacturer will sustain." The sum of 250*l.* was also made payable for various other breaches differing in kind. The defendant sold five cars below the price fixed:—Held (Bankes, L.J., dissenting), that the 250*l.* was a penalty and not liquidated damages. Ford Motor Co. v. Armstrong, 59 S. J. 362; 31 T. —— Contract for Lease — Breach of Conditions by Lessor—Continuous Breach.]—In an agreement for a lease there were provisions that the lessors should complete by a fixed date certain works, alterations, and repairs, and that if these were not completed the lessors should pay to the lessee Rs. 150 a day from the date of breach to the beginning of the action as liquidated damages, and the same daily amount from the latter date to the completion of the works:—Held, that the failure to complete the work was a continuous breach, and that the daily Rs. 150, both before and after action brought, constituted liquidated damages and not a penalty, and were recoverable as such. De Soysa (Lady) v. De Pless Pol, 81 L. J. P.C. 126; [1912] A.C. 194; 105 L. T. 642—P.C.

—— Lease of Hotel—Mutual Obligations.]—An agreement between two persons for the lease of an hotel contained mutual obligations of different kinds and of varying degrees of importance. Inter alia the tenant was bound to apply for a transfer of the licence, to manage the hotel for the landlord until the licence was transferred, and to take over the stock at a valuation. The agreement also contained the following clause: "Both parties hereto bind and oblige themselves to implement their part of this agreement under the penalty of 50*l.*, to be paid by the party failing to the party performing or willing to perform over and above performance." The tenant having refused to go on with the lease or to carry out the agreement at all, the landlord claimed damages for breach of contract to the amount of over 300*l.*:—Held, first, that the sum stipulated in the agreement was not liquidated damages, but a penalty; and secondly, that the landlord's claim for damages was not limited to the amount mentioned in the penalty clause. Opinion of Lord Fitzgerald, in Elphinstone (Lord) v. Monkland Iron and Coal Co. (11 App. Cas. 332) commented on and doubted. Dingwall v. Burnett, [1912] S. C. 1097—Ct. of Sess.

—— Payment of Purchase Price by Instalments—Forfeiture on Non-payment Punctually of any Instalment—Penalty—Relief.]—The respondents agreed to sell and the appellant agreed to buy certain land for $75,000, of which $2,000 were to be paid at once, $5,000 on or before June 14, 1910, $5,000 on or before December 14, 1910, $60,000 in six equal semi-annual instalments, and the balance of $3,000 on June 14, 1914, together with interest at 7 per cent. on so much of the purchase moneys as might from time to time remain unpaid. The agreement also contained the following clause: "And it is expressly understood that time is to be considered the essence of this agreement, and unless the payments are punctually made at the times and in the manner above mentioned these presents shall be null and void and of no effect, and the said party of the first part [the vendors] shall be at liberty to re-sell the land, and all payments made hereunder shall be absolutely forfeited to the party of the first part." The respondents sought to enforce this stipulation and to re-sell the land on the non-payment at the due date of one of the instalments:—Held, that the stipulation was in the nature of a penalty from which the appellant was entitled to be relieved on payment of the unpaid instalment. Dagenham Thames Dock Co., In re; Hulse's Claim (43 L. Civil Service—Amount of Pension—Dispute—Decision of Commissioners of the Treasury—Jurisdiction of the Court.]—Where a Civil servant has been granted a superannuation allowance, the decision of the Commissioners of the Treasury as to the amount thereof is final and cannot be reviewed by a Court of law. Cooper v. Reg. (49 L. Madras Civil Service Annuity — Retired Covenanted Indian Civil Servant—Sequestration—Assignability of Annuity.]—The East India Annuity Funds Act, 1874, did not put an end to the Bengal, Madras, and Bombay Civil Annuity Funds, which by section 1 thereof were authorised to be transferred to the Secretary of State for India in Council, and did not incorporate the provisions of the (Indian) Pensions Act, 1871, so as to make annuities or pensions payable out of such funds "pensions granted or continued by Government . . . on account of past services" within the meaning of section 11 of this latter Act, which under that section are not liable to attachment, seizure, or sequestration, and the assignment of which is by section 12 of the same Act rendered null and void. Consequently an annuity or pension to which a Madras Covenanted Indian Civil Servant was admitted on retirement under section 2 of the Act of 1874 is not subject to the restrictions contained in sections 11 and 12 of the (Indian) Pensions Act, 1871, and is assignable and liable to be reached by a writ of sequestration to enforce a judgment in the High Court of Justice in England. Knill v. Dumergue, 80 L. Semble, the (Indian) Pensions Act, 1871, was intended to be confined to British India, and has no operation in England. Ib.

Old Age Pension—Local Pension Committee — Central Pension Authority — "Final and conclusive" — Jurisdiction.] — The appellant was awarded a pension by the local pension committee. No appeal was made to the central pension authority, new facts were ascertained, and the pension officer reported to the local committee that the woman was not yet seventy; but the committee declined to alter their award. The pension officer then reported to the central pension authority, which withdrew the pension. The appellant presented a Petition of Right claiming the pension:—Held, that, the appellant not having fulfilled the statutory conditions, one of which was the attainment of seventy, the order of the local pension committee was invalid, and that it was competent for the pension officer to refer the question to the central pension authority notwithstanding the words of section 7, sub-section 2, that the decision of the local pension committee was to be "final and conclusive." Murphy v. Regem, 80 L. —— Appeal from Local Pension Committee—Notice of Appeal.]—On an appeal to the Local Government Board by a pension officer from a decision of a local pension committee allowing a pension, it is sufficient that the claimant should have notice that an appeal has been brought; it is not necessary that notice should be given to him of the time and place of hearing. The Local Government Board have a discretion as to whether or not they shall hear in person the claimant and his witnesses. Per Madden, J.: The claimant should be given an opportunity of presenting his case to the Local Government Board in some way suitable to the character of the enquiry, and it would probably be in writing. Rex v. Local Government Board, [1911] 2 Ir. —— Local Pension Committee—Committee not Validly Elected — Quo Warranto.] — The term of office of a local pension committee appointed under the Old Age Pension Act, 1908, having expired, a resolution was passed at a meeting of the county council purporting to appoint a new committee which included M. as one of the members. The summons convening the meeting of the county council had not, as required by article 36 (10) vi. of the Schedule to the Local Government (Application of Enactments) Order, 1898, specified the appointment of such committee as business to be transacted at the meeting. An application having been made for an information in the nature of a quo warranto against M.,—Held, that, the committee not having been validly appointed, there was no existing office, and therefore quo warranto did not lie. Rex v. McDonald, [1913] 2 Ir. I. THE RULE AGAINST, ITS SCOPE AND APPLICATION.

See also Vol. X. 957, 1786.

Will—Construction.]—It is not permissible to construe a gift otherwise than according to its natural meaning, because if construed according to its natural meaning it would offend against the rule against perpetuities, though possibly, if the gift might equally well be construed in two ways, one of which only would offend against the rule, the Court might, because of the rule, be led to adopt the other construction. Hume, In re; Public

Trustee v. Mabey, 81 L. J. Ch. 382; [1912] 1 Ch. 693; 106 L. T. 335; 56 S. J. 414—Parker, J.

—— Discretionary Trust—Residue.]—A testator left his residuary estate both real and personal to his executors and trustees, to be used and employed by them in their discretion, so far as it might go, in the maintenance and keeping up of his dwelling house, with full power to sell the real estate and devote the proceeds to keeping up and maintaining his said residence; and if it should be necessary for any reason that the said residence should be sold, he directed that upon such sale being completed the residuary estate then remaining should be divided in equal proportions among the pecuniary legatees under his will :—Held, that as there was no definite limit assigned to the duration of the discretionary trust affecting the residue it was void as tending to a perpetuity. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 83 L. J. P.C. 63; [1914] A.C. 215; 109 L. T. 833—P.C.

Gifts of Income—Marriage.]—The following gift of income held void for remoteness : First, to the daughters in equal shares should one of them marry. Secondly, to the surviving daughter in case one dies in the lifetime of the other without leaving issue. Thirdly, the gift of the 50*l*. per annum to Olive should Evelyn die without children and Olive be unmarried at the time. Crichton's Settlement, In re; Sweetman v. Batty, 106 L. T. 588; 56 S. Devise of Real Estate—Trust to Pay off Mortgage out of Rents—Trust for Sale and Division when Estate is Clear — Mortgage Debts Payable by Instalments.]—A testator devised real estate upon trust out of the rents to pay off the mortgages thereon and then upon trust to sell and divide the proceeds among his children then living and the issue then living of any of his children then dead. The mortgage debts were repayable by instalments which if punctually paid would discharge the mortgages within the life in being at the testator's death and twenty-one years afterwards :—Held, that, as the trust for sale and division did not necessarily arise within the prescribed period, the devise was void for remoteness. Bewick, In re; Ryle v. Ryle, 80 L. J. Ch. 47; [1911] 1 Ch. 116; 103 L. T. 634; 55 S. J. 109—Eve, J.

Voluntary Association.] — Where the object of an incorporated society is non-charitable, the fact that the society is a voluntary association will not enable it to take a gift under a will if the gift is coupled with words which impose a continuing trust as to its user. Clifford, In re; Mallam v. McFie, 81 L. Trust for Sale at Expiration of Twenty-one Years from Date of Deed—Validity—Computation of Period—Execution of Trust by Original Trustees.]—A trust arising at the expiration of a term of twenty-one years from the date of a deed is not void for perpetuity. By a settlement dated May 13, 1892, real estate was conveyed to two trustees on trust that during a term of twenty-one years from the date of the settlement they or the survivor of them or other the trustees or trustee for the time being (therein after referred to as "the said trustees or trustee") should make certain payments, and that "at the expiration of the said term of twenty-one years" "the said trustees or trustee" should sell the property : —Held, that the term of twenty-one years determined, and the trust for sale arose, at the same identical moment; that on the construction of the deed the day of the date was included in the term; and that the trust for sale was therefore valid and effectual. Semble, that if the trust had otherwise been invalid the fact that the two original trustees were executing it would not have validated it. English v. Cliff, 83 L. J. Ch. 850; [1914] 2 Ch. 376; 111 L. T. 751; 58 S. J. 687; 30 T. L. R. 599—Warrington, J.

II. LIMITATIONS.

See also Vol. X. 986, 1796.

Void Limitation to Children who Attain Twenty-five — Subsequent Limitation of Life Interests—Persons in Being.]—The rule that a limitation ulterior to or expectant on a limitation which may infringe the rule against perpetuities is itself void applies although the subsequent limitation consists of life interests only, and although it is to persons in being at the date when the settlement came into operation. Thatcher's Trusts, In re (26 Beav. 365), followed. Norton, In re; Norton v. Norton (80 L. Vesting—Remoteness—Discretionary Power in Trustees as to Maintenance.]—The creation in trustees of a mere discretionary power to apply the income of an expectant share for the maintenance or benefit of a beneficiary with a direction to accumulate the income not so applied for the benefit of the persons who ultimately attain a vested interest in the share in question, is not sufficient to vest a gift originally given upon attaining a specified age. Hume, In re; Public Trustee v. Mabey, 81 L. J. Ch. 382; [1912] 1 Ch. 693; 106 L. T. 335; 56 S. J. 414—Parker, J.

A testatrix bequeathed the sum of 2,000*l*. to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to her daughter for life, and after the daughter's death upon trust as to capital and income for all or any of her children or child who should be living at her death and being a son or sons should attain the age of twenty-three years or survive the survivor of the testatrix and her said daughter for the period of twenty-one years, or being a daughter or daughters should attain the age of twenty-three years or marry, and if more than one in equal shares as tenants in common. Two-thirds of the residuary estate were to be held upon the like trusts as were declared in respect of the 2,000*l*. The will contained an advancement clause in the usual form, and also a clause giving the trustees a discretionary power to apply the income of the expectant contingent presumptive or vested legacy or share of any grandchild of the testatrix under the trusts of the will for or towards his or her maintenance, education, or benefit. By a codicil the testatrix revoked the said bequest of 2,000*l.*, and in lieu thereof bequeathed to her said daughter an annuity of 100*l.*; but she directed that when such annuity should cease her trustees should stand possessed of the fund appropriated for answering by its annual income such annuity upon the same trusts for her said daughter's children or child as were in the will contained with reference to the 2,000*l.* therein bequeathed. The daughter survived the testatrix and had children:—Held, that the interests given to the testatrix's grandchildren in the fund appropriated to answer the 100*l.* annuity mentioned in the codicil and in the two-thirds of the residuary estate were contingent and not vested interests, and that the trusts declared in respect of the same in favour of the testatrix's grandchildren were void for perpetuity. Fox v. Fox (L. R. 19 Eq. 286) and Turney, In re; Turney v. Turney (69 L. J. Ch. 1; [1899] 2 Ch. 739), distinguished. Ib.

Will—Estate Tail—Minority of Tenant in Tail—Trustees' Power to Enter—Implication of Estate in Trustees—Powers Capable of being Barred by Tenant in Tail—Trust for Payment of Incumbrances of other Estates.]—The testator, the seventh earl, was possessed of four estates, known as the S., L., C., and Lancashire estates respectively. By his will he settled the first two of these estates to uses in strict settlement in tail male, with remainders in tail general, and he settled the Lancashire estate by limiting it to trustees for a term of 1,000 years upon trust to discharge out of the rents incumbrances on the four estates in the order set forth above, and subject thereto to the uses declared of the S. and L. estates. He settled the C. estate to uses in strict settlement in tail male to go with the title, and the present earl, an infant, was now tenant in tail by purchase of this estate. The will directed that "if any person who, if this present proviso had not been herein inserted, would for the time being be entitled to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits of such settled estate as tenant for life or tenant in tail, shall be under the age of twenty-one years, then in such case and so often as the same shall happen" the trustees "shall enter into possession or the receipt of the rents and profits of the same settled estate, and shall during the minority of such person continue such possession or receipt of the rents and profits." The will then gave the trustees a number of wide powers to be exercised in this eventuality, including power to purchase live and dead stock, to cut timber, to work mines and minerals, to hold manorial courts, and accept surrenders of leases; and directed that they should maintain the infant and apply the surplus rents in the same way as those of the Lancashire estate. Warrington, J., held that it was necessary for the proper exercise of the trustees' powers to imply a legal estate in the trustees, which estate was not barrable by a tenant in tail, and, not being limited to the minority of a tenant in tail by purchase, the whole of the above clause was void as infringing the rule against perpetuity:—Held, on appeal, that there was no sufficient ground for implying a legal estate in the trustees, and that as the powers conferred on the trustees were barrable by a tenant in tail, and as the trust of the rents was for payment of debts, the clause in question was not open to objection on the ground of perpetuity. Stamford and Warrington (Earl), In re; Payne v. Grey, 81 L. J. Ch. 302; [1912] 1 Ch. 343; 105 L. T. 913; 56 S. J. 204; 28 T. L. R. 159—C.A.

Decision of Warrington, J. (80 L. J. Ch. 281; [1911] 1 Ch. 255), reversed. Ib.

Clause Altering Estate Tail to Estate for Life—Application of.]—The will contained a clause providing that if any person to whom an estate tail was given should be born in the testator's lifetime the testator revoked the devise made to him, and in lieu thereof devised the hereditaments comprised in the devise to the person so made tenant in tail for his life, with remainder to his son successively in tail male, with remainder to his sons successively in tail general, with remainder to his daughters successively in tail general:—Held, that, as a matter of construction, this clause applied as well to the C. estate as to the S. and L. estates, notwithstanding that the result might possibly be to sever the C. estate from the title to the earldom. Ib.

Limitations after Estate Tail—Remoteness—Rule against.]—Where a will creates limitations to take effect upon the failure or determination of an estate tail, then, if the persons to take, although not ascertainable immediately on such failure or determination, are yet necessarily ascertainable within the period of a life in being at the death of the testator and twenty-one years after, such limitations are valid and are not void for remoteness. Haygarth, In re; Wickham v. Holmes, 81 L. J. Ch. 255; [1912] 1 Ch. 510; 106 L. T. 93; 56 S. J. 239—Joyce, J.

Gift to Issue—Rule as to Remoteness.]—By his will the testator gave certain hereditaments upon trust to pay the rents and profits to his niece Emily Johnson during her life, and after her decease for all the children of his niece who should attain the age of twenty-one years, and "in case either of them shall die after attaining the age of twenty-one years the shares of those so dying shall be equally divided between their children or issue who shall attain the age of twenty-one, and in case there shall be no child or other issue of the said Emily Johnson who shall attain the age of twenty-one years, then I direct that the same hereditaments shall be sold and equally divided between all the brothers and sisters of the said Emily Johnson who shall be then living share and share alike as tenants in common and the issue of such as shall have died leaving issue upon attaining the age of twenty-one years so that children shall in all cases take their deceased parent's share equally divided between them" :—Held, that the limitations, by way of remainder, except to children of Emily Johnson who should attain twenty-one years, were void for remoteness. Johnson, In re; Pitt v. Johnson. 58 S. J. 219—Joyce, J. Affirmed. 111 L. T. 130; 30 T. L. R. 505—C.A.

Gift Void for Remoteness—Subsequent Gift over — Alternative and Independent Gift — Meaning of "without leaving lawful issue as before mentioned."]—By his will a testator, after making provision for his nephew R. D. during his life, gave all the residue of his property upon trust for the first son of R. D. who should live to attain twenty-one years of age and be christened John or take the name of John Davey (the whole of the principal fund or capital to be paid over to him on his attaining that age), and in default of there being any such son upon trust for the first son born of the body of either of the daughters of R. D. who should attain twenty-one years of age and should be christened or assume the name of John Davey as aforesaid, and in default of there being any such son upon trust as to one half of the residuary estate for the first daughter of R. D. who should have attained the age of twenty-one years, her executors, and administrators absolutely, for her sole and separate use, "And as to the other half thereof . . . And in case of the death of the said R. D. without having lawful issue as before mentioned then as to the whole thereof upon trust" for the charities therein mentioned. R. D. died in January, 1914, without having had any issue :—Held, that, although the gift to the first son of a daughter of R. D. who attained twenty-one years of age and the subsequent dependent gift of one half to the first daughter of R. D. to attain twenty-one years of age and one half to charity were void for remoteness, yet the ultimate charitable gift over "in case of the death of the said R. D. without having lawful issue as before mentioned" was a valid, independent, and alternative gift. The words "without leaving" must either be given their natural meaning or be construed as "without having had," and the expression "issue as before mentioned" meant a son, daughter, or son of a daughter of R. D., and did not import the attainment of twenty-one years of age or the assumption of the name of John Davey. Davey, In re; Prisk v. Mitchell, 84 L. J. Ch. 505; [1915] 1 Ch. 837; 113 L. Settlement—Real Property—Legal Limitation — Possibility upon a Possibility — Life Interest to Unborn Person—Void Remainder.]—Land was settled by deed, in the events which happened, to the use of the widow of J. F., a bachelor, for life, and then to the issue of J. F. J. F. married, and died leaving a widow and one child :—Held, that the limitation to the issue after the life of the widow was void as offending against the rule against double possibilities, which forbids a limitation to an unborn person for life with remainder to his unborn child. Frost, In re; Frost v. Frost (59 L. J. Ch. 118; 43 Ch. D. 246), and Whitting v. Whitting (53 Sol. J. 100) followed. Park's Settlement, In re; Foran v. Bruce, 83 L. J. Ch. 528; [1914] 1 Ch. 595; 110 L. T. 813; 58 S. Gift to Future Husband of a Spinster for Life with Remainder to their Children—Gift to Children of one Niece — Gift over to the Children of another Niece—Double Possibilities — Void Remainder.] — Where a testator gave a life interest in one-third of his residue to his niece I., a spinster, and after her death the same to be paid to any husband she might marry for his life, and after the death of both to hold the one-third in trust for the children of I. attaining twenty-one, and if the said I. should die without leaving a child or there should be no child of the said I. who should attain a vested interest, then in trust for the children of another niece S., and I. married but died without issue,—Held, that in deciding whether the gift over for the children of S. was good or void for remoteness, attention must be concentrated exclusively on the particular præpositus of the husband or wife of that præpositus being born at a time, which might possibly offend against the rule, and that accordingly on that method of construing the gift it was good and not void as infringing the rule against double possibilities. Held, also, that even if the original gift had been held to be void, the gift to the children of the niece S. was good as an alternative and severable gift. Bullock's Will Trusts, In re; Bullock v. Bullock, 84 L. Referential Trusts to be Ascertained at Death of Tenant for Life—Trusts as Ascertained not too Remote.]—A testator devised his D. estate to trustees upon trust for his wife for life, and subject thereto and to the raising of two sums of 4,000*l.* each, upon trust to assure the same "to such uses for such estates and with and subject to such powers and provisoes as under and by virtue of" two deeds dated July 5, 1854, and February 26, 1859, "and all mesne assurances, acts, and operations of law" should at the death of his wife be subsisting and capable of taking effect of and concerning the W. Estate. Shortly after the testator's death in 1875 there was a re-settlement of the W. estate, but at the death of the testator's widow in 1912 there was nothing in the then subsisting uses, powers, and provisos of the W. estate which, if originally inserted in the testator's will, would have infringed the rule against perpetuities :—Held, that the referential devise of the D. estate was not void for remoteness. Dungannon (Lord) v. Smith (12 Cl. & F. 546) distinguished. Fane, In re; Fane v. Fane, 82 L. III. POWERS.

See also Vol. X. 1032, 1800.

Appointment—Application of Income—Discretionary Trust—Contingent Interest.]—A marriage settlement contained a power of appointment in favour of the issue of the marriage (in the events which happened) as the survivor of the husband and wife should by will appoint. By her will the survivor, in exercise of this power, appointed two-fifths of the settled funds to two of her sons upon trust to apply the whole or so much of the income thereof as should be required for making up the total income of her son Walter to 200*l.* per annum as they should in their uncontrolled discretion think proper and beneficial for his support and maintenance, and to divide the residue of the income, if any, among her other four sons :—Held, that the interests declared in the gift were contingent and not vested, and that the gift was void for remoteness. Whiteford's Settlement, In re; Whiteford v. Whiteford, 84 L. J. Ch. 584; [1915] 1 Ch. 347; 112 L. T. 577; 59 S. J. 272—Neville, J.

Appointment Void for Remoteness — Election.]—By a marriage settlement certain trust funds were settled upon trust for the husband and wife successively for life, and after their deaths for such of the issue of the marriage, whether children or remoter issue, at such time and in such shares as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and in default as the survivor should appoint, and in default for all the children of the marriage who should attain twenty-one or marry, in equal shares. The husband, who survived his wife, by his will, reciting his power of appointment under the settlement, and that no appointment had been made thereunder, bequeathed both the property subject to the trusts of the settlement and other property of his own to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his daughter for her life without power of anticipation, and after her death he directed his trustees to hold both capital and income in trust for the children of his daughter as she should appoint, and in default of appointment for all her children equally, and he directed that his daughter should, within such time after his decease as his trustees and executors might think proper to appoint, elect in writing whether she would rely on her rights under the marriage settlement or take the benefits provided for her by his will, and in the event of her not electing to take the benefits provided for her by his will he directed his trustees to hold the property upon certain trusts for the benefit of his son for life, and after his decease for his children. The daughter elected to take under the will :—Held, that, inasmuch as, reading the provisions of the will into the settlement, the restraint on anticipation of the income of the settled fund appointed to the testator's daughter and the trusts in favour of her children infringed the rule against perpetuities, she was not bound to elect, and was not bound by the election made by her, and that she was entitled to an estate for her life in the whole fund settled by the settlement free from the restraint on anticipation, and that on her death it went as in default of appointment between her and her brother in equal shares. McCormick, In re; Hazlewood v. Foot, [1915] 1 Ir. R. 315—M.R.

Objects Ascertainable after Death of Daughter and any Husband—Exercise—Appointment of Absolute Interests.]—A testatrix gave one-fifth share of her residuary estate in trust for each of her three daughters for life, and after the death of each daughter leaving a husband her surviving for her husband during his life, with power to each daughter to appoint her share by deed or will, after the death of each daughter and any husband with whom she might intermarry, among her children or more remote issue living at the death of the survivor of each daughter and any husband she might marry. One of the daughters, who survived her husband, appointed by deed absolute transmissible interests to her children :—Held, that the appointment by the daughter was void for remoteness; but semble, life interests might be validly appointed by her under the power. Norton, In re; Norton v. Norton, 80 L. Holiday Expenses — Workpeople in Mill — Poor Persons—Section of Public.]—A testator by his will directed the income of certain shares in a company to be paid to the directors as a contribution to the holiday expenses of the workpeople in one of the company's departments. These workpeople were about five hundred in number and earned from 15*s.* to 36*s.* a week :—Held, that the bequest was not a good charitable gift as it was not for poor persons or for a section of the public, and that therefore it was void as being a perpetuity. Drummond, In re; Ashworth v. Drummond, 83 L. Devise of Colonial Real Property—Condition of Forfeiture—Common Law Condition Subsequent—Gift over—Rule against Perpetuities—Form of Conveyance.]—Real property in Australia was given to trustees upon trust, subject to certain life interests, to convey the same to a charity, but on the express condition that the charity should annually publish certain accounts, with a gift over, in default of such publication, for the benefit of such persons and for such public purposes as the Governor of South Australia should in writing direct :—Held, that the gift over was not charitable and was void both for remoteness and for uncertainty. Held, further, that the condition in the gift to the charity was not a conditional limitation, but a common law condition subsequent, and void as infringing the rule against perpetuities. The charity was therefore entitled to a conveyance with no reference either to the condition or the gift over. Da Costa, In re; Clarke v. St. Peter's Collegiate School, 81 L. J. Ch. 293; [1912]

Rentcharge for Long Term of Years for Charitable Purposes—Proviso as to Redemption—No Limit as to Time of Redemption.]—By an indenture made in 1747 an annuity or yearly rentcharge of 15*l.* issuing out of certain lands was granted to M. J. and J. B., and the survivor of them, and the executors, administrators, and assigns of the survivor, for the term of 999 years from the death of the grantor, which annuity was subsequently declared to be upon trust for J. P. or such other person as for the time being should have the pastoral care of the congregation of the dissenting Protestants of C. The indenture contained a proviso that if the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of the grantor should on any of the days named for payment of the annuity pay to M. J. and J. B., or the survivor of them, or the executors, administrators, or assigns of the survivor, the sum of 300*l.* in one payment, the annuity should be no longer payable, but should determine:—Held, that the proviso was void as violating the rule against perpetuities. Donoughmore's Estate, In re, [1911] 1 Ir. Special Constable — Power to Dismiss.]—Regulation 6 of the Special Constables Order, 1914, which was made under section 1, subsection 1 of the Special Constables Act, 1914, and which empowers the Commissioner of Metropolitan Police to dismiss a special constable appointed for the Metropolitan Police District, is not ultra vires. Metropolitan Police Commissioner v. Hancock, 32 T. L. R. 95—D.

Special Emergency — Importation of Constables of Another Police Force by Chief Constable — Power of Police Authority not Previously Delegated to Chief Constable — Subsequent Ratification — Power of Chief Constable to Bind County to Pay for the Housing and Feeding of Imported Constables — "Extraordinary expenses necessarily incurred by him . . . in the execution of his . . . duty."]—Owing to serious disturbances in the county of Glamorgan in 1910 the chief constable took steps to obtain outside assistance, and entered into agreements with various other police authorities under the provisions of the Police Act, 1890, whereby a large number of police from other police forces were introduced into the district. The power of the Standing Joint Committee of the Quarter Sessions and County Council of Glamorgan, who were the police authority for that county, to enter into such agreements had not previously been delegated to the chief constable, but his action was subsequently ratified by them with regard to all the imported police except the Metropolitan police. The plaintiffs incurred expenditure, at the request of the chief constable and under circumstances from which a promise of repayment might be implied, in providing board and lodging for such imported police. The standing joint committee subsequently repudiated their liability to pay. The plaintiffs then claimed to recover such expenses from the standing joint committee and the county council as money expended by them at the defendant's request; alternatively they claimed a declaration that the sums were extraordinary expenses necessarily incurred by the chief constable in the execution of his duty within section 18 of the County Police Act, 1839, and that they were entitled to have the sums paid by the county council out of the county fund: Held, that the chief constable, in performing his duty with regard to the preservation of order and the protection of life and property within the county, was entitled in a case of special emergency to strengthen his own police force by the addition of constables belonging to the police force of another police authority, even although his own police authority had not delegated to him, under section 25, subsection 3 of the Police Act, 1890, their powers to do so; and that he was entitled under section 18 of the County Police Act, 1839, to recover from the county fund the cost of providing board and lodging to such police as being "extraordinary expenses necessarily incurred by him, . . . in the execution of his . . . duty," subject to the examination and audit of such expenses by the standing joint committee. Glamorgan Coal Co. v. *Glamorganshire County Council. Action for Illegal Arrest without Warrant—Malice.]—By the Glasgow Police Act, 1866, s. 88, a constable may "take into custody and convey to the police office any person who is either accused or reasonably suspected of having committed . . . a penal offence." In an action against police constables for an illegal arrest under this section it is sufficient for the plaintiff to allege in his pleadings that the defendants acted "wrongfully and illegally and without reasonable grounds of suspicion," without alleging that they acted "maliciously." Shearer v. Shields, 83 L. Judgment of the Court below ([1913] S. C. 1012) affirmed. Ib.

"Wilfully obstructing" Constable in Execution of his Duty—Warning Motor-car Drivers of Police Trap.]—Police constables were engaged under the orders of their superior officer in timing the speed of motor cars passing along a road on which certain distances were measured off. One of the constables stood at the commencement and another constable stood at the end of a measured distance. The latter constable was provided with a stop watch, and it was his duty to set the watch going on receiving a signal from the first constable, and to stop it when a motor car passed, the object being to ascertain the actual speed at which the motor cars passed over the measured distance. While the constables were so engaged, the appellant, by means of signals, warned the drivers of certain motor cars which he saw approaching that the police were on duty at the measured distance for the purpose aforesaid. These cars, when so warned by the appellant, were being driven at a speed exceeding twenty miles an hour, but in each case, on the warning being given, the driver slackened speed, and the cars passed through the measured distance at less than twenty miles an hour. Upon an information charging the appellant under section 2 of the Prevention of Crimes Amendment Act, 1885, with obstructing the constable who was stationed at the end of the measured distance in the execution of his duty, the Justices convicted the appellant:—Held, that there was evidence upon which the Justices could find that the appellant was guilty of obstructing the constable in the execution of his duty, and that the conviction was therefore right. Bastable v. Little (76 L. —— Waiting Outside Residence of Prime Minister to Present Petition—Refusal to Go Away.]—The appellants assembled in and near D. Street and Whitehall with the object of presenting a petition to the Prime Minister. They were informed that the Prime Minister could not see them, but they waited on for several hours outside his house in D. Street and refused to go away when requested by the police. Their presence caused numbers of the public to collect in the streets. As the appellants refused to go away, they were arrested and charged with obstructing the police in the execution of their duty under section 2 of the Prevention of Crimes Amendment Act, 1885:—Held, that they were rightly convicted under that section. Despard v. Wilcox, 102 L. —— Deputation Desiring to Present Petition to Member of Parliament—Refusal to Receive a Deputation — Crowd Collecting in Street — Refusal of Deputation to Disperse.]—A deputation of eight ladies, consisting of the appellants and six others, went to the Houses of Parliament with the object of presenting a petition to the Prime Minister. On their arrival at St. Stephen's entrance they were stopped by police constables under the command of the respondent, and they then stood upon the public footpath over which access to the entrance is obtained. A police inspector handed to one of the appellants a letter from the Prime Minister's private secretary refusing to receive the deputation. By this time, and in consequence of the conduct of the appellants and the deputation, a crowd of fifty or sixty persons had collected on the pavement, whereby St. Stephen's entrance and the access thereto became obstructed. The respondent gave orders to the police to clear the pavement and provide clear access to the entrance. The appellants were requested by the police to leave, but they refused to do so, asserting a right to present a petition to the Prime Minister: and in consequence of their refusal to leave, the obstruction caused by them at the St. Stephen's entrance and the access thereto, and their impeding the police in their endeavours to prevent obstruction to such entrance and access, the appellants and the other members of the deputation were arrested. On a complaint against them for obstructing the police in the execution of their duty, the magistrate convicted the appellants:—Held, without throwing any doubt on the right of a person to present a petition to a Member of Parliament, that the conviction was right. Pankhurst v. Jarvis, 101 L. Power to Assume Parental Control—Condition Precedent.]—Where guardians desire to exercise the powers of parental control over pauper children given to them by section 1, sub-section 1 (ii.) of the Poor Law Act, 1899, a resolution to the effect that they are of opinion that the parent of the child is unfit, by reason of the existence of some one or more of the conditions set out in sub-section 1 (ii.) of the section, is a condition precedent to the exercise of such power; and accordingly where the guardians assumed parental control of children purported to act under the section, without having passed such a resolution, the Court, upon the application of the parent, granted a writ of habeas corpus directed against the guardians to release such children. McGlynn, In re, [1913] 2 Ir. 2. ASSISTANT OVERSEERS.

Amalgamation of Parishes in Borough — Alteration in Areas—Remuneration—Payment by Salary in Lieu of Commission.] — Under the Hertford (Hertford) Confirmation Order, 1900, five parishes in the borough were amalgamated, and in future formed one parish. Article III. (2) of the Order provided that—"Any person holding the office of assistant overseer in any of the existing parishes shall hold and execute the like office in and for an area as nearly as possible the same as before . . . and upon the same terms as far as possible as to remuneration . . ." The applicant had, in the years 1892 and 1894 respectively, been elected by the vestry an assistant overseer of two of the then existing parishes, pursuant to section 7 of the Poor Relief Act, 1819, with a remuneration then fixed at 5 per cent. of the poor rate actually collected by him. In 1900 the borough council, to whom the powers of the vestry had been transferred in 1898, reduced the area in and for which the applicant collected the poor rate, and altered his remuneration for collection to a fixed salary in lieu of the 5 per cent. commission. It was admitted that this fixed salary was as nearly as might be equivalent to the average sum he was earning at that time (1900) by his commission for collecting in both parishes. The applicant claimed that, having been appointed by the vestry, he had a right to be paid by commission instead of by a fixed salary, and that Article III. (2) of the Order of 1900 did not empower the borough council to cut down his remuneration by paying him a fixed salary with the result that in future, owing to the increase in rateable value of his two former parishes, he would earn a great deal less than if he were paid by commission. He accordingly obtained a rule nisi for mandamus to the overseers to shew cause why they should not pay him the balance after taking credit for his salary, calculated on commission at 5 per cent. on the amount he might have collected as assistant overseer of both his former parishes for the twelve months ended March 31, 1913:—The Court, in discharging the rule, held, that upon the true considerationn of Article III. (2) the borough council were empowered, first, to reduce the area of collection; and secondly, to alter the applicant's remuneration by paying him a fixed salary which "so far as possible" represented the amount earned by him at 5 per cent. commission in 1900. Rex v. Hertford Union; Pollard, Ex parte, 111 L. T. 716; 78 J. P. 405; 12 L. G. R. 863—D.

In the circumstances the case was not one in which the Court could exercise its discretion by granting a mandamus. Ib.

Assistant Overseer Clerk to Parish Council—Guarantee—Defalcations in Accounts as Clerk not Covered by Policy Given to Guardians in Respect of Defaulter's Appointment as Assistant Overseer.]—A. was appointed assistant overseer of the parish of H., and by virtue of his appointment under section 17, sub-section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1894, he became clerk to the parish council of H. The defendants entered into a bond guaranteeing the faithful performance of his duties as assistant overseer. A. committed defalcations in respect of moneys received by him as clerk to the parish council. In an action to recover the amount of such defalcations under the guarantee given by the defendants.—Held, that the defalcations of A. in relation to the parish council accounts were not covered by the terms of the bond guaranteeing the faithful performance of his duties in the office of assistant overseer. Cosford Guardians v. Poor Law Guarantee Association, 103 L. 3. Relieving Officer.

Superannuation Allowance — Resignation in Consequence of "Grave misconduct" — Irregularities in Dealing with Money not of a Fraudulent Character.]—The plaintiff, who had been in the employment of the defendants as relieving officer and collector for a number of years, had been in the habit of retaining and using for his own purpose the moneys which he collected on behalf of the defendants, and only paying the sums he had collected in to the defendants' account every three months. He did this without any intention of defrauding his employers. He was told by the defendants that this system must cease and that he must pay monthly into the account of the guardians the sums which he collected. He subsequently, however, reverted to his old practice, and neglected to pay into the defendants' account monthly moneys which he had received during the month, and he was not in a position to repay those moneys until he received his salary in the following month. He was thereupon asked to resign. He sent in his resignation, and subsequently claimed a superannuation allowance under the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896, alleging that he had become incapable of discharging the duties of his office by reason of permanent infirmity:—Held, that the irregularities with regard to the money collected by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendants amounted to "grave misconduct" within the meaning of section 7 of the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896, and that, having in consequence thereof ceased to hold office, he had forfeited all claim to any superannuation allowance. The meaning of "grave misconduct" discussed. Poad v. Scarborough Guardians, 84 L. J. K.B. 209; [1914] 3 K.B. 959; 111 L. T. 491; 78 J. P. 465; 12 L. G. R. 1044—C.A.

4. Medical Officer.

Public Vaccinator—Superannuation Allowance—"Officer in the service or employment of guardians"—"Emoluments" of Officer.]—A public vaccinator appointed by the guardians of a union or parish in accordance with the Vaccination Acts is not an "officer" or "servant" of the guardians within the definition of section 19 of the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896, and therefore the emoluments of a public vaccinator who is also district medical officer are not to be taken into account in calculating the amount of superannuation allowance to which he is entitled under that Act. Lawson v. Marlborough Guardians, 81 L. B. SETTLEMENT OF PAUPERS.

See also Vol. X. 1119, 1823.

Irremovability — Sailor — Children under Sixteen.]—In 1903 G. H., who was legally settled in the Doncaster Union, married M. E. H. From the time of his marriage until 1913 G. H. served the Crown as a sailor. When on shore he continuously resided with his wife in certain dwelling houses in two parishes, both in the Medway Union. The eldest child of the marriage, O. M. H., was born in 1904, and thereafter resided continuously with her parents in the said two parishes until 1913. A second child, G. W. H., was born in 1908, and thereafter resided continuously with his parents in one of the said parishes until 1913. During the period of his residence in the Medway Union G. H. did not at any time receive parochial relief on his own account or on account of his wife and children, nor did he or they become actually chargeable to the parish. In February, 1914, the children O. M. H. and G. W. H. being in receipt of relief from the Woolwich Poor Law Union, the guardians of the poor of that union obtained an order from a magistrate whereby it was adjudged that the parish of Doncaster, in the Doncaster Poor Law Union, was the last legal settlement of O. M. H. and G. W. H., and whereby the guardians of the poor of the Doncaster Poor Law Union were ordered to receive and provide for O. M. H. and G. W. H. The Doncaster Union contended that the children had acquired a settlement in the Medway Union:—Held, that G. H., being in the service of the Crown as a sailor, did not, by virtue of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, s. 1, at any time during his residence in the Medway Union, acquire a settlement therein and a status of irremovability within the meaning of section 34 of the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876, but would always have been removable to his last legal settlement—namely, the Doncaster Union—if he had at any time become chargeable to the parish. The children O. M. H. and G. W. H. had not therefore acquired a settlement in the Medway Union or a status of irremovability. Doncaster Union v. Woolwich Union, 84 L. J. Held, also, that the Poor Removal Act, 1795, s. 1, which enacted that no poor person should be removed from the parish or place where he or she was inhabiting to the place of his or her last settlement until he or she became actually chargeable to the parish or place in which he or she was then inhabiting, did not confer any status of irremovability on G. H. by reason of the fact that he had never become actually chargeable to the Medway Union, so as to take him out of the operation of the proviso to section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, and the children out of the operation of section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1848. Ib.

Children under Sixteen Living with Mother—Wife not Deserted but Living Apart from Husband—Change of Residence of Wife and Children—Wife and Children become Chargeable—Removal of Children but not of Mother.]—In 1906 a married woman and her two infant children went to live in a parish in the H. Union, where a third child was born. The husband did not reside there and had a settlement elsewhere, but the wife was not a deserted wife. In 1913 the wife and three children went to reside in a parish in the C. Union and became chargeable to that union within one year. The Court of quarter sessions held that as the wife was not deserted her last settlement was in the C. Union, but they ordered the children to be removed to the H. Union:—Held, that, as the wife was not a deserted wife and her husband had a settlement elsewhere, neither she nor her children acquired any settlement in the parish in the H. Union, and that therefore the children were not removable from the parish in the C. Union where they became chargeable. Hambledon Union v. Cuckfield Union, 84 L. J. K.B. 1265; 112 L. Deserted Married Woman—Status of Irremovability—Capacity to Acquire Settlement Apart from Husband.]—A deserted married woman can acquire a settlement of her own, and apart from her husband's settlement, by virtue of the joint operation of section 3 of the Poor Removal Act, 1861, and section 34 of the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876. Unemancipated Child—Settlement by Residence Acquired Independently of Parent—Residence in Same Parish—Child having "no other settlement than" that of Parent.]—Section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1848, provides that "whenever any person should have a wife or children having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children should be removable from any parish or place from which he or she would be removable. . . ." Paddington Union v. Westminster Union, 84 L. J. K.B. 1727; [1915] 2 K.B. 644; 113 L. T. 328; 79 J. P. 343; 13 L. G. R. 641—D.

An unemancipated son lived for some years with his parents in the parish of P., and he and his father respectively acquired legal settlements in that parish by virtue of such residence. He was then placed under the care of a rescue society, and lived in the parish of E. for a period sufficient to entitle him to acquire a settlement there by residence. The father predeceased the mother, but neither of them acquired a settlement other than in the parish of P., and both would have been removable within the meaning of the provision in the above section from the parish of E. The son became chargeable as a pauper to the Union of W.:—Held, that the words "other settlement than his or her own" in the above provision meant "settlement in a different parish from that of the father or mother," and that an order for removal of the son to the parish of P., as being the place of his last legal settlement, was rightly made. Dicta of Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes, L.J., in Mitford and Launditch Union v. Wayland Union (59 L. Residence of Child under Sixteen with Deserted Mother—Irremovability.]—A pauper who was a legitimate child lived with her deserted mother for more than three years in a parish in which she thus acquired a status of irremovability. Before she was sixteen she left her mother, and had not lived in any other parish long enough to acquire a settlement. The father, when the pauper attained the age of sixteen, had acquired a settlement in another parish :—Held, that the pauper had, under section 34 of the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876, acquired a settlement in the parish in which she had lived with her mother for three years. Hackney Union v. Kingston-upon-Hull Incorporation, 81 L. Child under Sixteen Residing with Pauper Father—Receipt of Relief by Father—Relief not Shared in by Child.]—Where a child under the age of sixteen resides with his father in a parish under such circumstances that he would acquire a status of irremovability and, after a period of three years, a settlement in the parish, the mere fact that the father has during that period received poor law relief will not, in the absence of evidence that the child has shared in such relief, disqualify the child from acquiring a settlement in the parish. Tewkesbury Union v. Upton-on-Severn Union, 83 L. J. K.B. 37; [1913] 3 K.B. 475; 109 L. T. 557; 77 J. P. 9; 10 L. G. R. 1019—D.

Illegitimate Child under Sixteen—Residence Apart from Mother.]—The word "children" in the proviso to section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, and in the substituted proviso in section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1848, includes both legitimate and illegitimate children. Woolwich Union v. Fulham Union (75 L. J. K.B. 675; [1906] 2 K.B. 240) not followed. Braintree Union v. Rochford Union, 28 T. L. R. 60—D.

The pauper, an illegitimate child, aged eight and a half years, was born in the parish of B., in July, 1902, and shortly afterwards was placed by her mother under the care of persons residing in the parish of S. in the respondent union; and the pauper continued to reside with those persons in the parish of S. At no time since 1902 had the pauper resided with or been maintained by her mother, and at no time had the mother acquired a settlement in any parish in the respondent union, and at no time had she been irremovable therefrom. In January, 1911, an order of Justices was obtained by the guardians of the respondent union adjudging the pauper to be settled in the parish of B. in the appellant union, that being the parish in which the mother of the pauper was last legally settled, and in which the pauper was born :—Held, that the order was rightly made. Ib.

Illegitimate Child—Residence in Parish for Three Years.]—The proviso to section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846 (as amended by section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1848), which deals with the removability of "children," applies to illegitimate children. Fulham Union v. Woolwich Union (75 L. Computation of Period of Residence—Meaning of "confined as a patient in a hospital"—Lunatic.]—The main object of an institution in the parish of L. in the L. Union, called Nazareth House, and supported by voluntary contributions, was to provide a home for the education and training for service of orphan and deserted Roman Catholic children and a refuge for the aged and deserving poor; but adults between the ages of sixteen and sixty, whose cases were suitable, were occasionally admitted as inmates. Inmates were medically treated and nursed there if occasion arose, and incurable persons were received; but such persons were admitted not on account of their complaints, but because of other qualifications. An unmarried woman, thirty-four years of age, who had acquired a settlement by residence in the parish of S. in the O. Union, was received into the institution on March 6, 1905. She was of weak intellect and quarrelsome, and at that time was unable to obtain an ordinary situation, and was destitute. During her residence in the institution she gradually grew worse in health and mind; and ultimately, becoming violent and dangerous, she was, on May 24, 1911, sent to the county lunatic asylum as a pauper lunatic. An order adjudicating her settlement to be in the parish of S. was appealed against by the guardians of the O. Union on the ground that by reason of her residence at Nazareth House she had become irremovable from and settled in the parish of L. And on a Case stated by consent under the Quarter Sessions Act, 1847,—Held, that the institution was not a "hospital," nor was the pauper lunatic, during her residence there, "confined as a patient in a hospital" within the meaning of section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, so as to prevent the period of her residence therefrom being computed in determining whether she had acquired a status of irremovability from and a settlement in the parish of L.; and the appeal against the order of adjudication was allowed accordingly. Ormskirk Union v. Lancaster Union, 107 L. Husband's Failing to Maintain Children—Existing Order to Pay Wife Weekly Sum and Giving Her Custody of Children—Liability of Husband to Maintain Children.] — On the prosecution of a husband under section 3 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, for refusing to maintain his children whom he was legally bound to maintain, whereby they became chargeable to the appellant union, the existence of an order made by a Court of summary jurisdiction under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, that his wife be no longer bound to cohabit with him, that she should have the custody of the children, and that he should pay her a weekly sum, which order, as to the payment, has not been obeyed by him, does not rid him of his legal liability to support the children, and he can be convicted on the above charge as an idle and disorderly person. Shaftesbury Union v. Brockway, 82 L. J. K.B. 222; [1913] 1 K.B. 159; 108 L. T. 336; 77 J. P. 120; 11 L. G. R. 176; 23 Cox C.C. 318; 29 T. L. R. 144—D.

Running Away and Leaving Children Chargeable—Address Left by Parent and no Concealment Attempted.]—A pauper, having six children inmates of the workhouse of and chargeable to the S. Union near London, took his discharge, and with his children went to the railway station, half a mile away. From there he sent his children back to the workhouse (where, being destitute, they were taken in) with a letter to the master stating that he was not running away, and giving an address in London. He was summoned under section 4 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, for running away and leaving his children chargeable. The Justices dismissed the summons, finding, upon the principle laid down in Cambridge Union v. Parr (30 L. J. M.C. 241; 10 C. B. (N.S.) 99), that he had not run away, since there was no evidence that he had absconded, or concealed or absented himself by going a long distance:—Held, that in taking the view of the evidence which they took, and in applying the principle referred to, the Justices could not be said to have been wrong—the absence of concealment, and the fact that the man's address was known, being very material—and an appeal against their decision was accordingly dismissed. Pallin v. Buckland, 105 L. T. 197; 9 L. G. R. 544; 75 J. P. 362; 22 Cox C.C. 545—D.

—— Time within which Proceedings may be Taken.]—The respondent, whose daughter was admitted to the workhouse in 1902, absconded in 1905, leaving his daughter chargeable to the guardians, and was not discovered till 1909, when proceedings were commenced against him under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876:—Held, that the proceedings were out of time, as the period of two years within which they must be taken dated from the time when the respondent absconded—namely, in 1905. Ashley v. Blaker, 101 L. T. 682; 8 L. G. R. 1; 73 J. P. 495; 22 Cox C.C. 208—D.

Warrant for Removal of English-born Pauper Lunatic from Scotland to England—Appeal to Local Government Board—Competency—Residence of Pauper.]—Under section 5, sub-section 1 of the Poor Law (Scotland) Act, 1898, whenever a parish council in Scotland has obtained a warrant for the removal of an English or Irish-born pauper, who has neither acquired a settlement by residence in Scotland nor a status of irremovability under section 4 of the Act, the guardians of the parish to which it is proposed to remove such pauper have a right of appeal to the Local Government Board, though such pauper has not resided continuously in the parish from which it is proposed to remove him for not less than one year before the date of the application for relief. The section applies to both sane and insane paupers. Edinburgh Parish Council v. Local Government Board for Scotland, 84 L. J. P.C. 121; [1915] A.C. 717; 113 L. T. 50; 79 J. P. 289; 13 L. G. R. 918—H.L. (Sc.)

Computation of Period of Residence—Meaning of "confined as a patient in a hospital"—Lunatic.]—The main object of an institution in the parish of L. in the L. Union called Nazareth House, and supported by voluntary contributions, was to provide a home for the education and training for service of orphan and deserted Roman Catholic children and a refuge for the aged and deserving poor; but adults between the ages of sixteen and sixty, whose cases were suitable, were occasionally admitted as inmates. Inmates were medically treated and nursed there if occasion arose, and incurable persons were received; but such persons were admitted not on account of their complaints, but because of other qualifications. An unmarried woman, thirty-four years of age, who had acquired a settlement by residence in the parish of S. in the O. Union, was received into the institution on March 6, 1905. She was of weak intellect and quarrelsome, and at that time was unable to obtain an ordinary situation, and was destitute. During her residence in the institution she gradually grew worse in health and mind; and ultimately, becoming violent and dangerous, she was, on May 24, 1911, sent to the county lunatic asylum as a pauper lunatic. An order adjudicating her settlement to be in the parish of S. was appealed against by the guardians of the O. Union on the ground that by reason of her residence at Nazareth House she had become irremovable from and settled in the parish of L. And on a Case stated by consent under the Quarter Sessions Act, 1847,—Held, that the institution was not a "hospital," nor was the pauper lunatic, during her residence there, "confined as a patient in a hospital" within the meaning of section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, so as to prevent the period of her residence there being computed in determining whether she had acquired a status of irremovability from and a settlement in the parish of L.; and the appeal against the order of adjudication was allowed accordingly. Ormskirk Union v. Lancaster Union, 107 L. T. 620; 77 J. P. 45; 10 L. G. R. 1041—D.

Maintenance—Pauper Lunatic—Guardians—Contribution by County Council—Time for Payment—"Net charge upon the guardians"—"Period of maintenance." —The words "period of maintenance" in section 24, sub-section 2 (f) of the Local Government Act, 1888, mean such period as the public authorities concerned arrange between themselves for purposes of account. The words "net charge" in the same sub-section mean the difference between the actual cost of the maintenance of the pauper lunatic during any such period of maintenance and any sum for the maintenance of the pauper lunatic received, or payment of which the guardians might have obtained, during such period. Calne Union v. Wilts County Council, 80 L. J. K.B. 548; [1911] 1 K.B. 717; 104 L. T. 607; 75 J. P. 42; 9 L. G. R. 5—Hamilton, J.

Where guardians, having power to obtain payment of sums of money for the maintenance of a pauper lunatic during several periods of maintenance, did not exercise such power, but obtained payment of the aggregate of such sums after the expiration of such periods,—Held, that on a claim by the guardians against the county council in respect of sums due for the maintenance of pauper lunatics under the provisions of the above sub-section, the county council were entitled to counterclaim, as for money had and received by the guardians to their use, payments made by them to the guardians during each of such periods in respect of their liability under that sub-section, which liability would not have arisen under the provisions of the sub-section had the guardians exercised such power and obtained payment of such sums of money as they became due in respect of each of such periods, and deducted them from the actual cost of maintenance during that period. Ib.

Money payable to guardians by a county council under this sub-section, though due after the termination of each period of maintenance, is not payable by them until the payment has been made lawful according to its constitution. Ib.

—— Expenses of Maintenance—Weekly Sum—Reasonable Charges—Order of Justices—Form of Order. —The functions of Justices under section 287 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, are judicial and not merely ministerial. Dictum of Wright, J., in Suffolk County Lunatic Asylum v. Stow Union (76 L. T. 494), which was followed in Suffolk County Lunatic Asylum v. Nottingham Union (69 J. P. 120), overruled. Glamorgan County Asylum v. Cardiff Union, 80 L. J. K.B. 578; [1911] 1 K.B. 437; 103 L. T. 819; 75 J. P. 28; 9 L. G. R. 212—C.A.

Where, therefore, an application is made under section 287 to two Justices of the county in which an asylum is situate for an order for payment by the guardians of the union to which any particular pauper lunatic confined in the asylum is chargeable of the reasonable charges of the expenses of maintenance of such lunatic, the Justices are not restricted to the weekly sum of 14*s.*, which is the maximum that may be fixed by the visiting committee under section 283. This latter section is intended primarily to enable the rating authority to ascertain how much money they ought to require from the parishes or unions liable to contribute to the maintenance of the asylum. Ib.

Although in practice orders under section 287 are made ex parte, whenever a larger sum than 14*s.* a week is asked for, on the ground of exceptional circumstances, the order ought not to be made without notice to the party chargeable; and every such order, whether ex parte or on notice, ought not once for all to fix a sum for the entire period during which the lunatic is maintained in the asylum, but until further order only. Ib.

—— Pauper Sent to Asylum from Union of Residence—Subsequent Admission by Another Union of Settlement in that Union—Union to which Lunatic "Chargeable"—Special Expenses of Maintenance. — Where a pauper lunatic has been sent from a union to an asylum in the same county, and during the residence of the lunatic in the asylum for upwards of two years the visiting committee have incurred in respect of his maintenance expenses exceeding the weekly sums fixed by the committee, and that union has paid to the visiting committee the part of such expenses corresponding to these weekly sums, and subsequently the guardians of a union in another county admit that the lunatic has all along had a settlement in their union, the Justices of the county in which the asylum is situate have jurisdiction under section 287 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, to make, on the application of the visiting committee of the asylum, an order upon the guardians of the last-mentioned union, as being the union to which the lunatic is "chargeable" within the meaning of that section, for the balance of the expenses incurred by the committee. Rex v. Staffordshire Justices; Ormskirk Union, Ex parte, 81 L. Whether Son who Attained Twenty-one and Predeceased Parents Entitled to Share—Presumption that Shares Vested at Twenty-one.

—A clause in a will provided for the date at which the interest should vest in the case of sons—namely, twenty-one. It then provided for the date of the vesting in the case of daughters—namely, twenty-one or marriage. These two provisions were in a continuous sentence, and at the end of the words dealing with the case of daughters came the following passage: "if the same respectively shall happen after the death of H. L. P. (the father), but if the same should happen in his lifetime, then immediately after his death." The respondent, as mortgagee of H. E. L. P.'s one-third share of a portion of 6,000*l.*, claimed to have a sum of 2,000*l.* raised, notwithstanding that H. E. L. P. had died in the lifetime of his father, H. L. P.:—Held, that, according to the canon of construction, it had been the practice to construe a deed providing portions as vesting the portions at twenty-one, or in the case of daughters marriage, unless the deed throughout all its provisions clearly treated the vesting as contingent on the portioner surviving the parent, and therefore the one-third share of the portions sum became vested in H. E. L. P. on his attaining the age of twenty-one, and was not contingent on his surviving his father, H. L. P. Waller v. Stevenson, 56 S. J. 66—H.L. (E.)

Younger Children—Younger Son becoming Eldest—"Eldest son"—Time for Ascertaining Eldest Son—Vesting or Distribution—Eldest Son Entitled to Portion.]—A younger son in whom a portion becomes vested, and who subsequently becomes the eldest son before the portion becomes payable, is entitled to share in the portions fund if there is enough in the settlement to shew that the character of a younger son is to be ascertained at the time when the portions vest and not at the time when they become payable. Windham v. Graham (1 Russ. 331) followed. Wise, In re; Smith v. Waller, 82 L. J. Ch. 25; [1913] 1 Ch. 41; 107 L. T. 613; 57 S. J. 28—Eve, J.

Children "other than an eldest or only son"—Younger Daughter Debarred from Taking as a Younger Child—Elder Daughter Taking as a Younger Child.]—By a settlement executed in 1843 lands were conveyed to trustees to L'E. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail male, with remainder, in default of male issue, as to two of the lands, to his female issue as L'E. should appoint, and as to the other land to certain other issue in tail male, with a power to L'E. to charge the lands with a sum of 3,000*l.* as a provision for the younger child or children of L'E. By a marriage settlement executed in 1850 on the marriage of L'E., L'E., in pursuance of said power, charged the said lands with the sum of 3,000*l.* in favour of the younger children of the intended marriage "other than an eldest or only son." There were no sons of the marriage. L'E. by his will appointed the lands over which he had power of appointment to his younger daughter in fee-simple:—Held, that the existence of a son was not required to bring into operation the provision of the charge for younger children; that the younger daughter, having taken the bulk of the lands under the limitations of the settlement, was debarred from taking under the provision for younger children, and that the elder daughter alone took under the said provision. L'Estrange v. Winniett, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 62—Ross, J.

Younger Children—Younger Son becoming Eldest after Attaining Twenty-one.]—By a marriage settlement made in 1860 certain lands were limited to trustees for a term of one thousand years upon trust to raise portions for the children of the marriage "other than or besides the first or only son or any other son or sons who before his or their attaining the age of twenty-one years shall become entitled under or by virtue of these presents to the same premises for the first estate in tail male," if there should be one such child, the sum of 4,000*l.*, if there should be two such children, the sum of 6,000*l.*, and if there should be three or more such children, the sum of 8,000*l.*, and subject thereto the lands were limited to the use of the husband for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. There were four children of the marriage. M. W. B., the first-born son, attained twenty-one in his father's lifetime, and died without having disentailed, and thereupon E. B., the second son, joined in barring the entail and re-settling the lands, and on his father's death became entitled to the settled estates as tenant for life. Another child died under twenty-one and unmarried:—Held, that, according to the true construction of the settlement, the sum of 8,000*l.* was raisable for portions for younger children, and that E. B. was a younger son for the purpose of participating therein, and was entitled to be paid the sum of 4,000*l.* by the trustees. Beresford's Settlement, In re; Irvine v. Beresford, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 222—M.R.

Power of Appointment—Special Power—Appointment Equally by Will among all the Objects—Subsequent Appointments by Deed-Poll—Ademption—Rule against Double Portions—"Portion."]—A testator who had a special power of appointment by deed or will over a fund of which he was tenant for life, exercised the power by will equally among seven objects of the power. By two deeds-poll, executed subsequently, he appointed two equal seventh shares to F. and E., two of the objects of the power respectively, subject to his life interest. On his death the question arose, whether the remaining five seventh shares of the fund were to be divided equally among the seven objects of the power, including F. and E., or whether the shares of F. and E. under the will were adeemed:—Held, that the rule against double portions applied, and that the shares of F. and E. under the will were adeemed by the appointments to them by deed. Montague v. Montague (15 Beav. 565) followed. Peel's Settlement, In re; Biddulph v. Peel, 80 L. J. Ch. 574; [1911] 2 Ch. 165; 105 L. T. 330; 55 S. J. 580—Joyce, J.

Satisfaction—Rule against Double Portions—Person in Loco Parentis.]—G. by a voluntary deed declared that he, his executors or administrators, or such other person or persons as he should by deed or will appoint trustee or trustees of the deed, should stand and be possessed of a sum of 6,958*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.* secured by mortgage upon trust to receive the annual interest and income, and pay the net income to his sister E. for life or spinsterhood, with other limitations in the case of her death or marriage. The mortgage was a well-secured first mortgage, and the deed contained wide powers of investment. G. received the interest and regularly paid it over to his sister. By a subsequent will he appointed trustees and executors and gave them all his real and personal property upon trust (inter alia) to pay to his sister E. the interest on 6,500*l.* for life or until she should marry. The powers of investment were restricted, and the subsequent limitations were different from those of the deed. It was provided by the will, that if the testator's securities and investments should so depreciate that they were unable to pay to his sister E. 180*l.* a year, she was only to receive 100*l.* a year, the balance of the income of the 6,500*l.* to be accumulated for the benefit of his sons. By a codicil he increased the gift to his sister E. by 400*l.* :—Held, that assuming the testator had placed himself in loco parentis to his sister E., and that there was a presumption of satisfaction, the presumption was rebutted by the difference in point of certainty and value between the obligations of the trust deed and the gift in the will. Gleeson, In re; Smyth v. Gleeson, [1911] 1 Ir. Conveyance of Mails by Steamship — Remuneration—Amount.]—Upon an application to determine the amount of the remuneration to be paid by the Postmaster-General for the conveyance of mails by the applicants' steamships between Dover and Calais it was agreed between the parties that the principle laid down in the case of Great Northern Railway (Ireland) v. Postmaster-General (13 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 290) should be followed, whereby the cost of service should be first ascertained, to which should be added a reasonable sum for profit plus a further amount, fixed according to circumstances, for compulsory working; the difference between this total and the actual earnings to be the sum payable by the Postmaster-General. South-Eastern and Chatham Railway v. Postmaster-General, 14 Ry. & Can. The basis for fixing the remuneration which was applied by the Court in Great Northern Railway (Ireland) v. Postmaster-General (supra) is not to be regarded as an inflexible principle binding under all circumstances. Ib.

"Sent by the post"—Bill of Costs—Delivery One Month before Action—Posting of Bill.]—By section 37 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, "no attorney or solicitor . . . shall commence or maintain any action or suit for the recovery of any fees, charges, or disbursements for any business done by such attorney or solicitor, until the expiration of one month after such attorney or solicitor . . . shall have delivered unto the party to be charged therewith, or sent by the post to or left for him at his counting-house, office of business, dwelling house, or last known place of abode, a bill of such fees, charges, and disbursements" signed by such attorney or solicitor, or inclosed in or accompanied by a letter signed in like manner referring to such bill: —Held (Buckley, L.J., dissenting), that, on the true construction of the section, if a solicitor sends his bill by post the posting must take place at such time that in the ordinary course of post the bill should have reached its destination one clear calendar month before the date on which the action is commenced. Browne v. Black, 81 L. I. CREATION.

Exercise of—Trustees.]—Trustees were to hold certain parts of the residue of the estate of a testatrix "upon trust to pay the capital or income thereof or neither to my nephew E. or to apply the capital or income thereof or any part of either for his benefit or for the benefit of his wife or any child or children of his as my trustees may in their absolute and uncontrolled discretion consider desirable":—Held, first, that the power or powers thus created in favour of E., his wife and children, were conferred on the trustees of the will for the time being, and not on the original trustees only. Smith, In re; Eastick v. Smith (73 L. J. Ch. 74; [1904] 1 Ch. 139), followed. De Sommery, In re; Coelenbier v. De Sommery, 82 L. J. Ch. 17; [1912] 2 Ch. 622; 107 L. T. 823; 57 S. J. 78—Parker, J.

Divisibility—Perpetuity.]—Held, secondly, that two powers were vested in the trustees for the time being of the will—namely, (a) a power of paying either capital or income to E., which was valid, being capable of being exercised only during his life; (b) a power of applying either capital or income for the benefit of E., his wife or children, which was void, being capable of being exercised beyond the period allowed by law. Ib.

Life Rent with Alternative Powers of Disposal.]—A father bequeathed to the survivor of his children a share of the residue of his estate in life rent, with full power by mortis causa deed "to dispose of the same and direct the succession thereto in favour either of religious or charitable institutions one or more conducted according to Protestant principles or of any person or persons whom such survivor may appoint or partly in favour of such person or persons all in such terms and subject to such conditions as such survivor may think proper." The survivor exercised this power by a deed of directions in which he bequeathed this share of residue absolutely to his wife:—Held (Lord Johnston dissenting), that the power was valid and had been validly exercised. Bannerman's Trustees v. Bannerman, [1915] S. C. 398—Ct. of Sess.

Semble, that the power of disposal in favour of "religious or charitable institutions, conducted according to Protestant principles," was not void for uncertainty. Ib.

Change of Investment — Ademption of Appointed Share.]—A testatrix had under her marriage settlement a life interest in 900*l.* Government Three per Cent. Irish Consolidated Annuities, with power to appoint the same to her children. At the date of her will the annuities had been sold, and the proceeds invested in New Zealand bonds. By her will, after reciting that she was possessed of New Zealand bonds, amounting to the sum of 900*l.* or thereabouts, and bank and other shares, she bequeathed the New Zealand bonds and the shares to her daughter, not referring in any way to the settlement. The New Zealand bonds were afterwards sold, and the proceeds invested in Consols, and so remained at the date of her death:—Held, that the will was an appointment of the New Zealand bonds only, and that as they had ceased to form part of the trust funds at the death of the testatrix, when the will operated, the appointment failed, and the trust fund went as in default of appointment. Brazier Creagh's Trusts, In re; Holmes v. Langley, [1913] 1 Ir. III. EXECUTION BY DEVISE OR BEQUEST IN GENERAL TERMS OR REFERENCE TO POWER.

Exercise — Share of Income to Daughter while Unmarried — Reduced on Marriage — Codicil Altering Share of Income—Duration of Payment of Altered Share not Mentioned—Duration Fixed by Will Implied.] — By a codicil the testatrix, in exercise of a power of appointment contained in her marriage settlement, revoked "that part of my will which directs that two-thirds of my income shall be paid annually to my daughter Olive while unmarried, and directs that three-fourths — i.e. about 50*l.* — be paid her annually, and also the remaining 50*l.* should Evelyn die without children and Olive be unmarried at the time": Held, a gift of three-fourths of the income to Olive while she remained unmarried. Crichton's Settlement, In re; Sweetman v. Batty, 106 L. T. 588; 56 S. J. 398—Neville, J.

General Power—Personal Estate—Exercise of Power—Will—Bequest of Legacies—Insufficiency of Assets—Whether Appointment Extends to Debts as well as Legacies.]—Where the donee of a general power to appoint a fund by will gives pecuniary legacies and appoints executors, and his personal estate, without the aid of the fund, is insufficient for the payment of his debts and the legacies, he will be taken to have exercised the power to the extent necessary for payment not only of the legacies, but also of the debts. Hawthorn v. Shedden (25 L. J. Ch. 833; 3 Sm. & G. 293) followed and applied. Dictum of Wickens, V.C., in Davies's Trust, In re (41 L. J. Ch. 97, 99; L. Special Power—Exercise by Will—Gift of "all property which I have power to dispose of by will"—Donee Possessing Two Powers over Property and Life Interest in it—Rule as to Exercise of Special Power.] — The best mode of stating the rule as to the exercise of a special power of appointment is that there must be a sufficient expression or indication of intention in the will or other instrument alleged to exercise it, and either a reference to the power or a reference to the property subject to it constitutes in general a sufficient indication. Ackerley, In re; Chapman v. Andrew, 82 L. J. Ch. 260; [1913] 1 Ch. 510; 108 L. T. 712—Sargant, J.

A testatrix having a contingent general testamentary power of appointment over property in which she took a life interest, and also a special power of appointing the income of the property to her husband during his life, gave, devised, appointed, and bequeathed "all my estate property and effects whatsoever and wheresoever both real and personal which I have power to dispose of by my will" to her husband absolutely:—Held, that the will exercised in the husband's favour the special power of appointing the income to him, as well as the contingent general power. Richardson's Trusts, In re (17 L. R. Ir. 436), distinguished. Ib.

—— Exercise—Use of the Word "Appoint"—Indications of Contrary Intention.]—A testatrix who had a special power of appointment among her children gave, devised, bequeathed, and appointed all her real and personal estate not thereby otherwise disposed of (including all property over which she had a power of appointment) unto her trustees upon certain trusts, including a trust to pay the income to her husband for life, and after his decease in trust for all her children in equal shares:—Held, that the testatrix by dealing with all her property in the mass could not be considered to have shewn an intention to exercise her special power of appointment, although she used the word "appoint." Sanderson, In re; Sanderson v. Sanderson, 106 L. T. 26; 56 S. J. 291—Neville, J.

Appointment by Will during Coverture—Death after Determination of Coverture—Validity of Appointment.]—Where a marriage settlement contains a power of appointment "by will during the continuance of the intended coverture," notwithstanding that the death of the wife does not take place until after the determination of the coverture, the power is validly exercised by an appointment contained in a will executed by her before the determination of the coverture. Cooper v. Martin (L. IV. CONSTRUCTION AND EXTENT OF EXECUTION.

See also Vol. X. 1468, 1868.

Voluntary Conveyance—Ex post Facto Consideration.]—L. being seised in fee of lands, by a voluntary settlement executed in May, 1879, granted the lands to trustees to the use of L. for life, with remainder to the use of trustees of a term of 500 years, upon trust for raising portions for the younger children of the settlor, and subject thereto to the use of the first and other sons of L. successively in tail, with remainder to his first and other daughters in tail, with remainders over. The deed contained a power to L. to appoint to any woman he might marry for her life, or any less period, a rentcharge by way of jointure not exceeding 150*l.* a year, charged upon all or any of the premises. By a subsequent deed executed in August, 1879, and made in consideration of a marriage afterwards solemnised, after reciting the deed of May and the powers of jointuring therein contained, and reciting also an ante-nuptial agreement to create a rentcharge of 150*l.* from and after the solemnisation of the marriage by way of jointure during the life of the intended wife, and for that purpose to exercise the power of jointuring in the deed mentioned, L., in pursuance of the agreement, and in consideration of the intended marriage, and in exercise of the aforesaid power and of every or any other power in any wise him enabling, appointed to the intended wife and her assigns during her life a yearly rentcharge of 150*l.* in full of her jointure, to be charged upon the hereditaments comprised in the deed of May, 1879, payable in quarterly payments, the first payment to be made three months after the date of the solemnisation of the intended marriage:—Held, that the power contained in the settlement of May, 1879, did not authorise an appointment of a rentcharge to a wife to take effect in the lifetime of L. Held also, that the settlement of May, 1879, was not, on the ground of being voluntary, void as against the settlement of August so as to give effect to the rentcharge purported to be created by the latter settlement to commence from marriage, inasmuch as the marriage created an ex post facto consideration for the deed of May, and the children of the marriage were within such consideration. Greenwood v. Lutman, [1915] 1 Ir. R. 266—Barton, J.

Advancement—Protected Life Interest—Release of Life Interest to Effectuate Advancement — Non-forfeiture — Appointed Share — Power of Advancement Applicable to Appointed Share.]—Under a marriage settlement the husband received a protected life interest terminable upon his doing or suffering anything whereby it would become vested in some other person. The husband and wife were given power to appoint the trust funds among the children and to make provisions for advancement in the appointment. The settlement further contained an advancement clause to the exent of half a share of any child. The husband and wife appointed a share of the trust funds by deed to a son subject to their life interests. This appointment contained no provision for advancement. Subsequently the husband and wife authorised the trustees to advance the son half his appointed share under the advancement clause in the settlement, and released their life interests therein to give effect to the advancement:—Held, first, that the advancement clause in the settlement was applicable to the appointed share; and secondly, that the husband had not forfeited his protected life interest. Hodgson, In re: Weston v. Hodgson, 82 L. J. Ch. 31; [1913] 1 Ch. 34; 107 L. T. 607; 57 S. J. 112—Neville, J.

Power of Appointment among Nephews and Nieces and other Relations of Donee—Power of Selection—Default of Appointment—Class to Take and when to be Ascertained—Vesting.]—A testator bequeathed all his property to his wife in the first place, and after her death to his "lawful nephews and nieces, meaning such nephews and nieces and other relations as she deems fit and suitable." There was no gift in default of appointment. The testator's widow by her will left part of the property to two nieces, and part to a grand nephew. The remainder of the property was unappointed. The testator's only next-of-kin were nephews and nieces, some of whom died in the lifetime of his widow:—Held, first, that the power of appointment was a power of selection, and not a power of distribution, and that therefore the word "relations" was not confined to next-of-kin, and that the appointment to the grand nephew was good; and secondly, that the class to take in default of appointment was confined to nephews and nieces and other relations, if any, who were next-of-kin; and that members of the class were to be ascertained at the death of the testator, and took vested interests then. Gun, In re; Sheehy v. Nugent, [1915] 1 Ir. R. 42 M.R.

Special Power by Will or Deed—Appointment by Will among all the Objects Equally—Subsequent Appointments by Deed to Two of Several Objects of the Power—Ademption—Double Portions.] —The donee of a special power to appoint a fund amongst his children, grandchildren, or other issue, in exercise of the power by his will appointed the fund to be equally divided between the children of his second marriage. There were seven children of the second marriage. By irrevocable deeds-poll executed after the will he appointed one-seventh of the fund to each of two of the children of the second marriage:—Held, that the sums appointed, both by deed and by will, were portions for the purpose of applying the rule against double portions, and that the children to whom the appointments were made by deed were not entitled to share with the other children under the will. Peel's Settlement, In re; Biddulph v. Peel, 80 L. J. Ch. 574; [1911] 2 Ch. 165; 105 L. T. 330; 55 S. J. 580—Joyce, J.

Exercise of Power — Residuary Personal Estate—Proceeds of Sale of Real Estate not Included.] —A testator by his will devised real estate on trust for his daughter E. for life, and on her death for her children or remoter issue as she should appoint, and in default of appointment for her children at twenty-one or marriage. He gave his residuary estate on trust for sale and conversion, and gave the net proceeds of sale to his two daughters, of whom E. was one, her share being settled in the same way as the realty devised on trust for her. She married in his lifetime, and a portion of the real estate devised to her was settled on her. As regards the real estate settled on her the devise was inoperative, but some real estate was left on which the devise could operate. E. had six children, of whom S., a daughter, married. On her marriage her mother made an appointment in her favour of one-fifth of one-half of the residuary personal estate of the testator. At the date of the appointment E. was a trustee of the testator's will. The question was whether, having regard to the recitals in the deed-poll and subsequent marriage settlement of her daughter, the appointment was to be construed as an appointment not only of part of the residuary personal estate of the testator, but of part of the proceeds of sale of the real estate over which E. had a similar power of appointment:—Held, that, according to the true construction of the appointment and settlements, no part of the money arising from the sale of the real estate was included therein. Horsfall, In re; Hudleston v. Crofton, 80 L. J. Ch. 480; [1911] 2 Ch. 63; 104 L. T. 590—Parker, J.

Settlement—Mixed Fund of Personalty and Realty—Power of Appointment—Exercise of Power—No Words of Limitation—Equitable Estates Taken by Appointees—Estates for Life or in Fee — Intention of Appointor.] — In an appointment of real estate and of personalty, subject to a trust to re-invest in real estate, the omission of the customary words of limitation does not necessarily limit the appointment to that of a life estate. Where the estates dealt with are equitable estates and there is an apparent intention of the appointor to pass the whole interest, the appointees will take in fee-simple. And where the appointor has apparently distinguished between the personalty and realty by using the words "trust funds and property," and where the inference is that he intended the appointees to take the whole interest in the personalty, at any rate, the fact that the personalty is subject to a trust to re-invest in realty does not make it realty to the extent of rebutting this presumption. Monckton's Settlement, In re; Monckton v. Monckton (83 L. V. DEFECTIVE EXECUTION.

Power to be Exercised by Ante-nuptial Settlement with Consent of Trustees of Will—Post-nuptial Settlement Executed without Consent and in Ignorance of Power—Possession—Statute of Limitations.]—By a post-nuptial settlement made in 1877 between C., the wife, W., the husband, the trustees of their ante-nuptial settlement, reciting that C. and her husband in her right had become entitled to the absolute interest in certain lands known as the W. S. estate, a life estate in these lands was limited to W., if he survived C., with successive life estates to the three children of the marriage, with remainders to their children in tail. All the parties at the time erroneously believed that the estate had vested in C. for an absolute estate in fee-simple, as heiress-at-law of her grand-uncle. In fact, however, C.'s father, J., had survived this grand-uncle and was his heir-at-law, and as such the lands had vested in him for an estate in fee-simple in remainder subject to certain prior estates which subsequently determined. J. had died before C.'s marriage, having made a will by which he devised all his real estate to C. for life, with remainder to her first and other sons in tail male, and he empowered the trustees for the time being of his will, with the consent of C., to convey the lands by a settlement to be made on the occasion of her marriage to C. and her husband for their joint lives and the life of the survivor. The will contained provisions altering the limitations in favour of C.'s sons in case of her marriage with a husband entitled to real estate of certain value. The trustees of this will were not parties to the settlement of 1877. C. died in 1882, and W. thereupon entered into possession of the W. S. estate, and continued in possession until his death in 1905. The eldest son of the marriage had died in 1900, and on the death of W., the second son, R. (who was entitled to a life estate under the settlement and to an estate tail, if not barred by the Statute of Limitations, under the will), entered into possession. R. was entitled to an estate in certain other lands, and after his father's death he executed a disentailing deed which contained general words barring all his estates tail. He died in 1907, having made a will devising all his lands to his wife, through whom the plaintiffs claimed as assignees in her bankruptcy. On the death of R., the defendant, the third child of the marriage of W. and C., went into possession of the W. S. estate, she being entitled under the settlement to the next life estate. Until shortly before the bringing of the present action all parties believed that the settlement of 1877 was a valid settlement. The action sought a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to the W. S. estate in fee-simple, and an order that the defendant should deliver up possession to them, the plaintiffs claiming under the will of J. and through R. :—Held, that the settlement of 1877 was not a good execution of the power given by J.'s will, inasmuch as it was not executed on the occasion of C.'s marriage, and the trustees of that will were not parties to it; that the possession of W. was therefore wrongful, and that although having entered under the settlement he would have been estopped from repudiating any of the limitations created by it, his possession operated under the Statute of Limitations to extinguish the title of his eldest son to the estate tail given by J.'s will, and consequently also the title of R. to the subsequent estate tail under that will, and that the plaintiffs had no right to possession. Frazer v. Riversdale, [1913] 1 Ir. VI. FRAUDULENT APPOINTMENTS.

See also Vol. X. 1495, 1875.

Appointment Made on Condition.]—An appointment made in pursuance of a power given by a settlement in favour of objects of the power, subject to a defeasance in case a condition is performed, such condition not being one to be performed by the appointees, but to be performed if at all by third parties, over whose actions the appointees had no control, with the intention that upon the performance of the condition the funds should go upon the trusts limited by the settlement in default of appointment, is not invalid as being a fraud on the power, there being no intention to secure a benefit for some person not an object of the power. Perkins, In re; Perkins v. Bagot (62 L. J. Ch. 531; [1893] 1 Ch. 283), and Stroud v. Norman (23 L. J. Ch. 443; Kay, 313) distinguished. Vatcher v. Paull, 84 L. J. P.C. 86; [1915] A.C. 372; 112 L. T. 737—P.C.

Void Stipulation—Condition that Appointee should Pay off Debts of Appointor—Severance of Condition and Appointment.]—A testator bequeathed to his son a life interest in a fund, with power to appoint by will a life interest in the whole or any part of the income to any wife who might survive the appointor. The appointor exercised the power by appointing to his wife an annuity and (in case he should die insolvent) a further annuity; and he directed that the further annuity was to be paid to her only on condition that she spent a slightly smaller sum yearly in paying off the appointor's debts :—Held, that the appointment of the further annuity could not be severed from the condition, and that in respect of the further annuity the execution of the power was fraudulent and void. Cohen, In re; Brookes v. Cohen, 80 L. J. Ch. 208; [1911] 1 Ch. 37; 103 L. T. 626; 55 S. J. 11—Joyce, J.

Appointment Void or Voidable—Purchaser for Value without Notice—Legal Estate.]—An appointment under a common law power or a power operating under the Statute of Uses by which the legal estate has passed to the appointee is voidable only, and a purchaser for value with the legal estate and without notice is not affected by the fraudulent execution of the power; but a fraudulent appointment under an equitable power not operating so as to pass the legal estate or interest is void and a purchaser for value without notice, but without the legal title, can only rely on such equitable defences as are open to purchasers without the legal title who are subsequent in time against prior equitable titles. When no legal estate has passed there can be no ratification or confirmation of an appointment void in equity. Cloutte v. Storey, 80 L. J. Ch. 193; [1911] 1 Ch. 18; 103 L. T. 617—C.A.

VII. EXCESSIVE EXECUTION.

See also Vol. X. 1517, 1877.

Invalidity of Ultimate Appointment to an Object of the Power.]—The donee of a power of appointment among her three children appointed the property to a person not an object of the power for life, and after his decease to other persons not objects of the power, and in case none of the said persons should live to take the property, then she gave the same to an object of the power. Two of the persons who were not objects of the power, but in whose favour the testatrix purported to make an appointment, survived the testatrix :—Held, that the ultimate limitation to an object of the power, being dependent on the former void appointments, failed. Enever's Trusts, In re; Power v. Power, [1912] 1 Ir. R. 511—Ross, J.

Objects and Non-objects—Ascertainment at Period of Distribution—Severance—Valid Appointment quoad Objects.]—The donee of a power to appoint a fund in favour of her own children or issue living at her death appointed the fund among such of her children as should attain the age of twenty-one years or being daughters should marry under that age, but she directed that the share of any daughter should be held on trust for such daughter for life, and that after the death of such daughter the share should be held (in default of and subject to a power of appointment which was invalid) in trust for the child or children of such daughter who should attain the age of twenty-one years or being daughters should marry under that age:—Held, that the appointment to the children of a daughter was not invalid in toto, but only as regards such of the appointees as were not living at the death of the donee of the power, and that on the death of the daughter her funds must be divided into as many shares as there were members of the appointed class, and that each appointee who was living at the death of the donee of the power would take one share of the fund, while the remaining shares would go under the original appointment to the daughter absolutely. Sadler v. Pratt (5 Sim. 632), Harvey v. Stracey (22 L. J. Ch. 23; 1 Drew. 73), and Farncombe's Trusts, In re (47 L. J. Ch. 328; 9 Ch. D. 652), followed. Witty, In re; Wright v. Robinson, 83 L. J. Ch. 73; [1913] 2 Ch. 666; 109 L. T. 590; 58 S. Delegation of Power—Invalidity.]—A testator, by his will, settled a fund upon trust for his daughter for her life, with remainder to her issue, "for such interests in such proportions and in such manner in all respects as she should by deed or will appoint." The daughter, by her will, in exercise of this power of appointment, appointed the trust fund to trustees in trust for her children equally, and in trust to pay to each child the income of its share for the period of twenty-one years from the testatrix's death; and if any child should die within this period, without leaving issue and without exercising a general power of appointment given to it by the will, its share was to accrue to the shares of the other children. Any child leaving issue or surviving the period, took absolutely. The testatrix further empowered the trustees, in their absolute discretion, at any time during the period, to transfer the share of any son who should attain twenty-one, or any part of it, to him:—Held, that this power was a delegation by the testatrix of her power over the devolution of the estate, and was therefore invalid. Joicey, In re; Joicey v. Elliott, 84 L. J. Ch. 613; [1915] 2 Ch. 115; 113 L. T. 437—C.A.

Quære, whether a power of advancement might be delegated. Ib.

Unauthorised Conditions—Severance of Condition from Appointment—Validity of Appointment.]—Where A had a power of appointment by will in favour of her husband over certain funds "upon such conditions and with such restrictions as she should think fit," and she appointed by will the income of the funds to her husband during his life for his absolute use, provided that he should acquiesce in the several dispositions contained in her will and pay certain annuities to her nieces, and she left the residue of her own personal estate to her husband,—Held, first, that the desire of the testatrix to benefit her husband was the real motive and object of the appointment; and secondly, that the appointment was good, but the condition imposed upon the husband was nugatory. Perkins, In re; Perkins v. Bagot (62 L. J. Ch. 531; [1893] 1 Ch. 283), and Cohen, In re; Brookes v. Cohen (80 L. J. Ch. 208; [1911] 1 Ch. 37), distinguished. Holland, In re; Holland v. Clapton, 84 L. J. Ch. 389; [1914] 2 Ch. 595; 112 L. T. 27—Sargant, J.

The question whether such conditions as these can be disregarded, or whether they render the appointment itself void, is one of fact and of inference rather than of law. Ib.

Maintenance of Infant — Infants Contingently Entitled—Delegation of Discretionary Power — Maintenance out of Appointed Share.]—An attempt by the donee of a power of appointment amongst children to empower trustees to apply the income of expectant shares of the appointed fund towards the maintenance of the children is void as amounting to a delegation of the power. Greenslade, In re; Greenslade v. McCowen, 84 L. Semble, the provisions for maintenance and education and for advancement usually inserted in settlements do not in general apply to an appointed share, such share being by the appointment withdrawn from the general operation of the settlement. Ib.

VIII. REVOCATION AND NEW APPOINTMENT.

See also Vol. X. 1565. 1881.

Release and Revocation — Benefit of Appointor—Fiduciary Relation—Validity.]—By a marriage settlement the husband and wife settled trust funds, including two policies of life assurance, upon trust for the wife for life, and then for the husband for life, and then to the children, as they should by deed, with or without power of revocation, jointly appoint, and subject thereto as the survivor should by deed or will appoint. The settlement contained a covenant by the husband to pay the premiums on the policies, and a power to the trustees, with the consent of the wife, to apply the income or capital of the trust funds for the same purpose at their discretion. The husband and wife by deed jointly appointed the settlement funds subject to their life interests upon trust for their only child for life and then for her children, reserving a power of revocation thereunder to the husband and wife or the survivor. Upon the death of the husband the widow, who had for some years paid the premiums on the policies, claimed a lien on the policy moneys for the amount so paid :—Held, that the wife had paid the premiums voluntarily, and had no lien on the policy moneys. The wife and her daughter (who was a spinster) wrote to the trustees that if she was not entitled as of right to a lien on the policy moneys she would revoke the existing appointment to the daughter and release her power of appointing other than to the daughter, and then would direct repayment of the premiums by the trustees to her out of the policy moneys :—Held, that the power to revoke was a fiduciary power, and could not be exercised otherwise than in accordance with the purpose and objects of the original power; and that the trustees ought not to pay upon a revocation, release, and request made with the avowed object of benefiting the appointor. Leslie, In re; Leslie v. French (52 L. J. Ch. 762; 23 Ch. D. 552), discussed. Somes, In re; Somes v. Somes (65 L. J. Ch. 262; [1896] 1 Ch. 250), distinguished. Jones's Settlement, In re; Stunt v. Jones, 84 L. J. Power to Tenants for Life Jointly by Deed and to Survivor by Will—Joint Appointment—Power to Both or Survivor to Revoke by Deed—Revocation and New Appointment by Survivor by Deed.]—By a marriage settlement a power of appointment over real and personal property was given to the husband and wife during their joint lives by deed with or without power of revocation and new appointment, and in default of such appointment a power of appointment by will or codicil was given to the survivor. By a deed-poll of 1889 they exercised the power, reserving to themselves or the survivor of them the power to revoke by deed the appointment thereby made. By a deed-poll of 1910 the survivor purported to revoke such appointment and to make a new appointment :—Held, that the revocation was valid, but that the new appointment was invalid. Weightman's Settlement, In re; Astle v. Wainwright, 84 L. Power to Appoint Clear of all Charges and Outgoings whatsoever — Liability to Estate Duty.]—In exercise of a power under a settlement whereby C. was empowered to appoint by way of jointure to his wife an annual sum not exceeding 3,000*l.* clear of all charges and outgoings whatsoever, C. executed a settlement appointing the said sum, not expressly clear of all charges and outgoings. On the death of C.,—Held, that the jointure so appointed was clear of all charges and outgoings, and therefore free from estate duty. Cadogan's (Earl) Settlements, In re; Richmond v. Lambton, 56 S. Joinder of Defendants—Action for Libel—Severing Damages.] — The plaintiff claimed damages in respect of a libel from two defendants who joined in their defence. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, assessing the damages at 500*l.*—495*l.* against one defendant and 5*l.* against the other:—Held, that the jury had no power in such a case to sever the damages and that judgment was properly entered for 500*l.* against both defendants. Damiens v. Modern Society, Lim., 27 T. L. R. 164—Grantham, J.

—— Separate Causes of Action — Alternative Relief — Several Defendants.] — Rule 4 of Order XVI.—which provides that "all persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative"—when read in connection with rule 1 of that Order, is not confined in its operation to joinder of parties, but extends also to joinder of causes of action, so that persons may now be joined as defendants who are alleged to be liable in respect of causes of action which are not necessarily limited to the same exact state of facts, contracts, and circumstances as shewing liability, and in respect of which relief is claimed by the plaintiff in the alternative. Compañia Sansinena v. Houlder, 79 L. —— Claim for Damages.]—The plaintiff had a right of way over a certain lane. The defendants were severally the occupiers of two sets of premises approached by the lane, and the plaintiff alleged that the heavy traffic brought by them along the lane caused vibration which caused cracks to appear in his house, that the noise of the waggons creaking and grating on his garden wall constituted a nuisance, that the surface of the lane was cut up and his right of way interfered with, and that on two occasions his wall had been knocked down by the waggons. The plaintiff claimed an injunction and damages against both defendants:—Held, that the action could not be maintained in this form, and that one of the defendants must be struck out. Munday v. South Metropolitan Electric Light Co., 57 S. —— "Necessary or proper" Party to Action against Person within Jurisdiction—Parties—Joinder of Defendant — Separate Cause of Action—Similar Circumstances.]—The alteration made in 1896 in Order XVI. rule 1, by virtue of which it has been made to allow of the joinder in one action of plaintiffs having separate causes of action arising out of the same transaction and involving any common question of law or fact, is not limited to that rule, but extends by implication to the other rules of that Order; and, consequently, under rule 4 persons may now be joined as defendants in one action in respect of separate causes of action arising out of the same transaction and involving some common question of law or fact. *Oesterreichische Export vorm. By a contract of marine insurance made at Antwerp in the French language between the plaintiffs, merchants in Vienna, and two insurance companies, the B. Co., which was registered in England, and the S. Co., which was registered in Scotland, goods of the plaintiffs were insured on transit from Vienna to Valparaiso via Antwerp for 1,690 francs. In the contract it was declared that the companies insured respectively the amounts or parts stated by each of them at the foot of the contract, and at the foot of the contract appeared the names of the two companies, each being described as "of London," the sum of "845 francs" written opposite the name of each company together with a statement that the companies insured in halves for the total sum, and the signature of the contract by the common general agents of the two companies on their behalf. Both the companies had a common office and secretary in London, from that office all the letters from both companies relating to the insurance were written, and in these letters that office was described as the "head office" of both companies. The plaintiffs having issued a writ of summons against both companies in respect of alleged losses under the contract, and having served it upon the B. Co. within the jurisdiction, applied, under Order XI. rule 1 (g) for leave to serve it upon the S. Co. out of the jurisdiction in Scotland:—Held, that, even though under the contract the two companies were only severally liable for separate moieties of the total sum insured, and that the plaintiffs' cause of action against the S. Co. was separate from his cause of action against the B. Co., yet, the circumstances in which the causes of action respectively arose being similar, the S. Co. might be joined as defendants in the action against the B. Co. under Order XVI. rule 4; and, that being so, that the S. Co. were "proper" parties to the action against the B. Co. within the jurisdiction within the meaning of Order XI. rule 1 (g), and therefore that service upon them out of the jurisdiction might be allowed under that sub-rule. Ib.

b. Unauthorised Proceedings.

Action Brought in Name of Company without Authority—Stay—Costs.]—The defendant and O. were the sole directors of and holders of an equal number of shares in the plaintiff company. O. alleged that the defendant as a director was doing something which was injurious to the company, and thereupon an action was brought against him in the name of the company, at the instance of O., asking for his removal from the office of director, and in the alternative for an injunction restraining him from dealing with or so conducting the company's business as to injure or jeopardise its goodwill. There had been no resolution of the company or directors authorising the bringing of the action, and from the constitution of the board it was known that no authority could be obtained :—Held, on motion by the defendants, that the name of the company should be struck out as plaintiffs, and that the action should be stayed; and, further, that the plaintiffs' solicitors should be ordered to pay the costs of the action. West End Hotels Syndicate v. Bayer, 29 T. c. Adding Parties.

Revivor—Summons to Add Plaintiffs—Consent.]—A person cannot be added as plaintiff in an action without the consent of the plaintiff on the record. Pennington v. Cayley (No. 1), 106 L. T. 591—Neville, J.

—— Evidence Required on Summons.] — Semble, an application to carry on proceedings under Order XVII. rule 4, if made by summons, instead of by petition or motion of course, must be supported by evidence. Ib.

Foreclosure Action—Plaintiff Trustees — Foreclosure Absolute — New Trustees after Foreclosure—Re-opening Foreclosure—Revivor —Addition of Parties—Notice of Intention to Proceed.] — The public officer and estate trustees of an insurance company brought a foreclosure action against a mortgagor and subsequent incumbrancers, and an order for foreclosure was made absolute in 1907. Two of the trustees died after that date, and new trustees were appointed in their places. W., one of the defendants to the action, desired to re-open the foreclosure, and presented a petition of course for an order of revivor. An order was made in chambers that all future proceedings should be carried on between W. as plaintiff and the surviving defendants and all the present trustees as defendants :—Held, on a motion to discharge that order, that under the modern practice there could not be a revivor, and that W. should have applied to the trustees for their consent to the new trustees being added as plaintiffs, and that in the event of their refusal W. should have applied under Order XVII. rule 4 to have them added as defendants. Pennington v. Cayley (No. 2), 81 L. J. Ch. 522; [1912] 2 Ch. 236; 107 L. T. 116; 56 S. J. 550—Swinfen Eady, J.

Tenant Added by Amendment as Co-plaintiff with Reversioner.] — Where the gist of an action was whether a house had been rendered unfit for habitation by the erection of the garage, as no new course of action was sought to be substituted, an amendment on the usual terms as to costs was allowed in order to add a tenant as co-plaintiff. Walcott v. Lyons (54 L. Beneficiaries against Trustees — Trustees Nominal Defendants.] — An objection as to parties raised by a defendant—where other defendants who were trustees had the legal estate, and the claim was by beneficiaries under the trust to have a transaction, purporting to be a sale, declared to be a mortgage, with power in the trustees to redeem—that such defendant trustees ought to be co-plaintiffs with the beneficiaries, was successfully sustained at the trial, although not raised in the defence of the objecting defendant. Walters v. Green (68 L. J. Ch. 730; [1899] 2 Ch. 696) and Chili Republic v. Rothschild ([1891] W. One Person Suing for Others having same Interest — Joint Contract.] — By Order XVI. rule 9 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, "Where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one cause or matter, one or more of such persons may sue or be sued, or may be authorised by the Court or a Judge to defend in such cause or matter, on behalf or for the benefit of all persons so interested" :—Held, that under the above rule, where a contract has been jointly made by numerous persons as co-contractors, one of the co-contractors may, in a representative capacity, on behalf and for the benefit of all the co-contractors, sue the other parties to the contract. Janson v. Property Insurance Co., 19 Com. Cas. 36; 58 S. J. 84; 30 T. L. R. 49—Horridge, J.

Action of Debt against Unincorporated Society — Order Authorising One or More to Defend on Behalf of All.]—Order XVI. rule 9 provides that "Where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one cause or matter, one or more of such persons may sue or be sued, or may be authorised by the Court or a Judge to defend in such cause or matter, on behalf or for the benefit of all persons so interested." In a common law action of debt for services rendered the plaintiff sued four named defendants "on their own behalf and on behalf of all other members" of an unincorporated religious society, the majority of the members of which were resident abroad. After the defendants had delivered a defence, the plaintiff, with a view to binding the society and its property, issued a summons under Order XVI. rule 9, asking that the writ and all subsequent proceedings be amended by describing the defendants as being "sued on their own behalf and on behalf of all other members of" the society, and further asking that, "as the members of the said order are numerous and the above-named defendants are some of them, they be directed to defend the action on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested." The four defendants were not trustees of the society, and the plaintiff did not claim by his writ any declaration of right as between himself and all the members of the society:—Held, that the case did not fall within the provisions of Order XVI. rule 9, and the plaintiff was not entitled to an order making the defendants representative of the society. Walker v. Sur, 83 L. J. K.B. 1188; [1914] 2 K.B. 930; 109 L. T. 888; 30 T. L. R. 171—C.A.

"Persons having same interest"—Action on Behalf of Shippers of Goods on General Ship.] —A vessel of the defendants, while carrying a general cargo on a voyage to Japan during the Russo-Japanese war, was sunk by a Russian cruiser for carrying contraband of war. The plaintiffs, who had shipped goods on board, commenced an action against the defendants by issuing a writ "on behalf of themselves and others owners of cargo lately laden on board" the vessel. The claim indorsed on the writ was for "damages for breach of contract and duty in and about the carriage of goods by sea." The defendants took out a summons for an order to set aside the writ on the ground that the case was not one to which Order XVI. rule 9, allowing plaintiffs to sue in a representative character, was applicable. It was stated on behalf of the plaintiffs that they desired to represent shippers of non-contraband goods only, and that the breach of contract and duty of which they complained consisted in the carrying of contraband of war, whereby the vessel was rendered liable to capture:—Held (Buckley, L.J., dissenting), that the writ ought to be set aside, even though it could be treated as amended by limiting the representation to all the owners of cargo not being shippers of goods which were contraband of war; for the plaintiffs and those whom they desired to represent were not "persons having the same interest in one cause or matter" within the meaning of Order XVI. rule 9. Markt v. Knight Steamships Co., 79 L. J. K.B. 939; [1910] 2 K.B. 1021; 103 L. T. 369; 11 Asp. M.C. 460—C.A.

Society — Right to Sue — Under-lease to Society—Forfeiture of Head-lease—Claim of Society to a Vesting Order.]—A member of an unregistered society purported to take an under-lease for and on behalf of his society. On the head-lease being forfeited for breach of covenant the trustees of the society, suing on behalf of the members, brought this action for an order vesting the premises in them for the residue of the term of the under-lease under section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue. Jarrott v. Ackerley, 59 S. J. 509—Eve, J.

II. ACTION FOR DECLARATION.

Action to Declare Rights of Parties—Jurisdiction—Coal Mine—Minimum Wage—Award of Joint District Board.] — The plaintiffs brought an action asking for a declaration of the rights of the parties under an award made by a joint district board under the powers conferred on the board by the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912, s. 2, sub-s. 5, subdividing their district into parts and fixing the minimum wage in each subdivision:—Held, that the Court, to the extent of declaring such rights, had jurisdiction to try the action, by reason of the provisions of Order XXV. rule 5 of the Rules of the Supreme Court. Lofthouse Colliery v. Ogden, 82 L. J. K.B. 910; [1913] 3 K.B. 120; 107 L. T. 827; 57 S. J. 186; 29 T. L. R. 179—Bailhache, J.

No Claim for Consequential Relief.] — Assuming that Order XXV. rule 5 purports to give the Court jurisdiction to make a declaration in favour of a plaintiff who has no cause of action, it is not to that extent ultra vires of the Judicature Acts, 1873 and 1875 (Buckley, L.J., dissenting). Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Hannay & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1465; [1915] 2 K.B. 536; 113 L. T. 98—C.A. Affirming 59 S. J. 302—Bailhache, J.

Under Order XXV. rule 5 the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a claim by a plaintiff for a mere declaration, though he does not and cannot claim any consequential relief, and though the declaration relates not to any alleged right of the plaintiff, but to the alleged non-existence of an obligation of the plaintiff towards the defendant (Buckley, L.J., dissenting). Ib.

A firm of cotton brokers in the United States, having sold certain quantities of cotton to the defendants, who were cotton brokers in England, afterwards sold the bills of exchange which they had drawn upon the defendants in respect of these quantities of cotton to the plaintiffs, who were bankers carrying on business and having offices in the United States and in England. The plaintiffs, who acted throughout in good faith, presented the bills of exchange to the defendants for acceptance with the bills of lading attached, and the defendants accepted and in due course paid them. The defendants subsequently alleged that some of the bills of lading had been forged, and that no cotton had in fact passed under them, and they brought an action against the plaintiffs in the United States to recover the amount paid by them on one of these bills of exchange, on the ground that the plaintiffs, by presenting it for acceptance with the bill of lading attached, had warranted the genuineness of the bill of lading. That action was awaiting a new trial. The United States Courts had expressed the opinion, and the defendants admitted, that the question of law which formed the only issue in that action was governed by English law, and it was admitted that that action might have been brought in England. In these circumstances the plaintiffs brought the present action in England against the defendants, claiming a declaration that the plaintiffs did not, by presenting the bills of exchange to which the bills of lading allege to have been forged were attached, warrant that these bills of lading were genuine, or that the cotton therein described had been shipped; and an injunction to restrain the defendants from further prosecuting the action against the plaintiffs in the United States or from instituting any other action against the plaintiffs in the United States to recover any moneys paid by the defendants in respect of any of the other bills of exchange. The defendants made an interlocutory application under Order XXV. rule 4 to strike out the indorsement on the writ for the declaration as disclosing no cause of action, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction under rule 5 of that Order or otherwise to make a declaration in favour of a plaintiff who had no cause of action:—Held (Buckley, L.J., dissenting), that the indorsement on the writ should not be struck out, and that the application should be dismissed. Ib.

III. JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.

Action by Foreign Company for Balance of Account—Application by Defendants to Join Claim for Damages for Libel to Counterclaim.]—The plaintiffs, a Canadian company, sued the defendants, claiming for losses and balance of account under an agreement of re-insurance. The defendants put in a defence and counterclaimed for rescission and for damages for breach of contract. They afterwards applied for leave to add to their counterclaim a claim for damages for libel:—Held, that this application must be refused. Factories Insurance Co. v. Anglo-Scottish General Commercial Insurance Co., 29 T. Claims by Plaintiff as Executor—Claims by Plaintiff Personally.]—By rule 5 of Order XVIII. "claims by . . . an executor . . . as such may be joined with claims by . . . him personally, provided the last-mentioned claims are alleged to arise with reference to the estate in respect of which the plaintiff . . . sues . . . as executor." A plaintiff by his writ claimed in his personal capacity 4*l.* 10*s.* as arrears of rent, and also for possession of certain premises, and, as executor, he claimed 9*l.* as arrears of rent due to his testator's estate in respect of the same premises:—Held, that by reason of rule 5 of Order XVIII. there was a misjoinder of causes of action, and the plaintiff must be put to his election within fourteen days with which cause of action he would proceed. Tredegar (Lord) v. Roberts, 83 L. J. K.B. 159; [1914] 1 K.B. 283; 109 L. T. 731; 58 S. J. 118—C.A.

Specially Indorsed Writ — Action for Recovery of Land.]—A testator's executors brought an action against the defendant, to whom the testator had let certain premises for three years from December 25, 1908, and then from year to year, to recover possession of the premises. Due notice to quit had been given by the plaintiffs to the defendant, and such notice had expired. The writ in the action was specially indorsed under Order III. rule 6 (F):—Held, that the plaintiffs could properly proceed by specially indorsed writ under Order III. rule 6 (F). Casey v. Hellyer (55 L. Foreign Corporation—Residence Within the Jurisdiction—Carrying on Business—Fixed Place of Business—Agent—Head Officer.]—A foreign corporation may be served with a writ of summons under Order IX. rule 8, if, although they are not tenants of any place of business within the jurisdiction, the Court is of opinion that they carry on business at a fixed place in this country which may be said to be their place of business, as, for example, by an agent for the sale of their goods who is paid by commission and who rents an office in the City of London, on the door of which the corporation's name is painted, and where he performs every operation involved in the sale of their goods in this country. And such agent is a "head officer," within the meaning of the rule, on whom service may properly be effected. Saccharin Corporation v. Chemische Fabrik von Heyden Actiengesellschaft, 80 L. J. K.B. 1117; [1911] 2 K.B. 516; 104 L. T. 886—C.A.

In order that a foreign corporation may be liable to be sued in this country by reason of the fact that it has a business residence here, it is necessary that the business carried on by its agents within the jurisdiction should be the business of the corporation. It is not sufficient that the corporation's agents are merely doing work ancillary to the business of the corporation. Allison v. Independent Press Cable Association, 28 T. L. R. 128—C.A.

—— Agent—Authority to Contract—Carrying on Business.]—A foreign corporation incorporated in Sweden employed as its sole agents in this country a firm of general merchants in London. The agents submitted orders to the principals for approval and accepted such orders on their behalf when approved, but had no general authority to enter into contracts. The goods were shipped direct from Sweden to the purchasers, but payment was sometimes received by the agents in London and remitted to the principals, less commission:—Held, that the foreign corporation was not carrying on business by its agents in London, but only carried on business abroad through its agents in London, and was therefore not resident within the jurisdiction. Okura v. Forsbacka Jernverks Aktiebolag, 83 L. J. K.B. 561; [1914] 1 K.B. 715; 110 L. T. 464; 58 S. J. 232; 30 T. L. R. 242—C.A.

Service of a writ on a member of the firm of agents at their London office,—Held, not to be good service on the foreign corporation, and ordered to be set aside. Ib.

Where an agent in carrying on business within the jurisdiction on behalf of a foreign corporation makes contracts for the foreign corporation, and does not merely sell contracts with the foreign corporation, the foreign corporation carries on business within the jurisdiction, and service of a writ against it may be properly effected by service upon its agent. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co. v. Societa di Navigazione a Vapore del Lloyd Austriaco, 111 L. Colonial Defendant—Colonial Railway Company—London Committee for Raising Capital—Residence within the Jurisdiction—Carrying on Business within the Jurisdiction.] — The defendant company was a Canadian railway company incorporated and having its offices in Canada, where the meetings of its board of directors were held. By the by-laws of the company those of the directors who resided in England constituted a London committee which, under the direction of the board, had a general supervision of the finances of the company and might make investments of its funds and issues of its capital, and which had a chairman, secretary, and staff paid by the company. The committee met at an office in London, which was lent to them by its owners rent free, and on the door of which the name of the company was written. The committee had in all cases advised the board in what form the capital of the company should be issued, and all the capital, consisting of mortgage bonds and debenture stock, had been issued by the committee in England subject to the control of the board. Circulars and prospectuses relating to these issues were sent out from the London office, and coupons on the bonds were paid there. The company had a bank account in London into which the proceeds of the issues of capital were paid and out of which small sums required by the committee were drawn. The plaintiffs, having brought an action in England against the defendant company, served the writ upon the secretary of the London committee at the office in London:—Held, that the company by its London committee was resident and carried on business within the jurisdiction and that the service of the writ upon the secretary of the London committee was a valid service upon the company under Order IX. rule 8. Aktiesselskabet Dampskib "Hercules" v. Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, 81 L. J. K.B. 189; [1912] 1 K.B. 222; 105 L. T. 695; 56 S. J. 51; 28 T. L. R. 28—C.A.

Alien Enemy Bankers—Branch in London—Service of Writ of Branch — Execution — Whether Leave Necessary.] — The plaintiffs were English solicitors and the defendants were bankers in Berlin. The plaintiffs had an account with the Berlin office of the defendants, who had also a branch in London. On August 1, 1914, the plaintiffs had a credit balance. On August 4 war broke out between England and Germany. On August 10 a licence under the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, was issued to the branch to carry on business. On August 27 the plaintiffs issued a writ for the amount of the balance and it was served on the branch, and an appearance was entered by the defendants:—Held, that the service was good, and as it was therefore no answer to the claim to say that it could not be discharged by the branch the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment, and that as the Courts (Emergency) Powers) Act, 1914, did not apply in the case of alien enemies it was not necessary to ask for leave to issue execution. Leader, Plunkett & Leader v. Disconto-Gesellschaft, 59 S. c. Service out of the Jurisdiction.

Action Properly Brought against Person within Jurisdiction — Colourable Joinder of Parties—Discontinuance of Action against Defendant within Jurisdiction.]—To justify the exercise of the power to allow service of a writ out of the jurisdiction under the Irish Order XI. rule 1 (h) [corresponding to Order XI. rule 1 (g)] the person served within the jurisdiction must be one against whom relief is bona fide sought by the plaintiff, and not a person, colourably joined for the purpose of effecting service out of the jurisdiction under the Order, against whom the plaintiff has no real cause of action, and against whom the action is discontinued before trial. In a case of colourable joinder, even though an unconditional appearance had been entered by the defendant out of the jurisdiction, the Court upon the discontinuance of the action against the sole defendant within the jurisdiction, stayed all further proceedings in the action on the ground that it was an abuse of the rule. Sharples v. Eason, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 436—C.A. S.P. Ross v. Eason, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 459—C.A.

Foreclosure Summons—Action Founded on Contract.]—An action to foreclose a mortgage of personalty, containing the usual covenant to repay, brought by the original mortgagee against the original mortgagors is not an action "founded on any breach of contract" within Order XI. rule 1 (e), and the Court cannot therefore allow service of the writ of summons on the mortgagors out of the jurisdiction. Hughes v. Oxenham, 82 L. J. Ch. 155; [1913] 1 Ch. 254; 108 L. T. 316; 57 S. J. 158—C.A.

Co-defendants—Tort—Principal and Agent.]—W., who was resident in England, wrote a number of libels concerning C., who was resident in Ireland, and employed H., a bill poster, also resident in Ireland, to post, publish, and circulate them in the vicinty of C.'s residence. In an action by C. against W. and H. for damages for the libel, H. being served in Ireland, and there being, in the opinion of the Court, no ground for alleging that he was not bona fide made a defendant,—Held, that a concurrent writ was properly ordered to be served on W. in England. Ross v. Eason ([1911] 2 Ir. Action to Recover Expenses of Extraordinary Traffic.]—An action brought to recover extraordinary expenses necessary for repairing roads by reason of damage caused by excessive user of the roads from the person liable to recoup such expenses, is not within any of the classes of action enumerated in Order XI. rule 1, and, consequently, where the person sought to be charged in an intended action is resident out of the jurisdiction, leave of the Court to issue and serve a writ of summons out of the jurisdiction will not be allowed:—So held by Holmes, L.J., and Cherry, L.J. (the Lord Chancellor dissenting). Clare County Council v. Wilson, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 89—C.A.

Action to Perpetuate Testimony — Land within Jurisdiction.]—The Court will not give leave under Order XI. rule 1 (a) for the writ in an action to perpetuate testimony to be served out of the jurisdiction. The fact that it is intended ultimately to use the testimony in question solely in connection with land "situate within the jurisdiction" does not render such an action one in which "the whole subject-matter of the action is land situate within the jurisdiction," within the meaning of the rule. Slingsby v. Slingsby, 81 L. Breach within Jurisdiction of Contract made in Isle of Man.]—A trader, resident and carrying on business in the Isle of Man, ordered goods from a company carrying on business in Ireland, through the company's traveller. From transactions between the trader and the company, it appeared that upon such orders goods were supplied by the company directly to the trader, and payment was made by the latter by cash order sent directly to the company in Ireland. Upon an application by the company for liberty to serve the trader out of the jurisdiction with a writ of summons for the price of goods sold to him through the company's traveller, liberty to do so was granted on the ground that, having regard to the course of dealing between the parties, the intended action was founded on a breach within the Irish Court's jurisdiction of the contract made by the company's agent. O'Mara, Lim. v. Dodd, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 55—Kenny, J.

Foreign Partnership Sued in Firm Name —Partnership not Carrying on Business within the Jurisdiction—Lex Domicilii or Lex Fori.]—A foreign partnership not carrying on business within the jurisdiction cannot be sued in its firm name. Where, therefore, service was effected out of the jurisdiction on a French partnership or société en nom collectif, as such, in proceedings commenced against the firm in its firm name, the Court set aside the service and discharged an order which had been obtained ex parte giving leave to serve notice of a concurrent writ on the firm out of the jurisdiction, although there was evidence that according to French law the firm was a separate person for the purpose of service of legal proceedings. The lex fori and not the lex domilicii applies in such a case. Von Hellfeld v. Rechnitzer, 83 L. J. Ch. 521; [1914] 1 Ch. 748; 110 L. T. 877; 58 S. J. 414—C.A.

Indorsement of Service within Three Days —Judgment by Default—Non-compliance with Rule—Irregularity.]—The indorsement on a writ of summons on the day of the month and week of the service thereof within three days of such service, required by Order IX. rule 15, is a condition precedent to the right of the plaintiff to proceed by default, and is not a mere irregularity which can be waived by the defendant or remedied under Order LXX. rule 2. Hamp-Adams v. Hall, 80 L. J. K.B. 1341; [1911] 2 K.B. 942; 105 L. T. 326; 55 S. J. 647; 27 T. L. R. 531—C.A.

VI. JUDGMENT UNDER ORDER XIV.

See also Vol. XI. 208, 1767.

Application for Judgment—Affidavit in Support by "other person who can swear positively to the facts"—Affidavit by Clerk in London Office as to Transactions in other Places — Sufficiency.]—The plaintiffs, who carried on business in London and many other parts of the country as producers of and dealers in cinematograph films and other requisites, issued a specially indorsed writ against the defendants, who were the owners of cinematograph theatres in many places throughout the country, claiming a specific sum for balance of account for parcels of goods sold and delivered and goods hired out by the plaintiffs from various of their places of business to the defendants at various of their theatres in different places. An application by the plaintiffs for leave to sign judgment under Order XIV. was supported by an affidavit made by a clerk in the employment of the plaintiffs at their place of business in London, in which he stated that the defendants were justly and truly indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum claimed for balance of account for goods sold and delivered and for hire of goods, that he verily believed that there was no defence to the action, that he was in the employ of the plaintiffs and duly authorised by them to make the affidavit, and that it was within his knowledge that the aforesaid debt was incurred and for the consideration above stated:—Held, that the deponent was a person who could "swear positively to the facts" within the meaning of Order XIV. rule 1, and that the affidavit was sufficient under that rule. Pathé Frères Cinema v. United Electric Theatres, 84 L. J. K.B. 245; [1914] 3 K.B. 1253; 112 L. T. 20; 58 S. J. 797; 30 T. L. R. 670—C.A.

"Person who can swear positively to the facts" — Affidavit Based on Information and Belief — Jurisdiction — Order for Payment of Costs Forthwith.]—An application for summary judgment under Order XIV. in an action for money received by the defendants for the use of the plaintiffs was supported by an affidavit made by the plaintiffs' manager. The deponent stated that certain cheques payable to the plaintiffs, the proceeds of which formed part of the claim, were handed to the plaintiffs' cashier for payment into the plaintiff's bank, but that the cashier never paid the cheques into the plaintiffs' bank, and that the deponent was informed and believed that the cheques came into the possession of the defendants, who passed them through their own banking account and received the proceeds thereof. The deponent further stated that he has ascertained from the drawers of the cheques that they had been paid into the account of the defendants:—Held (dubitante Kennedy, L.J.), that there was no jurisdiction to make an order for summary judgment, as the affidavit did not satisfy the requirements of Order XIV. rule 1, being made by a person other than the plaintiff, who could not swear positively to the facts verifying the cause of action, and that therefore the application should be dismissed; and, further, that under rule 9 (b) the plaintiffs should be ordered to pay the defendants' costs forthwith. Symon v. Palmer's Stores, 81 L. J. K.B. 439; [1912] 1 K.B. 259; 106 L. T. 176—C.A.

a. Payment of Money into and out of Court.

Payment into Court—By One Defendant—Joint Cause of Action against Several Defendants—Money taken out by Plaintiff in Satisfaction of Claim.]—Where several defendants are sued on a joint cause of action and one of them pays money into Court in satisfaction of the claim, the plaintiff, if he takes the money out of Court, there and then puts an end to the whole cause of action, and in a proper case he may be ordered to pay the costs of the other defendants who were not responsible for payment in. Beadon v. Capital Syndicate, 56 S. J. 536; 28 T. L. R. 427—C.A.

—— Denial of Liability—Costs—Damages in Lieu of Injunction.]—Where the defendant's shops curved away from the private road the defendant erected a pilaster, which at a height of twelve feet overhung the private road to the extent of twenty inches. The plaintiff asked for a mandatory injunction to remove the pilaster. The defendant denied liability, and paid 5*l.* into Court in respect of the overhang. Sargant, J., awarded the plaintiff 5*l.* damages in lieu of an injunction, and under Order XXII. rule 6 ordered the plaintiff to pay the costs of this issue. Pettey v. Parsons, 84 L. J. Vexatious Legal Proceedings — Criminal Proceedings.]—The Vexatious Actions Act, 1896, which empowers the Court to make an order prohibiting a person from instituting "legal proceedings" without the leave of the Court or a Judge, is confined to civil proceedings, and has no application to the institution of criminal proceedings. Boalcr, In re, 83 L. Administration Action in Ireland — Cross-action on Same Subject-matter in English Court.]—An action having been commenced in the Irish Court by an executor of a testator who died in Ireland, claiming as against persons interested under a voluntary settlement made by the testator that certain property was not included in it but was part of his residuary estate, and asking for administration of that estate, the defendants to the action commenced a cross-action in the English Court for a declaration that the property in question had been effectually brought into the settlement:—Held, that the action in England was not vexatious or oppressive, and ought not therefore to be stayed until after the trial of the Irish action. Carter v. Hungerford, 59 S. Proceedings in English and Italian Courts.]—An Englishwoman by birth died domiciled in Italy without any formal will, but it was alleged that a letter written by her in the English language to her solicitor in England relating to the disposal of her property after her death, and to a will which she instructed him to draw, constituted a valid holograph will according to the law of Italy. Proceedings were commenced in England by two of her next-of-kin against defendants who were interested under the alleged holograph will, to obtain as on an intestacy a grant of letters of administration to her personal estate, the greater part of which was in England. The defendants then instituted proceedings in Italy claiming that the document in question was a holograph will. There was some conflict of opinion amongst Italian lawyers whether or not the document constituted a good holograph will:—Held, that the English Court, applying Italian law to the document, was competent to decide whether or not it constituted a good holograph will, and that the English proceedings, having been commenced first, should not be stayed so as to leave the construction and effect of a document in the English language to the Italian Court. Bonnefoi, In re; Surrey v. Perrin, 82 L. J. P. 17; [1912] P. 233; 107 L. T. 512; 57 S. J. 62—C.A.

Originating Summons to Realise Mortgage — Jurisdiction to Make Order for Personal Payment—Subsequent Action on Covenant for Payment.] — Upon an originating summons issued by a mortgagee under Order LV. rule 7 [English Order LV. rule 5 a], there is no jurisdiction to make a personal order for payment of the mortgage debt, and therefore if the mortgagee, pending such proceedings, brings an action in the King's Bench Division on the covenant for payment in the mortgage deed, such action will not be stayed. Williams v. Hunt (74 L. Debenture — Action in the Chancery Division for Receiver—Subsequent Action in the King's Bench Division on Covenant for Payment of Interest.]—A debenture-holder's action in the Chancery Division for the appointment of a receiver and consequential relief, as it is not a claim for payment, does not cover the same ground as, and is no impediment to, the prosecution of an action in the King's Bench Division by another debenture-holder on the covenant contained in the debenture for the payment of arrears of interest. Hope v. Croydon and Norwood Tramways (56 L. J. Ch. 760; 24 Ch. D. 730) distinguished. Cleary v. Brazil Railway, 85 L. J. K.B. 32; 113 L. T. 96—Rowlatt, J.

Administration Action in Ireland — Cross-action on Same Subject-matter in English Court.] — An action having been commenced in the Irish Court by an executor of a testator who died in Ireland, claiming as against persons interested under a voluntary settlement made by the testator that certain property was not included in it but was part of his residuary estate, and asking for administration of that estate, the defendants to the action commenced a cross-action in the English Court for a declaration that the property in question had been effectually brought into the settlement: —Held, that the action in England was not vexatious or oppressive, and ought not therefore to be stayed until after the trial of the Irish action. Carter v. Hungerford, 59 S. J. 428—C.A.

Concurrent Suits—Suit in Palatine Court of Lancaster — Vexatious Proceedings.] — The plaintiffs brought a debenture-holders' action in the Chancery Division of the High Court and gave notice of motion for a receiver. A mortgagee who claimed adversely to the debenture-holders under a specific charge of part of the property subject to the debentures then commenced an action in the Palatine Court of Lancaster to enforce his security by foreclosure or sale and obtained the appointment of a receiver, being at the time aware of the plaintiffs' action, to which, however, he was not then a party. The plaintiffs then added him as a defendant to the plaintiffs' action and moved in that action for an injunction to restrain him from continuing proceedings in the Palatine action:—Held, that, assuming the Palatine Court to be a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, the latter had jurisdiction to grant the injunction, and that it was a proper case in which to exercise it on the ground that the mortgagee's proceedings in the Palatine Court were vexatious. Connolly Brothers, Lim., In re; Wood v. Connolly Brothers, Lim., 80 L. Transactions between Borrower and Money-lender—Action by Borrower in Chancery Division Claiming Account and Declaration that Money-lending Transactions Harsh and Unconscionable — Action by Money-lender in King's Bench Division on Promissory Note.]— The defendant, who had a number of transactions with the plaintiff, a registered money-lender, offered the plaintiff just before the last sum he had borrowed had become due the balance of the principal and a sum for interest which the money-lender declined. The borrower thereupon issued a writ in the Chancery Division claiming an account of all transactions between him and the money-lender, and a declaration that some of them were harsh and unconscionable, and for relief under the Money-lenders Act. The money-lender shortly thereafter issued a writ in the King's Bench Division for the full amount said to be owing by the borrower. The borrower thereupon took out a summons asking for a stay of the proceedings in the King's Bench Division on the ground that they were an abuse of the process of the Court in view of the proceedings pending in the Chancery Division:—Held (Kennedy, L.J., dissenting), that, in the circumstances of the case, the proceedings in the King's Bench Division should be stayed. Tumin v. Levi, 28 T. Appearance under Protest—Usual Terms—Defendant to Apply to Set Aside Service within Limited Time or Appearance to be Unconditional — Application after Time Elapsed.]—The entry of a conditional appearance by a defendant under protest to the jurisdiction on "usual terms," under No. 11 of the Office Rules settled by the Practice Masters—that is, that the appearance stands as unconditional unless the defendant applies within a number of days fixed by the Master on giving leave, to set aside the writ or service thereof, and obtains an order to that effect—is a proper and convenient practice for enabling the plaintiff to proceed with the action after the expiration of the time fixed where no application is previously made by the defendant; but it does not in any way preclude the Court or a Judge from entertaining an application by the defendant to set aside the writ or service thereof after the expiration of the time fixed, if the circumstances of the case justify it. Keymer v. Reddy, 81 L. J. K.B. 266; [1912] 1 K.B. 215; 105 L. T. 841—C.A.

Before Defence.]—In an action brought by the P. Assurance Co. against A, B, and C, the trustees of the L. Insurance Society, and D, E, and F, certain agents of the L. society, to restrain them from interfering with the business of the P. company, the statement of claim alleged (inter alia) that "the said D, E, and F, and other agents and servants of the L. society at the instigation of the said society and of the said D, E, and F, have for the purpose of inducing the policy-holders of the P. company to cease insuring with the P. company and to transfer their insurances to the L. Society, made grossly false statements and representations to the policy-holders in the P. company" to a certain effect, and that "D, E, and F also themselves circulated among the policy-holders in the P. company, and caused to be circulated by other agents and servants of the L. society, a grossly libellous notice or circular imputing certain charges against the P. company, and that the said notice or circular letter continues to be circulated among the policy-holders of the P. company by the said D, E, and F:—Held, that, before delivering their defence, A, B, and C were entitled to obtain from the plaintiffs further and better particulars as to—first, the persons by whom, secondly the localities in which, and thirdly, the period within which, the alleged grossly false statements and representations were made, and also particulars as to whether any of the policy-holders to whom it was alleged the false representations were made were resident outside a certain district named by the plaintiffs, but that they were not entitled to receive particulars of the names and addresses of the several persons to whom the false representations were made. British Legal and United Provident Assurance Co. v. Sheffield (Baron), [1911] 1 Ir. R. 69—M.R.

—— Libel—Preliminary Averments—Discretion.]—The plaintiff in a libel action alleged in his statement of claim that after the outbreak of war he was engaged, with official sanction, in relief and other work on behalf of British prisoners of war and in conveying to them money, food, and clothing, from their relatives and friends. The statement of claim then set out the alleged libel, which was to the effect that the American ambassador in Berlin had warned the British public against confiding anything to the plaintiff. The defendants, before delivering their defence, obtained a Master's order for particulars of the plaintiff's allegations as to his official position, his relief and other work, and the things conveyed by him to prisoners, and as to the relatives and friends referred to. An appeal from the Master to the Judge was dismissed:—Held, that though the allegations in question might not be necessary, yet, as evidence that they were true would no doubt be given at the trial, they could not be said to be immaterial to the plaintiff's case, and therefore he was bound to give the particulars, and that the question whether they should be given was a matter of discretion and there was no reason to interfere with the way in which it had been exercised. Gaston v. United Newspapers, Lim., 32 T. L. R. 143—C.A.

False Imprisonment—Reasonable and Probable Cause.]—The plaintiff sued the defendants, who were two constables in the employment of a railway company, and also the railway company, for damages for false imprisonment. The plaintiff alleged that he had been wrongfully arrested on a charge of theft and had subsequently been discharged. The defendants denied the arrest, and pleaded that if the acts complained of had been done, they were done by constables in the execution of their duty, they having reasonable and probable cause for suspicion that a felony had been committed and that the plaintiff had committed it. On an application by the plaintiff for particulars,—Held, that he was entitled to an order for particulars of the alleged felony and also of the reasonable and probable cause for suspicion, but not to the names of those who had given the defendants information against him. Green v. Garbutt, 28 T. L. R. 575—C.A.

Libel — Report of Traders' Association — Enquiry as to Plaintiff — Name of Person making Enquiry.] — The defendants, an association of traders formed for the purpose (inter alia) of supplying information to its members, issued a report in which appeared an enquiry as to the address of the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued the defendants in respect of this publication, alleging that by it the defendants meant and were understood to mean that he had moved from the address where he had resided for eight years, and where he still resided, without leaving any indication of his movements, with the object of avoiding payment of his debts. The defendants denied the innuendo and pleaded that the words were published on a privileged occasion and without malice. The defendants by their particulars stated that a member of their association made an enquiry with regard to the plaintiff, and the secretary, in pursuance of his duty to further the objects of the association, instructed their enquiry officer to enquire for the plaintiff and that the enquiry officer was informed that the plaintiff had left, and thereupon the defendants, in the honest belief that this was true, published the information for the benefit of the members. On an application by the plaintiff for further and better particulars,—Held, that the defendants were bound to give further particulars to enable the plaintiff to test the question whether the enquiry was made by a member of the defendant association. Elkington v. London Association for Protection of Trade, 27 T. L. R. 329—C.A.

—— Justification — Disclosure of Names of Probable Witnesses.]—The plaintiff, a trainer of racehorses, brought an action for libel against the defendants. The alleged libel was to the effect that the plaintiff had entered into a conspiracy with other trainers and jockeys to win or lose races dishonestly, and that he had thereby defrauded bookmakers and others. The defendants pleaded justification. Particulars in support of the plea were ordered and delivered. These particulars gave several instances in which it was alleged that a certain horse had been "pulled" by a certain jockey in a certain race at the instigation of the plaintiff when he had backed another horse for that race. Upon summons by the plaintiff for further and better particulars, giving the names of the bookmakers with or through whom it was alleged that the plaintiff had backed the horses, the times or places of the alleged backings, and the amounts of the alleged bets,—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to particulars specifying the names of the bookmakers and the times or places, but not the amounts, of the bets. Held, also, that in every case in which the defence of justification raises an imputation of misconduct against the plaintiff, he ought to be enabled to go to trial with knowledge of the acts which it is alleged he has committed and upon which the defendant intends to rely to justify the imputation; and, if the particulars are such as the defendant ought to give, he cannot refuse to give them merely on the ground that his answer will disclose the names of his witnesses. Wootton v. Sievier (No. 1), 82 L. J. K.B. 1242; [1913] 3 K.B. 499; 109 L. T. 28; 57 S. J. 609; 29 T. L. R. 596—C.A.

d. Security for Costs.

"Nominal" Plaintiff—Action by Bankrupt on Cause of Action Arising after Bankruptcy — "Personal earnings" — Intervention of Trustee.] — The plaintiff, while an undischarged bankrupt, obtained a commission note from the defendants under which he was to be paid 60*l.* if he procured a certain loan, and he brought this action to recover that sum. He was earning his living as a commission agent, and the whole or part of the 60*l.* would properly be required for his maintenance. The trustee in bankruptcy gave notice to the defendants that he claimed any money payable to the plaintiff under the commission note, but he subsequently gave them notice that he withdrew his claim. The defendants applied for an order that the plaintiff should give security for the costs of the action, upon the ground that he was a mere nominal plaintiff suing for the benefit of the trustee:—Held, that the money claimed by the bankrupt was his "personal earnings," within the exception established in the law of bankruptcy, and that, as the whole or part thereof was required for his maintenance, he was not a mere nominal plaintiff who could be ordered to give security for costs. Affleck v. Hammond, 81 L. J. K.B. 565; [1912] 3 K.B. 162; 106 L. T. 8; 19 Manson, 111—C.A.

Plaintiffs Resident out of the Jurisdiction—Cross-action — Substantially Independent Action.]—By agreements made in 1904 and 1907 between an English insurance company and a foreign insurance company it was agreed that the foreign company should re-insure certain proportions of risks covered by policies of insurance effected with the English company on and after October 1, 1904, against loss or damage by fire on the Continent of Europe and other parts of the world. By the terms of these agreements the English company were to render to the foreign company quarterly accounts, and the balances appearing on the accounts were to be paid within two weeks after the accounts had been confirmed; and for the purpose of checking the losses it was provided that the foreign company should have a right to inspect all original documents and vouchers. In pursuance of these agreements business was conducted between the two companies, accounts were delivered, and balances paid down to and including the first quarter of 1908. The account for the second quarter of 1908 was confirmed by the foreign company, but the balance shewn thereby was not paid by them. In 1910 the English company brought an action against the foreign company alleging that they had neglected to consider and confirm subsequent accounts which had been sent to them, and claiming the balance shewn by the account for the second quarter of 1908 and the balances shewn by the subsequent accounts, and claiming that if necessary accounts should be taken. The foreign company then brought a cross-action against the English company claiming inspection of all original documents and vouchers connected with all transactions under the agreements, and that all accounts between the two companies in connection with all transactions under the agreements might be re-opened on the ground of errors having occurred. The English company took out a summons in the cross-action asking that the foreign company should be ordered to give security for costs on the ground that they resided and carried on business out of the jurisdiction:—Held, that the foreign company ought to be ordered to give security for costs, inasmuch as the cross-action was in substance an independent action not brought merely by way of defence to the original action. New Fenix Compagnie v. General Accident, Fire, and Life Assurance Corporation, 80 L. Preservation of Property—Scope of Order.] —Order L. rule 3 of the Rules of the Supreme Court is not confined to administration, but extends to every case in which the Court sees that as between the parties there is something which ought to be done for the security of the property in question. Under this order the Court authorised the receiver of the estate of a lunatic to raise out of the estate a sum of money to pay a commission to an insurance company for taking over a transfer of a mortgage on the property, the principal sum under which being due and payment being pressed for by the mortgagee. Chaplin v. Barnett, 28 T. Inspection of Premises — Tenants in Common—Action against One Tenant only—Power to Order Inspection.] — Under Order XII. rule 3 of the County Court Rules, 1903 and 1904 [R.S.C. Order XXXI. rule 12], which provides that the Court may, upon the application of a party to an action, make an order for the inspection of any property which is the subject of the action, there is no power to make an order for the inspection of premises of which the defendant is tenant in common with other persons who are not parties to the action. Coomes v. Hayward, 82 L. VIII. TRIAL.

See also Vol. XI. 418, 1795.

Jury—Exemption—Employment by Inland Revenue Commissioners — Foreign Banker — Collection of Income Tax on Foreign Dividends.] —A member of a firm of foreign bankers, which carries on business in London and is employed by the Inland Revenue Commissioners in the collection of income tax on foreign dividends and is paid by poundage, is not employed by the Inland Revenue Commissioners within the meaning of section 9 of the Juries Act, 1870, and the schedule to that Act, and is not on that ground exempt from jury service. Van Druten, Ex parte, 30 T. Mode of Trial—Direction for Trial by Judge —Subsequent Application for Trial with Jury —Order XIV.]—Where on a summons under Order XIV. an order is made giving the defendant unconditional leave to defend, with a direction that the action shall be tried by a Judge, and the defendant leaves that order unappealed against, the defendant cannot subsequently, on an application under Order XXXVI. rule 6, obtain an order for a trial with a jury. Wolfe v. De Braam (81 L. Right to Trial by Jury—Action in Admiralty Division against Pilot — Transfer to King's Bench Division.] — The plaintiffs, as the owners of a causeway abutting on the Thames, claimed to recover the amount of damage done to the causeway through, as they alleged, the negligent navigation of a steamship which at the time was compulsorily in charge of the defendant as a Trinity House pilot. The plaintiffs brought an action in personam in the Admiralty Division against the defendant, and they also brought an action in rem against the owners of the steamship. The defendant took out two summonses asking respectively that the action against him might be tried with a jury and might be transferred to the King's Bench Division. The Judge dismissed both summonses on the ground that there being an action in rem against the ship which would, according to the usual practice, be tried by a Judge with assessors, it would not be convenient that the personal action should be tried before another tribunal:—Held, that the action should be tried in the King's Bench Division by a Judge with a jury. Metropolitan Asylums Board v. Sparrow, 29 T. General Verdict—Power of Judge to Put Further Question.]—When a jury have given a general verdict the Judge is not entitled to put a further question to them for the purpose of effect being given to their answer. Arnold v. Jeffreys, 83 L. J. K.B. 329; [1914] 1 K.B. 512; 110 L. T. 253—D.

Stranger in Jury Room — Validity of Verdict.]—The presence of a stranger in the room where a jury are considering their verdict, even although he may not in any way interfere with their deliberations, invalidates the verdict. Goby v. Wetherill, 84 L. J. K.B. 1455; [1915] 2 K.B. 674; 113 L. T. 502; 79 J. P. 346; 31 T. L. R. 402—D.

Disagreement of Jury—Entering Judgment for Either Party on the Evidence — Slight Evidence—No Evidence—Possibility of Adducing Additional Evidence at a Re-trial.]—At the conclusion of a plaintiff's case the defendants applied for judgment on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury. The Judge refused to enter judgment, saying that there was some evidence, though very weak. The case was left to the jury, and they disagreed. The defendants again applied for judgment, but the Judge again refused to enter judgment, saying that he could not alter his previous opinion that there was some evidence, though it was very weak :—Held, that the Judge had power to alter his opinion and enter judgment for the defendants if he would have been justified in directing the jury to find a verdict for the defendants. Skeate v. Slaters, Lim., 83 L. J. K.B. 676; [1914] 2 K.B. 429; 110 L. T. 604; 30 T. L. R. 290—C.A.

Semble, under Order LVIII. rule 4 the Court of Appeal has power to enter judgment for the defendant where a verdict has been found for the plaintiff, if the evidence on which that verdict was found was so weak and insufficient that the Court of Appeal would not have allowed the verdict to stand. But this power should only be exercised where the Court of Appeal is satisfied that it has all the necessary materials before it and that no evidence could be given at a re-trial which would in the Court of Appeal support a verdict for the plaintiff. Ib.

Per Buckley, L.J. : Where a case has been tried and the jury have disagreed, if upon the whole of the evidence of the case the Court of Appeal are of opinion that no twelve reasonable men could give a verdict for the plaintiff, the Court of Appeal has power and is bound to enter judgment for the defendant. Ib.

Action for Joint Tort—Separate Defences—Improper Severance of Damages—Unity of Verdict and Judgment.]—Where an action has been brought against several defendants for an alleged joint tort for which all are found liable, then, notwithstanding that they have severed in their defences, only one joint verdict can be found and one joint judgment can be entered against them all. Greenlands, Lim. v. Wilmshurst, 83 L. J. K.B. 1; [1913] 3 K.B. 507; 109 L. T. 487; 57 S. J. 740; 29 T. L. R. 685—C.A.

A trade protection association existed for the purpose of providing for its subscribers in answer to their enquiries confidential information as to the credit and financial position of persons with whom they contemplated dealing, its work being carried on under the supervision of a committee of the subscribers, by a secretary, a solicitor, and various local correspondents, and its surplus income from subscriptions being accumulated in the hands of its trustees and not distributed among the subscribers. The plaintiffs brought an action for libel against the association and one of its correspondents in respect of a communication sent to a subscriber in answer to his enquiry. The defendants delivered separate defences, each pleading (inter alia) that the communication was published on a privileged occasion without malice. The jury found express malice against the correspondent, and they returned separate verdicts against the correspondent for 750*l.* damages and against the association for 1,000*l.* damages. The Judge held that the occasion was not privileged and gave judgment against the defendants for the above amounts respectively. The association appealed :—Held, by Vaughan Williams, L.J., and Hamilton, L.J., that the occasion was not privileged, but that the damages had been improperly severed, and further that they were excessive as against the association, and therefore that judgment should not be entered for the plaintiffs, but that there must be a new trial of the action :—Held, by Bray, J., that the occasion was privileged, that the malice of the correspondent could not be attributed to the association, and that judgment should be entered for the association; but, if this view were wrong, that for the reasons given by the other members of the Court there should be a new trial. Macintosh v. Dun (77 L. J. P.C. 113; [1908] A.C. 390) followed by Vaughan Williams, L.J., and Hamilton, L.J., but distinguished by Bray, J. Ib.

Special Jury — Certificate "immediately after the verdict"—Certificate Three Months after Trial—Validity.]—The certificate which may be granted under the County Juries Act, 1825, s. 34, by the Judge trying an action that it is "a cause proper to be tried by a special jury" can only be granted immediately in sequence of time after the verdict, unless there are some special circumstances which prevent the certificate being then applied for or granted, in which case the certificate must be obtained at the first reasonable opportunity. The Judge may, however, expressly reserve his decision and grant the certificate at a later date, when he has made up his mind, nunc pro tunc. Forsdike v. Stone (37 L. J. C.P. 301; L. IX. NEW TRIAL.

See also Vol. XI. 502, 1799.

Motion for New Trial—"Misdirection and non-direction.]—A notice of motion for a new trial, grounded upon misdirection and non-direction of the Judge at the trial of the action, should state specifically the particulars as to misdirection and non-direction upon which the moving party intends to rely. Pfeiffer v. Midland Railway (18 Q.B. D. 243) followed. Hughes v. Dublin United Tramways Co., [1911] 2 Ir. R. 114—K.B. D.

—— Fresh Evidence—Character of Evidence Required.]—In order to justify the grant of a new trial on the ground that fresh evidence has been discovered, the evidence must be of such a character as to justify the Court in saying that the verdict cannot in the interest of justice be relied on, because it was based on mistake, surprise, or fraud. Warham v. Selfridge & Co., 30 T. L. R. 344—C.A.

The plaintiff, describing herself as a spinster, brought an action against the defendant for breach of promise of marriage. The defence was a denial of the promise. At the trial the plaintiff obtained a verdict for damages. The defendant applied for a new trial on the ground of the discovery of fresh evidence, which was not available at the time of the trial, to the effect that the plaintiff was a married woman at the time of the alleged promise. The defendant, with the leave of the Court, filed in support of the application affidavits made by two persons, who deposed that the plaintiff had told them at material times that she was a married woman and had referred to a particular man as her husband and had corresponded with them in her married name, and that they had received wedding cards in the names of the plaintiff and her said husband. The plaintiff made an affidavit in reply, in which she said that, though wedding cards had been sent out by the man mentioned, she had never in fact been married:—Held (Pickford, L.J., dissenting), that the discovery of the fresh evidence entitled the defendant to a new trial on the issue whether the plaintiff was a married woman at the date of the promise of marriage. Robinson v. Smith, 84 L. J. K.B. 783; [1915] 1 K.B. 711; 59 S. J. 269; 31 T. L. R. 191—C.A.

Action against Borough Council—Juryman a Member.]—In a County Court action against a borough council one of the jurymen was a member of the council. The jury returned a verdict for the defendants. The Judge refused a new trial on the ground that no injustice had been done:—Held, on appeal, that as the case had been in part decided by one of the defendants, there must be a new trial. Atkins v. Fulham Borough Council, 31 T. L. R. 564—D.

X. JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS.

a. Generally.

See also Vol. XI. 547, 1804.

No Proceeding for a Year—Notice of Intention "to proceed"—Signing Judgment.]—To sign judgment is not "to proceed" in a cause or matter within the meaning of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Order LXIV. rule 13, and therefore the fact that a year has elapsed since the last proceeding in an action does not make it necessary for the party desiring to sign judgment in the action to give a month's notice to the other party of his intention to do so. Staffordshire Joint-Stock Bank v. Weaver ([1884] W. N. 78; Bitt. Ch. Cas. 243) overruled. Deighton v. Cockle, 81 L. J. K.B. 497; [1912] 1 K.B. 206; 105 L. T. 802—C.A.

Action for Joint Tort—Separate Defences—Improper Severance of Damages—Unity of Verdict and Judgment.]—Where an action has been brought against several defendants for an alleged joint tort for which all are found liable, then, notwithstanding that they have severed in their defences, only one joint verdict can be found and one joint judgment can be entered against them all. Greenlands, Lim. v. Wilmshurst, 83 L. J. K.B. 1; [1913] 3 K.B. 507; 109 L. T. 487; 57 S. J. 740; 29 T. L. R. 685—C.A.

A trade protection association existed for the purpose of providing for its subscribers in answer to their enquiries confidential information as to the credit and financial position of persons with whom they contemplated dealing, its work being carried on under the supervision of a committee of the subscribers, by a secretary, a solicitor, and various local correspondents, and its surplus income from subscriptions being accumulated in the hands of its trustees and not distributed among the subscribers. The plaintiffs brought an action for libel against the association and one of its correspondents in respect of a communication sent to a subscriber in answer to his enquiry. The defendants delivered separate defences, each pleading (inter alia) that the communication was published on a privileged occasion without malice. The jury found express malice against the correspondent, and they returned separate verdicts against the correspondent for 750*l.* damages and against the association for 1,000*l.* damages. The Judge held that the occasion was not privileged and gave judgment against the defendants for the above amounts respectively. The association appealed:—Held, by Vaughan Williams, L.J., and Hamilton, L.J., that the occasion was not privileged, but that the damages had been improperly severed, and further that they were excessive as against the association, and therefore that judgment should not be entered for the plaintiffs, but that there must be a new trial of the action. Held, by Bray, J., that the occasion was privileged, that the malice of the correspondent could not be attributed to the association, and that judgment should be entered for the association; but, if this view were wrong, that for the reasons given by the other members of the Court there should be a new trial. Macintosh v. Dun (77 L. J. P.C. 113; [1908] A.C. 390) followed by Vaughan Williams, L.J., and Hamilton, L.J., but distinguished by Bray, J. Ib.

Judgment on Admissions "either on the pleadings or otherwise"—Admission by Letter.]—The words "or otherwise" in Order XXXII. rule 6 of the Rules of the Supreme Court are of general application, and are not to be read as though they restricted admissions to admissions made "otherwise under this Order." So that where in a letter written by the defendant's solicitors to the plaintiffs' solicitors there was a clear admission of fact in the face of which it was impossible for the defendant to succeed in the action,—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to immediate judgment. Ellis v. Allen, 83 L. J. Ch. 590; [1914] 1 Ch. 904; 110 L. T. 479—Sargant, J.

Judgment—Consent—Ordinary Judgment.]—Where on the trial of an action counsel for the defendant states that he consents to judgment for the plaintiff, it ought to be entered as an ordinary and not a consent judgment. Swiss Bankverein v. Greaves, 32 T. L. R. 127—Bailhache, J.

Action against Two Defendants—Judgment for Defendants — Appeal as to Judgment for One Defendant — Schedule of Evidence Used at Hearing.]—Order LXII. rule 14c provides that if a judgment or order in a witness action is appealed from there shall be a schedule of the evidence used at the hearing. That schedule of evidence ought to contain the evidence used at the hearing, nothing more and nothing less, and not merely the evidence relative to the point under appeal. The proper course in settling the schedule of evidence is to enter not only the documentary evidence, but also the names of the witnesses. The object of the new rules of Order LXII. was to put into a separate document, where there is an appeal, the evidence which was formerly entered in the body of the order. Form of orders discussed. Brinsmead v. Brinsmead (No. 2), 82 L. J. Ch. 305; [1913] 1 Ch. 492; 108 L. T. 601; 30 R. P. C. 489; 57 S. J. 478—Warrington, J.

Disagreement of Jury—Formal Order Refusing to Enter Judgment — Appeal.] — The jury at the trial of the action having disagreed, the Court, on the application of the defendants, made a formal order refusing to enter judgment so as to enable the defendants, if they thought proper, to take the case to the Court of Appeal. Skeate v. Slaters, Lim., 29 T. L. R. 289—A. T. Lawrence, J.

Drawing up Orders — Delay.] — Under the new rule 14 (a) of Order LXII. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, it is the duty of the Registrar, if the order has not been drawn up at the end of a period of fourteen days from the date of the judgment, to report to the Judge so soon as the fourteen days have elapsed since the order was made that the order has not yet been drawn up and entered. Empire Guarantee and Insurance Co., In re, 56 S. J. 444—Swinfen Eady, J.

b. Declaratory Orders.

See also Vol. XI. 568, 1805.

The Court will not make a declaratory order in favour of a plaintiff who has asked for a declaration of right merely as a foundation for substantive relief to which he is not entitled. Dysart (Earl) v. Hammerton, 83 L. J. Ch. 530; [1914] 1 Ch. 822; 110 L. T. 879; 78 J. P. 297; 12 L. G. R. 653; 58 S. J. 378; 30 T. L. R. 379—C.A.

Application of Order XXV. rule 5 to Crown.]—Order XXV. rule 5 of the Rules of the Supreme Court lays down no limit to the class of cases to which it applies, and the Court cannot hold that a case in which the Crown is a defendant is impliedly excepted. Burghes v. Att.-Gen., 80 L. J. Ch. 506; [1911] 2 Ch. 139; 105 L. T. 193; 55 S. J. 520; 27 T. L. R. 433—Warrington, J.

c. Setting Aside and Impeaching.

See also Vol. XI. 587, 1808.

Judgment Obtained by Default.] — The Court, in setting aside a judgment obtained through default by the defendant in pleading and in allowing the defendant to defend the action, has no power to impose upon him the condition that he shall not plead the Gaming Act. Pooley v. O'Connor, 28 T. L. R. 460—C.A.

Assignment of Judgment — Delay.] — The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant on two cheques given for a gambling debt. The defendant did not appear at the trial and plaintiff obtained judgment, but no proceedings were taken to enforce it. Later a money-lender obtained a judgment against the plaintiff, and the judgment debt due from the defendant to the plaintiff was assigned to him. Subsequently, one year after the judgment had been obtained against the defendant, he applied to have it set aside:—Held, that the money-lender was in the position of a bona fide holder for value with regard to the judgment debt due from the defendant, and there was no reason to exercise the discretion of the Court by setting it aside. Harley v. Samson, 30 T. L. R. 450—Scrutton, J.

Writ for Liquidated Amount—Reduction of Amount by Part Payment — Judgment in Default of Appearance for Original Amount—Mistake of Plaintiff—No Application by Plaintiff to Reduce Amount.]—A sum indorsed on a writ as a liquidated demand was reduced by part payment after the writ was issued, but judgment was nevertheless entered in default of appearance for the original amount, owing to a mistake of the plaintiff. Subsequently the plaintiff issued a bankruptcy notice founded on his judgment, which, however, gave credit for the sum paid in deduction, but he took no steps to correct his judgment and opposed a suggestion that it should be reduced to the proper amount. Upon application by the defendant,—Held, that the judgment must be set aside, it being the duty of a creditor, if he obtains a wrong judgment, and not the duty of the debtor, to have it set right. Muir v. Jenks, 82 L. J. K.B. 703; [1913] 2 K.B. 412; 108 L. T. 747; 57 S. J. 476—C.A.

Service of Writ on Limited Company by Posting.]—The plaintiffs, who could lawfully have effected service of a writ against the defendant company by posting the same in a prepaid cover properly addressed, for greater security registered the same; and in consequence of such registration the letter was not in fact delivered until the day following the ordinary course of post. The plaintiffs bona fide believed that the letter had been delivered in the ordinary course of post, and acting on such belief signed judgment in default of appearance immediately after the expiration of the period allowed for entering an appearance:—Held, on motion by the defendants to set aside the judgment, that, notwithstanding section 26 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, where the writ had not in fact been delivered in the ordinary course of post, the defendants were entitled to have the judgment set aside on the ground that it had been signed prematurely. Rylands Glass Engineering Co. v. Phœnix Co., Lim., [1911] 2 Ir. R. 532—K.B. D.

d. Varying and Amending.

Error in Order.]—The Court has jurisdiction to correct an error in an order arising from an accidental slip on the part of the person who obtained the order and seeks to have it corrected, although there was no error in the sense that the order as made did not carry out the intention of the Court. McCaughey v. Stringer, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 73—M.R.

Judgment against Married Woman in Default of Appearance — Adoption of Ordinary Form by Inadvertence—Omission of Reference to Separate Property — Error Arising from Accidental Slip or Omission — Application to Correct.]—The plaintiffs, having brought an action in the High Court against the defendant, a married woman sued in respect of her separate estate, recovered judgment against her in default of appearance. Through the inadvertence of a clerk of the plaintiffs' then solicitors, the judgment was signed and entered in the ordinary form, instead of in the form appropriate to judgment against a married woman in such a case, which includes, in addition to the words of the ordinary form, a statement to the effect that the sum recovered is to be payable out of the separate property of the defendant and not otherwise. After the lapse of ten years, the plaintiffs applied to amend the judgment under Order XXVIII. rule 11, which provides (inter alia) that errors in judgments arising from any accidental slip or omission may at any time be corrected :—Held, by Vaughan Williams, L.J., and Buckley, L.J., that the case did not come within the rule, and that the Court had not power to make the amendment. Held, by Kennedy, L.J., that the case came within the rule, but that in the circumstances the Court in the exercise of its discretion should refuse to allow the amendment. Oxley v. Link, 83 L. J. K.B. 602; [1914] 2 K.B. 734; 110 L. T. 248—C.A.

e. Examination of Judgment Debtor.

By rule 32 of Order XLII. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, "when a judgment or order is for the recovery or payment of money . . . the Court or Judge may make an order for the attendance and the examination of such debtor"; and by rule 33, "In case of any judgment or order other than for the recovery or payment of money, if any difficulty shall arise in or about the execution or enforcement thereof, any party interested may apply to the Court or a Judge, and the Court or Judge may make such order thereon for the attendance and examination of any party or otherwise as may be just." The plaintiff obtained against the defendant two judgments, which remained largely unsatisfied, and under an order made under Order XLII. the defendant was examined as to her means. On a subsequent application by the plaintiff for the appointment of a receiver of certain effects of the defendant an interim injunction was granted restraining the defendant from dealing with them. Subsequently a receiver was appointed and he ascertained that certain articles had been removed from the defendant's residence. It appeared that some of the articles had been removed while the interim injunction was in force, and that a picture had been sold, but the plaintiff could not ascertain what had become of the other articles :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a further order under rule 32 for the examination of the defendant as to whether she had any means of satisfying the judgments; and (Buckley, L.J., dissenting) that the plaintiff was also entitled to an order under rule 33 for the examination of the defendant as to the execution and enforcement of the injunction and as to the defendant's dealings with certain property subject to the injunction, inasmuch as the object of rule 33 was to make orders under rule 32 more efficacious. Sturges v. Warwick (Countess), 58 S. Application by Personal Representative for Liberty to Issue Execution.]—Where a judgment creditor dies after judgment, an application by his personal representative for leave to issue execution should be made ex parte. XI. MOTIONS AND RULES.

See also Vol. XI. 665, 1812.

Notice of Motion—Service before Appearance—Address for Service.]—Leave having been obtained to serve a notice of motion on a defendant before appearance, a copy of the notice of motion was left at her address :—Held, sufficient notice of motion. Jarvis v. Hemmings (No. 2), 56 S. J. 271—Warrington, J.

—— Time between Service and Hearing — "Two clear days" — Sunday Excluded.] — Sunday is not to be reckoned in computing the "two clear days" required by Order LII. rule 5 to elapse between service of notice of motion and the day named for hearing. Brammall v. Mutual Industrial Corporation, 84 L. —— Chancery System of Linked Judges — Non-appearance of Defendant—Name of Judge to Whom Motion Assigned.] — A notice of motion which states that the Court will be moved before Mr. Justice A. is sufficient, although the Court is in fact moved before Mr. Justice B., the Judge before whom, owing to the system of linked Judges adopted in the Chancery Division, the motions in actions assigned to Mr. Justice A. are made, notwithstanding that the respondent to the motion does not appear; and an order can properly be made on such a motion by Mr. Justice B. in accordance with its terms. Romney, Lim., In re; Stuart v. The Company, 60 S. J. 141—Sargant, J.

Originating Motion Placed in Non-witness List—Hearing Fee.]—Where, to suit the convenience of the Court, an originating motion is directed to be placed in the non-witness list, no hearing fee ought to be demanded. Watson & Co.'s Application, In re, 28 R. P. C. 167; 55 S. J. 292—Parker, J.

Costs of Abandoned Motion — Notice.] — Although it is usual for a defendant to give notice to the other side that he claims the costs of an abandoned motion, there is nothing in the Rules to prevent such costs being given where no notice has been served. Hinde v. Power, [1913] W. N. 184—Eve, J.

XII. SUMMONSES.

See also Vol. XI. 685, 1812.

Service on Foreigner out of Jurisdiction — Summons to Set Aside.]—Leave for service out of the jurisdiction of a summons, order, or notice under the provisions of rule 8A of Order XI. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, will only be granted in the circumstances in which such leave would be granted in the case of a writ of summons under rules 1 and 8 of the Order. The manner of service will therefore depend on whether the country in which it is to be effected is or is not a country to which the provisions of Order XI. have been applied by the Lord Chancellor. Aktiebolaget Robertsfors and Société Anonyme des Papeteries, In re, 80 L. —— Foreclosure.]—An action commenced by the issue of an originating summons against a mortgagor asking for foreclosure of a mortgage of personal estate is not an action "founded on contract, or alleged breach of contract" within Order XI. rule 1 (c), and the summons cannot be served out of the jurisdiction. Hughes v. Oxenham, 82 L. J. Ch. 155; [1913] 1 Ch. 254; 108 L. T. 316; 57 S. J. 158—C.A.

Compromise—Consent Order—Compromise Varying the Rights of the Parties—Attempt to Enforce — Independent Proceedings Necessary.]—Where an order had been made by consent in 1909 and shares of income apportioned under such order, but owing to a fall in interest one of the parties desired that the other should give up possession of certain properties, part of the subject-matter of the order, to the trustees, in order that her interest might be made up to the amount given her by such order, or that a receiver of such properties should be appointed,—Held, that such an application could not be made by a summons in the original action, but that independent proceedings must be taken. Salt v. Cooper (50 L. J. Ch. 529; 16 Ch. D. 544) explained. Hearn, In re: De Bertodano v. Hearn, 108 L. T. 452; 57 S. J. 405—Sargant, J. Affirmed, 108 L. T. 737; 57 S. J. 443—C.A.

Order in Chambers—Order not Passed and Entered — Adjournment to Judge — Jurisdiction.]—An order made by the Master upon a summons in chambers does not become finally effective till it has been passed and entered, and, until then, the Judge (or, semble, the Master) has power at any time to direct the matter to be adjourned to the Judge, who will deal with the summons upon all the evidence then before him, and, if the circumstances require, make a different order. Dictum of Malins, V.C., in Bartlett, In re; Newman v. Hook (50 L. XIII. FUNDS AND SECURITIES IN COURT.

See also Vol. XI. 738, 1815.

Administration Proceedings—Declaration.] —If in the course of administration proceedings a Judge has made a declaration of rights, and money in Court is carried over to a separate account in accordance with such declaration, the right to the money cannot be impeached so long as the declaration remains standing, but the same grounds—for example, fraud or the discovery of facts that could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered before—that would suffice to have the declaration set aside would suffice also to have the title to the account altered. If there is no declaration of title by the Court, and the money is carried over in the action to administer the trust funds for convenience of administration only, then the Court can at any time before final distribution rectify and adjust such administration order in such a way as to ensure full and complete justice in the final distribution of the fund. Cloutte v. Storey, 80 L. J. Ch. 193; [1911] 1 Ch. 18; 103 L. T. 617—C.A.

Payment Out on Erroneous Affidavit—Possible Beneficiary not Party to Petition—Claim for Compensation against Consolidated Fund.] —Where the Court, acting upon a mistake as to fact, but not upon any fraud, or forgery, has ordered the payment out of a fund in Court to a wrong person, and the Paymaster-General has acted upon this order, it will not afterwards discharge the order so made, and order payment out to the person properly entitled, so as to enable this person (on non-payment of the fund by the Paymaster-General in accordance with the second order) to claim that the Consolidated Fund is liable (by virtue of section 5 of the Court of Chancery (Funds) Act, 1872, and section 2 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Funds, &c.) Act, 1883) to make good to him the amount so ordered to be paid to him by the Court. Williams, In re, 80 L. J. Ch. 8; [1910] 2 Ch. 481; 103 L. T. 390; 54 S. J. 736; 26 T. L. R. 688—Swinfen Eady, J.

But quære, as to whether, in cases in which the original order had been obtained by fraud, or forgery, the Court would not so act. Ib.

Payment Out—Dormant Fund—Absence of Beneficiaries.]—It is contrary to the practice of the High Court to pay out a dormant fund to a party legally entitled to it without the beneficiaries being before the Court. This rule applies notwithstanding that the person applying for payment is a judicial factor appointed under Scotch law. Gordon v. Smith, 108 L. T. 951; 57 S. J. 595—Neville, J.

Order for Repayment—Enquiry as to Unclaimed Certificates — Jurisdiction to Exclude Holders of Bonds not Claiming within Limited Time.] — Where great length of time has elapsed from the date of the judgment declaring that funds in the hands of trustees ought to be returned to and divided between the holders of certificates for rateable proportions in respect of bonds, and a residuum of bondholders had omitted to establish their claims, —Held, that the Court has jurisdiction to make an order determining the class entitled to the benefit of its order and giving to those asserting their claims all that is left of the fund. Wilson v. Church, 106 L. T. 31—Eve, J.

XIV. TIME.

Order LXIV. rule 3—Bill of Exchange—Expiration of Time on Sunday—Writ Issued on Following Monday.] — The time for payment of a promissory note, including the days of grace, expired on Sunday, September 22, 1906. The writ in an action against the defendants as the makers of the promissory note was issued on Monday, September 23, 1912 :—Held, that Order LXIV. rule 3, which provided that "where the time for doing any act or taking any proceeding expires on a Sunday . . . and by reason thereof such act or proceeding cannot be done or taken on that day, such act or proceeding shall, so far as regards the time for doing or taking the same, be held to be duly done or taken if done or taken on the day on which the office shall next be open," had no operation on the Statute of Limitations, and that therefore the writ which was issued on Monday, September 23, 1912, could not be considered as having been issued on Sunday, September 22, 1912. Gelmini v. Moriggia, 82 L. J. K.B. 949; [1913] 2 K.B. 549; 109 L. T. 77; 29 T. L. R. 486—Channell, J.

XV. PLEADING.

a. Generally.

Action by Lunatic, not so Found, by Next Friend—Issue of Sanity of Plaintiff Raised by Defence.] — An action being brought by a person of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition, by her next friend, to recover documents in the hands of the defendants, and the defendants by their defence alleging that the plaintiff was not of unsound mind, and that they held the documents on her behalf :—Held, that the issue of the sanity of the plaintiff, or the authority of her representatives, could not be raised on the pleadings. Richmond v. Branson, 83 L. J. Ch. 749; [1914] 1 Ch. 968; 110 L. T. 763; 58 S. J. 455—Warrington, J.

b. Amending and Striking out Pleadings.

Amendment of Pleading Setting up Defence of Public Authorities Protection Act—Delay.] —Circumstances in which the Court refused the defendants leave to amend their points of defence by pleading the Public Authorities Protection Act where the application for leave to amend was made at a very late stage of the proceedings, and where costs would not have been an entire compensation to the plaintiff if leave were granted. Aronson v. Liverpool Corporation, 77 J. P. 176; 29 T. L. R. 325—Pickford, J.

Striking out — Interlocutory Application — Power of Court to make Order.]—Where it is clear that an action against a trade union and others is one which, as against the trade union, is prohibited by section 4, sub-section 1 of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, the Court may, on an interlocutory application under Order XXV. rule 4, strike out the name of the trade union from the writ and pleadings on the ground that they disclose no reasonable cause of action against the trade union :—So held by Vaughan Williams, L.J., and Kennedy, L.J.; Farwell, L.J., dissenting. Vacher v. London Society of Compositors, 81 L. J. K.B. 1014; [1912] 3 K.B. 547; 106 L. T. 778; 56 S. J. 442; 28 T. L. R. 366—C.A.

—— Supplemental Action — Striking out Pleading as Embarrassing.]—Pleading that an action be treated as supplemental to another action is unintelligible and will be struck out as embarrassing. Nitrate Securities Trust v. Williams, 106 L. T. 730—Neville, J.

—— Statement of Claim — Principles.] — Order XXV. rule 4, enabling the Court to strike out a statement of claim as disclosing no reasonable cause of action, was not intended to take the place of a demurrer, and it ought not to be applied to an action involving serious investigation of ancient law and questions of general importance. Dyson v. Att.-Gen., 80 L. J. K.B. 531; [1911] 1 K.B. 410; 103 L. T. 707; 55 S. J. 168; 27 T. L. R. 143—C.A.

—— Libel—Whether Words Capable of Defamatory Meaning.]—On an application to strike out a statement of claim in a libel action on the ground that it discloses no reasonable cause of action, the Court will not strike it out on the ground that the words are incapable of a defamatory meaning, but will leave the question whether they are capable of such a meaning to be dealt with by the Judge at the trial. Moore v. Lawson, 31 T. L. R. 418—C.A.

—— Inconsistent Pleas—Payment into Court Admitting and Denying Liability.]—A defendant, having by one paragraph of his defence paid money into Court admitting liability, and by another paragraph of his defence paid money into Court denying liability, and the plaintiff in the action making more than a single claim:—Held, that one of the paragraphs must be struck out and that the defence must specifically state with regard to which claim of the plaintiff the money was paid into Court. Chapman v. Westerby, 58 S. J. 340—Warrington, J.

—— Paragraphs of Defence as Embarrassing.]—In an action by the plaintiffs to obtain a declaration of the validity of a notice served by them upon the defendant under section 5 of the City of London (Spitalfields Market) Act, 1902, of their intention to purchase his interest in Spitalfields Market, the Court, on the plaintiffs' application, struck out, as embarrassing, certain paragraphs of the defence which referred to a previous litigation as to the market and alleged that the plaintiffs' conduct had been unfair and improper, and that by their conduct in that action the plaintiffs had disentitled themselves to enforce the notice served by them. London Corporation v. Horner, 111 L. T. 512; 78 J. P. 229; 12 L. G. R. 832—Neville, J.

XVI. PROCEEDINGS UNDER COURTS (EMERGENCY POWERS) ACT, 1914.

Judgment—Proceeding to Execution—Application for Leave—Discretion.]—The plaintiff, who was a money-lender, obtained judgment against the defendant, a lieutenant in the Army, for the amount of a loan, but not for the interest. The defendant was heir to certain estates, but he had mortgaged his reversionary interests and had practically no assets beyond his pay as an officer, and having been wounded was in hospital, and so could not raise money by insuring his life. The Judge in chambers, in these circumstances, refused leave under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, s. 1, sub-s. 2, to proceed to execution:—Held, that the above enactment gave the Judge an absolute discretion, and it had been rightly exercised. Stirling v. Norton, 31 T. L. R. 293—C.A.

Order for Payment — Leave to Enforce — Application to Court of Appeal—Enquiry as to Facts—Reference to Master.]—By rule 2 (1) made under section 1, sub-section 1 of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, the Court to which an application is made under section 1, sub-section 1 of the Act for leave to enforce an order for the payment of money shall be the Court by which the order has been made or in which it is being sought:—Held, that where the Court to which the application must be made is the Court of Appeal, that Court will refer the facts to a Master for enquiry and report and will act on such report. Evans v. Main Colliery Co., 31 T. L. R. 127—C.A.

Mortgage — Personal Property — Transfer into Name of Mortgagee — Realisation of Security — "Mortgagee in possession."] — The exception "by way of sale by a mortgagee in possession" from the provisions of section 1, sub-section 1 (b) of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, applies to a mortgagee of debentures of a company which have been transferred into the name of the mortgagee. A mortgagee of such a security may accordingly realise his security by sale without any application to the Court under the Act. Ziman v. Komata Reef Gold Mining Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1162; [1915] 2 K.B. 163; 113 L. T. 17; 31 T. L. R. 274—C.A.

Stock Exchange — Power of Committee — Interest—Scrip—Whether "security."]—The defendant on July 30, 1914, instructed the plaintiff, who was a broker on the London Stock Exchange, to buy certain shares, and the plaintiff bought the shares from a firm of jobbers. Before that date the mid-August account day had been fixed by the Stock Exchange Committee for August 13, but on July 31 it was postponed to August 27. On August 6 a proclamation of a moratorium came into force, and subsequently the mid-August account day was postponed to November 18. In November the defendant refused to take up the shares and the plaintiff sold the shares against him and brought an action to recover the difference in price together with interest from August 13:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to sell without applying to the Court under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, as the scrip which the plaintiff received from the jobber was not a security within section 1, sub-section 1 (b) of that Act; that the Stock Exchange Committee had no power to postpone the date for the completion of the contract, but that the case came within the moratorium so as to make interest payable, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount claimed. Barnard v. Foster, 84 L. J. K.B. 1244; [1915] 2 K.B. 288; 31 T. L. R. 307—Sankey, J. Affirmed, 32 T. L. R. 88—C.A.

Winding-up Petition — Discretion.] — The Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, does not confer on the Court a discretion to dismiss a petition for the winding up of a company or to order it to stand over. Globe Trust, In re, 84 L. J. Ch. 903; 113 L. T. 80; 59 S. J. 529; 31 T. L. R. 280—Astbury, J.

—— Judgment Creditor—War—"Proceed to execution on, or otherwise to the enforcement of, any judgment."]—A petition by a judgment creditor to wind up a company is not a proceeding "to execution on, or otherwise to the enforcement of" the judgment within section 1, sub-section 1 (a) of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, and a winding-up order may therefore be made without leave from the Court in which the judgment was obtained. Company (0,022 of 1915), In re; Company (0,023 of 1915), In re, 84 L. J. Ch. 382; [1915] 1 Ch. 520; 112 L. T. 1100; [1915] H. B. R. 65; 59 S. J. 302; 31 T. L. R. 241—C.A.

Bankruptcy Petition—Proceeding to Execution on, or otherwise to the Enforcement of, any Judgment.]—During the continuance of the present war a judgment creditor can present a bankruptcy petition founded upon his judgment debt without obtaining the leave of the Court by which judgment was given. Sub-section 1 of section 1 of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, does not apply to bankruptcy petitions. Silber, In re (No. 1), 84 L. J. K.B. 971; [1915] 2 K.B. 317; [1915] H. B. R. 95; 113 L. T. 763; 59 S. J. 271—C.A.

—— Debtor a Subject of Enemy State—Insolvency Due to War.]—By reason of section 1, sub-section 7 of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, the Court has no power, under section 1, sub-section 3 of the same Act, to stay a bankruptcy petition against a debtor who is a subject of a State at war with His Majesty. Radeke, In re; Jacobs, ex parte, 84 L. J. K.B. 2111; [1915] H. B. R. 185; 31 T. L. R. 584—D.

Non-payment of Rent — Right of Re-entry — Power to Defer Execution — "Absolute discretion."]—On an application for judgment for possession of property held by virtue of a lease under a power of re-entry in the lease for non-payment of rent the Master and Judge refused to stay execution under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, s. 1. The lessee appealed:—Held, that as the matter was in the "absolute discretion" of the Court under section 1, sub-section 2 of the Act, and the Master and Judge had exercised their discretion, the Court of Appeal would not interfere with their decision. Lyric Theatre, Lim. v. L. T., Lim., 84 L. J. K.B. 712; 31 T. L. R. 88—C.A.

—— Ejectment for Non-payment of Rent — Leave to Issue Execution.] — An action of ejectment for non-payment of rent comes within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914. Perry v. Fitzgerald, [1915] 2 Ir. R. 11—K.B. D.

Costs of Summons.] — On a summons to issue execution under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, where the defendant does not appear, the costs of the summons will be allowed, subject to the Judicature Rules regulating and limiting costs. In ordinary cases, where there are no circumstances to influence judicial discretion otherwise, the full costs in default of appearance are ll. 10*s.*, and half costs 15*s.* Where the debtor appears and obtains the benefit of terms under the statute, unless there are particular circumstances influencing the Judge to order otherwise, the parties abide their own costs. Costs of counsel will only be allowed in exceptional cases. The normal practice as to costs as above laid down does not interfere with the discretion of the Judge in particular circumstances to refuse or increase costs. Watson & Co. v. Joyce, [1915] 2 Ir. R. 123—K.B. D.

Whether Agreement made as Agent or as Principal.]—Where an agreement in writing gave an option to purchase certain real estate at the price and on the terms set out in the agreement, and went on to agree to pay to the person to whom the option was given a commission on the sale of the property on the terms mentioned,—Held, that an option to purchase having been given in unequivocal terms, the subsequent clause as to payment of commission did not convert the agreement into a contract of agency under which the agent had no right to purchase as principal. Livingstone v. Ross (70 L. Liability for Performance of Contract.] — The liability of a del credere agent for sale does not extend so as to entitle the seller, while the buyer is solvent and a dispute is pending as to what sum is due from the buyer to the seller in respect of the price, to call upon the agent to pay the price or otherwise perform the contract. Gabriel v. Churchill & Sim, 84 L. C. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

1. Right of Agent to Commission and Remuneration.

See also Vol. XI. 951, 1826.

Introducing Purchaser—Principal Finding Purchaser.]—A contract by which a principal agrees to pay a commission to an agent if the latter introduces a purchaser of the principal's property is, in the absence of specific agreement to the contrary, subject to an implied term that the principal shall be at liberty to sell the property to a purchaser found by himself, and if the principal by so doing prevents the agent from introducing a purchaser, the agent is not entitled to commission. Brinson v. Davies, 105 L. T. 134; 55 S. J. 501; 27 T. L. R. 442—D.

Purchaser Introduced by Agent—Sale without Agent's Knowledge.]—If the relation of buyer and seller is really brought about by the act of the agent, the latter is entitled to commission, although the actual sale has not been effected by him. Burchell v. Gowrie and Blockhouse Collieries, 80 L. J. P.C. 41; [1910] A.C. 614; 103 L. T. 325—P.C.

No duty lies upon an agent to communicate to his principal proposals which the principal had in effect told him could not be accepted. If the agent introduces a purchaser whose offer the agent advises his principal not to accept, and the principal behind the agent's back sells to such purchaser, the agent is entitled to commission. Ib.

House Agent—Instructions to Find Tenant or Purchaser—Introduction of Tenant—Subsequent Purchase by Tenant—Right to Commission on Sale—Efficient Cause in Bringing about Sale.]—A house agent was instructed by a principal to find a tenant for a house at a rent of 120*l.* a year or a purchaser for 2,500*l.* The agent failed to find a purchaser, but found a tenant at the rent of 110*l.* a year for three years. The agent was paid commission on this letting. At the end of the three years the tenant's wife bought the house for 1,900*l.* In an action in the County Court by the agent against the principal to recover commission on the sale, the County Court Judge found that, though the agent introduced the property to the tenant and his wife, that introduction was not the effective cause of the subsequent sale, and he accordingly gave judgment for the defendant:—Held, that the proper test in an action by a house agent to recover commission was that which was laid down by Collins, M.R., in Millar, Son & Co. v. Radford (19 T. L. R. 575)—namely, whether the introduction was an efficient cause in bringing about the letting or the sale; and that, the County Court Judge having answered that question in the negative on evidence which justified such an answer, his finding was conclusive against the agent's claim. Nightingale v. Parsons, 83 L. J. K.B. 742; [1914] 2 K.B. 621; 110 L. T. 806—C.A.

"Half-commission man" — Seat in Stock Broker's Office — Contract of Employment — Termination of Service—Subsequent Orders—Prior Orders to Carry over.]—The plaintiff was a "half-commission man" and the defendants were stockbrokers and members of the London Stock Exchange, and an agreement was made between the parties that the plaintiff should have a share of the commission on orders introduced by the plaintiff and executed by the defendants. The plaintiff had a seat in the defendants' office, and was paid by commission, and not by salary, for helping to carry out the business in the office. The plaintiff, having left the defendants' service, brought an action against them to recover a share of the commission earned by them on transactions which they as brokers had entered into, after he had left their service, on behalf of persons whom he had introduced to them during that service:—Held, that the agreement was one which gave rise to the relationship of employment, and that, as there was no evidence that the parties had agreed that commission was to be paid for an indefinite period after the employment should cease, the plaintiff was not entitled to commission on orders given after the termination of his employment, but that where during his employment orders had been given to open and carry over stocks the plaintiff was entitled to commission on those transactions until they were closed. Bickley v. Browning, Todd & Co., 30 T. L. R. 134—Pickford, J.

Agreement with Firm as Agents and Business Managers—Dissolution of Firm.]—The defendant in August, 1911, gave a commission note to S. and R., who were in partnership as theatrical agents, authorising them to act as her agents and business managers for five years, with the option of a further five years, and agreeing to pay a commission of 10 per cent. on all salaried work undertaken by her. S. and R. dissolved partnership in July, 1912:—Held, that the commission note did not entitle them to claim commission in respect of engagements on salaries obtained by the defendant after the dissolution of their partnership. Sales v. Crispi, 29 T. L. R. 491—Horridge, J.

Commission Payable on Receipt of Money—Default of Contractors—Liability for Commission.]—By a contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants it was provided that if the plaintiffs procured for the defendants a contract to supply certain motor lorries to the French Government, the defendants were to pay the plaintiffs a commission immediately after the defendants had received payment from the French Government. The lorries were to be supplied from Turin, the defendants not being the makers. The contract was procured by the plaintiffs for the defendants, but the latter were unable to get the lorries and the French Government cancelled the contracts and paid the defendants nothing. In an action to recover the commission,—Held, that as the defendants had put themselves forward as being able to supply the lorries, the non-receipt of the money was caused by the default of the defendants, and the commission was payable. Vulcan Car Agency v. Fiat Motors, Lim., 32 T. L. R. 73—Rowlatt, J.

Private Enquiry Agent—Liability for Disclosures by Servant—Warranty of Secrecy.]—A private enquiry agent, although he advertises that secrecy is an essential of his business, does not impliedly warrant the secrecy of persons who have at one time been in, but have afterwards left, his service. Whether there is such a warranty in the case of a servant while in the service of the enquiry agent, quære. Easton v. Hitchcock, 81 L. J. K.B. 395; [1912] 1 K.B. 535; 106 L. T. 126; 56 S. Purchase by Agent at Undervalue of Charge on Principal's Estate.]—Where an agent purchases at an undervalue a charge on the estate of his principal, and while in receipt of the rents charges his principal with interest on the face value of the charge, the Court, in the absence of evidence that the principal after full disclosure of the circumstances consented to the agent retaining the full benefit of the transaction for his own use, will, in treating him as trustee for his principal, hold that the extra interest retained should be applied towards the extinguishment of the charge; and lapse of time, even though it may possibly have caused the loss of material evidence, will not shift the burden of proof, originally resting on the agent, to the principal. Patten v. Hamilton, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 46—C.A.

Notes of Searches in Public Records—Property in Notes — Use of Notes — Confidentiality.]—A professional searcher of records, who was employed to make searches in public records of entries relating to persons of a certain name, searched the records and made notes, of which he supplied a transcript to his employer. He was paid according to the amount of the work done. The work lasted for several years, and after it was completed the employer brought an action against the searcher claiming delivery of his original notes on the ground that he, the pursuer, had paid for them, and that they were his property. Alternatively, and on the assumption that the notes were the property of the defender, he claimed interdict against the defender communicating the notes to any person without the pursuer's consent. He averred that the employment was confidential; and it was proved that on one occasion the defender had used the notes to facilitate researches which he was making for another client:—Held, first, that, in the absence of express stipulation to the contrary, the notes remained the property of the searcher; and secondly, that there was no evidence of any such actual or apprehended invasion of a legal right as to justify the Court in granting an interdict. Horsfall, Ex parte (6 L. Purchase by Agent at Undervalue of Charge on Principal's Estate.]—See Patton v. Hamilton, ante, col. 1196.

Purchase of Land in Name of Former Clerk to Parish Council — Declaration that Land Held for Parish Council.] — The plaintiff parish council resolved in June, 1911, to purchase twelve acres of land, partly for allotments and partly for a recreation ground. According to the plaintiffs, the defendant suggested that a private person could probably effect the purchase on better terms than the council, and that thereupon it was arranged that the defendant should attend the sale and purchase the land at a price not exceeding 800*l.* The defendant purchased the land for 400*l.*, and it was conveyed to him, but as he refused to convey it to the council, the plaintiffs now claimed a declaration that he held the land as trustee for them :—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the declaration asked for, but that the plaintiffs must undertake with all convenient speed to get the necessary consent to pay the defendant the purchase price and expenses. Longfield Parish Council v. Robson, 29 T. L. R. 357—Warrington, J.

Insurance Brokerage—"Net" Premiums—Discount and Special Rebate Received by Insurance Broker — Right of Principal to Recover Amount.] — The plaintiffs employed the defendants, who were insurance brokers, to effect marine insurances, and the defendants rendered to the plaintiffs an account which stated that the premiums payable by the plaintiffs were at a "net" rate, whereas the amount paid by the defendants to the underwriters was the gross amount of premium less 5 per cent. commission, and less a further discount of 10 per cent. In the case of two large insurances the defendants got a special rebate of 25 per cent. from the insurance companies. The plaintiffs brought an action against the defendants to recover the 5 per cent. commission, the 10 per cent. brokerage, and the 25 per cent. special rebate. According to the plaintiffs, when "net" premiums were quoted they were only subject to a deduction of 5 per cent. :—Held, that, though in an ordinary case the defendants would be entitled to retain the commission of 5 per cent., yet that if a broker represented to his principal that the premiums charged to the principal were subject only to a deduction of 5 per cent. commission, the broker was not entitled to retain an additional 10 per cent. as discount, and that the same rule applied to the 25 per cent. special rebate, and that as an agent could not retain a commission which he had obtained by acting dishonestly towards his principal the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the full amount claimed. Green v. Tughan, 30 T. L. R. 64—Pickford, J.

London and Country Stockbroker—Order for Purchase of Shares—Contract Made by Town Broker for Sale to Country Broker at Price Including Commission — Effect of Non-disclosure to Client.]—Where a client has employed a country broker to purchase shares through a London broker, it is a question of fact in each case whether the London broker has acted as a broker and bought for his client—in which case he has complied with his mandate—though in accordance with the practice of the Stock Exchange he sends forward a "net price," or whether he has acted as a principal selling to his client not at the jobber's price plus a regular or reasonable remuneration for himself, but at an arbitrary price obtained by adding anything he liked to the jobber's price. Blaker v. Hawes, 109 L. T. 320; 29 T. L. R. 609—Scrutton, J.

4. Right of Agent to Close Account.

Broker — Death of Client — Taking over of Client's Shares by Broker—Proper Valuation —Liability to Account.]—Where there is a running account between a broker and his client, and the client dies, the account may be closed by the broker at once, whether he is a member of the Stock Exchange or not; if he be unable to sell the shares, he may take them over himself at a proper valuation, provided that he does not thereby prejudice his client's estate. Finlay, In re; Wilson & Co. v. Finlay, 82 L. Agent Defending Action — Solicitor and Client Costs.]—Where an agent duly carries out the orders of his principal, and is in consequence made the defendant in an action, and the action is dismissed for want of prosecution, the indemnity implied by law includes the costs of properly defending the action taxed as between solicitor and client. Williams v. Lister & Co., 109 L. T. 699—C.A.

Employee of Company — Costs Incurred in Defending Libel Action.]—A mining engineer was employed by a company, on certain terms as to remuneration and travelling and other expenses, to visit and report on property of the company abroad. While carrying out this commission he discovered matters relating to the conduct of a director which he had not been employed to investigate, but which, having discovered them, it was his duty to report to the company. He made such a report and incurred large costs in defending successfully a libel action brought against him in consequence by the director. One of the company's articles of association provided that its officers and servants should be indemnified by it against loss, and that all costs, losses, and expenses which any officer or servant might incur or become liable to by reason of acts or deeds done by him as such officer or servant be paid out of the company's funds. Sargant, J., held, distinguishing The James Seddon (35 L. J. Adm. 117; L. R. 1 A. & E. 62), that the engineer as a servant of the company was not entitled either at common law or under the articles of association to be indemnified by the company in respect of the costs: —Held, by the Court of Appeal on the facts, that the engineer was an agent of the company and not a mere servant. On well-settled principles he was entitled as such agent to be indemnified against all liability reasonably occasioned by his employment. Famatina Development Corporation, In re, 84 L. J. Stock Exchange — Country Broker and Client—Order for Purchase of Shares—Contract Effected by Country Broker through London Broker—Form of Bought Note Sent by London Broker to Country Broker—"Net" Price.]—The plaintiff, a country stockbroker, was employed by the defendant to make purchases for him of stocks and shares, subject to the rules, regulations, and customs of the Stock Exchange through which the transaction took place. The plaintiff bought certain shares through members of the London and Glasgow Stock Exchanges, who in each case, having bought from jobbers on their respective Exchanges in the orthodox fashion, sent bought notes to the plaintiff setting out the sum due to them, which sum included not only the price at which they themselves had bought from the jobbers, but also a sum to cover their commission, and was so understood by the plaintiff. The amount of such commission, however, was not disclosed to the plaintiff, but it was in every case reasonable. The word "net" was sometimes, although not in every case, added to the price charged by the London and Glasgow brokers. The method adopted by the brokers was in accordance with the practice of their respective Exchanges, and also in accordance with the rules of the Glasgow Stock Exchange. The bought notes which the plaintiff received were not communicated to the defendant, but the plaintiff sent him in each case a bought note in which the price of the shares was set out at the price charged by the London and Glasgow brokers, and a further sum was added and shewn as the plaintiff's commission. The plaintiff sued the defendant for indemnity in respect of payments he had made in carrying out these transactions. The defence was that the plaintiff had not acted in accordance with his mandate, inasmuch as the London and Glasgow brokers had acted as principals and not as brokers, and that the plaintiff was therefore not entitled to indemnity:—Held, that on the true view of the facts the London and Glasgow brokers had acted as brokers and not as principals, and the plaintiff had acted in accordance with his mandate; and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Johnson v. Kearley (77 L. J. K.B. 904; [1908] 2 K.B. 514) distinguished. Aston v. Kelsey, 82 L. J. K.B. 817; [1913] 3 K.B. 314; 108 L. T. 750; 18 Com. Cas. 257; 29 T. L. R. 530—C.A.

Broker and Principal—Payment of Differences — Gaming and Wagering Contract.] — Where a person speculates on the Stock Exchange, but the stockbroker through whom he speculates enters into bona fide contracts with a jobber in respect of which he is liable to the jobber, the stockbroker can sue the client for an indemnity, notwithstanding that the client merely intended to deal in differences, and this fact was known to the stockbroker. Franklin v. Dawson, 29 T. Stockbroker and Client — General Lien.] — The principle that every agent who is required to undertake liabilities or make payments for his principal is entitled to be indemnified for moneys expended or loss incurred on his principal's behalf out of property belonging to his principal which has come into his hands in his character of agent, and to retain such property until his claim is satisfied, is applicable to transactions carried out by a stockbroker on the Edinburgh Stock Exchange. Hope v. Glendinning, 80 L. Limitation of Authority—Excess of Limit by Agent—Liability of Principal—Authority to Raise Specified Sum on Shares—Blank Transfer of Shares Entrusted to Agent — Smaller Sum Raised by Agent — Right of Sender to Retain Shares against Principal—Estoppel.] —The plaintiffs, who were the registered holders of shares in a limited company, gave to an agent an authority to obtain for them a loan of not less than 250*l.* upon the shares, and handed to him the documents of title to the shares, including a blank transfer, signed by them. The agent handed the documents of title, including the blank transfer, to the defendant as security for a loan of 100*l.* from the defendant to himself, the defendant taking them in good faith and without express notice or knowledge of the limitation of the agent's authority. The agent not having repaid the sum borrowed by him, the defendant caused the blank transfer to be filled up with his own name, and by means of that and the other documents of title obtained the certificate for the shares. The plaintiffs brought an action against the defendant for the return of the shares:—Held, that the mere fact that the transfer was in blank and not filled up with the name of any transferee did not put the defendant, on taking it, upon his enquiry as to the extent of the agent's authority; that as the plaintiffs had entrusted the agent, with the intention that he should deal with them on their behalf, with documents which apparently represented the entire interest in the shares, they were estopped from setting up the limitation of the agent's authority as against the defendant, who had no notice of the limitation; and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the shares from the defendant. Fry v. Smellie, 81 L. J. K.B. 1003; [1912] 3 K.B. 282; 106 L. T. 404—C.A.

—— Mortgage by Agent of Principal's and His Own Securities to a Greater Amount—Sale of Principal's Securities to Realise Greater Amount—Remedy of Principal against Securities of Agent.]—A principal authorised his agent to mortgage certain securities belonging to him to a certain limited amount. The agent, however, mortgaged these securities, together with certain other securities belonging to himself, for a greater amount. The principal's securities having been sold by the mortgagee to repay himself the greater amount, —Held, that, by a process analogous to marshalling, the principal was now entitled to have handed over to him so much of the securities belonging to the agent as was necessary to secure him the difference between the amount for which he had authorised the agent to mortgage his securities and the greater amount for which those securities had actually been sold. Burge, Woodall & Co., In re; Skyrme, ex parte, 81 L. Share Certificates—Transfers Indorsed on Certificates — Transfers Signed in Blank by Registered Shareholder — Certificates Left by Purchaser in Possession of Broker — Knowledge of Purchaser as to State of Certificates —Fraudulent Pledge of Certificates by Broker —Purchaser Estopped from Claiming Shares.]—The plaintiff purchased through stockbrokers, and paid for, a number of ordinary shares in the Canadian Pacific Railway. The certificates delivered by the vendor to the brokers bore on the back transfers signed in blank by the vendor as the registered holder. The plaintiff left the certificates in the possession of his brokers, and on their advice consented to the shares remaining registered in the name of the vendor. The plaintiff knew that certificates, indorsed as these were, could be transferred to and registered in the name of another person without any act on the part of the plaintiff. The brokers subsequently, without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, deposited the certificates with the defendant bank as security for advances made by the bank to them, and the shares were registered, at the request of the brokers, in the names of the bank's nominees. The brokers subsequently defaulted, owing a sum to the defendant bank largely in excess of the value of the shares. The plaintiff brought this action against the defendant bank to recover the shares so deposited by the brokers with them:—Held, that the plaintiff was estopped from claiming the certificates from the defendant bank, who had taken them in good faith and for value. Fuller v. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co., 83 L. Knowledge of Agent — Whether to be Imputed to Principal.]—The proprietrix of certain property handed the title deeds thereof to her solicitor, a nephew, at whose death it was discovered that he had utilised the title deeds to obtain money for himself by means of a forged bond [mortgage] over the property. Previously the proprietrix had received a demand for payment of income tax on "interest," and, not knowing to what such a demand could refer, she asked another nephew, a brother of the solicitor, to make enquiries, in the course of which he learnt that his brother had obtained money for himself on the security of his aunt's title deeds. He refrained from communicating this to his aunt till after his brother's death, when she heard of the bond for the first time and at once repudiated her signature. In an action by her against the bondholders for reduction of the bond as a forgery and for delivery of the title deeds, the defenders maintained that she had adopted the forged deed as her own, or at least was barred by her actings from pleading that she had not adopted it:—Held, that the knowledge of the nephew employed to make enquiries, which he had refrained from communicating, could not be imputed to the pursuer so as to bar her from subsequently repudiating the forgery. Dictum of Lord Halsbury in Blackburn v. Vigors (57 L. Limitation of Agent's Authority to Receive Payment in Cash from Customer—Ambiguous Notice to Customer of Limitation of Authority.]—Where limitations are placed on the authority of an agent or traveller, the extent of those limitations must be brought home to the customer's mind if he is to be bound by them. International Sponge Importers, Lim. v. Watt, 81 L. The appellants employed a traveller for the sale of their goods. The statements of account intimated to customers that cheques were to be crossed. In some cases a special crossing with the names of the bank and of the payees was requested. The traveller in some cases received payment in the form of cheques payable to himself and in another case in the form of notes and gold. He fraudulently appropriated the money so paid. In an action by the appellants for the money so paid to the traveller by the respondents,—Held, that the respondents were not liable to pay the money the second time, as they had not, when they made the original payments, been informed that neither cash nor any payment save in the prescribed form would be accepted. Ib.

Underwriting—No Notice of Determination of Agent's Authority—Estoppel.]—An underwriter employed A. as his agent to underwrite for him by a written authority which expired on December 31, 1909. Prior to this date the underwriter had paid many losses on policies effected through A., but neither at the end of 1909 nor at any time had he ever given any notice to those with whom he had done such underwriting business that A.'s authority to act for him had been determined, nor had he given any notice of the fact at Lloyd's. In an action by the plaintiffs in respect of certain policies ostensibly underwritten by the defendant, through the agency of A., after December 31, 1909.—Held, that the defendant was estopped from denying A.'s authority to act on his behalf. Willis, Faber & Co. v. Joyce, 104 L. Authority of Agent—Limitation—Prohibition of Power to Borrow—Money Borrowed by Agent from Third Party—Knowledge by Third Party of Limitation of Authority — Money Applied in Paying Existing Debts of Principal —Right of Third Party to Recover from Principal.]—The defendant company by their articles of association had themselves authority to borrow money, but by an agreement between them and M., their managing director, the latter had no authority to pledge their credit or expose them to any pecuniary liability except so far as he might from time to time be authorised by them. The plaintiffs, on the application of M., advanced to him a sum of money with the intention that it should be a loan to the defendant company. At the time when they advanced the money the plaintiffs knew that M. had no authority to pledge the credit of the defendant company. M. applied the money in paying existing legal debts of the defendant company. The defendant company had no knowledge of the transaction and did not subsequently ratify it:—Held (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the money from the defendant company as money had and received by the latter to the use of the plaintiffs. Observations of Collins, M.R., and Romer, L.J., in Bannatyne v. MacIver (75 L. J. K.B. 120; [1906] 1 K.B. 103) discussed. Reversion Fund and Insurance Co. v. Maison Cosway, Lim., 82 L. J. Existence of Agency — Hotel Manager — Licence in Name of Manager—Purchase of Spirits by Manager in his Own Name—Credit Given by Seller to Manager—Subsequent Discovery by Seller of Owner of Hotel—Liability of Owner—Evidence of Agency.]—The defendants, the owners of an hotel, appointed as their manager a person who was the licensee of the premises and whose name appeared as such over the door. The manager ordered in his own name a quantity of whisky from the plaintiffs, who gave credit to the manager not knowing that he was only manager or that the defendants were the owners of the hotel, and the whisky was delivered at the hotel:—Held, that the plaintiffs, on subsequently discovering that the defendants were the owners of the hotel, were not entitled to recover the price of the whisky from them, inasmuch as there was no evidence that the manager was in fact the agent of the defendants for the purpose of ordering the whisky on their behalf. Kinahan v. Parry, 80 L. Whether Agent Acting as Principal or Agent —Set-off of Debt Due by Agent to Third Party.]—A ordered coals from B, who transmitted the order to a colliery company, who delivered the coals to A, accompanied by invoices and accounts addressed to A, which bore that the coals were sold by the company. In reply to enquiries from A, who wanted to know why the company had supplied the coals, B, who had on previous occasions sold coal to A, assured him that he, B, was the seller. A, satisfied with B's statement, did not ask any explanation from the company, accepted the coals, made no reply to letters from the company asking for payment, and ordered more coals from B, which were also supplied by the company, together with invoices and accounts in similar terms. In an action by the company against A for the price of the coals, the defender maintained that he had no contract with the company, but had throughout dealt with B as principal, and that his only liability was to B, against whom he had a contra account which he desired to set off against the price of the coals:—Held, that A was liable to the company for the whole price. Cooke v. Eshelby (56 L. Liability of Principal in Respect of Antecedently Acquired Knowledge of Agent.]—Every act of an agent within the scope of his employment is the act of his principal; and consequently all knowledge acquired by the agent, when acting within the scope of his authority, is the knowledge of his principal; but knowledge acquired by the agent antecedently to his becoming agent to the principal ought not to be imputed to the latter, and the recollection or forgetfulness of the agent of matters known to him previous to that relation ought not to affect the liability of the principal, except in cases where the principal purchases the previously obtained knowledge of the agent in relation to a particular subject-matter, or where, from his position and relationship to the principal, the agent is the agent of his principal "to know or to inquire." Dresser

Sewage Disposal.] — The defendants employed a contractor to empty and remove the contents of the cesspools in their district, but made no provision for the disposal of the contents of the cesspools when taken out by the contractor. The contractor deposited sewage upon the land of the plaintiffs without their consent, and thereby caused a serious nuisance:—Held, that the defendants were liable for the act of the contractor, as they had failed to take precautions for the proper disposal of the sewage. Robinson v. Beaconsfield Urban Council, 80 L. Illegal Sale of Lunatic's Furniture by Relieving Officer — Liability of Guardians for Wrongful Act—Evidence of Ratification.]—In carrying out their statutory duties towards paupers the acts of guardians of a poor law union are purely ministerial, whether performed by themselves or through the medium of their officers; and they are not liable in damages in an action at the suit of a pauper who alleges that he has sustained an injury through the wrongful act of their officers. But if in such an action there be evidence that a relieving officer, intending to act on behalf of the guardians, has done an illegal act amounting to an independent tort for the benefit of the guardians by which the guardians have benefited, a jury may find a verdict against the guardians for damage so suffered on the ground that the guardians have adopted and ratified the act of their relieving officer. Barns v. St. Mary, Islington, Guardians, 10 L. Pledge in Paris to Agent of Defendant in London—Agent not Acting in Good Faith—Title of Defendant.]—The plaintiffs, who were dealers in precious stones and who carried on business in Paris, handed certain valuable pearls to one A in Paris, he having stated to them that he knew of a special merchant who wanted them, and would be likely to give a good price. A signed a receipt in these terms: "Entrusted by [the plaintiffs] the following goods to be sold for cash, which I promise to return on the first demand, and not to give them to any one without their written authority. . . . In case of loss I will repay the full value of the goods. The house reserve to themselves the right of delivering the goods." A pawned the goods at a Government pawnbroking establishment, and subsequently pledged them with M., who was the defendant's representative in Paris, who sent them to the defendant in London. The plaintiffs brought an action to recover the pearls or their value from the defendant, in the course of which Bray, J., found as facts (a) that A from the outset of the transaction intended to misappropriate the pearls; and (b) that M. had not acted in good faith. Bray, J., held, first, that whether the case depended on English or French law the defendant obtained no title to the pearls, as his agent M. had not acted in good faith; and secondly, that A had obtained the pearls from the plaintiffs by larceny or by a trick in English law, or vol in French law, and therefore he did not obtain possession of the pearls with the plaintiffs' consent; and thirdly, that A was not a mercantile agent within the meaning of the Factors

Acts :—Held, that as M. was either the agent of the defendant, or a joint speculator with him, and as M. had not acted in good faith, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Mehta v. Sutton, 109 L. T. 529; 58 S. J. 29; 30 T. L. R. 17—C.A.

"Mercantile agent" — Picture Dealer — Sale.]—Where goods are bought from a person who carries on a business in which there is in the customary course authority to sell—for example, the business of a picture dealer—the buyer, provided he acts in good faith and without notice of any limitation of the authority of the person selling, obtains a good title to the goods under section 2 of the Factors Act, 1889, notwithstanding that the goods were in fact entrusted to the person selling on the condition that no offer should be accepted until the real owner was referred to or unless a particular price was obtained. Turner v. Sampson, 27 T. Delivery Orders—Documents of Title—Bill of Lading for Cargo—Delivery Orders Created and Issued by Owners of Goods for Part of Cargo — Transfer of a Document of Title — Delivery Order not for Specific Goods.]—The defendants, having sold to F. & Co. a quantity of mowra seed, gave F. & Co. two delivery orders for 2,640 bags of mowra seed, and F. & Co. gave the defendants a cheque in payment therefor. The 2,640 bags formed part of a larger consignment of 6,400 bags of mowra seed in respect of which the defendants held a bill of lading. F. & Co. having sold a quantity of mowra seed to the plaintiffs indorsed the two delivery orders and gave them to the plaintiffs, who took them in good faith and paid F. & Co. therefor. As the cheque given by F. & Co. to the defendants was dishonoured, the defendants refused to deliver the 2,640 bags of mowra seed to the plaintiffs :—Held, that the two delivery orders were valid documents of title to the 2,640 bags of mowra seed notwithstanding that they were not given in respect of specific goods, and notwithstanding that the 2,640 bags formed part of a larger consignment in respect of which the defendants held a bill of lading; and that the two delivery orders had been "transferred" to F. & Co. by the defendants within the meaning of section 10 of the Factors Act, 1889, and section 47 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, although they had been created and issued by the defendants, and F. & Co. having transferred the delivery orders to the plaintiffs, who took them in good faith and for valuable consideration, the defendants' right of lien as unpaid vendors was defeated. *Ant. Sale of Goods—C.i.f. Contract—Payment by Acceptances to Seller's or Authorised Agent's Draft—Payment of Foreign Seller by Agent—Delivery by Agent of Shipping Documents and Draft to Buyers—Refusal of Buyers to Accept Agent's Draft—Right of Agent to Maintain Action for Amount of Draft.]—K., who carried on business at Riga, entered into a contract through the agency of J. & Co. to sell certain timber to the defendants c.i.f. London. Payment was to be "by approved acceptances to seller's or authorised agent's draft." The contract was signed by J. & Co. as agents for K. In accordance with the practice of the Riga timber trade K. sent the bill of lading for the goods to J. & Co., and at the same time drew upon J. & Co. for the price. J. & Co. accepted the draft on May 24, 1911, and paid it in due course on May 30, 1911. On May 25, 1911, J. & Co. sent the shipping documents to the defendants, together with a draft for the price of the goods drawn upon the defendants, and asked them to accept and return the draft. The defendants kept the shipping documents and took delivery of the goods, but refused to accept the draft, as the goods were not in accordance with the contract, and claimed to reject the goods. It was admitted that the goods were not in accordance with contract, and they were sold by order of the Court for about one-third of their invoice price. An action was thereupon brought against the defendants by K. for the price of the goods and by J. & Co. to recover the amount of the draft which the defendants had failed to accept :—Held, that as J. & Co. were merely agents and not parties to the contract of purchase they were not entitled, in the absence of a contract personally with them by the defendants that the draft would be accepted, to maintain an action against the defendants for the amount of the draft, and that the fact that J. & Co. had themselves paid K. did not make any difference, inasmuch as that fact could not be relied upon by the defendants as an answer to an action against them by K. on the contract. Barton Thompson & Co. v. Vigers (19 Com. Contract made by Agent for Foreign Principal—Presumption as to Liability of Agent — Authority of Agent to Pledge Credit of Foreign Principal.] — Where an agent in England contracts on behalf of a foreign principal, he is presumed to contract personally unless a contrary intention plainly appears from evidence contained in the document itself or in the surrounding circumstances. If there is no such evidence, the presumption prevails that the agent has no authority to pledge the credit of the foreign principal in such a way as to establish privity between such principal and the other party, and that he is personally liable on the contract. Harper v. Keller, Bryant & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1696; 113 L. T. 175; 20 Com. Cas. 291; 31 T. L. R. 284—Sankey, J.

"Del credere" Agent — Liability for Performance of Contract.]—Where a contract of sale is entered into through an agent who takes a del credere commission, and an ascertained sum is due in respect of that contract from the buyer to the seller, which sum the buyer fails to pay, either through insolvency or for some reason which makes it impossible for the seller to recover the amount, the del credere agent is bound to answer for that default to the seller by reason of his del credere commission; but the del credere agent is not personally responsible for the due performance of the contract so as to entitle the seller to call upon him to litigate any disputes arising under the contract between the seller and the buyer. Gabriel v. Churchill & Sim, 84 L. J. K.B. 233; [1914] 3 K.B. 1272; 19 Com. Cas. 411; 111 L. T. 933; 58 S. J. 740; 30 T. L. R. 658—C.A.

Judgment against Company—Agreement by Chairman—Personal Liability.] —The plaintiffs recovered judgment against a company, and the chairman of the company signed a document stating that in consideration of the plaintiffs suspending proceedings against the company he agreed "on behalf of" the company to pay 75*l.* in three days, and the balance, including costs, in three months :—Held, that this agreement was made by the chairman as agent for the company, and that he was not personally liable upon it. Avery, Lim. v. Charlesworth, 30 T. L. R. 215—A. T. Lawrence, J. Affirmed, 31 T. L. R. 52—C.A.

Order by Brokers for Ship's Stores—Liability for Price.]—A ship chandler received an order from a firm of "steamship owners and brokers" in these terms : "Please supply the s.s. Silvia with the following stores." He delivered the goods under the erroneous belief that the firm were the owners of the vessel, and sought to hold them liable for the price :—Held, that the firm were not liable, in respect that they were acting as agents for the owners, and—since the latter could be discovered by reference to the register of shipping—as agents for a disclosed principal. Armour v. Duff & Co., [1912] S. C. 120—Ct. of Sess.

b. For Assumption of Authority.

Damage for Breach of Warranty—Breach without Resulting Loss.] — A tradesman entered into a contract with the secretary of a company, which purported to bind the company. The contract was for the execution of certain work, and, after the work had been executed, the tradesman, having ascertained, as he averred, that the contract did not in fact bind the company, brought an action against the secretary for damages for breach of his warranty of authority to make the contract. In this action he averred that the company had no assets :—Held, that as it appeared from this averment that the pursuer would have been in no better position had the contract bound the company, he had suffered no loss from, and therefore could not recover damages for, the defender's breach of warranty; and action dismissed. Irving v. Burns, [1915] S. C. 260—Ct. of Sess.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

I. NATURE OF CONTRACT.

See also Vol. XI. 1130, 1873.

Contract of Guarantee — Construction.] — The respondent agreed with the appellants that if they would advance to the Mills Company a lakh and a half of rupees he would within two weeks procure a loan of eleven lakhs as the first mortgage of the mills block property and thereout repay the sum advanced :—Held, that this was a substantial undertaking by the respondent to procure a loan and thereout repay the advance. The liability assumed was not contingent upon a first mortgage being procured. Vissanji v. Shapurji Burjorji Bharoocha, L. R. 39 Ind. App. 152—P.C.

Guarantee of Payment for Goods up to Certain Value—Extent of Obligation.]—A contract of guarantee was in the following terms : "I do hereby undertake to guarantee to you the due payment for all such goods as you may from time to time sell and deliver to M. or his order up to the value of two hundred pounds" :—Held, that this put upon the guarantor a liability for 200*l.* only of the amount which the debtor should owe the creditor for goods so supplied, and not a liability for the whole amount of such debt subject to a limitation that he should not be called upon to pay more than 200*l.*; and, accordingly, that the guarantor was entitled to deduct from the amount of his liability the proportion of the value of a security, held by the creditor, which 200*l.* bore to the total amount of the debt due. Harmer & Co. v. Gibb, [1911] S. C. 1341—Ct. of Sess.

Bank Overdraft Guaranteed—Surety's Right of Indemnity—Will—Bequest Forgiving Debts —Gift not Extending to Moneys Paid under Guarantee.] — A testator bequeathed to his nephew 2,000*l.* and forgave him "all debts owing to me from him up to the time of my decease and all interest and arrears thereon, and I bequeath to him the same and all documents which I shall hold by way of security for the same." Apart from this bequest the nephew received other interests under the will. At the time of the testator's death the nephew was indebted to his bank in a sum exceeding 4,000*l.*, and the bank held a continuing and subsisting guarantee from the testator guaranteeing all sums due by the nephew up to and not exceeding 4,000*l*. After the death of the testator the bank demanded payment of the 4,000*l*. from his executors:—Held, that the gift in the will of all debts owing from the nephew to the testator up to the time of the testator's death did not extend to any moneys which the testator's estate might be called upon to pay to the bank under the guarantee, and that the executors were entitled to retain the beneficial interest of the nephew under the will to make good those sums together with interest. The right of the testator as surety to come into equity for the purpose of getting an indemnity from the nephew against the liability to the bank, before anything had been paid under the guarantee, was not a debt. Mitchell, In re; Freelove v. Mitchell, 82 L. J. Ch. 121; [1913] 1 Ch. 201; 108 L. T. 34; 57 S. J. 213—Parker, J.

—— Signature Obtained by Means of a Fraudulent Misrepresentation—Advances made by Bankers on Faith of Guarantee—Loss Sustained by Bankers thereby—Liability—Negligence—Plea of Non est Factum—Proximate Cause of Loss.]—The defendant signed a document purporting to be a continuing guarantee up to a certain amount by him to cover the payment by R. of all moneys due from him to the plaintiffs on the general balance of his account with them. The signature of the defendant had been obtained by the fraudulent misrepresentation of R. that it was merely an insurance paper of a kind the defendant had signed before. The defendant did not read the document, neither did he know the nature of it. Subsequently R. forged the signature of an attesting witness, and handed the document thus completed to the plaintiffs. In an action brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant as guarantor of R.'s current banking account, the jury found (inter alia) that the defendant was negligent in signing the document:—Held, that the fact that the jury had found the defendant was negligent did not raise such an estoppel as would prevent him from setting up the defence non est factum, and that the proximate cause of the loss sustained by the plaintiffs was not the negligence of the defendant, but was the fraudulent act of R. Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co. v. Bragg, 80 L. J. K.B. 472; [1911] 1 K.B. 489; 104 L. T. 121—C.A.

Guarantee of Loan to Infant—Liability of Guarantor.]—The plaintiff sued the defendants, father and son, on a promissory note given in respect of a loan to the son, who was under age when the money was advanced to him. The father joined in the promissory note in order to facilitate the transaction, understanding that the debt would be paid when the son came of age. It appeared that in all probability the plaintiff knew that the son was under age:—Held, that the true meaning of the transaction was that the father acted as principal borrower, and therefore, although by the Infants' Relief Act the son was not liable, the father was liable as principal. Wauthier v. Wilson, 28 T. L. R. 239—C.A.

Representations as to Credit of Another—Necessity for Writing.]—A tradesman who had executed work under a contract with a company which proved to have no assets, sued the secretary of the company for damages for misrepresentations made by him whereby the pursuer was induced to enter into the contract. The misrepresentations alleged were—first, that the pursuer's money would be all right; secondly, that the company had plenty of money; thirdly, that 3,000*l*. of the capital of the company had been subscribed; and fourthly, that the directors would provide additional security:—Held, that the first three of these misrepresentations fell within the category of representations contained in section 6 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, Scotland, 1856, which provides (inter alia) that "all representations and assurances as to the . . . credit, ability, trade, or dealings of any person, made or granted to the effect or for the purpose of enabling such person to obtain credit, money, goods . . . shall be in writing," subscribed by the guarantor or his agent; and that as the misrepresentations were not in writing they could not be founded on; that the fourth misrepresentation did not fall within that category, but did not afford a ground of action against the defender, as it was not averred that he knew it to be false. Irving v. Burns, [1915] S. C. 260—Ct. of Sess.

Promise to Answer for Debt of Another—Necessity for Writing—Interest in Consideration for Promise—Debt of Trading Company — Guarantee by Debenture-holder.] — The holder of a debenture issued by a trading company creating a charge upon all its property, with the object of protecting his security by helping the company to continue carrying on its business, orally promised a manufacturer, in consideration of his supplying the company with goods, to pay the debt of the company in respect of such goods if the company made default:—Held, that the promise, not being in writing, could not be enforced by action; for it was a simple promise to answer for the debt of another within section 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and was not taken out of the statute by reason of the promisor having an interest in the consideration for the promise. Harburg Indiarubber Comb Co. v. Martin (71 L. J. K.B. 529; [1902] 1 K.B. 778) considered. Davys v. Buswell, 82 L. J. K.B. 499; [1913] 2 K.B. 47; 108 L. T. 244—C.A.

Indemnity—Covenant to Assign "Spes successionis"—Right of Set-off by the Person Giving the Indemnity against the Covenantor.]—If C gives an indemnity to A, and B covenants to assign his spes successionis to the benefit of that indemnity to D, when the spes successionis is realised, B immediately becomes a trustee for D, and C cannot claim to set off a debt due to him from B before satisfying the demands of D. Poulter, In re; Poulter v. Poulter, 56 S. J. 291—Neville, J.

II. DISCHARGE OF SURETY.

See also Vol. XI. 1206, 1876.

Fidelity Guarantee — Non-disclosure of Material Fact—Absence of Fraud.]—The plaintiffs, having in their employment a clerk whose duties involved the collecting of money, obtained from the defendant a suretyship bond for securing the faithful discharge of his duties by the clerk. The clerk, to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, had previously been guilty of dishonesty in their service. The plaintiffs, without any fraud on their part, omitted to disclose to the defendant the fact of the clerk's previous dishonesty, and the defendant had no knowledge of it. In an action to enforce the bond,—Held, that the effect of this non-disclosure was to vitiate the contract and to release the surety. London General Omnibus Co. v. Holloway, 81 L. J. K.B. 603; [1912] 2 K.B. 72; 106 L. T. 502—C.A.

Bank—Bank's Duty to Surety—Disclosure of Principal's Indebtedness.]—H., whose bank account was overdrawn to the extent of about 300*l.*, and who was also indebted to the bank to the amount of about 1,100*l.* in respect of certain accommodation bills, requested G., an acquaintance who had no knowledge of his financial position and in particular of his indebtedness to the bank, to guarantee his account to the extent of 300*l.* The latter expressed to the bank agent his willingness to undertake a guarantee to that amount, and was informed by the agent that a guarantee of 300*l.* might not assist the principal debtor, as that sum would be taken up by the bank. The agent, however, did not make any disclosure of the principal's further indebtedness of 1,100*l.* under the bills, and G., believing an overdraft of 300*l.* to be the sole debt, granted a guarantee for 500*l.* The principal having failed to discharge his debt to the bank, G. resisted an action for payment under the guarantee, on the ground that he had been persuaded to undertake it under essential error induced by the failure of the bank agent to discharge his duty of disclosing the existence of the principal's indebtedness under the bills: —Held, that there was no such duty of disclosure, and decree for payment granted. Royal Bank of Scotland v. Greenshields, [1914] S. C. 259—Ct. of Sess.

Observations, per the Lord President and Lord Mackenzie on the circumstances in which a bank agent might have a duty to disclose to an intending guarantor the state of the principal's indebtedness to the bank. Ib.

Creditor's Suspicion that Debtor Guilty of Forgery—Obligation to Inform Surety.]—In security for advances to be made by a bank to a customer, the customer's father-in-law in 1899 guaranteed payment of the premiums on certain policies of insurance assigned to the bank, and payment of interest on an account for advances to the customer. In December, 1906, circumstances came to the knowledge of the manager of the bank which afforded ground for the strongest suspicion, short of actual proof, that the customer had forged a bill for 3,000*l.* That information was not communicated to the surety, and the bank continued to deal with the customer (though without making any further advances to him) until November, 1907, when his estates were sequestrated. He was shortly afterwards convicted on his own confession of several acts of forgery, but it was never ascertained whether or not he had forged the bill for 3,000*l.* The liability of the surety under the guarantee was no greater in November, 1907, than it had been in December, 1906. The surety having repudiated liability under the guarantee, on the ground that the bank should have communicated their suspicions to him in December, 1906,—Held, that, in the circumstances, there was no duty on the bank to communicate their suspicions, and that the surety was not freed from his liability. Bank of Scotland v. Morrison, [1911] S. C. 593—Ct. of Sess.

Guarantee of Bank Overdraft to Agent of Guarantor — Alleged Misappropriation of Money by Agent—Suspicions of Bank—Non-communication to Guarantor — Release of Guarantor.]—The defendant guaranteed the payment of all sums due on any account from C. to a bank up to 5,000*l.* C. was at that time the agent of the defendant's estate and the guarantee was given in order to raise money to be expended for the benefit of the estate. C., however, without the knowledge of the defendant, opened another account with the bank by means of the guarantee, the money so advanced by the bank on the security of the guarantee being used by C. for other purposes than those of the defendant's estates. The defendant alleged that the bank knew or ought to have known that C. was misappropriating the money, and that as they did not communicate their suspicions to him he was discharged from his guarantee:—Held, that the defendant had not proved that the bank had suspicions that C. was defrauding him, and that therefore he was not discharged from his guarantee. Held, further, that even if the bank were suspicious that C. was defrauding the defendant they were under no duty to communicate their suspicions to the defendant. National Provincial Bank of England v. Glanusk (Baron), 82 L. J. K.B. 1033; [1913] 3 K.B. 335; 109 L. T. 103; 29 T. L. R. 593—Horridge, J.

Bank of Scotland v. Morrison ([1911] S. C. 593) followed. Ib.

Recall of Guarantee by One Surety—Giving Time to Debtor.]—A letter of guarantee granted in favour of a bank in security of advances made by it to a limited company, empowered the bank to give time to the debtor without affecting the liability of the sureties, and provided that the guarantee should continue in force until recalled. Semble, that the recall of the guarantee by a surety, while preventing further advances to the debtor on the credit of the revoking surety, would not in every case debar the bank from giving time to the debtor after the date of the recall. Hamilton's Executor v. Bank of Scotland, [1913] S. C. 743—Ct. of Sess.

Co-defendants—Judgment—Time Given to One Judgment Debtor.]—The doctrine that if a creditor agrees to give time to the principal debtor without the surety's consent the surety is discharged does not apply after judgment has been obtained against them both jointly as co-defendants. After judgment both defendants are in an equal position so far as the judgment creditor is concerned, and he can issue a bankruptcy notice against the surety, in spite of such an agreement, if the judgment is unsatisfied. Jenkins v. Robertson (23 L. J. Ch. 816; 2 Drew. 351) followed. E. W. A., In re (70 L. J. K.B. 810; [1901] 2 K.B. 642), distinguished. Debtor (No. 14 of 1913), In re, 82 L. J. K.B. 907; [1913] 3 K.B. 11; 109 L. III. RIGHTS OF SURETY.

Co-sureties — Right of Contribution — Debt Payable by Instalments—Payment of Instalment by One Co-surety.]—A surety who has paid more than his share of the common liability is entitled to compel contribution from his co-sureties, but the right of contribution does not arise until the surety has paid more than his proportion or share of the common liability—that is to say, more than he can ever be called upon to pay—and he cannot, therefore, sue his co-sureties for a rateable proportion of what he has paid the moment he has paid any part of the debt. Lawson v. Wright (1 Cox, 275) and Snowdon, In re; Snowdon, ex parte (50 L. I. COSTS.

District Auditor — "Action" — "Public duty or authority"—"Civil proceeding commenced by writ."]—R., as an auditor of the Local Government Board, had made certain surcharges in respect of rates collected by F. C. The Metropolitan borough of B. having applied to the King's Bench Division for a writ of certiorari quashing the surcharges, that Court on December 2, 1912, made the order asked for, but on June 17, 1913, the Court of Appeal set aside that order, made an order allowing the surcharges, and ordered the costs of that appeal and in the King's Bench Division to be paid by the respondents on the present appeal—the Metropolitan borough of B. and F. C. to the present appellant R. The present appeal asked for payment of solicitor and client costs of R., other than those in the Court of Appeal, on the ground that he was entitled to solicitor and client costs under section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. For the appellant it was argued that the proceedings were within the purview of section 1 of that Act. On appeal from an order of Bailhache, J., dismissing an application by the appellant R. to review and vary a Taxing Master's certificate,—Held, that the proceedings in the King's Bench Division were not an action within section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. The appellant had not obtained a judgment in the proper sense of the term, and the proceedings, although in a civil Court, were not an action, and the appellant was not entitled to solicitor and client costs as an incident of the proceedings. Roberts v. Battersea Borough Council, 110 L. T. 566; 78 J. P. 265; 12 L. G. R. 898—C.A.

County Council becoming Defenders in Action of Right of Way.]—The provisions of section 1 (b) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, for the taxation as between solicitor and client of costs awarded to a public authority, are not applicable to the case of a district committee of a county council, who, in order to vindicate a public right of way, had made themselves defenders to, and had successfully defended, an action of interdict brought against a private individual. M'Robert v. Reid, [1914] S. C. 633—Ct. of Sess.

II. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

See also Vol. XI. 1894.

Action for Personal Injuries — Motor Car Owned by Corporation—Returning to Garage after Performing Business of Corporation — Act Done in Execution of any Public Duty or Authority.]—A motor car, the property of a corporation, was used to convey their engineer on his visits to the various pumping stations for the purpose of his inspecting the same on behalf of the corporation, and on the day in question the engineer made his round of inspection as usual. It was the day in the week on which a clerk from the treasury department also went round for the purpose of paying weekly wages. As the motor car was returning, after the round was done, to the garage, the plaintiff's wife was knocked down while attempting to cross a high road and injured. The writ in the action was not issued within six months from the date of the accident. At the trial the jury awarded the plaintiffs damages:—Held, that judgment in accordance with the verdict had rightly been entered for the plaintiffs, as the act done was not in the exercise of any public duty or authority within the meaning of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and the section had no application to a matter merely incidental to the performance of a statutory duty by the corporation. Clerke v. St. Helens Corporation, 85 L. J. K.B. 17; 113 L. T. 681; 79 J. P. 529; 13 L. G. R. 1150; 59 S. J. 509—C.A.

Claim against Municipal Corporation and Borough Treasurer—Borrowing Powers—Overdraft from Bank for General Purposes—Ultra Vires.]—An overdraft obtained by the defendant corporation from a bank for general purposes in respect of borrowing powers granted for specific purposes, held to be ultra vires and illegal. Held also, that the application of money due to the consolidated loans fund in repayment of such overdraft was ultra vires and illegal; and that the borrowing of money from the bank for the purpose of the corporation's electricity accounts otherwise than in the exercise of borrowing powers with the sanction of the Local Government Board was ultra vires and illegal. Semble, in such a case the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, would apply in favour of the corporation and the borough treasurer in respect of acts completed more than six months before action. Att.-Gen. v. West Ham Corporation, 80 L. J. Ch. 105; [1910] 2 Ch. 560; 103 L. T. 394; 74 J. P. 406; 9 L. G. R. 433; 26 T. L. R. 683—Neville, J.

Municipal Corporation—Statutory Power to Sell Coke—Negligence in Delivery—Action by Purchaser against Corporation—"Act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority."]—The defendant corporation, being the gas authority for their district, under a local Act which gave them power to sell coke and other residual products of the manufacture of gas, sold a ton of coke to the plaintiff. A servant of the defendants, in the act of delivering the coke at the plaintiff's premises, negligently broke the plaintiff's shop window. The plaintiff having commenced an action in respect of this damage more than six months after the act complained of, the defendants claimed the benefit of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1 (a):—Held, that, as the defendants were not under any statutory duty to sell the coke to the plaintiff, and their obligation to do so rested solely on a voluntary contract on their part, the act of delivering the coke by their servant was not an "act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority," within the meaning of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893; and that therefore that Act did not apply. Myers v. Bradford Corporation, 84 L. Master and Servant—Compensation—Limitation.]—The limitation of six months imposed upon the commencement of any action, prosecution, or other proceeding by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1, has no application to proceedings for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Fry v. Cheltenham Corporation, 81 L. J. K.B. 41; 105 L. T. 495; 76 J. P. 89; 10 L. G. R. 1; 56 S. J. 33; 28 T. L. R. 16; [1912] W.C. Rep. 103.

Superannuation Scheme—Dismissal of Servant—Claim for Recovery of Contributions Paid—Public or Private Statute.]—The plaintiff, who was a servant of the borough council of S., for some years paid contributions by way of weekly deductions from his wages, under a superannuation scheme established by virtue of a private Act of Parliament. The plaintiff was dismissed from his employment, and more than six months after such dismissal brought an action against the borough council to recover the amount of the contributions paid by him. The defendants set up the defence that they were protected by section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893:—Held, that the defendants were protected by the Act, the words of section 1 including a private as well as a public statute. Bennett v. Stepney Corporation, 107 L. T. 383; 76 J. P. 473; 10 L. G. R. 954—D.

Non-repair of Sewer.]—The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1895, affords no bar to an action where the duty of the Commissioners to repair the road is a continuing duty; the default of the borough council to repair the sewer, and so render the performance of that duty by the Commissioners possible, being a continuing wrong. Hart v. Marylebone Borough Council, 76 J. P. 257; 10 L. G. R. 502—A. T. Lawrence, J.

Pollution of Stream—Sewer.]—The periodical inundation of sewage from a sewer out of repair is a continuing cause of action, and the right to damages is not limited by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1, to damages in respect of the floodings within six months before action. Att.-Gen. v. Lewes Corporation, 81 L. RAG FLOCK.

"Rags."]—By section 1, sub-section 1 of the Rag Flock Act, 1911, any person using for certain purposes flock manufactured from rags which do not conform to a prescribed standard of cleanliness is liable to a penalty:—Held, that the word "rags" is not limited to rags which have been polluted through contact with a human being or an animal so as not to conform to that standard, but refers to rags which are polluted from any cause so as not to conform thereto. Cooper v. Swift, 83 L. J. K.B. 630; [1914] 1 K.B. 253; 110 L. T. 79; 78 J. P. 57; 12 L. G. R. 115; 23 Cox C.C. 759—D.

Standard of Cleanliness — Re-stuffing Mattress—Unclean Flock—"Making" Bedding.]—By section 1, sub-section 1 of the Rag Flock Act, 1911, "It shall not be lawful for any person to sell or have in his possession for sale flock manufactured from rags or to use for the purpose of making any article of upholstery, cushions, or bedding flock manufactured from rags or to have in his possession flock manufactured from rags, intended to be used for any such purpose, unless the flock conforms to such standard of cleanliness as may be prescribed by regulations to be made by the Local Government Board, and, if any person sells or uses or has in his possession flock in contravention of this Act, he shall be liable" to a penalty. And by the Rag Flock Regulations, 1912, article 1, flock is to be deemed to conform to the standard of cleanliness for the purposes of sub-section 1 of section 1 of the Act when the amount of soluble chlorine, in the form of chlorides, removed by washing from a specified quantity of flock does not exceed a certain stated proportion. The appellant, a mattress maker, had undertaken in his spare time, and at his own house, to re-make a mattress, belonging to his sister, which had been in use for a considerable time, for which she was to pay him a shilling. He opened the seams, and removed the flock with the intention of putting it back into the same covering, the object of the re-stuffing being to secure a more even distribution of the flock in order to add to the comfort of the mattress. The flock was found upon analysis to contain soluble chlorine in the form of chlorides greatly in excess of the maximum allowed by the regulation. Upon a summons charging the appellant with having in his possession rag flock intended to be used for the purpose of making bedding, which flock did not conform to the standard of cleanliness prescribed by the regulations, the magistrate convicted the appellant:—Held, that the re-stuffing or re-making of the mattress with the same flock was not a "making" of bedding within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1, and that the appellant was therefore improperly convicted. Gamble v. Jordan, 82 L. J. K.B. 743; [1913] 3 K.B. 149; 108 L. T. 1022; 77 J. P. 269; 11 L. G. R. 989; 23 Cox C.C. 451; 29 T. L. R. 539—D.

Stuffing New Cover with Old Flock.]—The Rag Flock Act, 1911, s. 1, sub-s. 1, prohibits the use for the purpose of making bedding of rag flock unless such flock conforms to the standard of cleanliness prescribed by the Local Government Board. The respondent was remaking two mattresses for a customer by removing the flock from the covers and replacing it in new covers. The flock did not conform to the requisite standard of cleanliness:—Held, that removing flock from an old cover and replacing it in a new cover constituted a "making of an article of bedding" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Rag Flock Act, 1911. Gamble v. Jordan (82 L. J. K.B. 743; [1913] 3 K.B. 149) distinguished. Guildford Corporation v. Brown, 84 L. J. K.B. 289; [1915] 1 K.B. 256; 112 L. T. 415; 79 J. P. 143; 31 T. L. R. 92—D.

Sale of Second-hand Mattresses Containing Rag Flock.]—The Rag Flock Act, 1911, does not apply to the sale of a second-hand mattress or pillows containing rag flock by a person who does not manufacture them, even although the rag flock contained therein does not conform to the standard of cleanliness required by the regulations made by the Local Government Board. Cooper v. Cook's Depositories, 84 L. J. K.B. 382; [1915] 1 K.B. 344; 112 L. T. 431; 79 J. P. 159; 13 L. G. R. 368; 31 T. L. R. 82—D.

RAILWAY.

A. CAPITAL STOCK.

Dividends — Half-yearly or Yearly Calculation.] — A railway company, in exercise of powers conferred by a private Act of 1888, created certain preferred and deferred ordinary stocks, the terms of the Act providing that a non-cumulative dividend of 3 per cent. should be payable out of the available profits of each half-year to the preferred stockholders and that the balance of such profits should go to the deferred stockholders. By the Railway Companies (Accounts and Returns) Act, 1911, every railway company was relieved of any obligation to prepare or submit to their shareholders or auditors accounts or balance sheets oftener than once a year :—Held, that the later Act did not relieve the railway company of the duty of calculating the dividends due to the preferred and deferred stockholders on the basis of the profits of each half-year. North British Railway v. Wingate, [1913] S. C. 1092—Ct. of Sess.

B. POWERS AND DUTIES IN CONSTRUCTING AND WORKING.

Right of Way—Power of Railway Company to Grant.]—A railway company can dedicate a way to the public over their property, including their railway line, provided it is not incompatible with the use of their property for the objects and obligations for which they hold it. Arnold v. Morgan, 80 L. J. K.B. 955; [1911] 2 K.B. 314; 103 L. T. 763; 75 J. P. 105; 9 L. G. R. 917—D.

—— Closure of Highway — Re-dedication — User Incompatible with Railway — Ultra Vires.]—A railway company cannot grant to the public a perpetual right of way over and across their lines of rails or over land which is required or intended and would naturally come to be used for lines of rails. Great Central Railway v. Balby-with-Hexthorpe Urban Council; Att.-Gen. v. Great Central Railway, 81 L. J. Ch. 596; [1912] 2 Ch. 110; 106 L. T. 413; 76 J. P. 205; 10 L. G. R. 687; 56 S. J. 343; 28 T. L. R. 268—Joyce, J.

Semble, where a public highway has been closed by Act of Parliament in order that a railway company may lay lines of rails across it, mere evidence of trespass and user by the public will not be enough to establish re-dedication of a right of way, even in cases where such re-dedication would not be ultra vires the company. Ib.

Extinguishment of Public Right of Way—Construction of Special Act — Compulsory Powers—Land Taken by Agreement—Public Rights not Extinguished.]—The special Act of a railway company (which incorporated the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts) empowered the company to enter upon, take, use, and appropriate to the purposes of their undertaking certain land which was the soil of a public highway. Section 37 of the Act provided that "all rights of way over any of the lands which shall under the compulsory powers of this Act be purchased or acquired shall be and the same are hereby extinguished." The soil of the highway was purchased from its owners by agreement without serving any notice to treat :—Held, that the land so taken by agreement was not taken under the compulsory powers of the Act, and that the public rights of way over it were not extinguished by the section. Ib.

Bridge over Railway—Liability of Railway Company to Maintain—Heavy Motor Traffic—Standard of Maintenance.]—Where a railway company has constructed a bridge to carry a highway over a railway it is bound to maintain that bridge in a condition of safety for the passage of all traffic which may be reasonably expected in the circumstances of the present day to traverse the highway. If heavy motor traffic may be expected on the highway the railway company is bound to keep the bridge strong enough to carry that traffic, and the company is not relieved from that obligation by the possession of a power under the Locomotives Acts and the Motor Car Acts to exclude the traffic while the bridge is insufficient. Att.-Gen. v. Great Northern Railway, 83 L. J. Ch. 763; 12 L. G. R. 1196; 58 S. J. 595; 30 T. L. R. 557—Warrington, J.

Special Constables Appointed under Private Act—Servants of Company—Arrest on Suspicion of Felony — Liability of Company.] — Special constables appointed under the provisions of the Great Eastern Railway (General Powers) Act, 1900, s. 50, on the nomination of the railway company, and employed and paid by the company, are the servants of the company, but have under the section the peculiar protection which constables have in the exercise of their duties. If, therefore, they make an arrest on suspicion of felony without reasonable grounds for suspecting that the person arrested was guilty of felony, an action for damages for false imprisonment will lie against the company. Lambert v. Great Eastern Railway, 79 L. J. K.B. 32; [1909] 2 K.B. 776; 101 L. T. 408; 73 J. P. 445; 22 Cox C.C. 165; 53 S. J. 732; 25 T. L. R. 734 —C.A.

The employment of police constables (whether in plain clothes or not makes no difference) is within the scope and duties of railway companies. Goff v. Great Northern Railway (30 L. J. Q.B. 148; 3 E. & E. 672) and Edwards v. Midland Railway (50 L. J. Q.B. 281; 6 Q.B. D. 287) approved. Ib.

C. LAYING WATER MAINS UNDER RAILWAY COMPANY'S LAND.

Acquisition of Easement, whether Necessary.]—By section 61, sub-section 1 of the Metropolitan Water Board (Various Powers) Act, 1907, "it shall be lawful for the Board to exercise at any place or places within their limits of supply the like powers with respect to the laying of mains and pipes as are exercisable by local authorities under the provisions of the Public Health Act 1875 with respect to the laying of mains and pipes within their respective districts for the purpose of water supply. . . ." By section 96, sub-section 6, ". . . the Board shall not without the consent in writing of the railway companies under their common seal purchase or acquire any of the lands or property of the railway companies but the Board may acquire and the railway companies shall if required grant to the Board an easement or right of constructing and maintaining works on through in under over or along such lands and property and the sum to be paid for the acquisition of such easement or right shall be settled in the manner provided by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 . . .":—Held, that the Board were entitled, under the powers conferred upon them by the above enactments, to lay a main under land belonging to the railway company without purchasing or acquiring an easement in respect of such land. Metropolitan Water Board and London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, In re, 84 L. D. LIGHT RAILWAY.

Light Railway — Application for Order by Local Authority—Several Lengths of Railway Included in Application—Application Granted by Commissioners with Refusal of Two Lengths — Appeal by Local Authority to Board of Trade—Power of Board of Trade to Remit Case to Commissioners for Further Consideration.]—Certain local authorities applied to the Light Railway Commissioners under the Light Railways Act, 1896, for an order authorising the construction of a light railway. There were twenty-three different lengths of railway set out in the application. The Commissioners granted the application except as regards two lengths of railway. The local authorities appealed to the Board of Trade, under section 7, sub-section 6 of the Act of 1896, against the decision of the Commissioners as regards those two lengths of railway, and the Board of Trade remitted the application to the Commissioners for further consideration so far as it related to those two lengths of railway:—Held, (Phillimore, L.J., dissenting), that, as the right of appeal to the Board of Trade given by section 7, sub-section 6 of the Light Railways Act, 1906, was limited to cases where the Commissioners had refused the application, and as in the present case the application had been granted, although the order did not extend to the whole of the lines applied for, the local authorities had no right of appeal to the Board of Trade, and the Board of Trade had no power to remit the application to the Commissioners for further consideration. Rex v. Board of Trade; Rex v. Light Railway Commissioners; Great Central Railway and Midland and North-Eastern Railways Joint Committee, Ex parte, 84 L. E. MANAGEMENT OF BUSINESS.

1. Running Powers.

See also Vol. XI. 1486, 1921.

Amalgamation.] — The appellant company by a special Act passed in 1865 acquired running powers over the respondent company's line between M. and W. By a special Act passed in 1897 the D. Co., whose line crossed the respondent company's line between M. and W., were empowered to form a junction with the respondents' line and to enter into agreements as to traffic, and by an agreement made in 1898 they acquired limited running powers over a small portion of the respondents' line from the junction to a colliery. By a special Act passed in 1906, which incorporated the sections in the Railways Clauses Act, 1863, relating to amalgamations, the undertaking of the D. Co. was transferred to the appellant company, who thereupon claimed a right to bring all descriptions of traffic on to and over the respondents' line between M. and W. at the junction formed by the D. Co.:—Held, that the appellant company had acquired no greater rights under the amalgamation than those previously possessed by the D. Co. Great Central Railway v. Midland Railway, 83 L. J. Substitution of Electric for Steam Traction —Protection of Company Exercising Running Powers—Supply of Electric Power by Owning Company—Basis of Payment.]—The M. Railway obtained statutory powers to substitute electric for steam power in the working of their railway, and a clause was inserted in the special Act of Parliament conferring such powers for the protection of the G. W. Railway (who under an agreement subsequently confirmed by statute exercised running powers over part of the M. Railway), whereby it was enacted that nothing therein contained should prejudice the rights and powers of the G. W. Co. to work any traffic over the railway of the M. Co., and that the powers conferred by the Act should not be exercised so as to make the working of such traffic by the G. W. Co. less easy or convenient than before; and, further, that in the event of the M. Co. requiring the G. W. Co. to substitute electric for steam traction, either company should be entitled to refer to arbitration such requirement and how the cost or any part thereof should be borne. The M. Co. subsequently required the G. W. Co. to substitute electric traction for steam locomotives, and by a subsequent arrangement with the G. W. Co., supplied electric traction to certain of the G. W. Co.'s trains running over their railway. A difference having arisen between the two companies as to the principle upon which payment to the M. Co. for the supply of such electric power should be based, the same was referred to the Railway and Canal Commissioners :—Held, that the basis of payment should be the saving to the G. W. Co.—that is to say, what it would have cost the G. W. Co. to have performed the service by steam locomotives at the particular time in respect of which the payment was to be made; and not the actual cost of electrical haulage along with an extra amount by way of remuneration to the M. Co. Great Western Railway and Metropolitan Railway, In re, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 176—Ry. Com.

2. Working Agreements.

See also Vol. XI. 1488, 1923.

Obligation by Lessees to "use their best endeavours" to Develop Traffic of Lessors.]—The defendant company undertook to "use their best endeavours" to develop the through and local traffic of the applicants :—Held, that the defendants had thereby assumed a quasi-fiduciary position to the applicants—a position similar to that of a bailiff or agent—and that they were bound to treat the applicants at least as well as they treated themselves in the matter of traffic. Sheffield District Railway v. Great Central Railway, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 299; 27 T. L. R. 451—Ry. Com.

Contract to Develop Fully—Alleged Breach.]—The applicants and the defendants, two railway companies, made an agreement that the defendant should work the applicants' line and should do so in such a way as to develop the traffic fully and in good faith. The working was to be left entirely to the defendants, and the receipts were to be divided in certain proportions. The applicants alleged that the defendants, though exercising an honest management, had failed to perform their obligations under the agreement, and the applicants asked for an order requiring them to do so :—Held, that the agreement meant that the defendants were to work the line as if it was part of their own system, and were to have a wide discretion within the limits of honest management, and that on the evidence they had not exceeded their discretion and had committed no breach of contract, and therefore the application failed. Mold and Denbigh Junction Railway v. London and North-Western Railway, 32 T. 3. Damage by Fire from Locomotive.

Damage to Agricultural Crops—Particulars of Damage — Statement in Particulars of Amount Claimed.]—Where damage is caused to agricultural land or to agricultural crops by fire arising from sparks or cinders emitted from a locomotive used on a railway, the particulars of damage which, under section 3 of the Railway Fires Act, 1905, must be sent to the railway company within fourteen days of the occurrence of the damage, as a condition precedent to the Act applying, must contain a statement of the amount claimed in respect of the damage. Martin v. Great Eastern Railway, 81 L. J. K.B. 825; [1912] 2 K.B. 406; 106 L. T. 884—Channell, J.

4. Obligation to Provide Look-out Men on Line.

Accident to Platelayer—Obligation to "provide" Look-out during "repairing" of Permanent Way—"Danger likely to arise."]—The Prevention of Accidents Rules passed by the Board of Trade on August 8, 1902, in virtue of the Railway Employment (Prevention of Accidents) Act, 1900, provide that "With the object of protecting men working singly or in gangs on or near lines of railway in use for traffic for the purpose of relaying or repairing the permanent way of such lines, railway companies shall, after the coming into operation of these rules, in all cases where any danger is likely to arise, provide persons or apparatus for the purpose of keeping a good look-out or for giving warning against any train or engine approaching such men so working; and the person employed for such purpose shall be expressly instructed to act for such purpose, and shall be provided with all appliances necessary to give effect to such look-out." The foreman of a gang of platlayers, who were engaged in substituting new wooden wedges for old ones in the rail chairs, was killed by a light engine, which came up at an unexpected moment. At the point where the accident took place there was nothing to obstruct the view of the engine driver or of the platelayers. No look-out man had been posted. In an action of damages, brought by the representatives of the foreman against the company, the pursuers contended that the defenders were liable, because, first, they had failed to give the foreman notice of the running of the light engine; secondly, they were in breach of the Board of Trade's regulations in that they had not supplied the gang with a special look-out man; and thirdly, that the accident was partly due to the fact that the fireman employed on the engine was not the usual fireman, but an unqualified person : —Held, first, that the defenders were under no obligation to give notice of the running of the light engine; secondly, that while the work on which the gang were engaged was "repairing" the case was not one in which any "danger" was "likely to arise" in the sense of the regulations, and that accordingly a look-out man was unnecessary; but thirdly, that in any event the company were not bound to supply a special look-out man, and had complied with the regulations by delegating, by their own regulations, to foremen the duty of providing from their gangs look-out men where they apprehended danger; and fourthly, that, the substituted fireman having been taken on to the engine by the driver without the knowledge or consent of the locomotive superintendent, the company were not liable for the result of any fault he might have committed. Held accordingly, that, as the accident was due to the fault of the foreman himself or of fellow servants, the company were not liable. Ferguson v. North British Railway, [1915] S. C. 566—Ct. of Sess.

F. Carriage of Passengers.

See also Vol. III. 7, 2173.

Action by Passenger for Personal Injuries—Condition Relieving from Liability — Special Contract.]—A carrier may stipulate that he shall be free from liability to a passenger for injury caused by negligence, but the burden is on him to shew that the passenger assented to the special terms imposed. Grand Trunk Railway v. Robinson, 84 L. J. P.C. 194; [1915] A.C. 740; 113 L. T. 350; 31 T. L. R. 395—P.C.

G. Carriage of Goods.

See also Vol. III. 74, 2183.

Delay in Delivery—Delay Due to Strike of Railway Company's Servants.]—In calculating what is a reasonable time within which goods which have been entrusted to a railway company for carriage must be delivered, regard must be had to all the circumstances existing at the time, and those include the existence of a strike on the part of the railway company's own servants, provided it is not established that such strike has been brought about by any default on the part of the railway company. Hick v. Raymond (62 L. J. Q.B. 98; [1893] A.C. 22) applied. Sims v. Midland Railway, 82 L. J. K.B. 67; [1913] 1 K.B. 103; 107 L. T. 700; 18 Com. Cas. 44; 29 T. L. R. 81—D.

Perishable Goods—Sale by Railway Company — Agents of Necessity.] — Per Scrutton, J.: In the case of carriage by land as well as in the case of sea carriage the power of the carrier to sell the goods which have been entrusted to him for carriage depends upon two things—first, that a real necessity for the sale exists, and, secondly, that it is practically impossible to obtain the instructions of the owner as to what should be done. Ib.

Consignment of Goods at "owner's risk" —Carriage to be by Passenger Train—Substitution of Goods Train—Delay—Liability of Railway Company.]—The plaintiff delivered to the defendants a consignment of cherries to be carried by passenger train or other similar service upon the terms that, in consideration of being charged a lower rate than the defendants' ordinary rate for the carriage of fruit, he would relieve the defendants from all liability for (inter alia) delay except upon proof that such delay arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the defendants' servants. The cherries were duly despatched by passenger train, but in the course of the journey they were transferred to a goods train, with the result that they were delayed and became deteriorated as a consequence. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants, —Held, that the carriage of the fruit by passenger train was of the essence of the contract; that after its transference from a passenger train to a goods train it was no longer being carried under the contract made with the plaintiff, and that consequently the defendants were not entitled to the advantage of the conditions of the consignment note relieving them from liability except upon proof of wilful misconduct. Gunyon v. South-Eastern and Chatham Railway, 84 L. J. K.B. 1212; [1915] 2 K.B. 370; 113 L. T. 282; 31 T. L. R. 344—D.

Equal Charges — Newspapers Carried by Passenger Trains.]—In an action under section 90 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, complaining of inequality of charge in respect of newspapers carried by the defendants by passenger trains from Dublin, as compared with newspapers carried from Belfast, the rate was a flat rate, irrespective of distance, for carriage over the whole of the defendants' railway, and the train times and average length that the respective papers were carried were different:—Held, first, that though there was no statutory charge prescribed, and though the defendants were not bound to carry papers by passenger trains, still, as they professed to do so, section 90 applied to preferential treatment in respect of such papers; secondly, any cause of action under section 90 was confined to the portion of the line between Dublin and Belfast; thirdly, the circumstances of the traffic from Dublin and from Belfast were not the same, and the action therefore failed. Semble, a flat rate irrespective of distance is not within the section. Whether the mere circumstance that the points of departure were different necessarily and as a matter of law would take the case out of the section, quære. Stone v. Midland Railway (73 L. J. K.B. 392; [1904] 1 K.B. 669) discussed and distinguished. Denaby Main Colliery Co. v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway (55 L. J. Q.B. 181; 11 App. Cas. 97) considered. Independent Newspapers, Lim. v. Great Northern Railway (Ireland), [1913] 2 Ir. R. 255—Gibson, J.

Consignment at "Owner's risk"—"Non-delivery of any package or consignment"—Appreciable Part of Consignment not Delivered—Non-delivery of Consignment—Damages.]—A consignment note embodying a contract of carriage between the plaintiff and the defendants provided (inter alia) for the carriage of the plaintiff's goods on the defendant's railway at reduced rates at "owner's risk," but that nothing therein should exempt the defendants from any liability they might otherwise incur in case of "non-delivery of any package or consignment fully and properly addressed" except where they proved that the non-delivery had not been caused by negligence or misconduct on the part of the defendants or their servants. The plaintiff consigned by the defendants' railway three consignments of carcasses. An appreciable part of each consignment was not delivered. The plaintiff claimed damages for the non-delivery, and the defendants failed to disprove negligence or misconduct:—Held, by the Court of Appeal (Buckley, L.J., and Pickford, L.J.; Phillimore, L.J., dissenting), that on the construction of the consignment note the expression "non-delivery" of a consignment was not confined to the case in which there had been non-delivery of every part of a consignment, but included the case in which there had been non-delivery of any appreciable part of it; and therefore that there had been non-delivery of the consignments in question, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. Wills v. Great Western Railway, 84 L. J. K.B. 449; [1915] 1 K.B. 199; 112 L. T. 368; 59 S. J. 89; 31 T. L. R. 60—C.A.

"Wilful misconduct"—Overloaded Waggon — Failure of Railway Servants to Gauge Load.]—A railway company contracted to convey the plant of a switchback railway at a specially reduced rate, one of the conditions of the contract being that the proprietor of the goods should relieve the company of all liability except for damage arising from the "wilful misconduct" of the company's servants. One of the company's regulations directed that all loads must be gauged "when there is any reason to doubt that they are not within the dimensions" specified for the lines over which they have to travel. The stationmaster at the station of departure did not gauge the load, but merely judged the height of it with his eye and concluded that it did not exceed the dimensions. In this, however, he was mistaken, and part of the load in the course of transit came in contact with the smoke board of a bridge beneath which the train was passing, and was damaged:—Held (Lord Johnston dissenting), that the damage was due to "wilful misconduct" of the stationmaster, for which the company was liable. Bastable v. North British Railway, [1912] S. C. 555—Ct. of Sess.

Per The Lord President: "Wilful misconduct" is not something more than, and opposed to, "negligence," and dicta to the contrary effect in Graham v. Belfast and Northern Counties Railway ([1901] 2 Ir. R. 13) and Lewis v. Great Western Railway (47 L. J. Q.B. 131; 3 Q.B. D. 195) doubted. Ib.

—— Special Contract — Limitation of Liability.]—The defendants, a railway company, contracted with the plaintiff to carry certain theatrical scenery and properties, the defendants being relieved from all liability for damage except upon proof that it arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the defendants' servants. The goods were loaded on the railway truck by the plaintiff's servants, and the defendants' porters were then told to cover it with a tarpaulin. There was rain and snow next day, and when the goods reached their destination they had been damaged by wet. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for damages, the defendants' servants gave evidence that they had covered the truck with a tarpaulin and had fastened it securely, but the jury found for the plaintiff:—Held, that even assuming that the evidence of the defendants' servants was untrue, the evidence was consistent with an ordinary case of negligence, and there was no evidence of wilful misconduct within the meaning of the contract, and therefore the defendants were entitled to succeed. Norris v. Great Central Railway, 85 L. J. K.B. 285*n.*: 32 T. L. R. 120—D.

Railway Company's Steamer—Special Contract for Carriage of Goods — Whether Just and Reasonable.]—A railway company which owns steam vessels, and which by its private Act has adopted Part IV. of the Railways Clauses Act, 1863 (relating to steam vessels), is bound by the provisions of section 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854. A special contract made by such railway company for the carriage of goods must therefore, whether the carriage is partly by its railway and partly by its steamers, or wholly by its steamers, be just and reasonable, within the meaning of section 7. A special contract for the carriage of goods by sea which exempts the railway company from all liability for damage due to the negligence of its servants is not just and reasonable where there is no alternative rate offered to the consignor upon which the goods might be carried. Jenkins v. Great Central Railway, 81 L. J. K.B. 24; [1912] 1 K.B. 1; 106 L. T. 565; 17 Com. Cas. 32; 12 Asp. M.C. 154; 28 T. L. R. 61—Lord Coleridge, J.

—— Damage to Goods during Land Transit — Condition Exempting Railway Company from Liability for Loss by Negligence during Sea Transit — Alternative Rates — Condition not Just and Reasonable.] — Goods of the plaintiffs were delivered to the defendants for conveyance from Antwerp to North Woolwich. The goods were conveyed from Antwerp to Parkeston Quay, Harwich, by the defendants' steamship, and from Harwich to North Woolwich by the defendants' railway. During the journey from Harwich to North Woolwich the goods were damaged by being wetted by rain owing to the negligence of the defendants' servants. The plaintiffs had a standing contract with the defendants by which their goods were to be carried from Antwerp to North

Woolwich at a reduced rate at owners' risk. For the goods in question the defendants gave a bill of lading stating that the goods were to be delivered to the plaintiffs at North Woolwich, and containing the words "Owners' risk" and a clause exempting the defendants from liability for loss or damage due to the negligence of their servants. There was a higher rate at which the goods might have been carried, but even if that higher rate had been paid the bill of lading would have contained the same negligence clause. In an action by the plaintiffs claiming in respect of the damage to the goods :—Held, that, as the plaintiffs had not an option offered to them, so far as the sea portion of the transit was concerned, of having the goods carried by the defendants with the ordinary liability of common carriers, the contract as a whole was not just and reasonable within section 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, and therefore that the defendants were not protected from liability, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Western Electric Co. v. Great Eastern Railway, 83 L. J. K.B. 1326; [1914] 3 K.B. 554; 111 L. T. 29: 19 Com. Cas. 301; 30 T. L. R. 416—C.A.

Special Contract — Damage — Evidence of Company's Liability.] — The plaintiffs requested the defendants, a railway company, to send a van for a milling machine weighing 18 cwt. and having a steel base one inch thick and to take it to a station and forward it by rail. The defendants sent a van for the machine, and the plaintiffs' servant handed to the carman a form of consignment note, which contained no restrictions exempting the defendants from any liability for damage to the machine during transit. The carman requested the plaintiffs' servant to write O.R. (owner's risk) upon the note tendered by him and to sign his initials. This he did. The machine was then taken away in the defendants' van, and was afterwards found damaged at the station, the base being cracked. The evidence was that this must have been caused by a blow while the machine was in the defendants' custody :—Held, that though the plaintiffs took the ordinary risks of transit the defendants remained liable for negligence, and that as there was prima facie evidence of negligence the onus lay on the defendants to prove that there was no negligence, and that therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to damages. United Machine Tool Co. v. Great Western Railway, 30 T. Passenger Accommodation at Station—Level Crossing.]—Passengers going from one of the platforms at Leek station to the main buildings and station yard or vice versa had to cross the railway either by a level crossing situate about 130 yards from the entrance to the station, and over which shunting operations from time to time took place, or by means of a public bridge carrying a main road across the railway, the carriageway on such bridge being twenty-five feet wide and without a footpath on the station side. Upon an application for an order directing the railway company to afford reasonable facilities for receiving, forwarding, and delivering traffic at their said station :—Held, that the applicants had failed to shew that the shunting operations caused any substantial obstacle to the free use by passengers of the level crossing or that there was any appreciable danger to passengers crossing by either way, and that, although the station was not a convenient one, and could be made more convenient at same considerable expense, nothing less than reasonable proof (which was not forthcoming) that the obligation cast upon the railway company had not been fulfilled could authorise the Commissioners to interfere with the discretion of the railway company as to the arrangement of its stations. Leek Urban Council v. North Staffordshire Railway, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 105—Ry. Com.

Carriage of Goods in Trader's Trucks — Shortage of Railway Company's Trucks — Obligation of Company to Carry.]—Conveyance by a railway company of a trader's merchandise in his own trucks or vans is not in general one of the "reasonable facilities" which under section 2 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, every railway company is bound to afford for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of traffic upon the railway; but it does become such a reasonable facility wherever a sufficient number of suitable trucks or vans is not provided by the railway company. Spillers & Bakers, Lim. v. Great Western Railway, 80 L. J. K.B. 401; [1911] 1 K.B. 386; 103 L. T. 685; 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 52; 55 S. J. 75; 27 T. L. R. 97—C.A.

The Great Western Railway Company (Rates and Charges) Order Confirmation Act, 1891, sched., s. 2 (b), in providing that the rate authorised for conveyance of the merchandise there referred to shall be reduced as therein mentioned where "the company do not provide trucks," means that the rate shall be reduced where the company do not maintain and offer for use trucks suitable for the service required, not that the rate shall be reduced where the company do maintain and offer for use suitable trucks, but the trader uses not the company's trucks, but his own. Ib.

Obligation of Railway to Receive Traders' Waggons—Substitution of Traders' Waggons for Waggons Owned by Railway Company—Obligation of Company to Supply Waggons.]—Certain traders having applied to the Railway and Canal Commissioners for an order enjoining certain railway companies (inter alia) to give the same facilities for the use of traders' waggons as of the companies' waggons and to desist from refusing to carry traffic in traders' waggons, and the Commissioners having ordered a proof or enquiry into facts, the defendant companies appealed on the ground that the applicants sought only for a declaration of legal right to have their waggons conveyed on the defendants' railways, and that the Commissioners had no jurisdiction to entertain the same :—Held, that, inasmuch as the real question raised by the applicants was whether their waggons should be received on the railways as a reasonable facility, the Commissioners had jurisdiction. Watson v. Caledonian Railway, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 185; [1910] S. C. 1066—Ct. of Sess.

Practice.] — In applying section 2 of the Railway and Canal Traffice Act, 1854, the Commissioners will only consider a demand for reasonable facilities with reference to the circumstances of each concrete case and will not declare an abstract right, so that they will refuse to make an order that a trader shall be entitled as a reasonable facility to put such waggons on a railway company's lines as he considers necessary for the proper working of his traffic, irrespective of what number of waggons the railway company tender for that purpose. Watson v. Caledonian Railway, 14 Ry & Can. Traff. Cas. 185—Ry. Com.

Such an order would enable the trader to displace the whole of the railway company's waggons and substitute waggons of his own, a claim which, in view of the practice in Scotland, whereby more than half of the waggons required for the coal trade are supplied by the railway companies, would not be entertained by the Court. The case of Spillers & Bakers v. Great Western Railway (supra) distinguished as being a case concerning ordinary merchandise which it had never been the practice to carry in traders' waggons, and as not applying to the circumstances of mineral traffic. Ib.

Decision of Railway Commissioners — Appeal.]—The Court of Appeal will not, except under extraordinary circumstances, review the decision of the Railway Commissioners as to what in their view are "reasonable facilities." Per Farwell, L.J. : It is within the power of the Railway Commissioners, in exercising their discretion, to refuse to order, as a "reasonable facility," a railway company to receive coal traffic upon running lines where there are no exchange sidings. Great Central Railway v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 131—C.A.

Railway Lines Taken over by Government for His Majesty's Service—Competency of Complaint against Railway Company for Want of Reasonable Facilities.]—Where the possession and control of the railroad and plant of a railway company have been taken by the Government under a warrant issued by a Secretary of State under section 16 of the Regulation of the Forces Act, 1871, which empowers the taking of possession of all the railroads in Great Britain, in the event of an emergency arising, for His Majesty's service, an Order in Council having declared that an emergency had arisen, an application may still be made by a trader to the Railway and Canal Commission Court, under section 2 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, complaining that reasonable facilities have not been afforded to him, inasmuch as it does not necessarily follow that the complete control of the railway has been taken by the Government from the railway company, as the Government may delegate to the railway company the right to exercise the actual control over the working of the railway in so far as it does not interfere with the paramount right vested in the Government to use the railway for His Majesty's service. On such application the burden lies upon the railway company of shewing that it is not within their power to give such facilities, inasmuch as prima facie the railway company are still under the obligation of giving reasonable facilities. Denaby and Cadeby Main Collieries v. Great Central Railway, 84 L. Classification of Merchandise—Amendment by Board of Trade — Motor Car Chassis, whether a "Carriage."]—A motor chassis is a "carriage" within the meaning of Part III. of the schedule annexed to the Railway Rates and Charges Order Confirmation Acts, 1891. 1892, only when it is consigned to the railway companies for conveyance, having been propelled to their premises by its own mechanical power or drawn thither on its own wheels by a locomotive. London and North-Western Railway v. Society of Motor Manufacturers, 14 Ry. and Can. —— Goods Misdescribed in Order to be Sent at Lower Rate—Penalty.]—An electric stator forming part of a single-phase alternator generator was sent by the appellants by rail from Birmingham to Bedford. It was in two parts and packed in two cases, and was described as "two cases bearers." The rate applicable to the carriage of bearers at owner's risk was 9*s.* 2*d.*, and for machinery and generators at company's risk was 22*s.* 9*d.*, but there was no rate in respect of electrical machinery or generators in parts at owner's risk. The railway company accepted the stator and charged on it at 9*s.* 2*d.* as if the description given by the appellants was accurate. The appellants were summoned under section 99 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, for giving a false account of the goods so consigned with intent to avoid the payment of tolls in respect thereof, and the Justices convicted the appellants :—Held, that the conviction was right. General Electric Co. v. Evans, 105 L. T. 199; 75 J. P. 406—D.

Classification of Rates—"Dangerous goods" —Liquid Metal Polish.]—Goods which are not included in any part of the statutory classification and which are declared by a railway company, acting bona fide, to be dangerous goods, are "dangerous goods" within the meaning of Part IV. of the statutory schedule to the Railway Charges Acts. The Court, on the application of the railway company, made a declaration that liquid metal polish having a flash-point of over 73 degrees Fahrenheit (Abel close test) in securely closed tins in cases was "dangerous goods" within Part IV. of the statutory schedule. North-Eastern Railway v. Reckitt, 109 L. Notice of Increase—Requisite Form—Setting out New Rates in Rate Book.]—Certain railway companies advertised that they intended to increase their rates. The advertisement stated generally that subject to the statutory maxima existing rates of not more than 1*s.* would be increased by ½*d.*, rates of between 1*s.* and 2*s.* would be increased by 1*d.* and so forth. Traders objected that the notices were not in the form required by statute, and that as the contemplated increases in rates were not set out individually in the rate book the new rates would be illegal and could not be enforced:—Held, that the notices of increase were sufficient, and that it was not necessary to set out the new rates individually in the rate book. British Portland Cement Manufacturers, Lim. v. Great Eastern Railway, 111 L. T. 586; 30 T. L. R. 523; 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 213—Ry. Com.

Increase of Rates — Local and Through Rates—Joinder of Several Railway Companies as Defendants to One Application.] — The applicants made an application to the Railway and Canal Commission Court complaining of the increase of the rates of the railway companies who carried their goods, and they joined ten railway companies as defendants to one application. Some of the rates complained of were local rates and some were through rates. One railway company against whom the rates complained of were local rates applied to the Registrar to be struck out of the application. The Registrar dismissed the application and awarded the applicants the costs of the application:—Held, on the appeal of the railway company, that there was nothing in the Rules of the Railway and Canal Commission Court which imposed a limit as to the number of persons who might be joined as defendants in any application, and that therefore the applicants were not precluded from joining the ten railway companies as defendants to one application, and the railway company was not entitled to be struck out of the proceedings. Smith, Stone & Knight, Lim. v. London and North-Western Railway, 83 L. J. K.B. 1690; [1914] 3 K.B. 1195; 111 L. T. 1117; 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 321; 30 T. L. R. 645—Ry. Com.

—— Classification of Traffic—Article not Included in Original Classification — Alteration in Description of Article—Transfer of Article to Higher Class.]—The applicants had consigned certain traffic under the description of "bundles of water pipes," which was carried by the railway companies originally at Class C or at Class 1 rates, according to the weight consigned. The articles in question were coils of pipe which became known as radiators, after the classification set out in the railway companies Rates and Charges Order Acts was made. The railway companies subsequently placed the said traffic in Class 2 of their classification, and, except as to certain stations, charged upon all consignments of such traffic Class 2 rates on the ground that the applicants originally had not properly declared and described the articles consigned by them:—Held, that as radiators were omitted from the classification the proper course was to apply to the Board of Trade, and that the Railway Commissioners were not the tribunal to decide as to how the articles in question should be classified. Held, also, that there had been an increase in the rates which upon the evidence had not been justified. Beeston Foundry Co. v. Midland Railway, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 119—Ry. Com.

—— Disintegration of Rates.] — A trader is entitled to an order for a disintegration of rates provided that he is bona fide interested in the traffic and desires the information for the purpose of facilitating his business, although it may be in the nature of discovery. Smith, Stone & Knight v. London and North-Western Railway, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 327—Ry. Com.

—— Special Act — Previous Sanction by the Commissioners — Practice — Representation of Limited Company by Traffic Manager.]—Section 30 of the South-Eastern and London, Chatham and Dover Railway Companies Act. 1899, enacts that: "The fares (including those for season tickets and, where such now exist, the cheap fares on certain days in the week), rates and charges existing on the first day of May, 1899, shall not be increased by either of the two companies, or by the managing committee, without the sanction to such increase being first obtained of the Railway and Canal Commissioners, who shall have jurisdiction in like manner as if the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts were applicable to the matter to hear all parties concerned, and to determine whether any, and, if so, what, increase of such fares, rates, and charges, shall thenceforth be made." Upon an application pursuant to the above Act by the two companies and their managing committee for an order sanctioning certain increases in the rates for merchandise traffic, and upon the applicants shewing that the cost of working their goods traffic had materially increased:—Held, that the said increases should be sanctioned subject to the condition that any person thereby affected should be at liberty thereafter to apply to the Court to vary or withdraw such sanction. South-Eastern and London, Chatham and Dover Railway, Ex parte, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 154—Ry. Com.

—— Amalgamation of Railway Companies—Necessity of Previous Sanction by the Commissioners under Special Act—Material Comparative Dates.]—Under two Amalgamation Acts passed in 1900, the Waterford, Limerick and Western and the Waterford and Central Ireland railway companies were amalgamated with, and became part of, the undertaking of the Great Southern and Western railway company; and by the said Acts it was enacted that the actual rates charged on June 30, 1900, on any railway theretofore worked or owned by either of the companies so amalgamated with the Great Southern and Western company, or by the last-named company, or partly on the railways of the first-named companies and partly on the railways of the last-named company, should not be increased directly or indirectly without the consent of the Railway Commissioners. It was also enacted by section 57 of the Fishguard and Rosslare Railway and Harbours Act, 1899, that all through bookings which at the passing thereof were in operation via the port of Waterford between certain points should continue, and that the through fares, rates and charges in force on December 31, 1898, via the port of Waterford should not be raised, except with the consent of the Board of Trade or the Railway Commissioners. Upon applications pursuant to the above Acts for orders sanctioning increases equal to an average of 4 per cent. of all local rates, for goods and merchandise traffic, and for perishable traffic carried by passenger train, and also sanctioning similar increases of through rates via Waterford, various tables in support were put in evidence comparing receipts, working expenses, and other figures for the year 1892 (when the scale of maximum rates was fixed) and 1897 on the one hand, and the year 1912 on the other; but, with certain exceptions, no comparison was instituted between the period immediately succeeding the said amalgamation in 1900 and the date of the applications. The result shewn by the above tables was that the percentage of working expenses had increased as between the years 1892 and 1912, but certain tables comparing the year 1901 (the year succeeding amalgamation) and 1912, which were subsequently prepared at the request of the Court, shewed that such percentage had considerably decreased as between the last-mentioned years :—Held, that the year 1892, which was prior to the amalgamation, could not be accepted as the proper year for comparison, and that the year succeeding the amalgamation, unless abnormal, should be adopted: the question to be considered being how, if at all, the circumstances had altered since the date when the Legislature said that the actual rates then in force were not to be increased without the consent of the Court; and also that in view of the decrease of the percentage of working expenses to receipts, and also of the net increase in the train mile and tonnage receipts as between the year succeeding the amalgamations and the period preceding the application, the applicants had failed to justify the proposed increases of rates, and that the sanction of the Court thereto should be refused. Great Southern and Western Railway, Ex parte, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 282—Ry. Com.

—— Classification of Traffic—Article not Included therein — Alteration in Description of Article—Transfer of Article to Higher Class.]—The applicants for a period of thirty years prior to 1912 had consigned steel "strips" (one-eighth of an inch in thickness and not exceeding twelve inches in width) by rail from Sheffield to London and other places. Such strips were despatched either unpacked, or packed in cases or casks, and were described as "Bessemer undamageable" or "undamageable steel hoops." They were carried, whether packed or unpacked, at Class C rates, amounting, in the case of two-ton lots from Sheffield to London, to 13*s*. 4*d*. per ton. In 1891 "strips not packed" were placed in Class C of the general railway classification, while packed strips remained unclassified. From 1908 an exceptional rate was quoted in the rate books for steel strips packed, from Sheffield to London, at 18*s*. 4*d*. per ton, but such rate was not charged to the applicants' traffic, which continued to be described as traffic. In 1910 strips iron and steel, "except otherwise herein provided"—that is, packed—were introduced into Class 2 of the general railway classification, but the applicants continued to pay the old rate on their traffic, under its usual description. In 1912 the railway companies required the applicants to describe such traffic, where packed, as "steel strips," and charged for its carriage from Sheffield to London the Class 2 or an exceptional rate of 18*s*. 4*d*. per ton. The railway companies contended that "steel strips packed" being unclassified they were entitled, under section 20 of their Rates and Charges Order, 1891, to charge Class 3 or any lower rates, and stated that this would have been done had the applicants truly declared the contents of the cases or casks containing their steel strips. Upon a complaint by the applicants that the defendant railway companies had increased the rates for their traffic and that such increase was unreasonable :—Held, that on the evidence the railway companies did in fact know of the contents of the cases and casks consigned by the applicants, and that in charging for such traffic Class 2 rates in lieu of Class C rates they had increased the rates; and also that the fact that other traders had paid the higher rates on similar traffic did not in itself justify the increases complained of, although the defendants would have laid the foundation for argument if they had proved that the volume of traffic upon which the higher charge was paid was really substantial as compared with that upon which the lower rate was paid. Beesley v. Midland Railway, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 306—Ry. Com.

Held, further, that the above decision should not prejudge an application to the Board of Trade for the classification of the traffic in question. Ib.

Justification of Increase—Method of Proof —Increase in Ratio of Working Expenses.]—Upon a complaint by an association of traders that a railway company who had from the year 1897 until July 1, 1907, carried coal on the basis of 20½ cwt. to the ton, had since the latter date charged the same rates for the carriage of coal, but on the basis of 20 cwt. to the ton (the approximate effect whereof was to increase by 2½ per cent. every rate for the carriage of coal), and that such increase was unreasonable :—Held, that the railway company, having shewn an increase in the ratio of working expenses to receipts at least equal to the increase in rates, and having called evidence to the effect that such increase was due to an increase in the cost of working and not to a decrease in receipts, to which evidence no cross-examination had been directed, had justified the increase complained of. Coal Merchants' Society v. Midland Railway, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 100—Ry. Com.

Computation of Weight no Longer Allowed —Knowledge by Railway Company of Indirect Advantage to Trader.]—From 1893 onwards the applicants' soap was carried by the Midland Railway Co. at a computed weight of 1 cwt. 10 lb., which was made up of 1 cwt. or two ½ cwts. of soap along with the boxes in which the soap was packed. This computation being less than the actual weight resulted in a gain to the applicants in 1906 of 6 to 8½ lb. per cwt., making a difference of 1,400*l.* in the annual payment of the applicants to the railway company. On April 1, 1907, the railway company refused to carry the applicants' soap except at the actual weight of each consignment. Upon a complaint that the railway company had indirectly increased the rates charged to the applicants,—Held, that there was no evidence that there was any agreement on the part of the railway company that the system of carrying at a computed weight should be continued, and that even if it was assumed that the railway knew that they were carrying at less than the actual weight, thus giving an advantage to the applicants, it was prima facie reasonable for them to charge according to actual weight and so put the applicants on the same footing as other traders. Watson v. Midland Railway, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 18—C.A.

Held, further, that the Court of Appeal was bound by the finding of the Railway Commissioners that the action of the railway company in abolishing the system of computation was reasonable. Ib.

Through Rate — Fixed by Agreement — Apportionment—Application to Re-apportion Rate — Jurisdiction of Railway Commissioners.]—Where there is an existing through rate fixed by agreement between two railway companies, and also an agreed apportionment between them which has not been cancelled or challenged, the Railway and Canal Commissioners have no jurisdiction to entertain an application by one of the companies for a re-apportionment of the agreed rate or of a through rate of the same amount proposed by the applicants. The duty and power of apportionment of the Commissioners under section 25 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, are only incidental to the giving of reasonable facilities for the conveyance of traffic from one point to another. Manchester Ship Canal Co. v. London and North-Western Railway, 80 L. J. K.B. 676; [1911] 1 K.B. 657; 104 L. T. 81; 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 141—C.A.

—— Existing Rate by Alternative Route — Lower Mileage Rate—Public Interest.]—Section 25, sub-section 5 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, enacts: "If an objection be made to the granting of the (through) rate or to the route, the Commissioners shall consider whether the granting of a rate is a due and reasonable facility in the interest of the public." Section 25, sub-section 9 of the same Act enacts: "It shall not be lawful for the Commissioners in any case to compel any company to accept lower mileage rates than the mileage rates which such company may for the time being legally be charging for like traffic carried by a like mode of transit on any other line of communication between the same points, being the points of departure and arrival of the through route." The railways or parts of the railways of the South Yorkshire Joint Railway Committee, the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., the Dearne Valley Railway Co., and the Hull and Barnsley Railway Co. formed a continuous route from the D. colliery to the A. dock, Hull. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co. were joint owners of the South Yorkshire Railway and had a controlling interest in the Dearne Valley Railway, and were authorised by statute to fix and quote through rates over the former railway. A through rate for coal between the above points was already in operation by means of another route owned as to part by the Great Central and as to part by the Hull and Barnsley Railway Cos.; such last mentioned route was four miles shorter than the proposed route, and the owning companies worked the traffic over their own railway respectively. The existing rate was governed by the rate charged by another company, who owned a third competitive route to Hull (but not to the A. dock), twenty-two miles shorter than the existing Great Central and Hull and Barnsley route. The annual coal traffic between the points in question was 80,000 to 90,000 tons. Upon an application by the Lancashire and Yorkshire and Dearne Valley companies for a through rate for coal between the above points of the same amount as the existing through rate:—Held, that the proposed through rate was a reasonable facility, and that it must be granted subject to the condition that the defendants, in view of the circumstances of the case, should be allowed the same tonnage apportionment thereof as they received out of the existing rate over the alternative route of which they were part owners. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway v. Hull and Barnsley Railway Co., 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 59—Ry. Com.

Held, further, that, inasmuch as the defendants were not carrying throughout the entire alternative route, section 25, sub-section 9 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, did not apply to the application. Ib.

—— Apportionment of Through Land and Sea Rates.]—Through land and sea rates are not to be apportioned according to mileage. Great Southern and Western Railway v. City of Cork Steam Packet Co., 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 67—Ry. Com.

—— Congested Route — Alternative Route — Apportionment—Special Expense in Working.]—Upon an application by (1) the Dearne Valley Railway Co. and (2) the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., for through rates for shipment coal from certain collieries on their respective railways to Grimsby Dock over part of their own railways and part of the railways of the Great Northern and Great Central Railway Cos., the Great Northern Railway Co. objected to the route proposed in the first case, and called evidence to the effect that there was an alternative available route and that the proposed route passed over an extremely congested part of their system, where much difficulty was experienced in working the existing traffic. The traffic in question had been accepted by them over the proposed route for about two and a half years, but they had since refused to receive it. The Great Central Railway Co. objected to the proposed apportionment of both rates, on the ground that the amount allocated to them for terminals at Grimsby (3*d.* per ton), which sum was stated to be the usual charge agreed to by all railway companies, was insufficient, inasmuch as it was less than the special expense incurred by them in working there :—Held, that the route proposed in the first case was reasonable, and that it was not sufficient to shew that the receiving of the traffic in question would render a difficult task more difficult, unless such traffic would amount to an obstruction—that is to say, that it would create such disorganisation and delay as would produce inconvenience and loss to traders interested in traffic already using, or entitled to use, the accommodation at the point in question; and also that it is material to consider whether the route proposed is the only available route, or whether there are one or more other routes available. Dearne Valley Railway v. Great Northern Railway, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 202—Ry. Com.

Held, further, as to the apportionment, that, although it may be shewn that an arrangement between railway companies is very widely accepted, it is not open to the Court to reject evidence as to the proper terminal at any port of shipment. Ib.

—— Application by Owner of Private Siding — Guarantee as to Amount of Traffic — Through Rate already in Existence — Public Interest.]—The applicants were the owners of a private siding at W. communicating with the railway of the C. L. Committee, and they asked for through rates for slack between certain collieries and their siding. Through rates for slack carried in four-ton lots and upwards were already in existence between the said points. The route proposed by the applicants was approximately ten miles shorter than that by which the traffic was ordinarily being carried, but the existing through rates applied to traffic consigned by either route. The applicants offered to guarantee to send at least 600 tons of slack per week. The rates proposed by them were in each case 1*s.* 2*d.* per ton as compared with the existing rate of 1*s.* 11*d.* No evidence was given that the proposed rates were in the public interest :—Held, that the Court was not at liberty to assume without evidence that the proposed rates would be in the interests of the public; that section 25 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, was not intended to have the effect of reducing rates, but only to enforce the granting of facilities; and that, therefore, in the absence of evidence that the existing through rates were unreasonable, there was no ground for fixing any other rate. Brunner, Mond & Co. v. Cheshire Lines Committee, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 124; 25 T. L. R. 618—Ry. Com.

A trader interested may apply for a through rate to a private siding. Ib.

—— London Docks.]—The Court refused to grant a through rate between the applicants' Victoria and Albert Docks in London and certain places in the provinces, being of opinion that it was inexpedient to disturb the present rates or charges to these docks. Port of London Authority v. Midland Railway (No. 2), 106 L. T. 652; 28 T. L. R. 236; 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 23—Ry. Com.

——Complaint of Undue Preference — Appliance—Company a Party to Rate—No Relief Claimed.]—Where a complaint of undue preference in regard to a through rate is made to the Railway and Canal Commission, the applicants are entitled to join as respondents any railway company which is a party to the through rate, even though the applicants do not ask for any relief as against such company. Read, Holliday & Sons, Lim. v. Great Central Railway, [1915] 3 K.B. 616; 31 T. L. R. 537—C.A.

Group Rates—Application by Port of London Authority to Fix Through Rates—Application for Leave to Intervene by other Railway Companies.]—On an application by the Port of London Authority against the Midland Railway under section 31, sub-section 1 of the Port of London Act, 1908, to fix certain through rates from the Royal Victoria Dock and the Albert Dock to various inland towns, the London and North-Western Railway and the Great Northern Railway asked for leave to intervene on the ground that they were directly concerned in the group rates applicable to rail-borne traffic to and from the docks, and further on the ground that their rights under various agreements made between them and the several dock companies, the predecessors in title of the Port of London Authority, would be prejudicially affected if the application of the Port of London Authority were granted :—Held, first, that the Railway and Canal Commission Court had jurisdiction to allow the intervention claimed; and secondly, that in the circumstances it was just and expedient that the intervention should be allowed. Port of London Authority v. Midland Railway (No. 1), 81 L. J. K.B. 600; [1912] 2 K.B. 1; 105 L. T. 558; 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 23—Ry. Com.

Siding Rebate — Non-provision of Station Accommodation—Non-statutory Agreement—Similar Rates for Station and Non-station Traffic.]—By an agreement made in 1879 the defendant railway company undertook to allow to the applicants, who were traders at N., a rebate of 3*d.* per ton, in respect of the applicants performing their own loading and unloading, on all goods delivered to or received by the railway company from the applicants, and the applicants agreed to pay an extra toll of 6*d.* for all goods carried over the Q. line of railway. By another agreement of 1892, made between the defendant railway company and the corporation of N., the railway company agreed not to make any charge in respect of the said Q. railway so long as the rates paid for traffic using that railway were the same as the rates paid for similar traffic to or from their goods station at N. The whole of the applicants' traffic used the said Q. railway and also a yard of the defendants adjoining the applicants' siding, and the rates paid in respect thereof had, subject to the rebate of 3*d.* per ton given by the agreement of 1879, always been the same as these charged for similar traffic using the defendants' good station, although nearly the whole of the applicants' traffic was loaded and unloaded on their own premises. The applicants had, since the agreement made by the corporation in 1892, ceased to pay the toll of 6*d.* per ton in respect of the Q. railway. Upon an application to determine the amount of rebate to be allowed off the rates paid by the applicants in respect of their having provided their own station accommodation,—Held, that on the evidence it was the intention of the parties when making the agreement of 1879 that, subject to the rebate of 3d. per ton, the applicants should pay the same rates as those charged for similar traffic using the defendants' goods station, on the basis that the accommodation in connection with the applicants' siding afforded at the railway company's yard was as valuable as that afforded to similar traffic at the station. Held, also, that the rates referred to in the corporation agreement of 1892 were rates which included station accommodation. Newcastle Grain Co. v. North-Eastern Railway, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 275—Ry. Com.

—— Terminal Station—Non-statutory Agreement—"Mileage" Charges.]—By an agreement made on April 13, 1864, the benefit whereof had since 1891 been vested in the applicants, the Vale of N. Railway Co., which in 1866 was amalgamated with the defendant railway company, agreed to construct certain sidings in front of certain warehouses, afterwards and at the date of the application leased to the applicants, and to work the traffic from the principal siding free of charge. Clause 6 of the said agreement was as follows: "The said warehouses shall in computing the amount of mileage to be paid to the said company be considered a terminal station in regard to all goods, wares, merchandises or other things conveyed thereto or therefrom on the said main line and no extra charge shall be made in consequence of the trucks, waggons, or carriages going to or from the said warehouses instead of to or from any ordinary terminus or station of the said company." The said sidings were duly constructed, and the same rates had always been charged for the traffic to and from such sidings as for similar traffic of other traders using the terminal station of the defendant railway company at S.:—Held, that the effect of the agreement was that the railway company were only entitled to charge the applicants in respect of the traffic to and from the said sidings a mileage rate calculated by the distance traversed both on the railway company's own line and on such sidings, and that the agreement being silent as to terminal charges the applicants were entitled to a rebate off the rates charged them in respect of their siding traffic. Weaver & Co., Lim. v. Great Western Railway Co., 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 1—C.A.

Similar Rates for Siding and Station Traffic Inference as to Inclusion of Terminal Charges in Station Rate—Measure of Rebate—Special Services.]—The applicants, who were metal manufacturers, were the owners of private sidings communicating with the railway of the defendant company. The same rates were charged by the defendants for the applicants' siding traffic as for similar traffic of other traders using the defendants' goods station at B. The defendants alleged that the station rate included no terminals owing to the existence of canal competition, and alternatively claimed that they were entitled to charge for special services rendered at and in connection with the applicants' siding. A siding rate book kept by the defendants stated that in the rates in question no charge was made for terminal accommodation or services:—Held, that, notwithstanding the statement in the siding rate book that no terminal charges were included in the station rates, it could not be assumed that the defendants were performing services and giving accommodation at their station for nothing, and that, therefore, some terminal charges were presumably included in their station rates, and, further, that, in view of the rates for both siding and station traffic being the same, it must be inferred that the siding rates included the same elements of charge as the station rates, thereby entitling the applicants to a rebate corresponding to the amount of such terminal charges. And that such rebate might be and was on the evidence counterbalanced in part by the charges which the defendants were entitled to make for services rendered by them in connection with the applicants' sidings, and that the proper method to ascertain the net rebate (if any) due to the applicants was to consider from a business point of view what was the money value of the accommodation provided and the services rendered at the station, and to deduct from that sum the value of the services rendered at the siding; the difference (if any) giving the rebate. Muntz's Metal Co. v. London and North-Western Railway, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 284—Ry. Com.

Special Services at Private Siding—Implied Request to Perform "Conveyance," when Terminated.]—The applicants had private sidings with certain railways for the supply of coal to their gasworks situate in several places in B.:—Held, that, owing to the lack of accommodation at one of the works and the difficulty of working the line to another, the railway company were required to perform, and therefore entitled to charge for, special services in addition to those incidental to conveyance. A request that such special services be performed need not be express, but can be implied from the necessities of the traffic. "Conveyance," properly so-called, does not terminate until the siding points are reached, but it must be a question of fact in each case whether the service rendered is incident to conveyance. Birmingham Corporation v. Midland Railway, 101 L. T. 920; 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 24; 26 T. L. R. 46—Ry. Com.

Charge for "Sorting."]—The applicants dispatched a considerable outward traffic from their works. The outgoing trucks were placed on the applicants' siding in whatever order they happened to be ready, irrespective of their destination. It was necessary for the railway company before attaching them to the train proceeding to their destination to first take them to their own sidings and there sort them or arrange them according to their respective points of destination so that they might be attached to the proper train:—Held, that the trader must tender his traffic upon his siding in a condition reasonably fit for conveyance, and that this service of "sorting"—as distinguished from "marshalling" or the arranging the order of the trucks on a particular train—was not incident to conveyance, but was a special service for which the railway company were entitled to charge under section 5, sub-section 1 of the schedule to the Railway Rates and Charges Order Confirmation Act, 1891-2. Ib.

Charge for Use of Trucks — Distance not Exceeding Twenty Miles—Two Railways.]—Section 9 of the schedule to the London and North-Western Railway Company's Rates and Charges Order Act, 1891, authorises the company "to charge for the use of trucks provided by them for the conveyance of merchandise when the provision of trucks is not included in the maximum rates for conveyance any sums not exceeding the following (inter alia), "for distances not exceeding twenty miles, 4½*d.* per ton":—Held, that this rate of 4½*d.* per ton applied to the total transit and that the railway company were not entitled to charge a further rate in respect of the transit over another company's railway where the entire journey did not exceed twenty miles. Ib.

Weighing of Loaded Coal Waggons by Railway Company — Reasonable Charge for such Service—Notice to Discontinue.]—Section 5 of the schedule to the Railway Rates and Charges Orders Confirmation Acts, 1891-2, enacts that for certain services (which include "weighing merchandise": sub-section 3), when rendered to the trader "at his request or for his convenience," the railway company may charge a reasonable sum by way of addition to the tonnage rate. A railway company weighed coal, which had been loaded into waggons from the ship's side, and thus enabled a coal trader to furnish the particulars required by statute for his consignment note, it being practically impossible for the trader to weigh it himself before conveyance:—Held, that this was a service which was not included in the charge for terminal accommodation, but was performed in fact for the trader's convenience, and must at law be taken to be done at his request (aliter, where the railway company weighs goods to check the weights declared by the trader); that such service was therefore chargeable under the above section, and that a notice from the trader to the railway company stating that such service was not incurred at his request or for his convenience was inoperative, so long as he availed himself of it. Great Southern and Western Railway v. Wallace, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 75—Ry. Com.

Free Time for Detention of Railway Company's Waggons.]—Held, further, that under the circumstances the free time allowed to the trader for the use of the railway company's waggons before conveyance should be a period of one clear day after the day on which the coal in the waggons had been weighed and the note of such weighing was available for the consignor or his agent. Ib.

Private Waggons — Necessity of Repair — Siding and Shunting Charges—Jurisdiction of County Court.]—The respondent, who was a coal merchant, owned railway waggons which ran over the appellants' railway, and when they fell out of repair they were shunted on to a siding of the appellants and the respondent sent a man to repair them. The appellants brought a County Court action against the respondent for siding and shunting charges in respect of the waggons shunted on to their sidings for repair. The respondent had had notice of the company's charges for these services. The Judge held that he had no jurisdiction and that the matter should go before an arbitrator:—Held, on appeal, that the Judge had jurisdiction. London and North-Western Railway v. Duerden, 85 L. J. K.B. 176; 113 L. T. 285; 31 T. L. R. 367—D.

Demurrage on Waggons — Siding Rent — Rates — Traders' Waggons — Reasonable Facility.]—On an application with regard to differences which had arisen under section 5 of the Railway Rates and Charges Act, 1892, between railway companies and traders in respect of claims by the railway companies for the undue detention of waggons and waggon sheets, the Railway and Canal Commissioners held that the railway companies were entitled to claim in respect of the detention before conveyance of their waggons and sheets after the expiry of one day from the time the waggons or sheets were supplied; that they were entitled to claim for the detention of waggons and sheets after conveyance, in the case of shipment and siding traffic, after the expiry of four days from the time of arrival of the waggons or sheets at the port or siding, and in the case of station traffic after the expiry of four days from the notice of arrival of the waggons or sheets at the station; that in the case of coal for shipment an extra day should be allowed before conveyance free of demurrage. Held, further, that a trader cannot be called upon to pay for delay in conveyance which has been occasioned by fog, snow, frost, or causes of a similar character, or by some error on the part of the railway company's servants. The accounts as rendered by the railway company to the trader should charge him with what the company is entitled to recover, and no more, as they have the means of knowing through their servants when this delay has occurred during the period of conveyance. The question whether it is a reasonable facility that goods should be conveyed in traders' trucks is one of fact, and necessarily depends on the circumstances of the case. In considering that question the Railway Commissioners are not confined to the convenience of the traders in a particular case, but may take into consideration the interests of the railway company as well as those of the trader, the comparative cost and convenience, and the effect of the facility sought on other traders and the public using the line. Caledonian Railway v. Lanarkshire Coalmasters' Association, 27 T. L. R. 221—Ry. Com.

—— Detention of Trucks—Right of Action for Damages—Reasonableness of Charges—Arbitration—"Difference."] —The London and North-Western Railway Company (Rates and Charges) Order Confirmation Act, 1891, s. 5, empowered the company to charge a trader a reasonable sum by way of addition to the tonnage rate for the detention of trucks beyond such period as should be reasonably necessary for enabling the consignee to take delivery of the goods, and provided that any difference arising under the section should be determined by an arbitrator:—Held, that the only case in which an action can be brought before arbitration for the recovery of such charges is a case where the defendant has agreed to the demand, but has refused to pay. Where this cannot be established the case must be treated as one in which a "difference" has arisen, and must be determined by an arbitrator in accordance with the provisions of section 5. Held, further, that where there has been an agreement by the defendant to pay the charges demanded, the Court has no jurisdiction to enquire into their reasonableness. London and North-Western Railway v. Jones, 84 L. J. K.B. 1268; [1915] 2 K.B. 35; 113 L. T. 724—D.

London and North-Western Railway v. Donellan (67 L. J. Q.B. 681; [1898] 2 Q.B. 7) and Midland Railway v. Loseby (68 L. J. Q.B. 326; [1899] A.C. 133) followed. London and North-Western and Great Western Joint Railways v. Billington, Lim. (68 L. J. Q.B. 162; [1899] A.C. 79), considered. Ib.

—— Detention of Railway Company's Waggons.]—Where corn was conveyed in a railway company's waggons a period of two clear days (terminating at 6 P.M. on the second day, or if a Saturday at 1 P.M.) after the notice of arrival at the station, exclusive of the day of arrival and of holidays, was held to be a reasonable time with which delivery should be taken, after which demurrage should accrue at the rate of 1*s.* 6*d.* a day per waggon and 3*d.* a day per sheet. The time allowed for unloading coal is not a precedent for other traffic. North Eastern Railway v. Ferens, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 17—Ry. Com.

—— Reasonable Free Time for Use of Waggons before and after Conveyance.]—The applicants' coal was loaded at North Wall, Dublin, from the ship's side into waggons of the defendant railway company upon the sidings of another railway company. The loaded waggons were weighed on the said sidings, and the weigh notes given to the applicants. Considerable detention having taken place in the dispatch of the said waggons to their destinations, the defendant railway company made a charge for demurrage, to which the applicants objected. Delay also took place in unloading the said waggons at their points of destination, which were situated in sparsely populated districts where the consignees were small farmers and small tradesmen living at remote distances from the railway, and the defendants had in such cases also made a charge for demurrage, to which objection was taken:—Held, that a period of one clear day after the day on which the coal had been loaded in Dublin—the loading to be regarded as completed when the loaded waggons were weighed and the weigh notes given to the applicants—was a reasonable free time for the use of the waggons before conveyance, and that a period of three days reckoned from 6 A.M. of the day after receipt of notice by the consignee of arrival of the waggons was a reasonable free time to take delivery and unload the traffic, Sundays, Feast Days, and the usual public holidays excepted; and, further, that at the expiration of the above periods a charge of 1*s.* 6*d.* per waggon per day was reasonable. Wallace v. Midland Great Western Railway, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 70—Ry. Com.

Undue Preference—Goods Carried by Railway Partly by Land and Partly by Sea—Competition with other Carriers by Sea—Through Rates—Rebates not Entered in Rate Book—Statement in Rate Book of Sea Proportion of Through Rate.] —The applicants were carriers by sea from Dublin to Manchester, the goods being forwarded to and from various inland towns in England by the defendants' railway. The defendants also carried goods by their own steamers from Dublin to Holyhead, and thence by their railway to the same inland towns in England at through rates which were fixed by agreement between the carriers at the English and Irish Traffic Conference. The applicants when they commenced business in 1897 carried goods to certain inland towns at rates lower than the defendants' through rates. The defendants, in order to meet the competition of the applicants, granted rebates, which were not entered in the defendants' rate books, to their customers in respect of the traffic from Dublin to those inland towns, with the result that the railway portion of the through rate—namely, the portion from Holyhead to the various inland towns—was, relatively to distance, lower per ton per mile than the rate from the Manchester Docks to those inland towns. The defendants, in order to comply with subsection 5 of section 33 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, which requires a railway company that carries partly by land and partly by sea to state in their rate books kept at the port used by the railway company the proportion of the through rate appropriated to carriage by sea, entered the following note in their rate book kept at Dublin : "The sea proportion of rates in this book between Dublin and English stations is represented by a mileage share as for seventy miles of the throughout distance"; but no entry was made in the rate book kept at the port of Holyhead :—Held, that the defendants had committed a breach of section 14 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, in not entering in their rate books the rates actually charged; that the fact that the defendants had in effect reduced their rates in order to meet the competition of the applicants did not amount to an undue preference of themselves, even though the charge per mile from Manchester was higher than the charge per mile from Holyhead, because a local rate cannot be compared with a portion of a through rate for the purpose of establishing a case of undue preference; that the statement in the rate book kept at Dublin as to the sea proportion of the through rate was a sufficient compliance with sub-section 5 of section 33 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, and that it was not necessary that the entry should also be made in the rate book kept at Holyhead. Dublin and Manchester Steamship Co. v. London and North-Western Railway, 83 L. J. K.B. 571; [1914] 2 K.B. 192; 108 L. T. 122; 28 T. L. R. 511; 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 88—Ry. Com.

—— Rebate not Published in Rate Book — Guarantee as to Amount of Traffic.]—Where trustees for the control of a river navigation grant a rebate off their published rates for dock services to a firm of carriers on condition of their guaranteeing to bring a minimum annual quantity of traffic into the trustees' docks, although such carriers had for a considerable number of years brought in an amount of traffic largely in excess of the guarantee, and where no opportunity is given to competitive carriers to give a similar guarantee, the grant of such rebate amounts to an undue preference and cannot be justified. Anderton Co. v. River Weaver Trustees, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 136—Ry. Com.

—— Special Agreement for Purchase by Railway Company of Private Railways — Consideration Partly Cash, Partly Services either Gratuitous or at Rates Lower than those Charged to other Persons — Public Policy — Ultra Vires — "Difference in treatment" — Justification by Agreement.]—The S. Co. were in 1866 the owners of two ironworks and three collieries which were connected by about 4½ miles of private railways and sidings. The defendants were authorised by an Act passed in 1865 to acquire these private railways "by compulsion or agreement." An agreement was entered into in 1866 whereby the defendants purchased the private railways and sidings from the S. Co. By this agreement the defendants, besides paying 29,788*l.* as consideration money, covenanted as part of the consideration to perform on the purchased property the work previously done by the vendors in part gratuitously and in part at certain specified rates per ton, which rates were very much lower than those charged to other persons. The applicants complained that the work done by the defendants for the S. Co. under the agreement constituted an undue preference of that company. The Railway and Canal Commissioners held that, although a mere inequality in charge raised a presumption of undue preference, yet that presumption might be rebutted, and that in the present case the agreement of purchase, which was admitted to be fair and bona fide at the time it was made, explained and accounted for the difference of treatment, and that there was therefore, under the circumstances, no undue preference of the S. Co. :—Held, that the agreement was not invalid either on the ground of public policy or as being ultra vires, and that, the question of the validity of the agreement being the only point upon which an appeal lay, the decision of the Commissioners (78 L. J. K.B. 214; [1909] 1 K.B. 486) could not be disturbed. Holywell Iron Co. v. Midland Railway, 79 L. J. K.B. 460; [1910] 1 K.B. 296; 101 L. T. 695; 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 1; 26 T. L. R. 110—C.A.

—— Sea Competition—Rates Justified.]—The applicants complained of an undue preference alleged to be shewn by the defendants to certain trade competitors of the applicants at and in the neighbourhood of Swansea, in that the same rates were charged both to the applicants and to such competitors for the conveyance of goods to certain common points of destination notwithstanding that the applicants were considerably nearer such destination. The defendants alleged that the rates complained of were justified on the ground of competition by sea :—Held, that such rates were justified where actual effective sea communication existed, but that in the case of the rates from Swansea to Derby, Crewe, and Leeds, an undue preference had been proved. Muntz's Metal Co. v. London and North-Western Railway, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 284—Ry. Com.

—— Higher Rate—Justification.]—Where a railway company charged higher rates to one of the applicants' gasworks than they did to another,—Held, that the higher rate was justified by there being no railway competition at that works. Birmingham Corporation v. Midland Railway, 101 L. T. 920; 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 24; 26 T. L. R. 46—Ry. Com.

With regard to the reasonableness of times and charges, the point to be considered is the character of the act to be performed, and if such act is incidental to the production and tender of the goods it must be paid for, but if it is after such production it is covered by the conveyance rates. North British Railway v. Coltness Iron Co., 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 246—Ry. Com.

What is a reasonable time for demurrage and siding-rent cases considered. Ib.

"Detention" in section 5, sub-section 4 of the schedule to the Rates and Charges Order Acts, 1892, means "detention not due to the performance of acts which the railway company has to perform as carriers, nor to the performance of acts necessary to enable the consignor or consignee to give or take delivery —such giving and taking delivery not being the same as loading or unloading." Ib.

A railway company ought not to render accounts to a trader containing charges for all detentions, no matter how caused, thereby leaving him with the onus of pointing out any error, but should only charge him in respect of those detentions for which the railway company are entitled to recover. Ib.

A trader is not entitled to average the times during which waggons are detained by him, nor to add together the free time allowed both before and after conveyance, inasmuch as he is not entitled to keep a waggon for the whole of the free time, his duty being to discharge it with all reasonable dispatch. Ib.

—— Waggon Hire.]—The applicants complained of an alleged undue preference given to certain trade competitors, in that the applicants were charged higher rates for waggon hire than their competitors in respect of similar traffic :—Held, that waggon hire was an independent service, and the alleged difference in treatment, having been proved, must be redressed. Chance & Hunt v. Great Western Railway, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 241—Ry. Com.

Agreement Binding Tenants of Railway Company to Consign by One of Two Competing Lines.]—The applicants' line and the G. N. line each formed with the defendants' line a continuous line of railway from certain collieries to stations on the defendants' line, and were in competition with each other. The through rates by each were equal, but the apportionment as to the traffic coming over the G. N. line was the more favourable to the defendants. The G. N. Co. handled traffic in as convenient a manner as did the applicants. The defendants let land at the above stations for use as coal wharves, imposing and enforcing on each of their tenants as part of the terms of letting a condition that, the rates being equal, traffic consigned to these wharves should travel over the G. N. route :—Held, that this did not constitute an undue and unreasonable preference of or advantage to the G. N. Co., and did not deprive the applicants of reasonable facilities for conveying their traffic within the meaning of section 2 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854. London and North-Western Railway v. South-Eastern Railway, 80 L. J. K.B. 484; [1911] 1 K.B. 534; 104 L. T. 349; 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 165; 27 T. L. R. 172—Ry. Com.

Agreement Fixing Rates — Competitors.]—The respondents, a railway company, in accordance with a practice of long standing, performed certain services gratuitously for traders at Hull. The applicants, who were traders at Selby and were competitors of the Hull traders, made an agreement with the respondents, by which they obtained from the respondents a siding, and the rates for traffic to and from the siding were ascertained. At the time of the agreement the applicants knew of the practice at Hull. On an application for an order that the respondents should desist from giving an undue preference to the Hull traders,—Held, that, in view of the agreement, the complaint was not as to rates, but as to treatment, and that on the facts there was no undue preference. Olympia Oil and Cake Co. v. North-Eastern Railway, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 166; 30 T. L. R. 236—Ry. Com.

Discovery — Interrogatories.]—The applicants alleged an undue preference by the defendants of the town of G. The defendants denied that there was any undue preference. They said that if the rates from G. were lower, it was owing to the existence of water competition at G., and they further said that the rates charged were necessary in the interests of the public. On an application by the applicants for particulars and discovery, and for leave to administer interrogatories enquiring whether traders in G. had not from time to time before the application sent goods over the defendants' lines, and whether the rates charged to them were not the rates now complained of,—Held, that an order should be made for particulars of public interest and the discovery of communications and complaints in regard to the rates, but that an order for interrogatories should not be made until the applicants gave specific instances of the undue preference of which they complained. Clayton & Shuttleworth v. Great Central Railway, 29 T. L. R. 111—Ry. Com.

Discovery by Applicants before Delivery of Particulars of Application.]—Upon a complaint that the defendant railway company were unduly preferring certain trade competitors of the applicants by carrying their goods at lower rates than those charged to the applicants, an order was made by the Registrar that the applicants should be precluded at the hearing from giving evidence of specific consignments by themselves and their said competitors unless six weeks before the hearing they delivered to the defendants particulars identifying such specific consignments. Before any such particulars were delivered, a second order was made by the Registrar that the railway company should file an affidavit, stating what documents were or had been in their possession as from a certain date relating to the consignment of the said competitors' traffic to certain places mentioned in the application :—Held, that the application for discovery by the applicants was premature, and that they first ought to make their case by alleging specific instances in respect of which they claimed relief, in support of which they then could have discovery. General Electric Co. v. Great Western Railway, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 53—C.A.

—— Measure of Damages.]—Where applicants have proved a case of undue preference the damages they are entitled to recover from the railway company are such damages as they have actually sustained. Prima facie, these are the excess charges which the applicants have actually paid, but the railway company may shew that these do not represent the actual damage arising directly from the wrong done. Chanee & Hunt v. Great Western Railway, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 241; 29 T. L. R. 483—Ry. Com.

3. Application under Cheap Trains Act.

Application for Additional Workmen's Trains.]—In considering an application under the Cheap Trains Act, 1883, for an order that additional workmen's trains should be run, the Railway and Canal Commissioners have to take into account, not only what the workmen can afford to pay, but also the circumstances of the railway company, the cost of running, and the cost of the construction and maintenance of the line and stations. London County Council v. Great Eastern Railway, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 224; 9 L. G. R. 1071; 75 J. P. 301; 27 T. L. R. 317—Ry. Com.

4. Other Matters.

Reference to Registrar.]—The Railway Commission Court has no express jurisdiction to order a reference to the Registrar to determine any question of fact—for example, as to what is "similar traffic." Chanee & Hunt v. Great Western Railway, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 241—Ry. Com.

Upon a reference to the Registrar there is strictly no right of appeal from his findings to the Railway Commissioners, such an enquiry being in the nature of an enquiry by the Court itself. The remedy is either to appeal to the Court of Appeal or to apply to the Commissioners under section 18, sub-section 2 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, to review or rescind, or vary the order directing the reference. Ib.

Power of Registrar to Award Costs on Interlocutory Applications.]—The Registrar of the Railway and Canal Commission Court has power to award costs on an interlocutory application, as the delegation to the Registrar by the Commissioners under rule 53 of the Railway and Commission Rules, 1889, of their authority to deal with interlocutory applications was an absolute delegation, and carried with it the same power as that conferred upon the Commissioners themselves of dealing with the costs of any interlocutory application. Smith, Stone & Knight, Lim. v. London and North-Western Railway, 83 L. J. K.B. 1690; [1914] 3 K.B. 1195; 111 L. T. 1117; 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 321; 30 T. L. R. 645—Ry. Com.

I. SALE OF AND EXECUTION AGAINST.

Sale of Whole Permanent Way Material—Ultra Vires.]—A railway company, which had constructed its line under statutory powers, held not entitled to sell the rails, bridges, and other materials forming its whole permanent way, although it was financially impossible for it to continue to work the undertaking. Ellice v. Invergarry and Fort Augustus Railway, [1913] S. C. 849—Ct. of Sess.

Semble, that different considerations would arise in the case of a company which proposed only to sell the materials of an unremunerative branch line which was no longer in use. Ib.

Receiver and Manager of Undertaking — Application by Assignee of Judgment Creditor.]—Under section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, a person to whom a judgment against a railway company has been assigned may, without joining his assignor, apply for the appointment of a receiver and manager of the company's undertaking. Freshwater, Yarmouth, and Newport Railway, In re, 57 S. RATES AND RATING.

I. POOR RATES AND RATES IN GENERAL.

A. Persons and Property Liable.

1. Owners and Occupiers in General.

See also Vol. XI. 1562, 1973.

Liability of Owner—Dwelling House wholly Let Out in Apartments not Separately Rated —Enactment Applicable "in all boroughs"—Parliamentary Borough Coming into Existence Subsequently to Enactment.]—The provision in section 7 of the Representation of the People

Act, 1867, that "Where the dwelling house or tenement shall be wholly let out in apartments or lodgings not separately rated, the owner . . . shall be rated in respect thereof," is not limited in its application to boroughs in existence at the date of the passing of the Act, but extends also to boroughs from time to time coming into existence after that date. Consequently, where a dwelling house is wholly let out in apartments not separately rated, even though such dwelling house be situated in a Parliamentary borough which did not become such until after 1867, the owner is rateable in respect thereof under the above provision of the Act of 1867, and he is accordingly liable to the full amount of the rate without being entitled to any commission or allowance under the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869, or otherwise. Rex v. Roberts; Battersea Borough Council, Ex parte, 83 L. J. K.B. 146; [1914] 1 K.B. 369; 109 L. T. 466; 77 J. P. 403; 11 L. G. R. 913; 57 S. J. 644—C.A.

West Ham Churchwardens v. Fourth City Mutual Building and Investment Society (61 L. J. M.C. 128; [1892] 1 Q.B. 654) considered and observations disapproved. White v. Islington Borough Council (78 L. J. K.B. 168; [1909] 1 K.B. 133), observations explained. Ib.

"Dwelling house or tenement . . . wholly let out in apartments or lodgings"—One Room in House Let as Office or Workshop—Remainder Let to Separate Tenants as Dwellings—Payment of Rates by Owner Subject to Allowance—Surcharge of Allowance.]—Two houses in a Parliamentary borough were let out in different rooms which were not separately rated at the date of the passing of the Representation of the People Act, 1867. In one house a room was used as a workshop, and in the other one was used as an office; the remaining rooms in each house were let to separate tenants and used as dwellings:—Held, that neither house was "wholly let out in apartments or lodgings" within the exception clause to section 7 of the Representation of the People Act, 1867, so that the owners of such houses were not liable to be rated instead of the occupiers; and consequently that the local authority were entitled under section 3 of the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869, to make agreements with the owners to receive the rates in respect of such houses from them subject to an abatement, the owners agreeing to become liable for the payment of the rates assessed in respect of the hereditaments, whether occupied or not. Rex v. Roberts; Stepney Borough Council, Ex parte, 84 L. J. K.B. 1577; [1915] 3 K.B. 313; 13 L. G. R. 1172; 31 T. L. R. 485—C.A. Affirming, 112 L. T. 164; 79 J. P. 94—D.

Flats Separately Rated.]—Certain blocks of flats, each of which was self-contained and had its front door opening on to a common staircase, were owned by the appellants, whose servants cleaned and lighted the staircase and worked the lifts. The tenant of each of the flats was entered on the valuation list as the rateable occupier of his flat:—Held, following Western v. Kensington Assessment Committee (76 L. J. K.B. 790; [1907] 2 K.B. 323), that the flats were houses or buildings let out in separate tenements within the footnote to Schedule III. of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, and therefore that the assessment committee could allow a larger proportionate deduction from the gross value to ascertain the rateable value than the maximum fixed by Schedule III. Consolidated London Properties v. Marylebone Assessment Committee, 76 J. P. 478; 10 L. G. R. 1058—D.

Rateability of Tenant of House in Respect of Wall Used by Landlord as an Advertising Station.]—The respondent occupied a house at a rack rent, but by the terms of his agreement the use of the outside wall on one side was retained by his landlord to let as an advertisement or bill-posting station, and the respondent was to give free access to the garden of the premises to men sent to post bills or advertisements. The rent or payment for such use of the wall was received by the landlord, and the respondent received no remuneration in respect of it, and had no option or interest in the letting of the wall. The respondent's name having been inserted in the rate book as the person liable under section 4 of the Advertising Stations (Rating) Act, 1889, liable to be rated in respect of the advertising station,—Held, that as the whole of the premises were occupied by the respondent for purposes other than advertising, he was rightly rated under section 4 as the occupier of the premises, including the side wall, although the advertising station increased the value of the premises, and the landlord received the profits derived from it. Lewisham Corporation v. Avey, 76 J. P. 343; 10 L. G. R. 553—D.

Demise of Vaults at Docks—Wine Merchants—Retention of Control by Lessors—Liability of Lessees to be Rated.]—The Mersey Docks and Harbour Board in pursuance of their statutory powers demised to a firm of wine merchants certain vaults, together with a portion of the quay floor at their docks, to be used as a bonded warehouse. Upon the demised premises there was certain machinery which was used for the working of cranes and lifts belonging to the board, the working of which made it necessary that employees of the board should go down into the vaults several times a day and stay there for considerable periods, and the lease accordingly provided that the demised premises should be so worked by the lessees as not to cause any interference with or obstruction to the general working of the dock estate, and that the servants of the board should at all reasonable times have free access thereto for the purposes of such general working:—Held, that the terms of the lease and the nature of the demise were consistent only with exclusive occupation being given to the lessees for the purposes of their business, with such a control by the board as should prevent their duties and obligations from being interfered with, and that the granting by the board of such an exclusive occupation was not ultra vires. Young v. Liverpool Assessment Com-

Premises Acquired by County Association for Purposes of Territorial Forces—Premises Occupied by Officer for Purposes of his Duties.]—Premises bona fide acquired by a county association under the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907, for the purposes of the Territorial Forces, are premises acquired by the Crown for Crown purposes, and as long as an officer, by arrangement with the county association, resides therein for the purpose of his duties under the Act of 1907, such premises are, as being used for Crown purposes, exempt from rating. Where, in such circumstances, the name of the officer in actual occupation of the premises has in fact been inserted in the rate book, the objection that the premises are exempt from rateability may be taken before the Justices on an application for a distress warrant. Wixon v. Thomas; Lambert v. Same: Burrows v. Same, 80 L. —— Sergeant-Instructors—Official Residences.]—It is intra vires a county association formed under the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1909, to hire houses for the purposes of official residences for non-commissioned officers in the regular army who are acting as sergeant-instructors; and the sergeant-instructors residing in such houses will not be liable to be rated in respect of them. Decision of the Divisional Court in Wixon v. Thomas; (80 L. J. K.B. 104; [1911] 1 K.B. 43) approved and followed. Wixon v. Thomas; Lambert v. Thomas; Burrows v. Thomas, 81 L. J. Buildings Held by Statutory Body and Occupied for Public Purposes.]—A statutory body of commissioners created for the purpose of holding buildings in Glasgow, which were used for certain public purposes—namely, Justiciary Courts, Sheriff Courts, and Justice of the Peace Courts,—Held, to be exempt from assessment both for owners' and occupiers' rates, except with regard to certain portions of the buildings which were let to the county council and for which rents were paid; and that in respect of these portions, seeing that they were held as mere investments, the commissioners were liable for the owner's rates. Coomber v. Berks (Justices) (53 L. J. Q.B. 239; 9 App. Cas. 61) followed. Glasgow Court House Commissioners v. Glasgow Parish Council, [1913] S. C. 194—Ct. of Sess.

Public Parks Dedicated by Statute to Public Use.]—Public parks owned and maintained by a corporation and yielding no profit fall to be entered in the valuation roll not at a merely nominal figure, but at the rent which a hypothetical tenant might be expected to give for them in their actual condition, irrespective of any limitations on their use in the hands of their present proprietors. Edinburgh Parish Council v. Edinburgh Assessor ([1910] S. C. 823) overruled. Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council (66 L. J. Q.B. 806; [1897] A.C. 625) distinguished. Glasgow Parish Council v. Glasgow Assessor, [1912] S. C. 818—Ct. of Sess.

Public Buildings in Public Parks—Museums—Official Residence of Superintendent.]—The public parks of Glasgow were severally entered in the valuation roll at a nominal value of 1*l.* each per annum, as being dedicated by statute to public uses, and included in that nominal value, as adjuncts of the parks in which they were situated, were—first, certain municipal museums, art galleries, and a winter palace; secondly, a house used as the official residence of the superintendent of all the city parks:—Held, first, that the museums, art galleries, and winter palace fell to be separately entered at their fair annual value in respect that, though no charges for admission were actually made, the corporation was entitled to levy reasonable charges; and secondly, that the superintendent's residence did not fall to be separately entered, but was properly to be regarded as a unum quid with the park in which it stood, and included in the relative nominal value of 1*l.* per annum. Glasgow and Govan Parish Councils v. Glasgow Assessor, [1911] S. C. 988—Ct. of Sess.

Method of Valuation — Comparison of Rentals.]—The proper method of valuing a large building centrally situated in Glasgow, the property of, and occupied as offices by, the Glasgow Parish Council:—Held, to be by a comparison with the rentals of premises of a similar character in the neighbourhood; and that the mere fact that the owners and occupiers were a statutory body, in whose place it might not be possible to find a similar tenant, was not a reason for adopting the "contractor's principle" of valuation. Glasgow Parish Council v. Glasgow (Assessor), [1914] S. C. 651—Ct. of Sess.

Observed, that the "contractor's principle" can only legitimately be adopted if the method of comparison is wholly inapplicable or for the purpose of checking a valuation otherwise arrived at. Ib.

3. Sewers and Sewage Works.

See also Vol. XI. 1602, 1983.

Sewers.]—Sewers owned and occupied by a statutory body of commissioners fall to be entered in the valuation roll at the yearly rent which a hypothetical statutory tenant would give for them. That rent is represented by a sum made up by taking 3¼ per cent. on their total capital cost and adding thereto, in addition to landlord's rates and the average annual charge which would fall on a landlord for maintenance, such a percentage on the cost of the sewers (as distinct from land and wayleaves) as, paid annually into a sinking fund, would provide for their complete renewal in one hundred years. In calculating the capital cost of sewers constructed by commissioners under their statutory powers, lands purchased by them are to be taken at the full prices paid, and there also fall to be included (diss. Lord Salvesen) the legal and engineering expenses incurred in acquiring the lands, but not the Parliamentary expenses of obtaining the Act nor (diss. Lord Cullen) sums paid as compensation for disturbance. The capital cost of existing sewers acquired and utilised is to be taken as the additional sum which would have had to be expended on new sewers by the commissioners had the existing sewers not been available. Water of Leith Sewerage Commissioners v. Midlothian (Assessor), [1914] S. C. 664—Ct. of Sess.

Quære (per Lord Johnston), whether a hypothetical sinking fund is an item which ought to enter into the valuation of subjects of such a permanent nature as public sewers. Ib.

Sewers Partly Above and Partly Below Ground — Payment for Right of Entry.] — Sewers, whether overground or underground, are rateable wherever the occupation of them is "valuable" within the meaning of the decisions on the law of rating. Dictum of Lord Herschell, L.C., in London County Council v. Erith Overseers (63 L. J. M.C. 9; [1893] A.C. 562) criticised. West Kent Main Sewerage Board v. Dartford Assessment Committee, 80 L. J. K.B. 805; [1911] A.C. 171; 104 L. T. 357; 9 L. G. R. 511; 75 J. P. 305; 55 S. J. 363—H.L. (E.)

Sewage Farm—Evidence of Possible Alternative and Cheaper Scheme of Sewage Disposal.]—On an appeal to quarter sessions by the occupier of a sewage farm against a poor rate on the ground that the farm was overassessed, the appellant contended that the possibility of substituting another and cheaper system of sewage disposal, as compared to the existing system, should be taken into consideration, and that the cost and capital value of the existing land and works was no evidence of their rateable value. He produced evidence that the bacterial system was now in greater favour than the broad irrigation system in use at the farm, and would afford a great saving by needing a much smaller area of land, and by being carried out by gravitation instead of by pumping. But he admitted that the sewerage board had never formulated the suggested alternative scheme and that the figures produced were founded upon approximate estimates only. The quarter sessions were of opinion that the evidence as to the alternative scheme was too uncertain for them to act on, and dismissed the appeal:—Held, that although evidence as to the non-existent alternative scheme was not inadmissible, the quarter sessions, having heard and considered that evidence, were not bound by it, but could properly come to the conclusion that it was too uncertain for them to act upon it as shewing the true amount value of the hereditament. Hall v. Seisdon Union, 77 J. P. 17; 11 L. G. R. 48—D.

4. Places of Divine Worship.

See also Vol. XI. 1612, 1984.

Disused Wesleyan Chapel.]—The owners of a building, which had formerly been a Wesleyan Chapel, claimed exemption from a provisional apportionment of the estimated expenses of making up the adjoining street, on the ground that it was a place appropriated to public religious worship, and for the time being by law exempt from poor rates, within the terms of section 16 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892. The building had never been rated to the poor rate, and for the past five years had been used as a Sunday school and for religious services, preachings, and class meetings on week nights. A debating society met there once a week, and a Rechabite society once a month; a political meeting had been held there, as well as "at homes" in connection with chapel work, for admission to which sixpence was charged, and public entertainments, including a dramatic representation, for which charges to the public of one shilling and of sixpence were made:—Held, that, having regard to the purposes for which it had been used for the past five years, the building was not used as a chapel "exclusively appropriated to public religious worship" so as to be exempt from poor rates under section 1 of the Poor Rate Exemption Act, 1833, and consequently to be exempt from private street works expenses under section 16 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, notwithstanding that it had not in fact been rated to the poor rate. Walton-le-Dale Urban Council v. Greenwood, 105 L. T. 547; 75 J. P. 541; 9 L. G. R. 1148—D.

5. Cemeteries.

See also Vol. XI. 1612, 1984.

Cemetery Owned by Public Authority under Statutory Powers.]—A cemetery was owned and carried on by a local authority under statutory powers. Under the statute they had power to sell lairs and to receive fees in respect of interments, but the expenditure on the cemetery as a rule exceeded the income:—Held, that the cemetery had an annual letable value in respect that the possession of it enabled the local authority to discharge a statutory duty, and accordingly that it should be entered in the valuation roll at that value and not at a merely nominal figure. Edinburgh Parish Council v. Edinburgh Magistrates, [1912] S. C. 793—Ct. of Sess.

6. Canals.

See also Vol. XI. 1626, 1986.

Subjacent Coal Mines—Expenses of Prevention of Subsidence — Parochial Principle — Distribution of Expenses.] — A canal passed through eighty-nine parishes and fourteen unions, and in many of the parishes over subjacent coal mines. 6,809 yards of the canal were situated in the township of I., where there were very considerable coal workings which, from time to time, caused subsidences in the canal, towing paths, bridges, locks, and culverts. In making the poor rate and valuation list on which it was based for the parish of I., the overseers and assessment committee estimated the gross rental and rateable value by assessing the portion of the canal and towing path in the township as a separate hereditament and allowing certain deductions for the expense of maintenance, but they refused to recognise as a deduction permitted by section 1 of the Parochial Assessments Act, 1836, the expenditure actually incurred by the company in the maintenance and dredging of the canal, the maintenance of locks and bridges in the township and repairs and prevention of damage caused by subsidences :—Held, that the above expenses claimed by the canal company as deductions in the township of I. must be distributed over their whole system, and could not be as a whole debited to I., where the expenditure had taken place. Leeds and Liverpool Canal v. Wigan Union, 11 L. G. R. 634—D.

7. Waterworks.

See also Vol. XI. 1632, 1987.

Gathering Ground for Reservoirs—Acquisition to Prevent Pollution of Water—Acts of Occupation by Owner—Control—Plantations and Nurseries on Gathering Ground.] — The corporation of L. owned certain land which was occupied by their reservoirs and works, and received into the reservoirs the water which flowed from an adjoining gathering ground. In order to prevent pollution of the water flowing from it to their waterworks, the corporation purchased the gathering ground, which consisted of agricultural land and moorland. They thereupon demolished certain farmhouses on the land, abolished certain rights of pasturage and turf cutting, and limited the user of the land to purposes of sporting and afforestation. They planted a portion of the land with trees, converted another portion into nurseries, and let the sporting rights over the land to a lessee for a term of years, but did not exercise any other acts of occupation :—Held, that the corporation were in rateable occupation of the whole of the land in question —the moorland, plantations, and nurseries— as a gathering ground, the use of the land by them as a gathering ground for their commercial gain, and the use thereof as a game preserve as above described being sufficient to turn their possession into beneficial occupation, so as to render them rateable in respect of it. Liverpool Corporation v. Chorley Assessment Committee, 82 L. J. K.B. 555; [1913] A.C. 197; 108 L. T. 82; 77 J. P. 185; 11 L. G. R. 182; 57 S. J. 263; 29 T. L. R. 246—H.L. (E.) Order of Court of Appeal (81 L. J. K.B. 426; [1912] 1 K.B. 270) affirmed. Ib.

Land near River — Intake from River — Special Fitness of Land — Increased Value — Determination of Hypothetical Rent.] — In assessing the rateable value of the property of a waterworks company, consisting of a piece of land near a river with a pumping station and reservoirs thereon, an intake from the river and an aqueduct connecting it with the land, regard should be had not only to the cost of the land and premises, but also to the enhanced value arising from their special fitness for the purpose for which they are used, and in addition to a percentage on the cost a percentage on that enhanced value should also be included. No additional value should, however, be attributed to the premises by reason of the fact that the waterworks company makes an annual statutory payment to the conservators of the river for the right to take the water. New River Co. v. Hertford Union (71 L. J. K.B. 827; [1902] 2 K.B. 597) followed. Metropolitan Water Board v. Chertsey Union, 84 L. J. K.B. 1823; 113 L. T. 216; 79 J. P. 360; 13 L. G. R. 692—C.A. Reversed, 32 T. L. R. 168—H.L. (E.)

—— Consideration of Rate of Interest at which Occupier could Borrow Money.]—In assessing the rateable value of the property of an owner there is no principle of law which restricts the percentage to be taken on the value of the property to that of the interest at which the owner can borrow money, though the latter rate is a fact which may be considered in arriving at the former. Ib.

8. Licensed Premises.

Increased Licence Duty—Onus of Proof as to Value.]—The appellant, who was proprietor and occupier of licensed premises, claimed reduction of the former valuation on account of the increased licence duty imposed by the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 :—Held, that the increase in the duty established a prima facie case for reduction of the valuation, thus throwing upon the rating authority the onus of proving that the annual letting value had not been diminished. Deards v. Edinburgh Assessor, [1911] S. C. 918—Ct. of Sess.

Distillery — Increased Licence Duty.] — Held, that the increased licence duty imposed by the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, did not fall to be taken into account in valuing a distillery, the circumstances of a distillery being different from those of public-house premises. North British Distillery Co. v. Edinburgh Assessor, [1911] S. C. 927—Ct. of Sess.

Licensed Grocer's Premises.] — The principle laid down in Deards v. Edinburgh Assessor ([1911] S. C. 918) in the case of a public house—namely, that the increased licence duty imposed by the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, established a prima facie case for reduction of the valuation, re-affirmed and applied to a licensed grocer's shop, and the valuation reduced by half the amount of the increase of the duty. Moyes v. Perth Assessor, [1912] S. C. 761—Ct. of Sess.

Statutory Curtailment of Hours of Business.]—The curtailment of the hours during which business premises may be open introduced by the Temperance (Scotland) Act, 1913, —Held, not per se to establish a prima facie case for the reduction of the valuation of a public house or throw upon the rating authority the onus of proving that the annual letting value of the premises had not been diminished. Deards v. Edinburgh Assessor ([1911] S. C. 918) distinguished. Maxwell v. Galashiels Assessor, [1915] S. C. 765—Ct. of Sess.

9. Golf Course.

Land Leased by Local Authority for Golf Course — Lands Yielding no Profit.] — The magistrates of a burgh, acting under statutory powers, obtained a forty years' lease of a piece of ground at a rent of 52*l.*, which they laid out and maintained as a golf course for the use of the inhabitants of the burgh. They levied charges for playing golf thereon, but these did not cover the cost of upkeep :—Held, that the subjects fell to be entered in the valuation roll at their fair annual value, and not at a merely nominal figure. Edinburgh Parish Council v. Leith Magistrates, [1912] S. C. 812—Ct. of Sess.

10. Bathing Staging.

Occupation — Bathing Staging Erected on Foreshore.]—The respondent was summoned to shew cause why he should not pay a general rate in respect of certain property described in the rate book as "Foreshore used for bathing and entertainment purposes near the Oval, Cliftonville." By a lease the appellant corporation gave the respondent certain rights over the foreshore for the purposes of bathing, and also gave him the right to erect a permanent staging for that purpose on the foreshore. On this staging the respondent had dressing boxes, &c. The Justices dismissed the summons, being of opinion that the respondent was not in occupation of the foreshore, but only had a monopoly for bathing and letting chairs for hire on that portion :—Held, that the respondent was in occupation, not only of the staging, but also of the foreshore upon which the staging stood, and that the description in the rate book was sufficient. Margate Corporation v. Pettman, 106 L. T. 104; 76 J. P. 145; 10 L. G. R. 147; 28 T. L. R. 192—D.

11. Railways.

See also Vol. XI. 1656, 1990.

Traffic Agreement between Two Railway Companies—Value of Line Apart from Agreement.]—By an agreement between the plaintiffs and the M. Railway, the traffic which would otherwise have passed over a portion of the appellant's line in a parish in the respondent union was transferred to the M. Railway : —Held, that in assessing the value of the appellant's line in the respondent union the quarter sessions were not precluded from considering the value of the line apart from the special bargains between the two companies. London and North-Western Railway v. Thrapston Union, 107 L. T. 788; 77 J. P. 25; 10 L. G. R. 1067; 29 T. L. R. 21—D.

Link Line of Railway — Line Worked at Loss — Consideration of Extraneous Circumstances.]—The East London Railway was a line without terminal stations, forming a link between the lines of several railway companies by whom it was leased under the East London Railway Act, 1882, at a rent which was calculated on the gross receipts, but was not to be less than 30,000*l.* per annum. For the last three years the working of the line had resulted in a net loss apart from the rent payable under the lease :—Held, confirming the decision of the Divisional Court, that, in fixing the rateable value of the line for the purpose of the quinquennial valuation list, quarter sessions were justified in taking into consideration extraneous circumstances such as the position, connections, and accommodations of the line, and in refusing to value it at a nominal sum. East London Railway Joint Committee v. Greenwich Assessment Committee; Same v. Bermondsey Assessment Committee; Same v. Stepney Assessment Committee, 82 L. —— Joint Line—Feeder—No Profits—Contributive Value — Basis of Assessment.] — The appellants were two railway companies, and they jointly owned a railway partly situated in the parishes of Hammersmith and Kensington. The appellants earned no profit on the line, but it had a contributive value as a feeder to their systems. On an appeal against the valuation of the line in these parishes quarter sessions held that they were not entitled to take into account the contributive value of the line, that neither of the appellant companies was a competitor for the occupation of the line, that no other competitor would give a rent sufficient to support the assessment appealed against, and that the line must be assessed solely with regard to the earnings within the parishes, and they reduced the assessment to a nominal figure :—Held, that in the absence of special circumstances the line was rateable on the annual value based upon the actual profits earned by it, and not on the value due to its increasing the profits on other parts of the appellants' system, and that as there was nothing in the facts to require any special method of valuation the assessment by quarter sessions must be affirmed. Great Western and Metropolitan Railways v. Hammersmith Assessment Committee; Same v. Kensington Assessment Committee, 85 L. Coal in Owners' Waggons — One Route Loaded—Returning Empty by Another—Inclusive Charge — Gross Earnings.] — By the G. N. Railway Co. (Rates and Charges) Order Confirmation Act, 1891, where merchandise is conveyed in a traders' truck the company shall not make any charge in respect of the return of the truck empty, provided that it is returned direct to the consignor. A portion of the gross receipts earned by the appellants in a certain parish was earned in respect of coal hauled through the parish in owners' waggons, and the waggons when empty had to be hauled back to the place from which they had been consigned without further payment. Most of the waggons when empty were hauled back by a different route, not passing through the parish in question. Quarter sessions on an appeal decided that the charges which the appellants made for the conveyance of coal in owners' waggons were made for the joint service of hauling the waggons when full and hauling them back when empty, and that the amount of the actual gross earnings of the appellants' railway in the parish from coal carried in owners' waggons was to be arrived at by making a deduction in respect of the return of the waggons:—Held, that the quarter sessions were right. Great Northern Railway v. Hunslet Union, 105 L. Expenses Incurred in Respect of Property Outside the Premises Rated — Shipbuilding Yard.]—The tenants of a shipbuilding yard adjoining a tidal navigable river incurred an annual expenditure in dredging the river outside the premises in their own occupation in order that yachts and boats should have access from the river to their wharves and jetties:—Held, that such expenditure was not an "expense necessary to maintain" the premises "in a state to command such rent" within the meaning of section 1 of the Parochial Assessments Act, 1836, and therefore could not be allowed as a deduction under that section in arriving at the rateable value of such premises. White v. South Stoneham Union, 84 L. 14. Statutory Exemptions.

Exemption "from all taxes and assessments whatsoever" — New Rate Subsequently Authorised—Rate for Same Purposes as Old Rate — General Rate — Consolidated Rate — Police Rate.] — Section 51 of the statute 7 Geo. 3. c. 37 provided that certain lands in the City of London reclaimed from the river Thames under the provisions of that Act should vest in the owners of the adjoining land "free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever." The consolidated rate was created by the City of London Sewers Act, 1848, and the police rate by the City of London Police Act, 1839. Both rates are, under section 15 of the City of London (Union of Parishes) Act, 1907, levied and collected as one rate, termed the general rate. But this is only done for convenience of collection, and the two rates must be looked at separately:—Held, that the consolidated rate and also the police rate were substantially new assessments, and that therefore the rates were not within the exemption created by the statute 7 Geo. 3. c. 37, s. 51, as the exemption created by that statute only applied to taxes and assessments in existence when that Act was passed or others substituted for them. Sion College v. London Corporation (70 L. Previous Payment in Respect of Non-existent Rate—Fraudulent Representation of Assistant Overseer.] — The overseers of the parish of H. had made a poor rate and a special sanitary rate on June 16, 1910, for the half-year ending the following September 30. Their assistant overseer, one S., fraudulently represented to the L. T. & S. Railway Co., who were ratepayers, that the rates had in fact been made on April 7, 1910, and induced them to send him on April 28 a cheque in payment, drawn to his order for 496*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, which he indorsed and paid into his private banking account. On April 30 S. drew a cheque on his private account for 472*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*, which he paid (in order to cover his previous defalcations) to the credit of several accounts kept by the overseers at the bank. On August 15, 1911, demands for the amounts due under the rates of June 16, 1910, were served on the railway company, which they refused to pay. Upon the overseers applying for distress warrants, the Justices being of opinion that the overseers had received the proceeds or greater part of the proceeds of the cheque for 496*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, considered that they ought not to issue distress warrants, and dismissed the summonses:—Held, that the distress warrants ought to have been issued, for there was no evidence that the railway company had paid the rates made on June 16, 1910, as there were no such rates in existence when they paid the 496*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* to S. on April 28; that the payment was not an effective payment of rates in advance to S., as assistant overseer, on account of rates for the half-year ending September 30; and the payment of 472*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* by S. to the overseers on April 30 was not a payment under the rate of June 16, but one he ought to have made in respect of an earlier rate. Per Avory, J. : An effective payment to an assistant overseer would be a sufficient answer without tracing the money as having been paid by the assistant overseer to the overseers themselves, seeing that, though not the servant of the overseers, he is the statutory officer appointed to demand and collect rates. Hornchurch Union v. London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway, 107 L. Application for Distress Warrant—Claim to Statutory Exemption—Jurisdiction of Justices to Give Effect to Exemption.] — Where an application is made to Justices for a distress warrant for non-payment of rates, the Justices have jurisdiction to entertain a defence raised by the defendant that he ought not to be rated at all by reason of some statutory exemption, or that if rated at all he ought not to be rated for the full rateable value, even though the facts necessary to raise such defence are not admitted or are disputed. So held by Bray, J., and Atkin, J.; Avory, J., dissenting. Whenman v. Clark, 84 L. J. K.B. 825; [1915] 1 K.B. 548; 112 L. T. 730; 79 J. P. 252; 13 L. G. R. 347—D.

Section 289 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, provides that " all lands buildings . . . for the time being vested in the Conservators in respect of the Thames above London Bridge shall be exempt from all parochial charges rates taxes assessments impositions and payments whatsoever " :—Held, that a house and grounds on the banks of the Thames in the parish of Hampton Wick, transferred to the Conservators of the river Thames by the Corporation of London in 1857, which house had been let, and the rent of which had been applied by the Conservators for one or other of the purposes of the river Thames, were vested in the Conservators in respect of the Thames above London Bridge, and were, under section 289, exempt from parochial charges irrespective of any purpose for which the premises were occupied. Held, further, that parochial rates did not include the general district rate. Ib.

Appeal to Quarter Sessions — Gross Estimated Rental—Finality of Figure Appearing in Rate Book and Valuation List.]—The gross estimated rental of a rateable hereditament as it appears in the rate book and valuation list in accordance with the Parochial Assessment Act, 1836, s. 1, and schedule, and the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, ss. 14, 15, and schedule, is final as against the rating authority, so that it is not competent to the Court of quarter sessions, upon the ratepayer's appeal from the assessment and rate, to admit evidence tendered by the rating authority to shew that the gross estimated rental has been understated. The decision in Horton v. Walsall Union (67 L. J. Q.B. 804; [1898] 2 Q.B. 237), laying down the above rule, approved and applied. Hendon Paper Works Co. v. Sunderland Assessment Committee, 84 L. J. K.B. 476; [1915] 1 K.B. 763; 112 L. Semble, a ratepayer, who has come to an agreement with the assessment committee for the insertion in the valuation list of a conventional figure for the gross estimated rental, may by his conduct estop himself from relying on the rule laid down in Horton v. Walsall Union (67 L. J. Q.B. 804; [1898] 2 Q.B. 237). Ib.

—— Appeal after Approval of Valuation List —Under-assessment of a Third Party—Notice of Objection to List—Notice Given to Third Party More than Twenty-eight Days after Deposit of List — Condition Precedent to Hearing of Appeal.] — On an appeal by a ratepayer to quarter sessions under section 1 of the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, against a poor rate, after the approval of the valuation list in conformity with which the poor rate is made, on the ground of the unfairness or incorrectness in the valuation of hereditaments in respect of which some third person is liable to be rated, the notice of objection to such list, the giving of which is a condition precedent to the hearing of such appeal, may be given by the appellant to such third person as well as to the assessment committee at any time, the provision in section 18 of the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, requiring that the notice of objection to the list shall be given to such third person within twenty-eight days of the deposit of the list, not being incorporated in section 1 of the Act of 1864. Rex v. Bristol (Recorder); Bristol Waterworks Co., Ex parte, 82 L. Quære, whether section 1 of the Act of 1864 imposes as a condition precedent to the hearing of the appeal the giving of notice of objection to the valuation list to any persons other than to the assessment committee. Ib.

Warrant of Distress and Levy—Appeal to Quarter Sessions — Appeal against " Order " of Court of Summary Jurisdiction.]—An appeal to quarter sessions under section 7 of the Poor Relief Act, 1743, by a person against whom a warrant of distress has been issued for non-payment of poor rate, which has been followed by a levy, is not an appeal against an " order " of a Court of summary jurisdiction, and therefore the procedure as to the entering into recognisances prescribed by section 31, sub-section 3 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, is not applicable. Rex v. Lincolnshire Justices, 81 L. " Monies . . . to be paid in like manner as the money required . . . for the relief of the poor" — Exemption — Hereditaments "free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever."] —By a statute, 7 Geo. 3. c. 37, it was provided that certain lands in the City of London, reclaimed from the river Thames under the Act, should be "free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever," and it has been decided that this exemption extended to the poor rate. By the County Rates Act, 1852, s. 26, the "guardians shall raise the monies required . . . to be paid in like manner as the money required by such guardians for the relief of the poor":—Held, that the rate under the Act of 1852 was only payable in respect of hereditaments which were rateable to the relief of the poor, and therefore that the exemption under the Act of George 3 extended to such rate, notwithstanding that by subsequent legislation part of such rate was made applicable to purposes other than the relief of the poor, which were not in the contemplation of the Legislature at the time when the exemption was granted. London Corporation v. *Associated Newspapers, Lim. The Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, was not intended to alter rights or the incidence of the county rate, but only to affect the machinery of collection. Ib.

Appeal — Hereditaments in the City — To what Court of Quarter Sessions Appeal Lies.] —By a precept issued by the London County Council, the Common Council of the City of London were required to pay a certain sum as the amount of the contribution payable by the City for general county purposes assessed and charged on the City in respect of a county rate. This rate was based upon the rateable value of hereditaments without deducting the value of those which were exempted from taxes and assessments by virtue of the provisions of 7 Geo. 3. c. 37:—Held, that an appeal by the Common Council from such rate lay to the Quarter Sessions for the County of London and not to the Quarter Sessions for the City of London. Rex v. London County Justices; Rex v. City of London Justices, 81 L. J. K.B. 932; [1912] 2 K.B. 556; 107 L. T. 196; 76 J. P. 380; 10 L. G. R. 535 —D.

—— Next Quarter Sessions after "cause of appeal" Arises—Repayment of Proportion of Rate Paid Prior to Giving of Notice of Appeal.]—A county rate which affected the parish of B. was made by the appellants in March, 1910. The first instalment was payable by the respondents as overseers of the parish of B. in two equal portions on May 21 and August 20, 1910. The second instalment was payable by the respondents in two equal portions on November 19, 1910, and February 18, 1911. A railway company on September 2, 1910, gave notice of appeal against their assessment to the poor rate in the parish of B. In April, 1911, as the result of that appeal, the assessment of the railway company was reduced, and the respondents repaid to the railway company and other objectors, whose assessments had also been reduced, the amounts by which the precepts for the poor rate as issued exceeded the poundage rate on the valuation list as reduced, which repayments amounted to the sum of 121*l.* 6*s.* in respect of over-assessment to the county rate as regards the instalments payable by August 20, 1910, and 107*l.* 5*s.* as regards the instalments payable by February 18, 1911. The respondents, on September 27, 1910, gave notice of appeal to the next quarter sessions against the county rate basis and also against the county rate made in March, 1910, on the ground that such rate was made on a county rate basis which was unfair, unequal, and incorrect:—Held, that the grievance of the respondents in respect of which they had a right of appeal, if it existed at all, arose either when the county rate was made in March, 1910, or when the assessment of the railway company was reduced in April, 1911, and that therefore the respondents had not appealed to the next quarter sessions after the cause of appeal arose, and that the quarter sessions had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. Held, also, that quarter sessions have no power under section 23 of the County Rates Act, 1852, when a rate or assessment has been set aside, decreased, or lowered, to order the repayment of a proportion of the moneys paid by a person, parish, township, or place in respect of the rate prior to the giving of the notice of appeal. Glamorgan County Council v. Barry Overseers, 81 L. Schedule A—Additional First Assessment—Final Determination — Basis — Poor Law Valuation.] — Where an appeal against an original assessment to income tax (Schedule A) has been withdrawn by the appellant without any evidence being offered, there is no such final determination of the assessment by the Commissioners as would, under section 57, sub-section 10 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880, preclude them from making an additional first assessment under section 52 of the Act. In making an assessment to income tax (Schedule A) the Commissioners are entitled to have regard to the poor rate assessment without allowing themselves to be controlled by it. The fact that a brewer's assessment to income tax (Schedule D) is too high cannot be taken into consideration in deciding whether an additional first assessment under Schedule A, on a tied public house owned by him, has been properly made. Gundry v. Dunham, 32 T. Literary or Scientific Institution.] — The Juridical Society of Edinburgh, which was composed of persons who were, or intended to become, advocates or writers to the signet, maintained a library chiefly of law books, and published from time to time a style book of legal forms. It also held debates on legal questions, attendance at which was optional: —Held, that the society's premises were not exempt from income tax under the Income Tax Act, 1842, Sched. A, rule No. VI., in respect that the society was not a literary or scientific institution, but an association whose main objects were professional. Farmer v. Edinburgh Juridical Society, [1914] S. Trade Exercised "within the United Kingdom" — Agent having "receipt of any profits."] — A French company, having its head office in Paris and owning phosphate mines in Algeria, employed a firm of Scottish merchants as their sole agents for the sale of their phosphates in the United Kingdom. Contracts of sale were concluded by the agents in the United Kingdom, but no stock was held in this country, and the goods were shipped from Algeria, delivery taking place before they were landed in this country. By the terms of the contracts payment was "by cash in London," and in practice it was made by cheques on London, payable in some cases to the company and in others to the agents, and always sent (indorsed when necessary) by the agents to the company in Paris, by whom they were cashed. The agents were paid by commission, which was remitted to them by the company, and the name of the company did not appear in any directory, or on any business premises in this country. The Income Tax Commissioners having found that the company carried on business in the United Kingdom, and that the agents were liable in payment of income tax on the assessed profits, —Held (Lord Dundas dissenting), that the company did not exercise any trade within the United Kingdom under section 2, Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1853, and that in any event the agents were not in receipt of the profits arising on sales in the United Kingdom within section 41 of the Income Tax Act, 1842. Crookston v. Inland Revenue, [1911] S. C. 217; 5 Tax Cas. 602—Ct. of Sess.

The appellants carried on business as merchants and commission agents in the United Kingdom, and sold goods on behalf of a firm of manufacturers at Verviers, Belgium. There was no written agency agreement. Offers received by appellants were submitted to the manufacturers for approval, and, if approved, were accepted by the appellants on behalf of the manufacturers. The goods were consigned to the appellants for delivery to customers in the United Kingdom. The appellants received payment for the goods and discharged the accounts on behalf of the manufacturers. The appellants sent sale accounts to the manufacturers monthly and rendered a quarterly statement for expenses and commission. They were paid by commission on business done and were liable for one-half of the bad debts :—Held, that the manufacturers were exercising a trade within the United Kingdom, and that the decision of the Commissioners in assessing the appellants, as agents, in respect of the profits derived by the manufacturers from the exercise of such trade was right. Macpherson v. Inland Revenue, [1912] S. "Person residing in the United Kingdom" —Company Registered Abroad—Right to Exercise Control in the United Kingdom.]—A finding by the Commissioners of Income Tax that a company which is registered abroad is resident in the United Kingdom for the purposes of assessment to income tax, on the ground that the control and directing powers of the company are in England, is, if there is evidence to support it, conclusive. American Thread Co. v. Joyce, 108 L. T. 353; 6 Tax Cas. 162; 57 S. J. 321; 29 T. L. R. 266—H.L. (E.)

A company resides, for the purposes of income-tax assessment, at the place where its real business is carried on—that is, where the control and management of the company is exercised—notwithstanding that the details of its trade may not be ordinarily dealt with there. Ib.

The appellants were a shipping company registered in New Zealand with limited liability. The registered office of the company was in Christchurch, New Zealand, where business was transacted by a New Zealand directorate. There was a separate board of directors in London, and at the London office were kept the general books of the company, comprising all their accounts. General meetings were held yearly in London and Christchurch, but the accounts were prepared and examined in London and dividends were declared there. Registers of shareholders were kept in both countries. The New Zealand board managed the local business in New Zealand and negotiated independently the most important of the freight contracts, but it was found in the Case that with this exception all contracts of importance were entered into in London, where all important questions of policy were decided, the New Zealand directorate acting in effect as district managers of the London Board :—Held, following De Beers Consolidated Mines v. Howe (75 L. J. K.B. 858; [1906] A.C. 455), that the company was for income tax purposes resident in the United Kingdom. New Zealand Shipping Co. v. Stephens, 52 S. J. 13; 24 T. L. —— Business Abroad—Temporary Visits to United Kingdom.]—A merchant carrying on business in Madras resided there, with his wife, during the whole of the year of assessment, not visiting the United Kingdom at all. His usual residence was in Madras, but, in nearly every year prior to the year of assessment, he had visited the United Kingdom, residing latterly with his wife and family in a house purchased in his wife's name out of moneys belonging to her and himself and owned by her. During the year of assessment some of his children resided in this house :—Held, that during the year of assessment he was not chargeable with Income Tax as a person residing in the United Kingdom. Turnbull v. Foster, 7 Fraser, 1; 42 Sc. Residence of Foreigner—Yacht Anchored in Tidal Waters.]—A citizen of the United States had for the last twenty years lived on board his own yacht, which was anchored in tidal navigable waters within the port of Colchester in the county of Essex, obtaining provisions and necessaries from the nearest village. The yacht had always been kept fully manned and ready to go to sea at any moment :—Held, that the owner was a "person residing in the United Kingdom" within the Income Tax Act, 1853, s. 2, Sched. D, and was assessable to income tax accordingly. Young, In re (1 Tax Cas. 57; 12 Sc. L. R. 602), distinguished. Brown v. Burt, 81 L. J. K.B. 17; 105 L. T. 420; 27 T. L. Sums "received in Great Britain in the current year"—Interest Re-invested Abroad in Purchase of Bonds—Bonds Transmitted to this Country—Sale of Bonds in this Country in Subsequent Year.]—The interest derived in 1907 from the American investments of a Scottish insurance company was re-invested in American bearer bonds, and the bonds were transmitted to this country in the same year. The bonds were afterwards sold, and the proceeds were received at the head office in August and October, 1908 :—Held, that the sums realised on the sale of the bonds, being sums "received in Great Britain" in respect of interest on foreign securities, were chargeable with income tax for the year in which the proceeds of the sales were received, although the interest had in fact been earned prior to that year. Scottish Provident Institution v. Inland Revenue, [1912] S. C. 452; 6 Tax Cas. 34—Ct. of Sess.

Profits from Foreign Possessions—Place of Assessment—Jurisdiction of Commissioners.]—Section 108 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, dealing with profits arising from foreign possessions, is to be read as a proviso upon section 106, qualifying and excluding that section in the cases to which it applies, and therefore a person residing nearer to London than to any of the other ports mentioned in the section is assessable in London only in respect of profits arising from foreign possessions, and the Income Tax Commissioners acting for his place of residence have no jurisdiction. Decision of the Court of Appeal, sub nom. Rex v. Kensington Income Tax Commissioners; Aramayo, Ex parte (83 L. J. K.B. 1439; [1914] 3 K.B. 429), affirmed. Kensington Income Tax Commissioners v. Aramayo, 84 L. J. K.B. 2169; 59 S. J. 715; 31 T. L. R. 606—H.L. (E.)

Insurance Company—Investments Abroad—Interest not Remitted to United Kingdom.]—An insurance company, which had its head office in England, carried on an extensive fire insurance business in the United States, Canada, and Australia, and had investments in those countries, partly in order to comply with the law of those countries as to fire-insurance business, and partly as a profitable investment of capital. The interest and dividends on these investments were not remitted to England, but were used in the countries where they accrued to meet claims under policies in those countries:—Held, that the company was properly charged with income tax on such interest and dividends as being part of the profits and gains of their business under Case I. in Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1842. Liverpool, London, and Globe Insurance Co. v. Bennett, 82 L. J. K.B. 1221; [1913] A.C. 610; 109 L. T. 483; 6 Tax Cas. 327; 20 Manson, 295; 57 S. J. 739; 29 T. L. R. 757—H.L. (E.)

Company Resident in England — Trade Carried on Abroad—Management.]—A company registered in England carried on business abroad. The business was entirely under the management and control of a local board of directors. The board of directors in England only met to receive reports and accounts, declare dividends, issue balance sheets, and exercise financial control over the company:—Held, that in so doing they did not take part in, or exercise control over, the carrying on of the business abroad, and that the profits of the business arose from foreign possessions, and fell to be taxed under Case V. of section 100, Sched. (D.) of the Income Tax Act, 1842, the business being carried on wholly outside the United Kingdom. Mitchell v. Egyptian Hotels, Lim., 84 L. J. K.B. 1772; [1915] A.C. 1022; 6 Tax Cas. 542; 59 S. Interest on Poor Rate Deposited in Bank—Claim for Exemption—"Yearly interest or other annual payment."]—Poor rates collected by overseers were paid by them into an account at a bank, and by a long-standing arrangement the bank, upon the footing that the account would continue to be kept there and would always be in credit, allowed interest on the daily balances without deducting income tax:—Held, that the interest allowed by the bank was not "yearly interest or other annual payment" within section 105 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and that therefore the overseers were not exempted from being assessed to income tax in respect thereof under section 100, Schedule (D.). Garston (Overseers) v. Carlisle, 84 L. J. K.B. 2016; [1915] 3 K.B. 381; 13 L. G. R. 969—Rowlatt, J.

Foreign Trust Estate—Beneficiaries in the United Kingdom—Infants not Entitled to a Vested Interest—Remittances to Guardian for Maintenance and Education — Uncontrolled Discretion of Trustees.]—An American testator left property in America to American trustees upon trust to accumulate it for his grandchildren, who were minors, until they should respectively attain the age of twenty-five years, when each child was given a life interest in its share. The trustees were directed, out of the income of the share of the trust estate held in trust for each child, to make such provision as they in their uncontrolled discretion might think necessary or advisable for the suitable maintenance and education of such child. The children resided in England with their mother, who was their guardian, and the trustees from time to time remitted money to her for their maintenance and education:—Held, that the trust estate was a "foreign possession," in respect of which the remittances were received, and that they were therefore assessable to income tax under the Income Tax Act, 1842, s. 100, Sched. (D.), Case 5, and the Income Tax Act, 1853, s. 2, Sched. (D.), and that the guardian was chargeable on behalf of the infants under section 41 of the Income Tax Act, 1842. Drummond v. Collins, 84 L. J. K.B. 1690; [1915] A.C. 1011; 113 L. T. 665; 59 S. Profits of a Railway—Guaranteed Interest by South African Republic—Line Taken by British Government—Payment of Arrears of Interest.]—In 1895 the South African Republic granted a concession for the construction of a railway, and guaranteed to a company, which was formed to take over the railway, payment of interest at the rate of 4 per cent. on its share capital. During the South African War the British military authorities seized and worked the railway, and ultimately the British Government gave notice to expropriate the railway under the terms of the concession, and undertook to pay all arrears of interest due under the guarantee. They accordingly paid 97,506*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.* as "guaranteed interest on share capital at 4 per cent. per annum from January 1st, 1899, to November 14th, 1903," together with other sums becoming due by reason of the expropriation :—Held, that the sum of 97,506*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.* in question was not part of a sum paid by the British Government as the price of the company's undertaking, that it must be treated as the gross revenue earned by the Company as a trading company from January 1, 1901, to November 14, 1903, and that after deducting certain expenses of the company during the same period, the benefit of the three years' average must be applied, and income tax was payable on one-third of the balance only. Pretoria-Pietersburg Railway v. Elwood, 98 L. "Profits or gains"—Golf Club—Fees Paid by Non-members. —A golf club, in accordance with the terms of the lease of its grounds, admitted non-members, upon payment of fees prescribed by the lessors, to play golf on the links and make use of the club house. The Income Tax Commissioners decided that the club was liable to be assessed to income tax in respect of these fees, less such proportion of the annual outlay in maintaining and keeping up the links and club house as the same contributions bore to the entire annual income of the club :—Held, that the club was assessable to income tax under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1842, in respect of the "profits or gains" derived from the payment of fees by non-members; but that the method adopted by the Commissioners for arriving at the taxable profits was wrong, and the case must, in default of agreement, be remitted to them to ascertain the same. Carlisle and Silloth Golf Club v. Smith, 82 L. —— Negotiation Fee Paid to Agent on Sale of Estate under Irish Lands Purchase Acts.]—The agent of an estate intended to be sold to the tenants under the provisions of the Irish Land Act, 1903, was employed by the vendors to negotiate the sales, under an agreement by which he was to receive out of the purchase money a commission of 3 per cent. on the amount of the same, and this agreement was sanctioned by the Estates Commissioners. The estate was sold and the amount of the commission paid out of the purchase money :—Held, that the commission was part of the annual gains and profits of the agent arising from his vocation as agent in respect of which he was assessable to income tax. Humphrey v. Peare, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 462; 6 Tax Cas. 201—K.B. D.

—— Waterworks—Supply of Water by Rural Authority to Parishes in their Area—Profits in some, Losses in other Parishes—No Deduction of Losses from Profits — Separate Undertakings.]—A rural sanitary authority, in pursuance of the powers granted to them by the Public Health Act, 1875, undertook the supply of water to various parishes within their area. The water thus supplied was purchased by the authority in bulk from the W. Corporation. The working of the water supply in some of the parishes resulted in a profit and in other of the parishes in a loss. Separate accounts were kept by the authority in regard to each of the parishes. Any deficiency resulting from the working of the water supply in a parish in any year was met by a special expenses rate levied upon all the ratepayers in that parish, and any surplus that might arise from the working of the water supply in any parish was carried forward to the credit of that parish in accordance with the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875. The surveyor of taxes assessed the authority under No. III. of Schedule (A.), section 60 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, to income tax in respect of the profits made in each of the parishes in which a profit was made :—Held, that the waterworks carried on by the authority were not a single undertaking, but that the supply of water to each of the parishes was a separate concern; and held, therefore, that the surveyor had rightly assessed the authority to income tax in respect of the profits made in each of the parishes in which a profit was made. Wakefield Rural Council v. Hall, 81 L. —— Supply of Water—Rate—District Council.]—A rural district council was bound by Act of Parliament to supply water to any ratepayers within its rural district who might make application therefor, and was empowered to collect a special rate from consumers of water so supplied :—Held, following Glasgow Corporation Water Commissioners v. Miller (23 Sc. L. R. 285) and Dublin Corporation v. M'Adam (20 L. R. Ir. 497), that the relation between the district council representing the general body of ratepayers and the consumers of water respectively is that of vendor and purchaser, and that the profit made by the district council is a profit within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts, and as such is liable to tax. Mullingar Rural Council v. Rowles, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 44; 6 Tax Cas. 85—K.B. D. (Ir.)

—— Profit on Purchase and Re-sale of Property.]—The memorandum of association of a limited company, a rubber syndicate, set forth that the objects of the company were (inter alia)—first, the acquisition and development of a rubber estate in the Malay Peninsula; secondly, the acquisition and development of rubber estates there or elsewhere, and the carrying on of the business of manufacturing and trading in rubber; and thirdly, the sale of the whole or any part of the business undertaking and property of the company. The company acquired two estates and expended money on their development; but before the estates reached the stage of producing rubber the company, finding its capital inadequate fully to develop the estates, sold its whole undertaking to a new company at a price which exceeded by 9,000*l.* the whole sums spent by the selling company in acquiring and developing the estates :—Held, that the business of the company not being the buying and selling of rubber estates, but the production of and trading in rubber, this sum of 9,000*l.* could not be regarded as income assessable for income tax. Californian Copper Syndicate v. Inland Revenue (6 F. 894) distinguished. Assets Co. v. Inland Revenue (24 R. 578) and Stevens v. Hudson's Bay Co. (25 T. —— Realisation Company — Conversion of Securities.]—Where the owner of an investment realises it, and obtains a higher price than he originally gave for it, the enhanced price is not "profit" within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts (Victoria); but where a company was formed to hold and nurse the assets of certain banks which were in liquidation, and to sell the securities at a profit when an occasion presented itself,—Held, that such company was a trading company, and that the surplus realised by it from selling the assets at enhanced prices was taxable as profit under section 9 of the Income Tax Act, 1903 (Victoria). Californian Copper Syndicate v. Harris (6 Fraser, 894; 5 Tax Cas. 159) approved and followed. Commissioner of Taxes v. Melbourne Trust, 84 L. —— River Conservancy Board — Statutory Contributions to Board's Income by Companies Interested in Navigation of River.]—The Humber Conservancy Board were invested by statute with the duty of maintaining and improving the navigation of the Humber. Their receipts, applied to the above purposes, consisted in the first place of certain shipping and registration dues, and some rents, fees, &c., upon which they paid income tax, and in the second place of certain contributions, paid annually to the board under compulsion of statute, by certain railway and canal companies interested in the navigation of the Humber:—Held, that these contributions must be treated as part of the board's income, and were assessable to income tax either as representing the annual value of an inland navigation within section 60, Schedule A, No. III. rule 3 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, or as annual profits or gains under Schedule D, Sixth Case. Humber Conservancy Board v. Bater, 83 L. J. K.B. 1745; [1914] 3 K.B. 449; 111 L. T. 856; 6 Tax Cas. 555—Scrutton, J.

Exemption Forbidden by Statute — Subsequent Act Authorising Annuity Free from all Taxes — Super-tax.] — By section 187 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, any future Act conferring an exemption from taxes shall not exempt any person from the duties granted by the Act of 1842. By section 1 of an Act of 1871 (34 Vict. c. 1) the Crown was empowered to grant to Princess Louise an annuity of 6,000*l.* "free from all taxes, assessment, and charges." By section 66 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, a super-tax was imposed on incomes over 5,000*l.*:—Held, that the Acts of 1842 and 1871 being inconsistent, the later Act must prevail, and that therefore the annuity was exempt from income tax. Argyll (Duke) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 109 L. T. 893; 30 T. L. R. 48—Scrutton, J.

Relief—Earned Income—Business Carried on by Trustees for Minor Beneficiaries.] — Testamentary trustees carried on a business forming part of the residue of the trust estate for behoof of two daughters of the testator who were minors. These daughters were the sole beneficiaries interested in the residue of the estate, and the whole profits of the business were paid over each year to or on behalf of these daughters. By the terms of the trust deed each of these daughters, on attaining majority, was entitled to one-half of the free trust estate, but during their minorities they had no absolute right to any part of the income of the trust, although the trustees were authorised to apply any part of the income of the prospective share of each for her maintenance or education. As neither of the daughters had an income exceeding 2,000*l.* per annum, a claim was made on their behalf for relief from income tax with regard to the profits of the business in respect that these profits were "earned income" within section 19 of the Finance Act, 1907:—Held, that the beneficiaries were not entitled to the relief sought in respect that the income was not earned by them. Inland Revenue v. Shiels's Trustees, [1915] S. C. 159; 6 Tax Cas. 348—Ct. of Sess.

Profits of Trade — Single-ship Company — Loss of Ship and Acquisition of New Ship—Computation of Average Profits—Commencement of Business.] — The appellants were registered in 1901 as a limited company to acquire and trade with a certain steamship, and, in the event of its loss, to acquire and trade with another, but were in no event to own more than one steamship at any one time. The steamship first acquired was lost in April, 1906, and with the insurance moneys the appellants purchased another ship and traded with it from October, 1906:—Held, that the appellants were carrying on one business from the beginning in 1901, and that they did not commence a fresh business when they commenced to trade with the second ship so acquired, and consequently that they were to be assessed on the average of their profits for the three years preceding the assessment, and not on the profits of one year. Merchiston Steamship Co. v. Turner, 80 L. Trade Commenced in Year Preceding Year of Assessment—First Balance Sheet Struck during Year of Assessment — Competency of Considering Profits Earned during Year of Assessment.]—A company commenced business on September 13, 1911, and its first balance sheet was struck at November 20, 1912, thus covering a period of 434 days' trading. The Inland Revenue assessed the company for income tax for the year April 5, 1912, to April 5, 1913, on the basis of the profits disclosed for this period of 434 days, by taking 365-434ths of that sum as representing one year's profits. The company contended that it was incompetent to take into consideration any profits earned after the commencement of the year of assessment, and accordingly that the year's profits, on which they fell to be assessed, must be estimated on the basis of the profits actually earned by them during the period September 13, 1911, to April 5, 1912 :—Held (Lord Johnston diss.), that the method adopted by the Inland Revenue was right. Glensloy Steamship Co. v. Inland Revenue, [1914] S. C. 549; 6 Tax Cas. 453—Ct. of Sess.

Average Profits and Gains—Patent—Royalties — Cessation of Payments.] — Section 25, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1907, provides that "In estimating, under any schedule of the Income Tax Acts, the amount of the profits and gains arising from any trade, manufacture, adventure, concern, profession, or vocation, no deduction shall be made on account of any royalty, or other sum, paid in respect of the user of a patent, but the person paying the royalty or sum shall be authorised, on making the payment, to deduct and retain thereout the amount of the rate of income tax chargeable during the period through which the royalty or sum was accruing due." Previously to January 1, 1907, the appellants had paid royalties for the use of certain patents which, in consequence of arrangements made between the appellants and the owners of the patents, ceased to be payable after that date. The question was how the trade profits of the appellants during the year 1907 to 1908 ought to be estimated, having regard to the above sub-section :—Held, that the operation of the first part of the sub-section was dependent upon that of the latter part, and that, inasmuch as the latter part could have no operation under the circumstances, the appellants were in the same position as before the enactment, and were therefore entitled to deduct the royalties paid by them during the three years of average for the purpose of estimating their profits during the year of assessment. Lanston Monotype Corporation v. Anderson, 80 L. J. K.B. 1351; [1911] 2 K.B. 1019; 105 L. T. 398; 5 Tax Cas. 675—C.A.

Balance of Profits and Gains—Fire Insurance Company — Prepaid Unearned Premiums —Estimate.]—In the assessment to income tax of fire insurance companies there is no rule of law by which to frame an estimate of the balance of profits and gains after allowing for the unexpired risks when the accounts are made up; it is a question of facts and figures in each case whether the assessment is fair both to the Crown and to the subject. General Accident, Fire, and Life Assurance Corporation v. M'Gowan (77 L. J. P.C. 38; [1908] A.C. 207) discussed and explained. Sun Insurance Office v. Clark, 81 L. J. K.B. 488; [1912] A.C. 443; 106 L. T. 438; 6 Tax Cas. 59; 56 S. J. 378; 28 T. L. R. 303—H.L. (E.)

In the case of the appellants the Commissioners of Taxes for the City of London were of opinion that 40 per cent. of the premiums income carried forward in each year was a reasonable and proper allowance or deduction by way of unearned premiums, and did not form part of the profits and gains for the year. Bray, J., affirmed the view of the Commissioners, which was in favour of the appellants, but his decision was reversed by the Court of Appeal. The House reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal, and restored that of Bray, J. Ib.

Trading Profits—Ascertainment—Purchase of Going Concern — Entries in Purchaser's Books made for Book-keeping Purposes.] — A limited company was formed to take over as a going company the manufacturing business then being carried on by a company in liquidation. The consideration was 25,000*l.* in cash and an obligation to relieve the sellers of certain contingent liabilities which could only emerge and be ascertained at a future date. For the purpose of keeping their books the new company allocated the purchase price of 25,000*l.* as follows : 19,375*l.* to buildings, plant, &c. (arrived at arbitrarily by taking one-third of the values standing in the books of the old company), and the remainder, 5,625*l.* to stock-in-trade. They at the same time valued the stock-in-trade on an ordinary stock-taking basis, which brought out the value at 12,798*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.* They used this valuation for their trading and profit and loss accounts, and squared these with the opening entry of 5,625*l.* by treating the difference—namely, 7,193*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*—as a "stock suspense account" to provide for the contingent liabilities they had undertaken under the contract of purchase. When the first balance sheet for a complete year of trading was made up by the company, the Inland Revenue claimed income tax on their profits calculated on the basis of taking the sum of 5,625*l.* as the opening value of the stock. The company maintained that the figure that should be taken was the true value of the stock—namely, 12,798*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.* :—Held, that the Inland Revenue was not entitled to take the purely book-keeping entry of 5,625*l.* as conclusive evidence of the true value of the stock, but was bound to ascertain the true value and assess for income tax on that basis. Craig (Kilmarnock), Lim. v. Inland Revenue, [1914] S. C. 338—Ct. of Sess.

Deductions—Brewery Company—Balance of Profits or Gains — "Tied" Houses Let to Tenants — Compensation Levy — Landlord's Share.]—A brewery company, upon being assessed under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1853, in respect of the profits of their trade, claimed to deduct from the amount of those profits the sum expended by them as landlords of certain "tied" houses in respect of the proportion of the compensation levy imposed upon them by section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1904. The tied houses were owned by the company and were let to tenants upon the terms that the tenants should only deal with the company in the way of their business, and should buy all the beer consumed on the premises from the company, the tenants paying a lower rent in consideration therefor. It was found as a fact that the profits of the company were greatly increased by the employment of the houses, and that they were necessary in order to enable the company to carry on their business profitably :—Held (the House of Lords being equally divided in opinion on the question), that the respondents were entitled to the deduction claimed. Smith v. Lion Brewery Co., 80 L. —— Expenses of Tied Houses—Disbursements or Expenses Wholly or Exclusively Laid Out and Expended for the Purposes of Trade or Business.]—Where a trader acquires a particular interest in property wholly and exclusively for the purpose of using that interest to secure a better market for the commodities which it is his trade to sell, the expenses which he properly and reasonably incurs in connection with that property are " expenses wholly or exclusively laid out for the purposes of such trade " or business, within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts. Therefore, where the owners of a brewery business acquired, by purchase or lease, licensed houses, the tenants of which were bound by an agreement to purchase from the company all the liquor which they sold by retail, all expenses properly incurred in respect of such houses, in order to promote the sale of the goods supplied by the company, may be taken into account in estimating the balance of the profits and gains on the brewery business. Russell v. Town and County Bank, Lim. (58 L. —— Profits of a Brewery Company.] — A brewery company, in the course of, and for the purpose of, their business, acquired licensed houses which were let to tenants subject to the usual tie covenants. The company claimed that in the computation of their profits as brewers for assessment under Schedule D the following expenses incurred in connection with these tied houses should be allowed : (1) Compensation levy on tied houses; (2) Premiums paid by the company for insuring tied houses against fire; (3) The differences between the assessment to Income Tax, Schedule A, in respect of freehold tied houses or rents of leasehold houses on the one hand, and the rents received from the tied tenants on the other hand; (4) Replacement of fixtures and fittings of tied houses; (5) Repairs to tied houses. Having regard to the findings in the case, counsel for the Crown consented to an order reducing the assessment by the amount of the deductions claimed. Youngs, Crawshay & Youngs, Lim. v. Brooke, 6 Tax Cas. 393—Hamilton, J.

—— Profits of Trade — Interest Payable on Short Loans.] — A company carrying on a financial and banking business at home and abroad borrowed money from its foreign bankers, by whom it was allowed a large overdraft, and paid interest on the amount so borrowed, and also from time to time on the amount of the overdraft :—Held, that in assessing for income tax the profits and gains of its business, the company was entitled to deduct the amount of interest paid to the bankers on the loan and the periodical amounts of the overdraft. Farmer v. Scottish North American Trust, Lim., 81 L. —— Payment to Secure Controlling Interest in Rival Firm.]—S. & L., a firm of tube manufacturers, entered into an agreement with W., another firm of tube manufacturers, whereby, in return for the right to nominate a majority of the directors of W., S. & L. undertook to pay to W. each half-year such sum as might be necessary to make up any deficit in the dividend on W.'s preference shares. In pursuance of this agreement, in the year 1904 S. & L. made payments to W. of sums amounting to 841*l.* In estimating their profits for that year for income tax purposes, S. & L. claimed to deduct from the profits this sum of 841*l.* The Income Tax Commissioners held that S. & L. had expended this sum for the purposes of their trade and that they might sell their goods at a better price, and allowed the deduction :—Held, that the deduction had been rightly allowed. Moore v. Stewarts & Lloyds, Lim., 8 F. 1129; 6 Tax Cas. 501—Ct. of Sess.

—— Voluntary Levies Wholly Expended for Purpose of Trade—Levy Paid to Coal Owners' Association—Deduction of Levy by Individual Member of Association.] — The funds of a coal owners' association were derived from voluntary subscriptions or levies collected by the association from its individual members, and were expended (inter alia) on the following objects—namely, first, expenses of the Conciliation Board; secondly, subscriptions to the Mining Association of Great Britain; and thirdly, experiments on the explosive properties of coal dust made at the request of the Government :—Held, that an individual member of the association, in stating the profits of his business for the purpose of income tax, was entitled to deduct that proportion of the levy paid by him to the association which related to the first of the above objects, but not the proportions relating to the second or third, in respect that a payment towards the first of these objects was, whereas a payment to either of the latter was not, one which, had it been made by the individual member directly, could have properly been deducted by him as money wholly expended for the purpose of his trade. Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co. v. Inland Revenue, [1913] S. C. 810; 6 Tax Cas. 267—Ct. of Sess.

—— Voluntary Association of Traders for Maintaining Prices — Contributions Paid by Member to Association.] — A firm of iron-founders, members of a trade association whose object under its rules and regulations was to keep up and raise the prices of the products sold by its members, claimed the right to deduct from the return of the profits of their business for the purpose of income tax their contributions to the association, as being moneys wholly and exclusively expended by them for the purposes of their trade :—Held, that, in order to establish that the contributions were moneys so expended, it was not sufficient for the firm to prove that they had paid the contributions to the association, and to produce the rules and regulations of the association, but that they must produce to the Special Commissioners the accounts of the association in order that the Special Commissioners might ascertain from them how the contributions had, in fact, been expended. Grahamston Iron Co. v. Inland Revenue, [1915] S. C. 536—Ct. of Sess.

—— Expense of Promoting Parliamentary Bill for Construction of Railway to Increase Traffic Facilities.]—Coalmasters owning mines in a certain district, having failed to obtain satisfactory railway facilities from the only railway company owning lines in that district, promoted two Parliamentary Bills for authority to construct a line to serve the coal-field. The Bills were opposed by the railway company, and, upon that company giving a parliamentary obligation to provide the facilities required by the promoters, the Bills were by consent thrown out. In estimating profits for income tax purposes one of the coalmasters claimed as a deduction the expenses incurred by him in connection with the promotion of these bills :—Held (Lord Johnston dissenting), that these expenses did not fall to be deducted; per the Lord President, in respect that they were capital, and not revenue, expenditure; per Lord Skerrington, in respect that they were not "money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of" the coalmaster's trade. Moore & Co. v. Inland Revenue, [1915] S. C. 91; 6 Tax Cas. 345—Ct. of Sess.

—— Retirement of Law Reporter—Grant of Gratuity — "Money wholly and exclusively laid out" for Purposes of Trade—Finding of Fact.]—The question whether a gratuity paid by the Incorporated Council of Law Reporting to one of their reporters upon his retirement is allowable as a deduction in calculating the profits of the council for the purposes of income tax as being "money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of" their trade is a question of fact for the Income Tax Commissioners to decide, and no appeal lies from their decision. Smith v. Incorporated Council of Law Reporting, 83 L. J. K.B. 1721; [1914] 3 K.B. 674; 111 L. T. 848; 6 Tax Cas. 477; 30 T. L. R. 588—Scrutton, J.

—— Land Owned and Used by Trader for Purposes of Trade — Annual Value.] — Schedule D and section 100 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, provide by Case I. rule 1, and Cases I. and II. rules 1 and 2, that the duty to be charged in respect of any trade shall be computed on a sum not less than the full amount of the balance of profits and gains of such trade upon a fair and just average of three years, ending either on such day of the year immediately preceding the year of assessment on which the accounts of the trade shall have been usually made up or on April 5 preceding the year of assessment; that in estimating such balance of profits and gains no sum shall be set against or deducted from such profits and gains for any disbursements or expenses whatever not being money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of such trade; and that the computation of the duty to be charged in respect of any trade shall be made exclusive of the profits or gains arising from lands, tenements, or hereditaments occupied for the purpose of such trade. Section 9 of the Finance Act, 1898, in effect provides that where in estimating the amount of annual profits or gains arising from any trade chargeable to income tax under Schedule D any sum is deducted on account of the annual value of the premises used for the purposes of such trade, the sum so deducted shall not exceed the amount of the assessment of the premises for the purposes of income tax under Schedule A to the Income Tax Act, 1842, as reduced for the purpose of collection under section 35 of the Finance Act, 1894. A trading company were the owners of certain freehold and leasehold property which they used exclusively for the purposes of their business. They were assessed by the Commissioners under Schedule D of the Income Tax Acts for the year ending April 5, 1912, the annual value of the freeholds and leaseholds as represented by the assessment under Schedule A in each of the three previous years being deducted from the profits of each of the said years before striking the average. The amount assessed for this property under Schedule A for the year of assessment (the year ending April 5, 1912) was larger than in the previous years, and the company claimed that the average profits for the three previous years should be ascertained without the deduction of the amount of the assessment under Schedule A in each of these years, and that from the amount of such average profits the amount of the assessment under Schedule A for the year of assessment should be deducted : —Held, that the method of assessment adopted by the Commissioners was the right method, and that the contention of the company was erroneous. Russell v. Town and County Bank (58 L. J. P.C. 8; 13 App. Cas. 418) followed. General Hydraulic Power Co. v. Hancock, 83 L. J. K.B. 906; [1914] 2 K.B. 21; 111 L. T. 251; 6 Tax Cas. 445; 30 T. L. R. 203—Scrutton, J.

—— Value of Standing Timber Cut during Year.] — A company occupying land, and carrying on the business of saw millers and timber merchants is not entitled in its assessment for income tax to deduct from the gross proceeds of its business the value of the standing timber cut during the year of assessment. Kauri Timber Co. v. Commissioner of Taxes, 83 L. J. P.C. 6; [1913] A.C. 771; 109 L. T. 22; 29 T. L. R. 671—P.C.

—— Mining Company — Main Shaft.] — A mining company claimed to be allowed as a deduction the cost of deepening a main shaft, the bodies of ore accessible from the original level having been practically worked out :— Held, that there was no evidence on which the opinion of the Commissioners, that the expenditure was proper working costs, could be supported, and that the deduction could not be allowed. Bonner v. Basset Mines, 108 L. T. 764; 6 Tax Cas. 146—Horridge, J.

—— Profits Earned by Letting Furnished House — Expense of Renting House Elsewhere.]—A lady made a profit by letting her furnished house for two months, and when assessed for income tax thereon claimed to deduct the rent of another house which she had taken to reside in during that period :— Held, that this rent was not an expense necessarily incurred in earning the profit, and accordingly that the deduction should be disallowed. Wylie v. Inland Revenue, [1913] S. C. 16; 6 Tax Cas. 128—Ct. of Sess.

—— Wear and Tear — Unexhausted Deductions—Purchase of Old Company by New Company—Right of New Company to Unexhausted Deductions.] — A new company having purchased as a going concern the business of an old company was assessed for income tax on the average profits of the old company for the three years preceding the purchase. The amount of deductions for wear and tear to which the old company was entitled during these three years had not been given effect to in full owing to the fact that they exceeded the amount of the taxable income of the old company during that time :—Held, that the new company was entitled to deduct from its taxable income the balance of the deductions allowable to the old company. Scottish Shire Line v. Inland Revenue, [1912] S. C. 1108; 6 Tax Cas. 91—Ct. of Sess.

—— Firm of Shipbuilders — Channel from Works to Sea—Duty to Dredge on Harbour Authority — Neglect of Such Duty — Channel Rendered Useless thereby — Construction of Deep Water Berth — Expenditure by Shipbuilders — Capital Expenditure or Income Expenditure.] — The respondents, a firm of shipbuilders and engineers, began business at Barrow-in-Furness in 1896. Access from their works to the sea was by a channel. The Furness Railway Co. were the harbour authority, and as such had all statutory powers for dredging and keeping this channel clear at a certain width and depth. Subsequent to 1896 the harbour authority so neglected maintaining the channel that it began to silt up until it was becoming no longer possible for such vessels as could with safety get from and into the respondents' works in 1896 to continue to do so. The harbour authority admitted their liability to maintain the channel, but found themselves unable to perform their obligation. The respondents and the harbour authority thereupon agreed to complete a lesser and cheaper scheme which would not completely restore the channel to its condition in 1896, but would make it sufficiently navigable. This scheme was the construction of a deep water berth. The work was carried out in 1913, and was paid for by the respondents and the harbour authority, the respondents contributing to the expense thereby incurred 97,431*l*. The harbour authority undertook the future maintenance of the work. Had this expenditure not been incurred by the respondents they would not have been able to deliver a battleship to the British Government. The expenditure enabled them to earn the profits to which they were assessed to income tax. On the ground that this sum of 97,431*l*. was income expenditure the respondents claimed to deduct it from their gross profits of the year 1912, before ascertaining the profits for that year, which were to be used in calculating the average profits for three years upon which they were chargeable for the year ending April 5, 1914 :—Held, that the expenditure was capital expenditure, and that the respondents' claim must therefore be disallowed. Ounsworth v. Vickers, Lim., 84 L. —— Stallions Kept for Breeding Purposes—Diminished Value by Reason of Age—"Plant"—"Diminished value by reason of wear and tear."]—By section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, the Income Tax Commissioners "shall, in assessing the profits or gains of any trade, . . . allow such deduction as they may think just and reasonable as representing the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year of any machinery or plant used for the purposes of the concern, . . ." The appellant had two stallions in his stud farm which earned fees by serving the mares of other owners. In ascertaining the amount of profits assessable to income tax the appellant claimed as a deduction the annual amount of depreciation in the value of the stallions owing to their increase in age :—Held, that the fact that at the end of each year the stallions were of less value, inasmuch as they were one year nearer the end of their lives, did not entitle the appellant, under section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, to the deduction claimed in respect of the diminished value of plant by reason of wear and tear during the year. Derby (Earl) v. Aylmer, 84 L. —— Premiums—Life Insurance—Double Endowment Assurance.]—A policy of insurance whereby an insurance company agrees, in consideration of the payment of annual premiums by the assured, to pay 100*l*. to his legal personal representatives if he dies before a specified date, or to pay 200*l*. to the assured himself if he survives that date, is an "insurance on his life" within the meaning of section 54 of the Income Tax Act, 1853; and the assured is therefore entitled to deduct the whole amount of the annual premium from his profits and gains in respect of which he is liable to be assessed to income tax under Schedule D. Dictum of Channell, J., in Prudential Assurance Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (73 L. —— Mortgage—Sinking Fund.]—A company was empowered by Act of Parliament to raise money upon mortgage for the purpose of carrying out a Government contract, but was required by the same Act to establish a sinking fund for the extinction of the mortgage debt. A sum was to be set aside for payment into the sinking fund out of each quarterly payment received under the contract or out of other moneys belonging to the company:—Held, following the decision in Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Lucas (53 L. J. Q.B. 4; 8 App. Cas. 891), that the sums thus set aside are not allowable as a deduction in arriving at the company's assessable profits. City of Dublin Steam Packet Co. v. O'Brien. 6 Tax Cas. 101—K.B. Failure to make Proper Return — "Discovery" by Surveyor—Person Charged—Dispute of Liability—Remedy.]—By section 52 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880, "If the surveyor discovers that any properties or profits chargeable to the duties [of income tax] have been omitted from such first assessments, or that any person so chargeable has not made a full and proper or any return, or has not been charged to the said duties . . . then . . . as regards the duties chargeable under Schedule D of the Income Tax Acts, the Additional Commissioners shall at any time after the said first assessments have been signed and allowed, but within four months after the expiration of the year to which such first assessments relate, make an assessment on any such person in an additional first assessment in such sum as according to their judgment ought to be charged on such person, subject to objection by the surveyor and to appeal":—Held, that the word "discovers" in the above enactment is satisfied if the surveyor honestly arrives at the conclusion, based upon the material before him, that the person sought to be charged has not made a full and proper return under Schedule D, and the section is not limited in its operation to a person who in fact and in law is chargeable to the duties. Rex v. Bloomsbury Income Tax Commissioners; Hooper, Ex parte, 85 L. J. K.B. 129; [1915] 3 K.B. 768; 31 T. L. R. 565—D.

If there is before the surveyor information on which he could and did honestly believe the person to be liable to the duties, then, although the surveyor may be mistaken in his "discovery," the only remedy is an appeal under section 57, sub-section 3 of the Act to the General Commissioners, subject to a Case stated by them, and the person charged cannot obtain a writ of prohibition to the Commissioners from acting or proceeding upon the assessment. Ib.

Deduction at Source after Resolution of Committee of House of Commons, but before Passing of Act.]—On a motion for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the Bank of England from deducting income tax from a dividend payable to the plaintiff on his Irish Land Stock before the Act imposing such tax has been passed, but after the passing of a resolution of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Commons which specified the rate at which such tax would be levied, on the defendants undertaking to pay the amount of the tax into Court to abide the order of the Court no order was made on the motion. Bowles v. Bank of England (No. 1), 56 S. J. 651—Parker, J.

A resolution of the Committee of the House of Commons for Ways and Means, either alone or when adopted by the House, does not authorise the Crown to levy on the subject an income tax assented to by such resolution, but not yet imposed by Act of Parliament. Bowles v. Bank of England (No. 2), 82 L. J. Ch. 124; [1913] 1 Ch. 57; 108 L. T. 95; 6 Tax Cas. 136; 57 S. J. 43; 29 T. L. R. 42—Parker, J.

Although section 30 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, keeps alive the machinery of the Income Tax Acts and enables the officials charged with the collection of income tax to carry out all the preliminary work necessary for the collection and assessment of any income tax which may be imposed for any financial year, it does not authorise any assessment or collection of income tax not yet imposed by Act of Parliament. Held, accordingly, that the Bank of England were not entitled to deduct any sum in respect of income tax from dividends due on Government stock before income tax for the current financial year had been imposed by Act of Parliament. Ib.

Profits and Gains Brought into Charge — Undertakings of Corporation — Interest on Loans.—A person assessed to income tax can retain the tax which he has deducted from the interest paid to a creditor only if the interest is effectively charged upon, and is lawfully payable out of, the taxable income. Sugden v. Leeds Corporation, 83 L. J. K.B. 840; [1914] A.C. 483; 108 L. T. 578; 77 J. P. 225; 11 L. G. R. 662; 6 Tax Cas. 211; 57 S. J. 425; 29 T. L. R. 402—H.L. (E.)

The respondents were a municipal corporation under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and in accordance with the provisions of that statute they provided a "borough fund," in aid of which they were empowered to make a "borough rate." They were also an urban sanitary authority, and their expenses as such were payable out of a "consolidated fund" maintained by a "consolidated rate" levied under statutory authority, but not upon the same basis as the borough rate. As a municipal corporation they were the owners of certain undertakings in respect of which they had received loans, the interest on which was charged on the proceeds of the undertakings, which were paid into the borough fund, and they paid income tax on such receipts. As a sanitary authority they were the owners of other undertakings, the proceeds of which were paid into the consolidated fund in a similar manner. The proceeds of these latter undertakings were not sufficient to pay the interest due on the loans raised in respect of them, and the respondents transferred a sum from the borough fund to meet the deficiency:—Held, that, as it was not lawful to pay such charges out of that fund, the respondents were bound to account for the income tax which they had deducted from the interest or dividends so paid, and that their position was not affected by the provisions of the Leeds Corporation (General Powers) Act, 1901. Ib.

Covenant to Pay Annuity.] — By his marriage settlement the husband covenanted that if during the widowhood of his wife the income of his wife's trust fund in any year should not amount to the clear annual sum of 2,000*l.* his executors should in every such year pay to his widow such a sum as would make up the income to 2,000*l.*:—Held, that the executors were entitled to deduct income tax on the amount by which the income of the wife's trust fund fell short of 2,000*l.* Cooper's Estate, In re, 55 S. J. 522—Eve, J.

Purchase of Tramway Undertaking by Local Authority—Purchase Price Raised by Loan—Sinking Fund—Lease of Tramway to Another Local Authority—Rent to be Sufficient to Pay Half-yearly Instalment of Interest and Capital of Loan.] — A local authority purchased a tramway undertaking, having raised the purchase money by means of a loan, which was repayable by half-yearly instalments of principal and interest extending over a period of thirty years, and then let the undertaking to another local authority under an agreement which provided that the rent should be such a sum as should enable the lessor authority to repay the principal and interest of the loan by half-yearly instalments within thirty years. The lessee authority claimed to be entitled to deduct income tax from the whole of the amount of the half-yearly rent paid by them under the agreement, while the lessor contended that the rent should be such a sum as would be sufficient, after deducting income tax, to pay the actual interest and instalment of the capital of the loan:—Held, that upon the true construction of the agreement, and having regard to section 40 of the Income Tax Act, 1853, the lessee authority was entitled to deduct the income tax from the rent. Surbiton Urban Council v. Callender's Cable Co. (8 L. G. R. 214; 74 J. P. 88) followed. Poole Corporation v. Bournemouth Corporation, 103 L. T. 828; 75 J. P. 13—Neville, J.

Corporation—Improvement Expenses—Apportionment on Owners of Property—Interest on Unpaid Balance—Deduction of Income Tax —"Yearly interest of money."]—The plaintiffs as the urban sanitary authority of a borough in the exercise of their powers under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and under their local Act, had duly paved and otherwise dealt with various streets in the borough. The expenses of such paving and other works had from time to time been apportioned amongst the owners of property fronting on such streets, one of whom was the defendant. Pursuant to section 32 of their local Act, they allowed him time for the payment of his share of these expenses and they fixed the rate of interest payable thereon at 5 per cent. per annum. The defendant from time to time paid to the plaintiffs various sums on account, which they credited in the first place to the interest due and in the second place towards repayment of principal, but the accounts of the plaintiffs shewed that these payments had not been made at regular times nor in fixed amounts. The defendant, upon paying off the balance due in respect of principal and interest, claimed to be entitled to deduct income tax from the interest as being yearly interest of money within the meaning of section 40 of the Income Tax Act, 1853:—Held, that the interest which the plaintiffs received was not such as would make the words "yearly interest of money" in section 40 of the Income Tax Act, 1853, applicable to it, and that the defendant had failed to discharge the burden of shewing that he had a right to make the deduction claimed. Gateshead Corporation v. Lumsden, 83 L. Lease of Minerals — Royalties with Minimum Rent—Lessees not in Actual Occupation —Deduction of Income Tax from Minimum Rent—Assessment of Lessor.]—The appellant demised to a coal company all the minerals under a certain piece of land at a royalty to be measured by the quantity of mineral gotten, but the lease provided for the payment of a minimum yearly rent of 60*l.*, with a provision for distress. The surface was let for agricultural purposes to another tenant, who was assessed to the income tax in respect thereof. No work was done by the company on these minerals, and they were not assessed in respect of them. Before paying the 60*l.* to the appellant, the company deducted the income tax thereon, claiming a right to do so either under section 102 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, or under section 24, sub-section 3 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888. The appellant was assessed to income tax in respect of this 60*l.*:—Held, that the company were not entitled to deduct the tax, and that the appellant was properly assessed under section 60, Schedule A. No. II. rule 6 of the Act of 1842, in respect of profits arising from lands or hereditaments not in his actual possession or occupation. Hill v. Gregory, 81 L. J. 4. Repayment.

Schedules C and D—Married Woman Living with Husband — Interest on Shares and Foreign Bonds—Deduction of Income Tax at

Source—Right to Repayment.]—Section 45 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, which enacts that the profits of a married woman living with her husband shall be deemed his profits and shall be charged in his name, only applies to the case of the direct assessment to Income Tax of the taxpayer, and not to the case of deduction at source. Hence, where a married woman living with her husband held to her separate use shares in a limited company and also foreign bonds from the dividends on which income tax was deducted at source by virtue of section 54 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and section 2 of the Income Tax (Foreign Dividends) Act, 1842, the married woman had no right to repayment of the tax from the Treasury. Purdie v. Regem, 83 L. Application to Amend Assessment and for Relief—"Appeal"—Power of Commissioners to State Case.]—An application to Commissioners under section 134 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, for an amendment of an assessment to Income Tax (Schedule D) and for relief on the ground of loss of the profits on which the computation of duty was made is not an "appeal," and consequently the Commissioners have no power to state a Case for the opinion of the High Court under section 59, sub-section 1 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880. Furtado v. City of London Brewery Co., 83 L. c. Public Office or Employment of Profit.

See also Vol. XII. 168, 1251.

Employment Abroad by English Company—Remuneration Partly Paid in England—Employment under "department."] — "Public offices and employments of profit" in the United Kingdom within section 146, Schedule E, rule 3 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, are public offices or employments which are exercised in the United Kingdom. Therefore, a person who is in the employment of an English limited company whose head office is in England, but who exercises his employment wholly outside the United Kingdom, does not come within that rule, nor is he employed in a "department" in the sense in which that term is used in section 147 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, so as to make his office one exercised constructively at the head office of the company in Great Britain. Such a person is therefore not taxable under Schedule E, rule 3, in respect of his employment so exercised abroad. Pickles v. Foster, 82 L. J. K.B. 121; [1913] 1 K.B. 174; 108 L. Additional First Assessment — Notice — Manager of Company—Place of Abode.]—The provision of section 80 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, that so soon as the assessments for any parish or place are allowed and signed the Commissioners shall give notice thereof and of the day for hearing appeals therefrom in the manner therein provided, is extended to assessments under Schedule E by section 188, and applies to an additional first assessment made by the Commissioners under the powers conferred on them by section 52 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880. By section 16 (e) of the latter Act, "All notices or forms required or allowed to be served on any person may be either delivered to such person or left at the usual or last known place of abode of such person." The plaintiff was employed as the manager of a limited company which had its office in the City of London. The plaintiff resided at Wealdstone, and very rarely attended at the company's office. Income tax notices were sent to the plaintiff directed to the office of the company, but none of them ever reached him. A distress having subsequently been levied upon goods at the plaintiff's private residence for non-payment of the income tax. —Held, that there is no rule of law that the manager of a company must be taken to have a statutory abode at the office of the company by which he is employed, that under the circumstances the office of the company was not the plaintiff's "usual or last known place of abode," and that the distress was therefore a wrongful one. Berry v. Farrow, 83 L. II. SUPER-TAX.

Special Commissioners—Power to Demand Returns for Assessments before Super-tax Imposed for the Year.] — The super-tax on incomes over 5,000*l.* a year first imposed by the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, for the year commencing April 6, 1909, is additional income tax, and one of the "duties of income tax" within the meaning of section 30 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890. Bowles v. Att.-Gen., 81 L. J. Ch. 155; [1912] 1 Ch. 123; 105 L. T. 870; 76 J. P. 57; 56 S. J. 176; 28 T. L. R. 137; 5 Tax Cas. 685—Parker, J.

The Commissioners of Income Tax for Special Purposes are therefore legally entitled to demand returns for the purposes of assessment of the super-tax, even though no Act has been passed imposing such tax for the current year. But quære whether they could assess and demand payment of the super-tax before it is actually imposed. Ib.

Although by section 66 of the Finance (1909-1910) Act, 1910, super-tax was only imposed for the year beginning April 6, 1909, it is shewn conclusively by section 72, sub-section 3, that the Act is not intended to regulate the collection of super-tax for that single year only, but also its collection for subsequent financial years. Ib.

Super-tax was imposed for the year beginning April 6, 1910, by section 3 of the Finance Act, 1910. The Revenue Act, 1911, which was passed on March 31, 1911, although containing provisions as to super-tax, did not impose any such tax for the year beginning April 6, 1911. Before any Act imposing super-tax for that year has been passed the Commissioners of Income Tax caused to be sent to the plaintiff a demand for a return of his income under section 72, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, for the purpose of assessing the tax. The plaintiff contended that in the circumstances the defendants had no power to demand the return :—Held, that the Commissioners had power to demand the return. Ib.

Trade Profits—Three Years' Average—Sale of Business—Discontinuance.]—In making an assessment to super-tax under section 66 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, the Commissioners should consider the amount of the profits derived from his trade by the person to be charged during the year preceding the assessment, taking the average of his profits for the three years preceding, and not the actual profits made in that year. Bartlett v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 84 L. J. K.B. 106; [1914] 3 K.B. 686; 111 L. T. 852—Scrutton, J.

The fact that he has sold his business within the year to a company does not amount to a discontinuance within section 24, sub-section 3 of the Finance Act, 1907. Ib.

Where, upon an appeal against an assessment to super-tax, the appellant does not dispute that the amount of his profits for the particular year, ascertained upon a three years' average, is correctly stated in an assessment to income tax made upon him under Schedule D, the Special Commissioners are entitled to adopt such assessment in arriving at the assessment to super-tax, and are not bound to take evidence upon the point. Ib.

Assessment by General Commissioners—How far Binding on Special Commissioners in Assessing Super-tax.]—The Special Commissioners for Income Tax must, if required, themselves estimate the total income of the taxpayer for super-tax, and are not bound under section 66, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, to accept as conclusive on them an assessment made under Schedule (D) of the Income Tax Act, 1842, by the General Commissioners. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Brooks, 84 L. J. K.B. 404; [1915] A.C. 478; 112 L. T. 523; 59 S. J. 160; 31 T. L. R. 89—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal (83 L. J. K.B. 431; [1914] 1 K.B. 579) affirmed. Ib.

Principle of Assessment on Partner in Firm.]—The Income Tax Commissioners, in estimating the total income of a partner in a firm during a certain year for the purposes of super-tax, under section 66, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, having ascertained the profits of the firm for the previous year, in accordance with the provisions of the Income Tax Acts, upon the average of three years preceding the year of assessment, calculated on this basis the share to which the partner was entitled during the year in question :—Held, that the Commissioners had estimated the share to which the partner was entitled during the year in question in the partnership profits upon the correct principle, and that the partner was not at liberty to shew the actual income from the profits of the firm which he had received during the year. Gaunt v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 82 L. J. K.B. 1131; [1913] 3 K.B. 395; 109 L. T. 555—Horridge, J.

Deductions—Farming Losses—Losses not Claimed as Deductions from Income Tax.]—A taxpayer, in making a return of his income of the previous year for the purposes of the super-tax, was held entitled to claim as deductions losses sustained in husbandry, although those losses had not been claimed as deductions from his income tax, and although his claim was not made within six months after the year of assessment. Hill v. Inland Revenue, [1912] S. C. 1246—Ct. of Sess.

III. INHABITED-HOUSE DUTY.

See also Vol. XII. 171, 1255.

House "divided into, and let in, different tenements."]—A house is "divided into, and let in, different tenements" within the meaning of section 13 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, and is entitled to the relief from assessment to inhabited-house duty thereby given, when rooms, or groups of rooms in it, are separated from the rest of the house and let for some purpose not common to the rest of the house, even though the tenants of the separate tenements use some other parts of the house in common. Farmer v. Cotton's Trustees, 84 L. Public School — Residential Buildings — Separate Class Rooms.]—Buildings belonging to a public school, and consisting of class rooms, library, carpenter's shop, gymnasium, lavatories, &c., which were not used for residential purposes at all, and had no internal communication with any buildings occupied for residential purposes, and were used by all the boys of the school, of whom only a small proportion resided in the residential buildings, —Held, not to be "offices belonging to and occupied with any dwelling-house," within Rule II. of Schedule (B) of the House Tax Act, 1808, and therefore not liable to be assessed with the residential buildings to inhabited-house duty under the House Tax Act, 1851. Westminster School v. Reith, 84 L. J. K.B. 168; [1915] A.C. 259; 112 L. T. 91; 6 Tax Cas. 486; 59 S. J. 57; 31 T. L. R. 31—H.L. (E.)

—— "Charity school."] — Ackworth School was established in 1779 by subscriptions collected from members of the Society of Friends, for the education of children who were members of the society in Great Britain whose parents were not in affluence. The rules of the school provided that when the school was not full there should be eligible for admission at the discretion of the controlling committee, children from beyond the limits of Great Britain being members of the society, failing whom, children closely connected with the society, or failing whom, children not in the membership of the society. The object of the school was to train up the children in the principles and practices of the Christian religion as professed by the Society of Friends, and to impart to them a sound English education. The school was supported by substantial fees paid by the parents of the children, by the income arising from its invested property, by annual subscriptions and other donations and legacies, and was under the direction of a general meeting appointed by the society. To assist those members of the society who were unable to provide the whole of the fees, bursaries were granted in some cases. Bursaries were restricted to members of the society, excepting that the committee might grant certain bursaries to children closely connected with the society. The religious views of the society were taught, but no effort was made to bring into the society the children of parents who were not members of the society. At the end of 1910 the school was full on both sides, there being 181 boys and 122 girls—303 in all. 12,000*l.* out of rather less than 14,000*l.*, the income received by the school during 1910, was derived from fees. The school was recognised as an efficient secondary school by the Board of Education, but never received any grants therefrom :—Held, upon these facts, that (a) the school was not a "public school" within the meaning of section 61, No. 6. of Schedule A of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and as such exempt from payment of income tax; and (b), that it was not a "charity school" within the meaning of Case IV. of the exemptions to Schedule B of the House Tax Act, 1808. Ackworth School v. Betts, 84 L. IV. LAND TAX.

Redemption of Land Tax — Land Abutting on Highway—Exoneration ad Medium Filum —Presumption.]—Where a parcel of land is described, or shewn on a plan, as bounded by a highway it is to be presumed that it is intended that the parcel should go up to the actual boundary on that side—that is, under ordinary circumstances, ad medium filum viæ. Therefore, where the land tax has been redeemed on lands or houses which abut upon a public street or highway, the exoneration extends to the middle line of such street or highway, in the absence of an express statement to the contrary. Land Tax Commissioners v. Central London Railway, 82 L. V. TAXATION OF LAND VALUES.

1. Valuation.

Form 4—Owner and Occupier—Validity.]—A notice to the owner of land to make a return under section 26, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, within less than the thirty days there specified is invalid, and imposes no obligation on the owner to do so. A notice is not invalid under section 26, sub-section 2, merely because it requires the return to be made to an officer of the Commissioners without giving the owner an option to make it to the Commissioners. Dyson v. Att.-Gen., 81 L. J. K.B. 217; [1912] 1 Ch. 158; 105 L. T. 753; 28 T. L. R. 72—C.A.

Requisition (i) in form 4 requiring any person who is both owner and occupier to state "the annual value—i.e. the sum for which the property is worth to be let to a yearly tenant, the owner keeping it in repair," is unauthorised by section 26, sub-section 2, and renders the whole form invalid. Ib.

Form 8 — Validity.] — Section 31 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, is directed to enabling the Inland Revenue Commissioners to ascertain the names of persons who pay rent or who as agents for others receive rent in respect of any land. The Commissioners may in respect of any specific land require from a person who pays rent for such land the name and address of the person to whom he pays it, and from a person who as agent for another receives any rent in respect of such land the name and address of the person on whose behalf he receives such rent, but the enquiries must be in respect of a specific parcel of land. A form asking for such information in respect of unspecified land is meaningless, and makes a demand that the form should be filled up unauthorised and void. Burghes v. Att.-Gen., 81 L. J. Ch. 105; [1912] 1 Ch. 173; 105 L. T. 758; 28 T. L. R. 72—C.A.

It is not ultra vires on the part of the Commissioners to require returns under section 31 to be sent to an appointed local officer instead of to themselves. Ib.

Per Farwell, L.J. : A requisition to make a return under section 31 within less than thirty days from its receipt is not within the powers of the Commissioners, and is a nullity. Ib.

Decision of Warrington, J. (80 L. J. Ch. 506; [1911] 2 Ch. 139), affirmed. Ib.

Form 5 — Legality.] — On a claim by the plaintiff for a declaration that Form 5 issued by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under section 20 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, was illegal, unauthorised, and ultra vires, and that he was under no obligation to comply with the requisitions contained therein, the Commissioners, being of opinion that Form 5 could not be supported, consented to an order being made following the form made in Dyson v. Att.-Gen. (81 L. J. Ch. 217; [1912] 1 Ch. 158). Mowbray (Lord) v. Att.-Gen., 29 T. L. R. 115—Phillimore, J.

Provisional Valuation—Settled Land—Duty of Trustees to Check Valuations—Remainder-men.] — A person equitably entitled in remainder to certain land let upon long leases, the first of which would expire in 1977, applied to the Court that the trustees of the settlement should be directed to take the necessary steps for checking the provisional valuations of the settled land made by the Inland Revenue Commissioners under section 26 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910. The tenant for life objected to this expense being incurred, and the trustees stated that in their discretion they considered it unnecessary: —Held, that as the trustees in their discretion did not think it necessary to check the provisional valuations the Court would not interfere with their discretion. Knollys' Trusts, In re; Saunders v. Haslam, 81 L. J. Ch. 572; [1912] 2 Ch. 357; 107 L. T. 335; 56 S. J. 632—C.A.

Per Cozens-Hardy, M.R.: There may be cases which would justify trustees in incurring expenditure in checking valuations under the Act either after obtaining or without the direction of the Court. Ib.

Provisional Valuation — Costs of Checking Valuation—Duty of Trustees.]—The Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, imposes no duty on trustees of settled land to check the provisional valuations of the land which have been made by the Commissioners for the purposes of duty and served upon the trustees as "owners" in accordance with the Act; and the Court will not order the trustees to incur this expense, but in particular cases, such as the case of a building estate, the Court will give the trustees liberty to take such steps as may be advisable and reasonable to test the valuations made under the Act. Smith-Bosanquet's Settled Estates, In re, 107 L. T. 191—Parker, J.

—— Appeal to Referee—Order to Pay Costs—Unascertained Amount—Power to make Order a Rule of Court.]—By section 33, sub-section 1 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, any person aggrieved may appeal against any determination by the Commissioners of the total value or site value of any land. By sub-section 2 the appeal is to be referred to a referee appointed under the Act. By sub-section 3 the referee is to determine any matter referred to him in consultation with the Commissioners and the appellant, and may order that "any expenses incurred by the appellant be paid by the Commissioners . . . Any order of the referee as to expenses may be made a rule of the High Court." Upon the hearing of an appeal under the above section, the referee by his award directed that the appellant's costs of the appeal should be borne by the Commissioners, but did not assess the amount of the costs. On a motion to make the award a rule of Court,—Held, that a referee can make a valid order as to costs although he does not fix the amount, inasmuch as the costs can be taxed by a Master, and that the award ought therefore to be made a rule of Court. Matthews v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 83 L. J. K.B. 1552; [1914] 3 K.B. 192; 110 L. T. 931—Scrutton, J.

Appeal to Referee—Order as to Payment of Expenses—Unascertained Amount—Power to make Award a Rule of Court.]—By section 33, sub-section 1 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, a person aggrieved may appeal against any determination by the Commissioners of the total value or site value of any land. By sub-section 2 an appeal under the section is to be referred to a referee appointed under the Act. By sub-section 3: "The referee shall determine any matter referred to him in consultation with the Commissioners and the appellant . . . and may, if he thinks fit, order that any expenses incurred by the appellant be paid by the Commissioners, and that any such expenses incurred by the Commissioners be paid by the appellant. Any order of the referee as to expenses may be made a rule of the High Court." Upon an appeal under the section the referee made the following order: "I order that any expenses incurred by the Commissioners be paid by the appellant." Upon an application to make the order a rule of Court,—Held, that the decision of the referee was bad, as it did not assess the amount of the expenses, and that there was no power to make it a rule of Court. Simpson v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 83 L. J. K.B. 1318; [1914] 2 K.B. 842; 110 L. T. 909; 30 T. L. R. 436—Scrutton, J.

2. INCREMENT VALUE DUTY.

Gross Value — Total Value — Inclusion of Value of Unexhausted Manures and Tillages —Full Site Value—Inclusion of Value of Grass Growing on Land—Structures—Road—Assessable Site Value—Exclusion of Value of Unexhausted Manures and Tillages—Exclusion of Value of Grass Sown by Tenant.] — In valuing land under the provisions of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, "in its then condition" on April 30, 1909, any sums attributable to the value of unexhausted manure or tillages must be included, under sub-section 1 of section 25, in the gross value and the total value of the land, but deductions cannot be made under sub-section 4 (d) of section 25 in respect of such increased value in arriving at the assessable site value of the land. In valuing land in its then condition all unsevered vegetable growths, whether natural or artificial, transitory or permanent, emblements or not emblements, must be included in the gross value of land under sub-section 1 of section 25; but the value of the grass growing on the land must be deducted under sub-section 2 of section 25 from the gross value of the land in arriving at the full site value of the land. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Smyth, 83 L. J. K.B. 913; [1914] 3 K.B. 406; 110 L. T. 819; 58 S. J. 400; 30 T. L. R. 357—Scrutton, J.

A structure, the value of which must be deducted, under sub-section 2 of section 25, from the gross value of land in order to arrive at the full site value of the land, is something artificially erected, constructed, put together, of a certain degree of size and permanence, which is still maintained as an artificial erection, or which, though not so maintained, has not become indistinguishable in bounds from the natural earth surrounding. What degree of size and permanence is necessary in order that an artificial erection may be a structure within the meaning of the section, is a question of fact in every case. Ib.

The value of the grass growing on land laid down in grass by the tenant, but in respect of which the tenant is not entitled to claim compensation from the landlord, cannot be deducted, under sub-section 4 (d) of section 25, from the total value of the land as being a matter personal to the occupier, in arriving at the assessable site value of the land. Ib.

Site Value — No Deduction in Respect of Sea Walls—" Buildings "—" Structures "—" Building land."]—A farm consisting of a farmhouse and about 150 acres of agricultural land, almost the whole of which lay below the level of highest spring tides, was protected from the sea by two sea walls or banks made of rammed earth covered with turf. One of them was probably of Roman origin. The other was constructed in 1808. The farm lay seven miles from the nearest station and twelve from the nearest market town. Upon a valuation under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910,—Held, that the walls were not " buildings," and if " structures " were not " structures used in connection with " buildings, within section 25, sub-section 2 of the Act; that they had not been made " by or on behalf of or solely in the interest of any person interested in the land for the purpose of improving the value of the land as building land " within section 25, sub-section 4 (b) of the Act; that they had not " actually improved the value of the land as building land " within section 25, sub-section 4 (e) of the Act; and that no deduction could be allowed in respect of them in arriving at assessable site value. " Building land," within section 25 of the Act, does not mean any land upon which houses can be built, but land which has a greater value for building purposes than as agricultural land. Waite's Executors v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 83 L. Assessable Site Value of Land — Minus Quantity.]—The assessable site value of land under section 25, sub-section 4 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, may be a minus quantity. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Herbert, 82 L. Site Value—Sale of Fee-simple—Method of Calculation.]—In 1910 the appellant sold the fee-simple of a dwelling house, subject to tithe of the capital value of 33*l.*, for 750*l.* The " full site value " on April 30, 1909, was 228*l.*, and there was no change in the value between that date and the date of the sale. The " gross value " at the date of the sale was found to be 658*l.*, and the proper deduction under section 25, sub-section 4 (b) of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, in respect of roads was found to be 90*l.* The " original site value " was 105*l.* :—Held, by the Lord Chancellor and Lord Shaw, that the site value on the occasion of the sale was to be arrived at under sections 2 and 25 of the Act by deducting from the purchase price of 750*l.* the sum of 430*l.*, being the difference between the gross value and the full site value, and also the 90*l.* in respect of roads, and that the appellant was properly assessable to increment value duty on the difference between this amount (230*l.*) and 105*l.*, the original site value. Lumsden v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 84 L. —— Deductions — Deduction in Respect of Goodwill and Matters Personal to Parties.]—For the purpose of ascertaining the difference between the gross value and the full site value of a house or land on the occasion of a sale, under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, the gross value as well as the full site value on the occasion of the transfer must be determined by a process of valuation; and the gross value cannot be taken to be the consideration for the sale, with the addition of the capitalised value of the burdens subject to which the property in question was sold. For the purpose of the other deductions to be made under section 25 of the Act the total value must be ascertained by valuation, and cannot be taken as the consideration for the sale. Lumsden v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (84 L. J. K.B. 45; [1914] A.C. 877) followed. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Walker, 84 L. J. P.C. 115; [1915] A.C. 509; 112 L. T. 611—H.L. (Sc.)

A deduction from total value, as being an expenditure attributable to goodwill, or some other matter personal to the parties interested, can only be allowed under section 25, sub-section 4 of the Act, if the amount has been included as part of the total value. Ib.

Sale of Fee-simple—Special Need of Particular Purchaser—Pressure on Seller to Sell—Sale in "open market"—Willing Seller.]—In valuing land for increment value duty under section 25, sub-section 1 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, "if sold in the open market" means if sold upon a sale open to every possible purchaser, though not necessarily a sale by auction only or without reserve, so that the special need of a particular purchaser must be taken into consideration; and "a willing seller" means a free agent who cannot be compulsorily required to sell. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Clay (or Buchanan), 83 L. J. K.B. 1425; [1914] 3 K.B. 466; 111 L. T. 484; 58 S. J. 610; 30 T. L. R. 573—C.A.

In 1908 water commissioners obtained powers by a Provisional Order to purchase by agreement any lands lying within the catchment area of their reservoir. In 1911, in exercise of these powers, they purchased certain lands within that area for 5,000*l*. In 1913 the original total value of these lands under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, as at April 30, 1909, was fixed by a referee at 3,379*l*., a figure which was but little, if at all, above the agricultural value:—Held (Lord Cullen dissenting), that the referee was bound to take into consideration the special value of the lands to the commissioners and the probability in 1909 that the commissioners would shortly be forced to purchase them to preserve the purity of their water supply; and in respect that he had failed to give sufficient weight to these considerations, valuation increased to 4,629*l*. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Clay & Buchanan (83 L. J. K.B. 581, 1425; [1914] 1 K.B. 339; [1914] 3 K.B. 466) approved. Glass v. Inland Revenue, [1915] S. C. 449—Ct. of Sess.

In an appeal to a referee against a valuation of lands under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, the referee, acting on instructions from the reference committee, refused to allow a proof of facts which, it was alleged, would shew that the lands were of a special value to a particular purchaser. The Court remitted to the referee to take a proof, and on his adhering to his former valuation themselves fixed the value of the lands at an increased figure. Ib.

Assessable Site Value — Walls Sheltering Sheep — "Buildings" — "Other structures . . . which are appurtenant to or used in connection with any such buildings"—Divestment.]—A farm was divided into fields, and bounded by substantially built stone walls from five to six feet in height, and the walls also served as shelter to stock on the farm:—Held, that they were not "buildings" or "other structures . . . appurtenant to or used in connection with" farm buildings, within section 25, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, and, consequently, that the assessable site value of the land was not to be fixed as if the land were divested of these walls. Morrison v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 84 L. —— Deductions—"Value . . . directly attributable to works executed, or expenditure of a capital nature"—"Value . . . directly attributable to the appropriation of any land . . . for the purpose of streets," &c.—Appropriation of Land and Construction of Roads thereon on Building Estate—Claim for Deduction.]—The assessable site value of land for the purposes of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, means "the total value after deducting— . . . (b) Any part of the total value which is . . . directly attributable to works executed, or expenditure of a capital nature . . . incurred . . . by . . . any person interested in the land for the purpose of improving the value of the land as building land, . . . and (c) Any part of the total value which is . . . directly attributable to the appropriation of any land . . . by any person interested in the land for the purpose of streets, . . .":—Held, that in the case of a building estate, the value attributable under (c) does not refer exclusively to the value attributable to the appropriation of land outside the estate, but includes the value attributable to the appropriation of land to roads on the estate. Held, also, that where the land had been appropriated and the roads made up, and a landowner claims under both (b) and (c), the deduction may be in one sum without specifying the amount under each separately, but that a specific claim must be made under each clause if a case under each is to be put forward. If in doubt under which to claim, the landowner may claim under each alternatively. Held, further, that the part of the total value attributable under (c) is not the part at the time of the dedication, but the part of the total value—that is, the amount after certain deductions, which it would have fetched in the open market—attributable under (c) in the same market. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Whidborne's Executors, 84 L. Agricultural Land—Market Value for Agricultural Purposes only—Value of Land for Sporting Purposes.]—Section 7 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, enacts that "Increment value duty shall not be charged in respect of agricultural land while that land has no higher value than its market value at the time for agricultural purposes only: Provided that any value of the land for sporting purposes, . . . shall be treated as value for agricultural purposes only, except where the value for any such purpose exceeds the agricultural value of the land":—Held, that, in ascertaining the value of agricultural land as on April 30, 1909, pursuant to section 26, sub-section 1 of the Act, the value of the land for agricultural purposes only should not include the value of the land for sporting purposes. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Hunter, 84 L. Substituted Site Value — Mortgage of Interest in Land before April 30, 1909—Site Value at Time of Mortgage—Basis of Calculation.] — By section 2, sub-section 3 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, where the site value of land at the time of any transfer on sale of any interest in land taking place at any time within twenty years before April 30, 1909, exceeds the original site value as ascertained in accordance with the Act, the former site value shall, for the purposes of increment value duty, on application being made, be substituted for the original site value; and the sub-section, by reference to sub-section 2, provides that the former site value shall be the value of the fee-simple, calculated on the basis of the consideration for the above-mentioned transfer, but subject "to the like deductions as are made, under the general provisions of this Part of this Act as to valuation, for the purpose of arriving at the site value of land from the total value." Section 2, sub-section 3, extends the above provisions as to a transfer on sale of an interest in land to the case of a mortgage thereof, the amount secured by the mortgage being substituted for the consideration for the transfer :—Held, that in the latter case it is the actual amount secured by the mortgage which is to be substituted for the original site value, and not the value of the fee-simple at the date of the mortgage. Hayllar v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 83 L. J. K.B. 203; [1914] 1 K.B. 528; 110 L. T. 218; 30 T. L. R. 172—C.A.

Hence, where trustees in 1898 advanced 1,600*l.* trust moneys on mortgage on two houses let at rack rents, the value of the same being then 2,400*l.*, the amount to be substituted for the original site value was 1,600*l.* and could not be increased by the estimated value of the equity of redemption. Ib.

Lease of Minerals — Term "not exceeding fourteen years."]—Under section 22 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, increment value duty is payable in respect of a lease of minerals, although the lease is for a term not exceeding fourteen years. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Sheffield and South Yorkshire Navigation Co., 84 L. Whether Increment Value Duty a Stamp Duty.]—Increment value duty, being a debt due to the Crown by sellers, is not a stamp duty on a conveyance within section 168 of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, which provides that "all bonds . . . conveyances, instruments . . . made or granted by or to or in favour of the local authority under this Act shall be exempt from all stamp duties." Inland Revenue v. Miller, [1915] S. 3. Reversion Duty.

Surrender of Lease — Basis for Ascertaining Total Value of Land at the Time of Original Grant of Lease—Ramsden Estate—Tenancy at Will—Right to Lease.]—The provisions in section 13, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, with reference to the ascertainment of the total value of land at the time of the original grant of a lease are exclusive, and provide the only method in which the total value of the land at the time of the original grant of the lease is to be ascertained, and therefore other evidence as to the real value of the land at the time of the granting of the lease cannot be given. Ramsden v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 82 L. J. K.B. 1290; [1913] 3 K.B. 580*n.*; 109 L. T. 105—Horridge, J.

Property on the R. estate, Huddersfield, was, before 1860, largely held on tenancy by "tenant right." A person desiring to obtain land on "tenant right" applied to the agent for the estate for permission to build upon the land selected, and upon approval by the agent of the plot and plans for building, and upon agreement as to the rent to be paid, was allowed to enter upon the land on the understanding that he would build thereon. His name was then entered upon the tenant roll of the estate. If a tenant wished to sell his house he purported to surrender the property to the landlord, and the name of the purchaser was then entered on the tenant roll; if he died, the name of the next-of-kin or legatee was substituted on the tenant roll. The rent payable by a tenant by "tenant right" was about one-half of what he would have paid if the land had been taken on a renewable lease. No lease was granted to a tenant by "tenant right," but he had an expectation that he would not be disturbed so long as the rent was paid. In 1849 M. applied for permission to become a tenant by "tenant right" of a piece of land, and was allowed to enter into possession of the land on the understanding that he would build thereon. He in fact expended about 350*l.* in the erection of a house. The rent of the plot was fixed at 1*l.* 7*s.* per annum. In 1867 the then owner of the R. estate granted a lease, at a ground rent of 1*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, of this piece of land for 99 years to C., as being the person then entitled to the "tenant right" granted to M. In October, 1910, this lease was surrendered in pursuance of an agreement by the present owner of the estate to grant a new lease of the land for 999 years at an increased ground rent. The Inland Revenue Commissioners, in assessing the reversion duty payable by the lessor under section 13 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, on such surrender, valued the total value of the land at the time of the original grant of the lease at 40*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, being twenty-two years' purchase of 1*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, the rent reserved by the lease. The lessor claimed that the value of the undertaking to build given by M. when he entered into possession ought also to be taken into account:—Held, that tenants by "tenant right" had no higher right in their property than that of a tenant from year to year, and that the undertaking by M. in 1849 to erect buildings on the land was not connected in any way with the grant of the lease to C. in 1867, and could not therefore be taken into account in ascertaining the total value of the land at the time of the granting of the lease in 1867, even assuming that the rent of 1*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* reserved by the lease was a nominal rent. Held, further, that the surrender by C. of his "tenant right" in the property in 1867 on the granting of the lease could not be taken into account as a "payment" within sub-section 2 of section 13 of the Act of 1910, as he had no legal right in the property beyond that of a tenant from year to year. Ramsden v. Dyson (L. R. 1 H.L. 129) considered. Ib.

Grant of New Lease at Same Rent for Longer Term—"Total value"—"Compensation payable by lessor."]—Two long leases of property were surrendered to the lessor, who thereupon granted a new lease of the premises comprised in the two old leases to the lessee at the same rent for a slightly longer term. The Crown claimed reversion duty under section 13 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, as amended by section 3 of the Revenue Act, 1911, on the difference between the total value at the determination of the old leases and the total value at the commencement thereof:—Held, that in ascertaining the total value at the determination of the old leases the value of the grant of the new leases could not be deducted as being "compensation payable by such lessor at the determination of the lease" under section 13, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Anglesey (Marquess), 82 L. J. K.B. 811; [1913] 3 K.B. 62; 108 L. T. 769; 57 S. J. 517; 29 T. L. R. 495—C.A.

Agreement to Grant New Lease on Performance of Conditions—Determination of Old Lease.]—On April 5, 1910, an agreement was made between the tenant of certain premises, who held under a lease which had still a number of years to run, and the lessor, whereby the latter agreed to give the tenant a new lease for a longer term as from March 25, 1910, on the performance by the tenant of certain conditions. On April 29, 1910, the date when the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, came into operation, those conditions had not been performed by the tenant, and it was not till June 23, 1910, that the new lease was executed:—Held, that as the conditions of the agreement of April 5, 1910, had not been performed by April 29, 1910, the tenant was not then entitled, under the doctrine of Walsh v. Lonsdale (52 L. J. Ch. 2; 21 Ch. D. 9), to be treated in equity as having the new lease; and that as the time at which the surrender by operation of law determined the old lease—namely, the date of the grant of the new lease—was subsequent to the coming into operation of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, the lessor was liable under section 13 of that Act to reversion duty on the value accruing to him by reason of the determination of the old lease. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Derby (Earl), 84 L. J. K.B. 248; [1914] 3 K.B. 1186; 109 L. T. 827—Horridge, J.

Total Value of Land at the Time of Original Grant of Lease—"Payments made in consideration of the lease"—"Nominal rent"—"Undertaking to erect buildings."]—Under section 13, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, the value of the benefit accruing to a lessor on the determination of a lease upon which reversion duty is payable by the lessor shall be deemed to be the amount by which the total value of the land at the time the lease determines exceeds "the total value of the land at the time of the original grant of the lease, to be ascertained on the basis of the rent reserved and payments made in consideration of the lease (including, in cases where a nominal rent only has been reserved, the value of any covenant or undertaking to erect buildings or to expend any sums upon the property)":—Held, that an expenditure on land by the erection of houses made by a prospective lessee under an agreement in order that he might obtain a lease of the land and houses is not a "payment made in consideration of the lease" within the meaning of section 13, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, and cannot therefore be taken into account. Held, further, that "nominal rent" means rent which is a mere token of an acknowledgment of the relation of landlord and tenant, and that therefore the value of a covenant or undertaking to erect buildings could not be taken into account in estimating the total value of the land at the time of the original grant of the lease where a rent of 24*l.* a year was reserved by the lease, even although such rent was not the full rent of the land. Stepney and Bow Educational Foundation (Governors) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 82 L. J. K.B. 1300; [1913] 3 K.B. 570; 109 L. T. 165; 29 T. L. R. 631—Horridge, J.

Grant of Lease in Consideration of Surrender of Old Lease and Payment of Money—Basis for Ascertaining Total Value of Land at the Time of Original Grant of Lease—To be Ascertained "on the basis of the rent reserved and payments made in consideration of the lease."]—For the purpose of ascertaining the benefit accruing to a lessor on the determination of a lease, in respect of which he is assessed to reversion duty, it is necessary, under section 13, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, to ascertain the total value of the land at the time of the original grant of the lease "on the basis of the rent reserved and payments made in consideration of the lease." The lessors were accustomed to grant a lease of certain premises for forty years at a nominal rent, and at the expiration of fourteen years to grant a new lease for forty years in consideration of the surrender of the existing lease, payment of the same rent, and of a sum of money :—Held, that in ascertaining the above total value recourse must be had to the definition of total value in section 25, sub-section 3 of the Act —that is, its value in the open market—but that the calculation must be on the basis of the rent reserved and payments made in consideration of the grant of the lease, as directed by section 13, sub-section 2, and that accordingly, in the above circumstances, the total value must be ascertained on the basis of the rent and of that for which the payment was made—namely, the exchange for a term of twenty-six years at that rent of a forty years' term at the same rent. Held also, that the surrender of the existing lease was not a payment made within the meaning of section 13, sub-section 2, and could not therefore form a part of the basis for the above calculation. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. St. John's College, Oxford, 84 L. Expenditure by Lessee on Property Demised —"Payments made in consideration of the lease."]—The Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, by section 13, sub-section 1, imposes a reversion duty on a lessor on the value of the benefit accruing to him on the determination of a lease. By sub-section 2 the value of the benefit accruing to the lessor is to be deemed to be the amount (if any) by which the total value of the land at the time when the lease determines exceeds "the total value of the land at the time of the original grant of the lease, to be ascertained on the basis of the rent reserved and payments made in consideration of the lease (including, in cases where a nominal rent only has been reserved, the value of any covenant or undertaking to erect buildings or to expend any sums upon the property)" :—Held, that "payments made in consideration of the lease" could not be restricted to payments made directly to the lessor, but that money expended by the lessee on the property demised prior to the granting of the lease must be taken into account. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Camden (Marquis), 84 L. J. K.B. 145; [1915] A.C. 241; 111 L. T. 1033; 58 S. J. 782; 30 T. L. R. 681—H.L. (E.)

Exemptions—Reversion "purchased" before April 30, 1909 — Reversion Conveyed to Trustees of Marriage Settlement—Meaning of "purchased."]—The word "purchased" is used in section 14, sub-section 1 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, in the ordinary commercial sense of "bought," and a reversion on a lease conveyed to trustees of an ante-nuptial settlement in consideration of marriage is not, therefore, "purchased" within the meaning of that sub-section :—So held, per Cozens-Hardy, M.R., and Kennedy, L.J.; Buckley, L.J., dissenting. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Gribble, 82 L. 4. Undeveloped Land Duty.

Building Land—Lease Made before April 30, 1909, and Current on April 29, 1910—Power to Resume Possession for Building or other Purposes — Liability before Determination of Lease.]—The Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, by section 16 imposes a duty on the owners of "undeveloped land" as therein defined. By section 17, sub-section 5, the duty is not chargeable upon agricultural land at the passing of the Act held under a tenancy originally created by a lease made before April 30, 1909, during the continuance of such tenancy : "Provided that where the landlord has power to determine the tenancy . . . the tenancy . . . shall not be deemed for the purposes of this provision to continue after the earliest date after the commencement of this Act at which it is possible to determine the tenancy under that power." Land, which was admitted to be undeveloped land within the meaning of the Act, was let for seven years from September 29, 1904, under a lease made in 1906, and current on April 29, 1910, the date of the passing of the Act. The lease reserved to the lessors power, upon giving one month's notice to the tenant, "to enter upon and resume possession for building or other purposes of any part or parts of the said land." The lessors had no intention or wish to resume possession for building or any other purpose before the determination of the lease :—Held, that the land was not liable to duty before the determination of the lease under section 17 of the Act, as the right to resume possession never arose, for the power could only be exercised in an event which had not happened—namely, an intention or wish on the part of the lessors to resume possession for building or other purposes inconsistent with the use of the land as agricultural land under the lease. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Southend-on-Sea Estates Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 154; [1915] A.C. 428; 112 L. T. 89; 59 S. J. 24; 31 T. L. R. 30—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal (83 L. J. K.B. 611; [1914] 1 K.B. 515) affirmed. Ib.

"Land . . . developed by the erection of dwelling houses"—"Dwelling house."]—By section 16, sub-section 1 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, undeveloped land duty is charged on undeveloped land, and by sub-section 2 land is deemed to be undeveloped if it has not been (inter alia) "developed by the erection of dwelling houses" :—Held, that "dwelling house" includes the house, out-buildings, curtilage, and the open spaces included therein other than gardens or pleasure grounds. Held, further, that land is developed land which is essential to the use of the use of the dwelling house as such by the class of persons who might, from the business point of view of a person dealing in houses, be expected to live in it. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Devonshire (Duke), 83 L. J. K.B. 706; [1914] 2 K.B. 627; 110 L. T. 659; 30 T. L. R. 209—Scrutton, J.

By section 17, sub-section 4, the duty is not to be charged on land, not exceeding one acre in extent, occupied together with a dwelling house:—Held, that land developed as above as essential to the use of the dwelling house, if one acre or less in extent, is included in the one acre so exempt, but that if it exceeds one acre in extent the excess is still developed land. Ib.

Business of Land Development — Sale of Land—Payment by Instalments—Purchaser in Possession before Execution of Conveyance Assessment of Vendor to Duty—"Recoverable from the owner for the time being"—Vendor not the Owner—Referee's Jurisdiction—Right of Appeal.] — Section 19 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, provides that undeveloped land duty shall be assessed by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and shall be recoverable from the owner of the land for the time being. By section 41, "The expression 'owner' means the person entitled in possession to the rents and profits of the land in virtue of any estate of freehold." A. carried on the business of a "land developer" by purchasing land, cutting it up into plots, and selling them to various purchasers under agreements which provided for payment of the purchase money by instalments and for the execution of conveyances on payment of the balance thereof. On the signing of the agreements the purchasers took possession of the plots. The Commissioners assessed A. for undeveloped land duty in respect of certain of these plots, but the purchasers, although in possession under their agreements, had not completed their purchases, nor received their conveyances. A. appealed to a referee on the ground that he was not the owner of the land, and was not therefore liable to pay the duty. The referee decided that the appellant was the owner, and therefore liable. The appellant appealed from this decision to the High Court:—Held, by Scrutton, J., that a person who has been assessed for undeveloped land duty is entitled under section 33 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, to appeal against such assessment to a referee, and to appeal from his decision to the High Court, on the question whether he is the owner of the land in respect of which he has been assessed to duty. And held, by the Court of Appeal (affirming the decision of Scrutton, J., on this point), that at the date of the assessment A. was not the owner of the land in question within section 41 of the Act, and had been wrongly assessed to this duty in respect thereof. Allen v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 83 L. J. K.B. 649; [1914] 2 K.B. 327; 110 L. T. 446; 58 S. J. 318—C.A.

Land Developer—Land Held for Sale—Land "used bona fide for any business."]—Where a person carried on the business of a land developer, utilising his land in connection with his business by its development with a view to sale in accordance with the demands of the market for the time being, and with the aid of a system of advertisement designed to attract purchasers,—Held, that the land was not being "used bona fide for any business, trade, or industry" within the meaning of section 16, sub-section 2 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, and was chargeable with undeveloped land duty. Brake v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 84 L. J. K.B. 759; [1915] 1 K.B. 731; 112 L. T. 944; 31 T. L. R. 177—Rowlatt, J.

5. Mineral Rights Duty.

"Minerals"—Felsite Whinstone—Granite.] —All substances obtained from the crust of the earth, other than the surface soil, by mining, quarrying, or open working, are "minerals" within the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, with the exception of those substances expressly excepted in the Act. Accordingly, felsite whinstone and granite, not being among the excepted substances, are minerals and subject to mineral rights duty. Anstruther's Trustees v. Inland Revenue, [1912] S. C. 1165—Ct. of Sess.

Land and Minerals in Different Occupation — Minerals a Separate Parcel — Failure to Estimate Capital Value of Minerals in Form 4 — Right to make Further Return as to Minerals—Provisional Valuation—Substituted Capital Value.]—In 1910 the trustees of a marriage settlement, dated June 3, 1863, were owners in fee-simple of Appleton Farm, subject to a lease to P. for fourteen years, dated October 6, 1906, in which the minerals were reserved to the trustees. On September 13, 1910, they were served with a notice dated September 10, 1910, requiring them to make a return on "Form 4—Land" within thirty days for the purposes of valuation under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910. In Form 4 as served on them the property to which it applied was described as "House Premises and Land" called Appleton Farm in the occupation of P. In reply to questions under heading (t) the trustees stated that they were the owners and proprietors of the minerals under the farm, which were unworked. At the foot of this heading was a note: "Minerals not comprised in a mining lease or being worked are to be treated as having no value as minerals unless the proprietor of the minerals fills up space (w) below." The enquiry under heading (w) was as to the nature and estimated capital value of the minerals, and the trustees left it unanswered. A provisional valuation had been made of the farm but not of the minerals thereunder, as the Inland Revenue Commissioners claimed to treat them as having had no value on April 30, 1909, by virtue of section 23, sub-section 2 of the Act owing to the failure to answer (w):—Held, that the minerals ought to be treated as a separate parcel of land; that the copy of Form 4 served on the trustees, which dealt with the land in the occupation of P., was not a proper mode of requiring a return of particulars relating to the minerals; and that the return by the trustees on this form was not the return of the proprietors of the minerals referred to in section 23, sub-section 2 of the Act. Held, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to make a return in respect of the minerals on a proper form in pursuance of a further notice from the Commissioners. Foran v. Att.-Gen., 84 L. J. Ch. 456; [1915] 1 Ch. 703; 113 L. T. 23; 59 S. J. 349; 31 T. L .R. 285 —C.A.

Semble, that in a case where the original capital value of minerals can be treated as nil under section 23, sub-section 2, the proprietor of the minerals is not precluded in a proper case from applying for a substituted capital value. Ib.

Mining Lease—Rental Value—Rent "paid by working lessee in last working year"—Arrears of Rent—No Deduction for Super-tax.]—By a mining lease dated May 25, 1908, a lessor demised certain veins of coal to a company for forty-two years from 1906 at a fixed yearly rent of 500*l.*, payable quarterly. On October 2, 1908, the lessor received from the company arrears of rent for three quarters which had become due in 1907. No other payment of rent was made to the lessor during the year October 1, 1908, to September 30, 1909, which was the "last working year" for the purpose of this case within the meaning of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, s. 20, sub-s. 2: Held, that, although these arrears were due in respect of a period antecedent to October 1, 1908, they were rent "paid by the working lessee in the last working year" in respect of the right to work minerals within the meaning of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, s. 20, and the lessor was therefore assessable to mineral rights duty in respect thereof. Held, further, that in ascertaining the rental value of the mineral rights no deduction could be allowed in respect of super-tax which is chargeable under section 66—payable by the lessor in respect of the rent as part of his total income. Beaufort (Duke) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners; Anglesey (Marquess) v. Same, 82 L. J. K.B. 865; [1913] 3 K.B. 48; 108 L. T. 902; 29 T. L. R. 534—C.A.

Decision of Hamilton, J. (81 L. J. K.B. 588; [1912] 2 K.B. 281), affirmed. Ib.

Landlord's Property Tax.]—A lessor is not assessable to mineral rights duty under the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, s. 20, on a sum deducted by the lessee from the rent in respect of landlord's property tax, but only on the gross amount of the rent less the sum so deducted. Ib.

Lease of Minerals Underlying Copyholder's Lands by Lords of Manor—Copyholder's Right to Support—Grant to Lessee of Lords of Manor of Right to Work—Supporting Minerals by Copyholder—"Right to work minerals."]—The lords of a manor leased to a colliery company the right to work minerals lying under copyhold lands of the manor subject to the copyholder's right to support. By a certain indenture the copyholder "demised" to the colliery company at a "rent" calculated on the amount of minerals brought to surface the right to "work get and carry away" the minerals which afforded support to his land without leaving it any support:—Held, that the right granted by the copyholder was not a right to work minerals within the meaning of section 20, sub-sections 1 and 2 (a) of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, but a right to let down the surface, and that the copyholder was not therefore liable to pay mineral rights duty in respect of the right granted. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Joicey (No. 2), 82 L. J. K.B. 784; [1913] 2 K.B. 580; 108 L. T. 738; 57 S. J. 557; 29 T. L. R. 537 —C.A.

"Access to or conveyance of the minerals."]—The appellant leased certain lands to a coal company for mining purposes, and the rent payable by the company under the lease included (inter alia) certain rents by way of percentage calculated upon the amount of coal brought upon and carried over the appellant's land from mines not on her land and described in the lease as "foreign" mines. The appellant received from the company as rent for one year under the lease, 4,966*l.*, which included two sums of 436*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.* and 351*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* paid to her in respect of coal not worked under the mining lease, but respectively brought from "foreign" mines to bank on the appellant's land and carried over her land. She was assessed for mineral rights duty under section 20 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, on these two sums in respect of mineral wayleaves:—Held, that mineral rights duty was payable under section 20 of the Act of 1910 in respect of minerals, which, although not her property, were carried over her land as wayleaves. Storey v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 83 L. J. K.B. 251; [1914] 1 K.B. 87; 109 L. T. 559; 58 S. J. 121; 30 T. L. R. 39—Scrutton, J.

Commissioners' Right of Appeal to High Court—"Any person aggrieved"—Rules as to Appeals by Subject—Casus Omissus.]—By the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, s. 33, sub-s. 4, "Any person aggrieved by the decision of the referee may appeal against the decision to the High Court within the time and in the manner and on the conditions directed by Rules of Court." The Revenue Act, 1911, s. 7, declares that the Commissioners of Inland Revenue have, under section 33, sub-section 4 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, a "right of appeal to the High Court against the decision as persons aggrieved within the meaning of that provision." Rules of Court were made on January 16, 1911, before the Revenue Act, 1911, came into operation. The respondent having been assessed to mineral rights duty, appealed to the referee, who held that he was not assessable to this duty. The Commissioners appealed by petition to the High Court, but the respondent took the preliminary objection that there was no machinery by which the Commissioners could appeal to the High Court because the Rules of January 16, 1911, did not provide for an appeal by the Commissioners:—Held, that, although the Rules were primarily intended to deal with an appeal by the subject, they sufficiently laid down the time, manner, and conditions of an appeal by the Commissioners; that it was not necessary that the Rules should lay down all the conditions, but that when there was a casus omissus resort might be had to the general Rules of the Supreme Court. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Joicey (No. 1), 82 L. J. K.B. 162; [1913] 1 K.B. 445; 108 L. T. 135; 29 T. L. R. 150—C.A.

VI. LEGACY DUTY.

See also Vol. XII. 210, 1266.

Persons Entitled in Succession—Contingent Class—No Gift over—Different Rates of Duty — Mode of Payment.] — A testator gave his residuary estate upon trusts for sale and conversion and to pay the income of the proceeds to three persons during their joint lives in equal shares with remainder (in the events that happened), both as to income and capital, to all their children living at the death of the survivor of them who should attain twenty-one, or being female marry. The will contained no gift over in the event of the life tenants dying without issue who would take a vested interest. At the death of the testator the life tenants were all under thirty years of age and unmarried. The life tenants were chargeable with legacy duty at 10 per cent. upon their interests, and their issue would also be chargeable at the same rate. The next-of-kin of the testator who were entitled in default of the contingent class of issue consisted of several persons who would be chargeable with legacy duty at 1 per cent. and 5 per cent. respectively: —Held, that different persons being entitled in succession, and the rates of payment being different, the case fell within the latter part of section 12 of the Legacy Duty Act, 1796, and that section 17 of that Act did not apply. Accordingly, the executors should pay duty calculated at 10 per cent. on the value of the life interest out of income, by instalments spread over four years. Should the life tenants die during that period the instalments would cease, and the ultimate duty be payable by the remaindermen at the proper rate. Duppa, In re; Fowler v. Duppa, 81 L. J. Ch. 737; [1912] 2 Ch. 445; 107 L. T. 522; 56 S. J. 721—Swinfen Eady, J.

Free of "Legacy duty"—Specific Legacy —Property Abroad—French Mutation Duty—Penalties for Non-payment — Incidence.] — A testator domiciled in England bequeathed to a legatee "free of legacy duty" certain specific chattels which were in France:—Held, that the words "legacy duty" did not include the French duty known as droits de mutation par décès, or "mutation duty," but were confined to legacy duty in the strict sense. Such "mutation duty" is not a charge and expense of the executors payable out of the general estate, and penalties imposed by the French law for delay in paying the mutation duty are equivalent to an additional mutation duty. Scott, In re: Scott v. Scott (No. 1), 84 L. J. Ch. 366; [1915] 1 Ch. 592; 112 L. T. 1057; 31 T. L. R. 227—C.A.

It is not the duty of the executors at the expense of the general estate to deliver chattels specifically bequeathed to the legatees. Perry v. Meddowcroft (12 L. J. Ch. 104; 4 Beav. 197) doubted. Ib.

Decision of Warrington, J. (83 L. J. Ch. 694; [1914] 1 Ch. 847), affirmed. Ib.

— Estate Duty — New Duty Imposed after Death of Testatrix—Incidence of Duties.]—A gift "free of all duty" can properly be extended so as to include new duties imposed between the date of the will and the death of the testator. But this principle has no application where a new duty has been imposed or an exemption has been abolished after the date when the will comes into operation. A testatrix bequeathed a sum of 6,000*l.* "free of all duty" upon trust for her niece for life, and after her death for her children, with an ultimate trust, in the event of no child attaining a vested interest, to certain charities. The testatrix died in January, 1913. The niece was still living and unmarried:—Held, that the legacy duty was payable out of the general estate, but that the estate duty payable on the death of the niece, by virtue of the Finance Act, 1914, s. 14, would be payable out of the legacy itself. Snape, In re; Elam v. Phillips, 84 L. J. Ch. 803; [1915] 2 Ch. 179; 113 L. T. 439; 59 S. J. 562—Eve, J.

Settlement on Successive Persons — Erroneous Payment of Duty out of Corpus—Rectification of Error.] — A testator, having by his will appointed three executors, gave a sum of money to special trustees on trust for M. S. for life with a power of appointment to M. S. over a portion of the sum and a direction that the remainder should on her death be paid by the special trustees to the executors so that the same should sink into his residuary estate. He devised his residue to one of his executors for life with remainder to another executor absolutely. By sections 8, 12, and 13 of the Legacy Duty Act, 1796, the legacy should have been paid by the executors to the special trustees without deduction of legacy duty and the latter should have paid the legacy duty on the interest of M. S. out of the income in four annual instalments. The executors properly paid the settlement estate duty, and also in error, with the approval of the special trustees, paid the legacy duty, and handed over to the special trustees the balance of the legacy:—Held, that in the circumstances the fact of the payment of the legacy duty having been made by the executors instead of the special trustees was immaterial, and that, notwithstanding that two of the executors had an interest in the corpus of the legacy, the sum which had been overpaid to M. S. by reason of the error should be retained by the special trustees out of the future payments of her income. Ainsworth, In re; Finch v. Smith, 84 L. J. Ch. 701; [1915] 2 Ch. 96; 113 L. VII. SUCCESSION DUTY.

Legacies Free of Legacy Duty — Whether Succession Duty Included.]—After giving certain pecuniary legacies, the testator devised a freehold farm to F. and directed "all said legacies to be paid free of legacy duty":—Held, not to apply to the devise of the farm so as to cover succession duty. Ellard v. Phelan, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 76—Ross, J.

Settled Land—Liability to Pay Interest—Capital Moneys Derived from Land Applied in Discharge of Incumbrances on Heirlooms—Jointure—"Free from all deductions."]—In 1889 estates were settled in strict settlement and heirlooms were settled upon trusts to correspond as nearly as might be to the uses of the freeholds. Under that settlement the seventh Earl of Egmont became tenant for life and the eighth became tenant for life in remainder. The seventh earl died in 1897. Under a power contained in the settlement the eighth earl granted to his wife a jointure "free from all deductions." He died in 1910. Estate duty and succession duty on the heirlooms were not paid in 1897, and the Crown now claimed the duties and interest thereon. The trustees had in their hands investments representing capital moneys and rents accrued during the lives of the eighth and the present earl:—Held, that the settlement must be treated as one settlement of the estates and of the heirlooms; that the interest must be paid out of the income of the estate accrued during the lives of the tenants for life; that capital moneys raised from other parts of the settled property might be applied in discharging incumbrances on the heirlooms; and that according to the true construction of the settlement and grant the succession duty on the jointure must be paid out of the capital moneys. Egmont's (Earl) Settled Estates, In re: Lefroy v. Egmont, 81 L. VIII. ESTATE DUTY.

1 When Payable.

Advowson—Proceeds of Sale—Chargeability to Duty.]—By section 15, sub-section 4 of the Finance Act, 1894, "Estate duty shall not be payable in respect of any advowson or church patronage which would have been free from succession duty under section twenty-four of the Succession Duty Act, 1853." By section 24 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, "A successor shall not be chargeable with duty in respect of any advowson or church patronage comprised in his succession, unless the same . . . shall be disposed of by or in concert with him for money or money's worth, in which case he shall be chargeable with duty upon the amount or value of the money or money's worth, for which the same . . . shall be so disposed of at the time of such disposal." A testator, who died in 1898, by his will left property, including two advowsons, to three of the defendants as trustees, to the use of his son C. for life, with remainder to the use of his grandson W., the other defendant, for life, with remainders over. C. died in 1901, and in 1905 W. attained the age of twenty-one, and in 1909, under the powers vested in him by the Settled Land Acts, 1882 and 1890, sold the two advowsons. Upon an information by the Attorney-General claiming a declaration that the defendants, upon the death of either the testator or his son, became liable to pay estate duty and settlement estate duty in respect of the advowsons,—Held, that upon the true construction of the above enactments these duties were not payable. Att.-Gen. v. Peek, 82 L. Bona Fide Bargain and Conveyance.]—Estate duty will not be payable under section 59 of the Finance Act, 1910, in respect of property which has been the subject of a bona fide bargain and conveyance, even if the consideration be less than the full value of the property. Weir and Pitt's Contract, In re, 55 S. J. 536—Warrington, J.

Deed of Gift—"Entire exclusion of the donor"—Benefit to Donor "by contract or otherwise."]—By the effect of the Customs and Inland Revenue Acts, 1881 and 1889, and the Finance Act, 1894, estate duty is payable on property taken under any gift of which bona fide possession and enjoyment shall not have been assumed by the donee immediately upon the gift and thenceforward retained, to the entire exclusion of the donor or of any benefit to him by contract or otherwise:—Held, where the donor of all his property was allowed to continue to reside with the donee in the house, part of the gift, until his death, that nevertheless estate duty was not payable unless the proper inference as a matter of fact to be drawn from the residence and the circumstances was that the possession and enjoyment of the donee were not assumed bona fide, and that the whole transaction was a sham and a device to avoid the payment of duty. Att.-Gen. v. Seccombe, 80 L. J. K.B. 913; [1911] 2 K.B. 688; 105 L. T. 18—Hamilton, J.

The words "or otherwise" in section 11, sub-section 1 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889, refer to any transaction legally enforceable which, although not in form a contract, may confer a benefit—as, for example, a lien. Ib.

English Domicil—Personalty Outside United Kingdom—General Executors—Foreign Executors of Property Outside—General Executors Liable for Duties.]—A testatrix domiciled in England, after appointing two Englishmen "general executors and trustees" of her will, appointed three Americans executors and trustees of her property in America:—Held, that estate duty and settlement estate duty were payable upon the testatrix's American personalty, and that the English executors were liable for the duties thereon to the extent to which assets of the testatrix came or would but for their neglect or default come to their hands. Manchester (Duchess), In re; Duncannon (Viscount) v. Manchester (Duke), 81 L. 332; 56 S. J. 429; 28 T. L. R. 241, 260—Swinfen Eady, J.

Objects of National Interest — Heirlooms.]—Held, that no part of the testator's general personal estate should be set aside or retained to provide for estate duty or other duty in respect of certain heirlooms settled by his will which had been certified to be of national, scientific, historic, or artistic interest. Leconfield, In re (20 T. L. R. 347), followed. Swaythling (Lord), In re; Samuel v. Swaythling, 57 S. J. 173; 29 T. L. R. 88—Neville, J.

Exemption of Works of Art from Duty till Sale—Enjoyment in Kind.]—In construing section 20 of the Finance Act, 1896, as amended by section 63 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, no distinction can be drawn between enjoyment in kind for a moment of time and enjoyment in kind for a period of years, and accordingly a legatee of exempted articles under the section had "enjoyed them in kind," although only for the moment of time during which they passed from the executor's agent, through her agent, to the purchaser from her, and such legatee was accordingly accountable, and liable to pay the duty on the exempted articles. Scott, In re; Scott v. Scott (No. 3), 60 S. J. 157—Neville, J.

"Property passing on the death of the deceased" — Partnership — Sale of Share of Deceased Partner—Goodwill.]—By an indenture of partnership entered into between a father and his two sons, the defendants, it was provided that on the death of the father his share of the partnership should accrue to the defendants, subject to their paying to his legal personal representatives the value of the share, but with a provision that in ascertaining the value of the share no valuation of or allowance for goodwill should be made. The defendants covenanted that they would devote all their time to the business necessary for its proper conduct, it being provided that the father need not give more time to it than he thought fit. They also agreed not to undertake any other business. The partnership was constituted subject to the payment of certain existing liabilities. The father died, and his share having been valued in accordance with the above provisions, the defendants paid the amount of the valuation to the personal representatives of the deceased, and estate duty was duly paid thereon:—Held, that no further estate duty was payable on the value of the goodwill under section 1 or 2, sub-section 1 (b), (c), or (d) of the Finance Act, 1894, on the ground that on the evidence the value of the goodwill was small, that the defendants had given full consideration in money or money's worth for it within the meaning of section 3, sub-section 1 of the Act in undertaking the obligations and covenants of the partnership, and that the partnership transaction was a commercial one and did not contain any donative element. Att.-Gen. v. Boden, 81 L. J. K.B. 704; [1912] 1 K.B. 539; 105 L. T. 247—Hamilton, J.

"Full consideration in money or money's worth"—Jurisdiction of Court.]—The question whether full consideration in money or money's worth has been given within the meaning of section 3 of the Act is for the Court and not for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. Ib.

Property Reverting to "Disponer" — Disposition—Husband's Life Interest in Marriage Contract Fund Forfeited to Wife in Consequence of Decree of Divorce, Reverting to him on her Death.]—In consequence of the dissolution of a marriage by decree of divorce on the ground of the husband's adultery, the income of a fund—which under the marriage contract was settled by the husband's father on him, and after his death on his wife for their liferent alimentary uses respectively—was paid to the wife until her death, after which event it again became payable to the husband:—Held (Lord Johnston dissenting), that estate and succession duties were payable on the property passing to the husband on the wife's death, the exemptions created by section 15, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1896, in the case of estate duty where property reverts to the "disponer" and by section 12 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, in the case of succession duty where a person takes a succession under a "disposition" granted by himself, being inapplicable, in respect that the wife had acquired the income as a legal consequence of the decree of divorce and not by a "disposition" from her husband. Lord Advocate v. Montgomery's Trustees, [1914] S. C. 414—Ct. of Sess.

Exemption from Duty — Settled Property — Covenant to Settle After-acquired Property — Probate Duty.]—The property exempted from estate duty by section 21, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, is limited to property settled at the date when the liability to probate duty arose, and must be property in the settlement of which the will or disposition of the person on whose estate the probate duty is paid or payable forms an integral part. It is not sufficient to bring a case within the sub-section to shew that the property is settled by some other instrument at the date when probate duty becomes payable, still less to shew that it is subject to a covenant to settle. Before any right to exemption can be established, it is necessary to find a will or disposition by the person on whose property probate duty is paid or payable constituting part of the settlement. Torrington (Viscountess), In re, 83 L. Recoupment — Covenant to Settle Sum — Debt Unpaid at Death—Settlement Registered in Victoria—English and Australian Assets—Duty on Registration — Right to Resort to Victorian Assets — Right of Deduction from Debt.] — D. in 1890 covenanted to pay 20,000*l.* to the trustees of his marriage settlement, to be held as to one moiety upon trust for himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, and as to the other moiety upon trust for his wife for life with remainder to himself for life, with remainder as to the whole fund to the children of the marriage, and died in 1911 without having paid the 20,000*l.* which with an arrear of interest was still owing to the trustees. He left estate in England and Australia, apart from assets in Victoria, of more than 45,000*l.* His executors registered the marriage settlement in Victoria, thereby reducing the duties payable in the colony by the duties which would have been payable there on the 20,000*l.* debt and rendering the covenant in the settlement enforceable against the testator's Victorian assets. They also paid estate duty on the testator's estate without deducting the 20,000*l.* debt, but with a deduction in respect of the duties paid in Australia. The executors claimed to deduct from the 20,000*l.* as against the settlement trustees : (a) A rateable part of the estate duty paid in England on the 20,000*l.*; (b) the registration duty paid in Victoria :—Held, following Gray, In re; Gray v. Gray (65 L. J. Ch. 462; [1896] 1 Ch. 620), that, the 20,000*l.* being an unpaid debt to the trustees at D.'s death, they were not liable for any part of the estate duty in respect of it, and that although the executors had acted properly in registering the settlement in Victoria, yet in so doing they were not agents for the trustees, who had no need to resort to the Victorian assets, and were not liable to pay part of their debtor's probate duty, and neither amount could be deducted from the 20,000*l.*, which must be paid in full. Dowling, In re; Dowling v. Fenwick, 108 L. Deductions Allowable as Incumbrances — "Incumbrances created by a disposition made by the deceased"—"Disposition taking effect out of the interest of the deceased"—Provisions for Widow and Children.]—By his will A directed his trustees to pay an annuity out of his estate to B, and also, should B request them to do so, to burden the estate with provisions for B's wife and family. On the death of B the fee of the estate was directed to be conveyed to C. After A's death his trustees paid the annuity to B during his life, and also, at B's request, burdened the estate with bonds of provision for his widow and children. On B's death the estate was conveyed to C, who in adjusting estate duty with the Inland Revenue sought to make deductions in respect of the provisions to B's widow and children. The Inland Revenue refused to allow the deductions, and C paid duty on the whole estate. A question having arisen as to C's right to recover from the widow and children the estate duty paid in respect of their provisions,—Held, that as these circumstances were not "created by a disposition made by" B in the sense of section 7, sub-section 1 (a) of the Finance Act, 1894, and did not take effect "out of the interest of B" in the sense of section 22, sub-section 2 (b), they were deductible; and, accordingly, that C could not recover from the beneficiaries this estate duty which he ought not to have paid. Colquhoun's Trustees v. Abereromby, [1913] S. Appointment of Specified Amounts.]—The donee of a power of appointment, which was to take effect after her death, appointed specific sums to certain persons and made an appointment of the residue. In certain cases the appointment was of a "net" sum "clear of all expenses of raising the same." All the appointments except two were of a sum together with 4 per cent. interest from the appointor's death. The appointor died in 1913 :—Held, that the estate duty was payable out of the residuary sum appointed, and that all the fixed sums bore interest at 4 per cent. from the appointor's death. Grant, In re; Nevinson v. United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution, 85 L. English Domicil—Foreign Articles.]—All foreign articles of a testator domiciled in England pass under his will to his executor as such, and, in the absence of directions to pay the duty out of the legacy, it is payable by him out of the residuary personal estate. Hadley, In re; Johnson v. Hadley (78 L. Covenant to Pay Sum to Trustees of Daughter — Equitable Charge on Specific Realty — Trustees not Bound to Resort to Security in First Instance.]—A sum of money was covenanted to be paid to the marriage settlement trustees of the settlor's daughter within six months of his death, and an equitable charge to secure payment was given on specific real estate, but the trustees were not to be bound to resort in the first instance to this security, but might demand payment from the executors, which course they adopted. There was ample personal estate, which as part of a mixed fund was in trust for payment of debts and legacies, &c., and the executors paid estate duty on it without deducting the covenanted sum. They claimed to recover under section 14, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, a proportion of the duty from the sum payable under the covenant as being a sum charged on property not passing to the executors as such :—Held, that the Court must follow the decision of the Court of Session in Alexander's Trustees v. Alexander's Trustees ([1910] S. C. 637), and that the trustees were bound to pay the proper rateable part of the duty in respect of the property comprised in their security. Dixon Hartland, In re; Banks v. Hartland, 80 L. J. Devise "free of any incumbrances."] — A testator by his will made in 1908 devised a messuage and premises "free of any incumbrances." At the date of his death in 1912 the title deeds of the premises were on deposit at a bank as part of the security for an overdraft :—Held, that the words "free of any incumbrances" were inserted in the will for the purpose of relieving the property from any charge whatsoever, and that the payment of estate duty and succession duty was thrown upon the general residue. Nesfield, In re; Barber v. Cooper, 110 L. Fund Appointed by Deed-poll—Specific Sum Dealt with by Will of Tenant for Life—Residue Dealt with by Will of Appointor—Estate Duty Payable on Death of Appointor—Apportionment between Two Parts of Fund.]—By a deed-poll an appointor appointed the income of a fund to himself during his lifetime, and after his death to his wife, if she should survive him, and after the death of the survivor of them, 10,000*l*., part of the fund, as his wife should by will appoint, the remainder of the fund to fall into his residuary estate to be disposed of by his will. He disposed of his residuary estate by his will, and died in 1908, and the estate duty was paid on the whole of the fund. The wife appointed the 10,000*l*. by her will:—Held, on the death of the wife that the estate duty payable on the death of the appointor should be apportioned between the two parts of the fund. Berry v. Gaukroger (72 L. J. Ch. 319, 435; [1903] 2 Ch. 116) applied. Charlesworth, In re; Tew v. Briggs, 81 L. J. Ch. 267; [1912] 1 Ch. 319; 105 L. T. 817; 56 S. J. 108—Joyce, J.

Legacies and Annuities "free from legacy duty respectively"—"Testamentary expenses"—"Clear money."]—A testator devised his residuary real estate upon trust for sale, and to stand possessed of the "clear money" to arise from such sale upon the trusts thereinafter declared of his residuary personal estate. The testator then gave a number of pecuniary legacies, some of which were settled as therein mentioned, and also directed payment of various annuities. The testator declared that he intended to give all the legacies and annuities thereby bequeathed, and directed that the same "shall be paid or appropriated free from legacy duty respectively." The testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate, including the "clear money" to arise from the sale of his real estate (with certain exceptions) upon trust for sale and conversion, and to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies, and the annuities thereinbefore directed to be paid, and the duties on the legacies and annuities, as well as all settlement estate duty, and to stand possessed of all the residue as therein mentioned:—Held, that all the pecuniary legacies (settled and unsettled) and the annuities were given free of estate duty. Speneer Cooper, In re; Poë v. Spencer Cooper ([1908] 1 Ch. 130), discussed. Palmer, In re; Leventhorpe v. Palmer, 106 L. T. 319—C.A.

Reversionary Interest in Settled Fund—Residuary Estate—Payment—"Testamentary expenses."]—Where a testator dies possessed of the reversionary interest in a settled fund, estate duty on this reversionary interest under section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, is payable out of his residuary estate, either immediately or, by virtue of section 7, sub-section 6, when the reversion falls into possession. Dixon, In re; Penfold v. Dixon (71 L. J. Ch. 96; [1902] 1 Ch. 248), overruled. Avery, In re; Pinsent v. Avery, 82 L. J. Ch. 434; [1913] 1 Ch. 208; 108 L. T. 1; 57 S. J. 112—C.A.

Settlement of Land—Trust for Sale—Land not Sold—Land Notionally Converted—Exercise of General Power of Appointment by Will—"Property passing to executor as such."]—By a marriage settlement made in 1881 a settlor conveyed land to trustees upon trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds of sale upon trust for such person or persons as the settlor should by deed or will appoint. By her will the settlor appointed that the property which remained unconverted at her death should be conveyed and transferred to the trustees of her will upon trust for sale, with power to postpone conversion and upon trust to pay the income to her husband for life with remainders over, and she made him residuary legatee:—Held, that the appointed property being at the settlor's death notionally converted into personalty, it passed, by virtue of the exercise of the general power of appointment, as personalty to the executors (as such), and that the estate duty upon it was therefore payable out of the settlor's residuary personal estate. O'Grady, In re; O'Grady v. Wilmot, 84 L. J. Ch. 496; [1915] 1 Ch. 613; 112 L. T. 615; 59 S. J. 332—C.A.

Will—Power of Appointment—Power only Partially Exercised—"Testamentary expenses" of Appointor—Estate Duty on Portion of Fund not Appointed.]—A testatrix with a general power of appointment over a certain fund, which she declined to exercise, except to a very small and partial extent, directed by her will that her executors should pay her funeral and testamentary expenses out of the residue of her estate:—Held, that the estate duty in respect of the unappointed fund was not a "testamentary expense" of the testatrix, and that her executors, having paid it, were entitled to repayment out of the fund. Porte v. Williams, 80 L. J. Ch. 127; [1911] 1 Ch. 188; 103 L. T. 798; 55 S. J. 45—Joyce, J.

Special Power of Appointment—Portions—Estate Duty—"Everything passing under this my will" to be Free of Duty — Portions Appointed under Power Pass under Will.]—By his marriage settlement a settlor, in exercise of a power of appointment, appointed certain estates to trustees for a term of years upon trust to raise, for the portion or portions of any children of the marriage, a sum of 20,000*l.* to be divided between them as he should by deed or will appoint, or, in default of appointment, equally. By his will the settlor, who had five children, appointed the 20,000*l.* to his three daughters in equal shares, and after bequeathing certain legacies free of estate and legacy duty by clause 8, bequeathed various moneys and securities upon trust to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses, "including estate duty on everything passing under this my will":—Held, that, upon the true construction of the will the appointed portions passed under the will, so that the estate duty payable upon the portions fund was payable out of the property disposed of under clause 8 of the will. Bath's (Marquis) Settlement, In re; Thynne v. Shaw-Stewart, 111 L. T. 153; 58 S. J. 578—Joyce, J.

Direction to Pay "all death duties" out of Residue—Covenant by Testator to Pay Money to Daughter's Marriage Settlement Trustees—Mortgage to Secure Money—Death Duties on Settled Money Rateable Part of Estate Duty.]—Where by his will a testator directs his trustees to pay "all death duties" out of his residue, he must be presumed to mean thereby all duties in fact payable by the trustees of the will without any statutory right in the trustees to recover them from any other persons. Briggs, In re; Richardson v. Bantoft, 83 L. J. Ch. 874; [1914] 2 Ch. 413; 111 L. T. 939; 58 S. J. 722—Astbury, J.

So, where a testator had in his lifetime mortgaged an estate to the trustees of his daughter's marriage settlement to secure a sum which he had covenanted to pay to them on or before his death, and the sum was not paid in his lifetime, a direction in his will to his trustees to pay "all death duties" out of his residue will not include the rateable part of the estate duty in respect of the sum secured by the mortgage recoverable by the trustees of the will from the trustees of the marriage settlement under section 14, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894. This rateable part and the settlement estate duty and the succession duty must therefore be paid by the settlement trustees out of the settled fund. Ib.

"Free of all duty" — Estate Duty — New Duty Imposed after Death of Testatrix — Incidence.]—A testatrix bequeathed a sum of 6,000*l.*, "free of all duty," upon trust for her niece for life, and after her death for her children, with an ultimate trust, in the event of no child of the niece attaining a vested interest, to certain charitable institutions. The testatrix died in January, 1913. The niece was still living and unmarried:—Held, that the legacy duty in respect of the said sum was payable out of the general estate, but that the estate duty payable on the death of the niece would be payable out of the legacy itself. Turnbull, In re; Skipper v. Wade (74 L. J. Ch. 438; [1905] 1 Ch. 726) applied. Snape, In re; Elam v. Phillips, 84 L. J. Ch. 803; [1915] 2 Ch. 179; 113 L. T. 439; 59 S. J. 562—Eve, J.

Real and Personal Estate—Settled Lands—Aggregation.] — Section 12, sub-section 2 of the Finance Act, 1900, cannot be construed (as contended by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue) as if the words "if the Finance Act, 1894, had been passed prior to the death of the disponer" were substituted for the words "if the disponer had died after the said Part"—that is, Part I. of the Finance Act, 1894, only interposing after the words "the said Part," "and in the event of all parties having estates and interests under the settlement dying before the Finance Act, 1894, came into operation." Therefore, where freehold lands were subject to the following limitations which took effect—namely, to A for life, remainder to B, the disponer, for life, remainder to C, and B died in 1863, A died in 1864, and C died in 1911, possessed of the estate,—Held, that for the purpose of assessing the rate of duty payable in respect of C's estate there was no aggregation. Edgeworth v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 606—K.B. D.

Settled Property Passing on Death — Disponer Entitled in Reversion — Hypothetical Date of Death—Aggregation.]—Section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, provides that estate duty shall be payable in the case of every person dying after August 1, 1894, upon all property passing on the death of such person. By section 5, sub-section 3, in the case of settled property, where the interest of any person under a settlement fails or determines by reason of his death before it becomes an interest in possession, and subsequent limitations under the settlement continue to subsist, the property shall not be deemed to pass on his death. Section 12, sub-section 2 of the Finance Act, 1900, provides that where settled property passes or is deemed to pass on the death of a person dying after April 9, 1900, under a disposition made by a person dying before August 2, 1894, and such property would, if the disponer had died after August 1, 1894, have been liable to estate duty upon his death, the aggregation of such property with other property passing upon the first-mentioned death, shall not operate to enhance the rate of duty payable either upon the settled property or upon any other property so passing by more than ½ per cent. in excess of the rate at which duty would have been payable if such settled property had been treated as an estate by itself. By section 16 of the Finance Act, 1907, in the case of a person dying after April 19, 1907, any settled property which would, under section 12 of the Finance Act, 1900, be aggregated with other property so as to enhance the rate of duty to the limited extent provided in that section, shall, for the purposes of the Finance Act, 1894, instead of being so aggregated, be treated as an estate by itself. In 1864, by a marriage settlement, a sum of money, to which the wife was entitled in reversion subject to the successive life interests of her father and mother, was assigned by her to trustees on trust to pay the income to the husband and wife for their lives, and after the death of the survivor to stand possessed of the trust funds for the children of the marriage as the husband and wife or the survivor should by deed or will appoint. The wife died in 1876. Her mother and father died respectively in 1884 and 1888. The husband died in 1910, having by his will appointed the trust funds on trust for certain of the children of the marriage. On his death the Crown claimed that for the purpose of ascertaining the rate of estate duty which then became payable the trust funds ought to be aggregated with other property passing on his death in respect of which estate duty then became payable :— Held, that the claim of the Crown failed. If the wife had died after August 1, 1894, estate duty would on her death have been payable in respect of the trust funds, because as her mother and father died before that date the trust funds would have been an interest in possession before her death and liable at her death to payment of estate duty, and therefore, by reason of section 12, sub-section 2 of the Finance Act, 1900, and section 16 of the Finance Act, 1907, the trust funds ought not to be aggregated with the other property passing on her husband's death. Att.-Gen. v. Thynne, 83 L. 6. Charge For.

Tenant in Tail who has not Barred Entail — Payment of Duty by Person Having a Limited Interest in Property — Right to Charge. — A tenant in tail who has not barred the entail is a person having a limited interest in the property within section 9, sub-section 6 of the Finance Act, 1894; and he or his estate, on paying the estate duty in respect of the property, is therefore entitled to a charge on the property for the amount paid. Dictum of Lord Macnaghten in Lord Advocate v. Moray (Countess) (74 L. Obligation by Father to Pay Sum to Son's Marriage Contract Trustees — Liability for Settlement Estate Duty.] — When a father becomes a party to the marriage settlement of a child and covenants to pay at his death a certain sum to the marriage contract trustees, the settlement estate duty on that sum falls to be borne by the marriage contract trustees and not by the father's executors. Property Passing under Disposition on Death —Property Deemed to Pass.]—A settlor by the terms of a settlement transferred certain shares and sums of stock to trustees in trust for his son for life, with remainders over. He died within three years of the making of the settlement. Upon his death it was admitted that the settled property was property "passing on the death of the deceased" within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, and that estate duty was therefore payable in respect of it. The Crown also claimed "settlement estate duty" :— Held, that as the son took an immediate life interest from the date of the settlement the property did not "pass" under the settlement on the death of the settlor, and was therefore not liable to settlement estate duty under section 5, sub-section 1 (a) of the Act. Att.-Gen. v. Milne, 83 L. X. CORPORATION DUTY.

See also Vol. XII. 278, 1318.

Issue of Debenture Stock by Corporation— Debenture Stock Redeemable at Future Date — Cumulative Sinking Fund Invested in Names of Trustees—Property Vested in Body Corporate—Equity of Redemption.]—A corporation issued debenture stock redeemable at their option at the end of thirty years or in any event at the end of sixty years. The corporation covenanted with trustees for the debenture stockholders to set aside every half-year a sum of 7,500*l.*, so long as the stock remained unredeemed, and to invest these half-yearly sums in such investments as the corporation should think fit, the income thereof to be accumulated by similarly investing the same and the income thereof from time to time. The fund so created was to be applied by the corporation in or towards the redemption of the debenture stock as and when it became redeemable. Accordingly the corporation set aside these half-yearly sums, which were regularly invested in the purchase of stock in the names of the trustees; and the interest on these funds was similarly invested from time to time in the names of the trustees : Held, that the equity of redemption in the sinking fund subject to the charge in favour of the debenture stockholders belonged to the corporation, and that the income thereof ought to be brought into account for the purpose of assessing corporation duty under the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, s. 11, the amount expended by the corporation in paying the interest on the debenture stock being brought in by way of deduction on the other side of the account. Att.-Gen. v. London Corporation, 82 L. J. K.B. 698; [1913] 2 K.B. 497; 108 L. T. 661; 6 Tax Cas. 313; 29 T. L. R. 494—C.A.

Exemption — Charitable Purposes.] — A Grand Lodge of Masons claimed exemption under sub-section (3) of section 11 of the Act 48 & 49 Vict. c. 51, in respect of the income of certain funds devoted to the relief of necessitous masons, or their dependants, at the discretion of the administering bodies. Every mason by whom, or by whose dependants, benefit was received from the funds had to some degree contributed thereto through his lodge, but the funds were largely derived from other sources than such contributions, and the great proportion of each individual mason's contributions to his lodge did not go to these funds:—Held, that the exemption applied. Incorporation of Tailors in Glasgow v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (2 Tax Cas. 297) and Linen and Woollen Drapers Institution, In re (58 L. B. CUSTOMS AND EXCISE.

I. IN PARTICULAR CASES.

1. Armorial Bearings.

Use by City Guild—"Corporation."]—The Worshipful Company of Plumbers is not a corporation within section 19, sub-section 1 of the Revenue Act, 1869, and is therefore not entitled to use armorial bearings without having taken out a proper licence. The exception given by the section is not to a corporation or Royal borough as such, but is given to persons who are officers or mayors of such corporations or boroughs. Plumbers Co. v. London County Council, 108 L. T. 655; 77 J. P. 302; 11 L. G. R. 480; 23 Cox C.C. 355; 29 T. L. R. 424—D.

Use by Member of College of Armorial Bearings of College — Use for Business Purposes of Member.]—The respondent, a member of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, used on his business notepaper the armorial bearings of the college. The respondent had not taken out a licence for the use of armorial bearings, but the college had taken out a licence:—Held, that the respondent was not entitled to use the armorial bearings of the college in the way he had without taking out a licence, and that therefore he was liable to the penalty imposed by section 27 of the Revenue Act, 1869. London County Council v. Kirk, 81 L. 2. Carriages and Carts.

Milk Van Used for other than Exempted Purpose — User by Servant without Consent or Knowledge of Owner—Liability of Owner.] —The appellants were the owners and occupiers of, but did not reside on, a farm, which was managed for them by a bailiff under the superintendence of a steward who resided some considerable distance away. Part of the business of the farm was the conveyance of milk to a railway station, and for this purpose the appellants had at the farm a four-wheel van which was usually driven to and from the station by a milkman. The van had the appellants' names painted on the side, and it was constructed or adapted for use for the conveyance of milk churns in the course of the appellants' business as dairy farmers. On one occasion, without the knowledge of the appellants or of the steward, and for his own purposes, the bailiff used the milk van, after carrying milk to the station, for bringing back his wife and others from a place of entertainment. In respect of this user the appellants were convicted of keeping and using the milk van without having a licence therefor:—Held, that the milk van was kept by the appellants, that they were responsible for its user by the bailiff on the day in question, and that as such user was not for the conveyance of goods or burden in the course of trade or husbandry within section 4, sub-section 3 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, the conviction was right. Strutt v. Clift, 80 L. J. K.B. 114; [1911] 1 K.B. 1; 103 L. T. 722; 74 J. P. 471; 8 L. G. R. 989; 27 T. L. R. 14—D.

"Carriage"—Vehicle Constructed and Used Solely for Conveyance of Goods of Burden — Capable of Use for other Purposes — "Burden."] — The appellant, a farmer and rope maker, on the occasion in question used a two-wheeled cart for the purpose of driving his wife and son to market in order that they might serve at two stalls he held there, at which he sold ropes and farm produce. He also used it at other times to convey ropes to customers, and sheep and farm produce to market. The Justices found that the cart had been constructed to the appellant's order, and had been used solely for the conveyance of goods or burden in the course of trade or husbandry within the meaning of the exempting words contained in section 4, sub-section 3 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, and that the wife and son were "burden" within the meaning of that sub-section; but that as it was capable of being used for purposes other than the above, such as the conveyance of persons, or dogs or game for sport, it was not exempt under the sub-section from liability to excise duty as a "carriage" under section 4, sub-section 1:—Held, allowing the appeal, that there was evidence upon which the Justices could find that the wife and son were "burden," and that, in the above circumstances, the fact that the cart was capable of being used for such other purposes did not render it liable to duty, the test being, not its capacity for use for such other purposes, but whether it was constructed and used solely for the conveyance of goods or burden in the course of trade or husbandry. Cook v. Hobbs, 80 L. J. K.B. 110; [1911]

The respondent kept a vehicle of the description known as a dogcart with four wheels. It had seating accommodation for four persons, and was fitted with rubber tyres and smart lamps. It was used by him for the purpose of his business—a shoe manufacturer's agent—to carry his samples. The interior fittings had been removed, steel plates had been put on the bottom and on the springs to strengthen the vehicle, and the two back seats removed to take seven specially made cases to carry the samples:—Held, that there was evidence on which the magistrate could find that the vehicle was adopted for use solely for the conveyance of goods within section 4 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888. Collman v. Stokes, 103 L. T. 592; 74 J. P. 473; 9 L. G. R. 150—D.

Exemption of Vehicles Constructed and Used for Trade or Husbandry—Adaptation.]—Section 4, sub-section 3 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, exempts from carriage duty "a waggon, cart, or other such vehicle, which is constructed or adapted for use, and is used, solely for the conveyance of any goods or burden in the course of trade or husbandry." Upon proceedings against the respondent for keeping a carriage without a licence the Justices found as facts that an old four-wheeled waggonette, built to contain six persons and drawn by one horse, had been altered by the respondent for use on his farm in the following particulars. The interior upholstery had been removed, the wheels had been strengthened and widened and stronger springs supplied. The respondent's name was painted on the side in white letters. It was used for the general work of the farm—that is, to take workpeople to and from work, potatoes to the railway station, bran to the farm, chop and corn to the horses in winter time, and to fetch potato sacks from the railway station. It was never used as a private carriage and never carried passengers other than the respondent's workpeople. The Justices dismissed the information:—Held, that the waggonette had been adapted or reconstructed with a view to its being used only for the exempted purposes. It had been made fit for the main and substantial purpose for which it was used, and fell within the exemption notwithstanding the possibility that it might be capable of being used for other purposes. But, per Rowlatt, J. (dissenting): Where the vehicle is still internally a waggonette, though not upholstered and though its wheels and springs are in a measure strengthened, it cannot, in the face of that fact, be found that it is adapted solely for the purpose of carrying goods in the course of trade or husbandry. Minty v. Glew, 110 L. Keeping Carriage — Hackney Carriage in Reserve.] — A person who keeps a hackney carriage in reserve to be used to replace any other hackney carriage which may break down, but has not in fact used it, does not "keep" a carriage within the meaning of section 27 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1869, until he does use it. London County Council v. Fairbank, 80 L. J. K.B. 1032; [1911] 2 K.B. 32; 105 L. T. 46; 75 J. P. 356; 9 L. G. R. 549—D.

3. Gold and Silver Plate.

Liability to Assay — Imported Gold and Silver Articles Inlaid with Enamel.]—An imported article which is liable to assaying and marking as a manufacture of gold or silver under the Plate (Offences) Act, 1738, and section 59 of the Customs Act, 1842, does not cease to be so because it is used as the base or foundation of enamel work, however great be the artistic merit of such work compared with the value of the metal. Even if enamel be a "jewel" articles enamelled on gold or silver are not within the exemption of gold or silver wherein jewels are set contained in section 2 of the Act of 1738; nor, in view of the practice of the Goldsmiths' Company to assay and mark articles in the rough, leaving them to be enamelled or otherwise decorated afterwards, are enamelled articles within the exemption in section 6 of articles not admitting of assaying or marking without damage. Fabergé v. Goldsmiths' Co., 80 L. 4. Male Servants.

See also Vol. XII. 285, 1322.

"Male servant"—Driver of Motor Car—Employment for Trade Purposes only.]—In order to determine whether a person comes within the definition of a "male servant" in section 19, sub-section 3 of the Revenue Act, 1869, which imposes a duty on the employment of male servants, the true test is whether such person is employed to perform services of a menial, domestic, or personal nature. A person employed in a capacity which does not involve the performance of such services is not a "male servant" within the meaning of the sub-section. Whiteley, Lim. v. Burns (77 L. J. K.B. 467; [1908] 1 K.B. 705), Marchant v. London County Council (79 L. J. K.B. 718; [1910] 2 K.B. 379), London County Council v. Allen (82 L. J. R. 746; 31 T. L. R. 281—D.

"Coachman" — Servant Employed by County Council to Drive Children to School.]—The respondent, a carman and contractor, supplied to the respondent County Council, under contract for reward, drivers to drive their vehicles, drawn by horses also supplied by him, conveying children to and from their schools:—Held, that the driver of such a vehicle is not a "coachman" within the meaning of section 19, sub-section 3 of the Revenue Act, 1869, and consequently is not a "male servant" in respect of whom a licence must be taken out under section 18. London County Council v. Allen, 82 L. J. K.B. 432; [1913] 1 K.B. 9; 107 L. T. 853; 77 J. P. 48; 10 L. G. R. 1089; 23 Cox C.C. 266; 29 T. L. R. 30—D.

Cooks Employed in Club—Club Subsidised by Government.]—Male cooks were employed in a club for Civil servants which was managed by a committee of the members. The expenses of the club were partially defrayed by an annual grant by the Government:—Held, that the cooks were not in the service of the Crown, but were in the service of the committee of the club, and that they were "male servants" within section 10 of the Revenue Act, 1869, for whom licences had to be taken out. London County Council v. Houndle, 105 L. T. 211; 75 J. P. 442; 9 L. G. R. 958; 27 T. L. R. 465—D.

Groom—Man Employed at Stud Farm and to be Generally Useful—Employment in Trade or Business.]—The respondent, a farmer and breeder of horses, advertised for a "groom, single, to live in, able to ride and drive and make himself generally useful," and engaged a man on those terms. Upon proceedings against him for employing a male servant without licence, Justices, having heard the evidence adduced before them as to the man's daily occupations and employment, found as a fact that the man was employed by the respondent in the capacity of a groom and a general servant, and that the major part of his duty was attending to horses kept by the respondent in connection with his business as a farmer and horse breeder:—Held (Ridley, J., dissentiente), that the man was not a groom within the meaning of section 19, sub-section 3 of the Revenue Act, 1869, and that the respondent was therefore not liable to pay in respect of him the duty imposed by section 18 of the Act on "male servants" as defined by section 19, sub-section 3. Wolfenden v. Mason, 110 L. T. 31; 78 J. P. 13; 11 L. G. R. 1243; 23 Cox C.C. 722—D.

Jobbing Gardener.]—The respondent employed A. as a jobbing gardener for four days a week. A. was at liberty to work for another employer in the same capacity on those days that he was not employed by the respondent, and he was entitled to send a qualified substitute to do the respondent's work when he was unable to attend himself. A. worked greenhouses of his own, and frequently supplied the respondent with plants from them:—Held, that A. was not a "male servant" within the meaning of section 19, sub-section 3 of the Revenue Act, 1869. Braddell v. Baker, 104 L. T. 673; 9 L. G. R. 245; 75 J. P. 185; 27 T. L. R. 182—D.

Section 5 of the Inland Revenue Act, 1876, which enacts that a servant employed in certain capacities shall not be deemed to be otherwise employed because he is occasionally or partially employed to do something else, only applies to a person who is not taxable, but who happens to do duties which, if they were his ordinary duties, would render him taxable. Bedford (Duke) v. London County Council, 104 L. T. 889; 75 J. P. 317; 9 L. G. R. 617; 55 S. J. 423—D.

5. TOBACCO.

Excess of Moisture—One Ounce Sample—"Any tobacco."]—By section 4 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1887, as amended by section 3, sub-section 2 of the Finance Act, 1904, if any manufacturer of tobacco shall have in his possession any tobacco which on being dried at a temperature of 212 degrees Fahr. shall be decreased in weight by more than 32 per cent., he shall incur an excise penalty. The respondents, manufacturers of tobacco, were charged under section 4. From a tub in their possession containing about 120 lb. of tobacco a Customs officer took samples weighing in all about one ounce, which on being subjected to the above test decreased in weight more than 32 per cent. The magistrate found that the samples taken did not fairly represent the condition of the bulk, the tub, and that neither the tobacco in the tub nor any substantial portion of it contained more moisture than was lawful, and dismissed the information:—Held, that the respondents ought to have been convicted, as section 4 does not deal only with the bulk from which samples are taken, but that the words "any tobacco" mean any substantial portion having regard to the ordinary sale of tobacco. Hale v. Morris & Sons, Lim., 83 L. Sale of Old Company to New Company—Consideration in Shares of Old Company Partly or Wholly Paid up—Date of Assessment of Value.]—When a company purchases the undertaking of another company in consideration of partly and wholly paid-up shares of the former, the stamp duty on transfer must be assessed on the value of the shares not at the date of the provisional agreement, before the new company had come into existence, but at the date of the adoption of that agreement, and evidence is admissible to shew that the real value was not identical with the face value or the value attributed to the share consideration by the purchasing company. Commissioner of Stamp Duties v. Broken Hill South Extended, Lim., 80 L. Agreement for Sale—Sub-sales of Portions of Property — Conveyances Direct to Sub-Purchasers—Remaining Portion Conveyed to Purchaser.]—By an agreement for sale the vendor agreed to sell certain property to the appellant for a sum of 45,000*l.*, the appellant assuming liability for certain charges amounting to 997*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.* The appellant, not having obtained a conveyance, contracted by several agreements of sub-sale to sell certain portions of the property to sub-purchasers, and the vendor conveyed the portions of the property, the subject of such agreements, to the respective sub-purchasers. Each conveyance to a sub-purchaser was stamped with ad valorem conveyance duty on the purchase money paid under each of the conveyances. The total consideration stated in the conveyances to sub-purchasers amounted to more than 45,000*l.* The remaining portion of the property sold was conveyed by the vendor to the appellant. The conveyance recited that the whole of the purchase money of 45,000*l.* had already been paid to the vendor by or under the direction of the appellant upon the execution of conveyances to sub-purchasers, and the appellant covenanted to pay certain charges amounting to 997*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.* :—Held, that the conveyance was liable to stamp duty on so much of the original purchase money, 45,997*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.*, of the property sold as, having regard to the relative values of the property sub-sold and not sub-sold, was apportionable to that portion of the property conveyed by the conveyance. Maples v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 83 L. Security for Contingent Payment—Payment Half-yearly—Amount of Duty.]—The appellants agreed by deed that, provided a sufficient number of stockholders in a railway company would consent to take guaranteed stock in exchange for their ordinary stock (the number so consenting being at the time unknown), they would pay 4 per cent. interest on such guaranteed stock, payable half-yearly, if the profits of the railway company were insufficient to pay that amount of interest. If all the stockholders so consented and the railway company made no profits at all, the amount payable under the above deed would be 120,000*l.* per annum. The respondents charged the above deed under the heading in the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, "Bond, Covenant, or Instrument of any kind whatsoever. (1) Being the only or principal or primary security for any annuity . . . or for any sum or sums of money at stated periods, . . . For . . . any . . . indefinite period," with ad valorem stamp duty on 120,000*l.* :—Held, that they were entitled to charge on this sum, although its payment depended on a contingency, and it was payable half-yearly, and not yearly. Underground Electric Railways v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 84 L. Increase of Nominal Share Capital.] — By the Caledonian Railway Co.'s private Act, 1890, a holder of the ordinary stock of that railway could require the company to convert the whole or any part of such stock into preferred converted ordinary stock and deferred converted ordinary stock, and to issue to him an amount of preferred and deferred converted ordinary stock each equal to the amount of ordinary stock so converted. By the Caledonian Railway Act, 1898, the Act of 1890 was made to apply to all the ordinary stock of the company issued under any past or future Act of Parliament. By the Caledonian Railway Act, 1899, the company was authorised to raise 906,000*l.* additional capital by the issue at their option of new ordinary shares or stock, or new preference shares or stock. The railway company delivered the statement required by section 113 of the Stamp Act, 1891, as to 906,000*l.*, but the Crown claimed that as this could, under the provisions of the company's private Acts, be converted into stock or shares of the nominal value of 1,812,000*l.*, the latter was the amount of nominal capital authorised, and that consequently stamp duty was payable on that amount :—Held, that 1,812,000*l.* was the increased amount of the nominal share capital authorised within the meaning of section 113 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that stamp duty was payable on that basis. Att.-Gen. v. Caledonian Railway, 105 L. IV. CONVEYANCE OR TRANSFER.

Sale of Foreign Business — Assignment of Book Debts — Debtors Resident Abroad — "Property locally situate out of the United Kingdom."] — An English limited company entered into an agreement in England for the purchase of a business carried on at Buenos Aires, together with its assets, which included book debts owing to the vendor of the business by persons resident in the Argentine :—Held, that a personal right to a debt had no local situation, and therefore that these book debts did not come within the exemption from ad valorem conveyance duty in section 59, subsection 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891, in favour of "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom." Danubian Sugar Factories, Lim. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (70 L. J. Sub-sales of Portions of Property — Conveyances Direct to Sub-purchasers—Remaining Portion Conveyed to Purchaser.] — By an agreement for sale the vendor agreed to sell certain property to the appellant for a sum of 45,000*l.*, the appellant assuming liability for certain charges amounting to 997*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.* The appellant, not having obtained a conveyance, contracted by several agreements of sub-sale to sell certain portions of the property to sub-purchasers, and the vendor conveyed the portions of the property, the subject of such agreements, to the respective sub-purchasers. Each conveyance to a sub-purchaser was stamped with ad valorem conveyance duty on the purchase money paid under each of the conveyances. The total consideration stated in the conveyances to sub-purchasers amounted to more than 45,000*l.* The remaining portion of the property sold was conveyed by the vendor to the appellant. The conveyance recited that the whole of the purchase money of 45,000*l.* had already been paid to the vendor by or under the direction of the appellant upon the execution of conveyances to sub-purchasers, and the appellant covenanted to pay certain charges amounting to 997*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.* :—Held, that the conveyance was liable to stamp duty on so much of the original purchase money, 45,997*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.*, of the property sold as, having regard to the relative values of the property sub-sold and not sub-sold, was apportionable to that portion of the property conveyed by the conveyance. Maples v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 83 L. Patent Rights in Foreign Countries—"Property locally situate out of the United Kingdom."] — Patent rights in foreign countries and the colonies are not "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom" within the exception in section 59, sub-section 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and therefore a memorandum agreement of sale of such rights made in this country is liable to an ad valorem conveyance duty. Smelting Co. of Australia v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (66 L. J. Q.B. 137; [1897] 1 Q.B. 175) has not been overruled by Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Muller & Co.'s Margarine, Lim. (70 L. J. Consideration Less than Full Value—Subsequent Purchaser.] — When property has been conveyed for a consideration less than its full value, the fact that stamp duty has only been paid in respect of the consideration mentioned in the conveyance, and not (as required by section 74 of the Finance Act, 1910) in respect of the value of the property, will not affect a subsequent purchaser for value. Weir and Pitt's Contract, In re, 55 S. VI. DEED.

Minute of Acceptance of Office by Trustees.] —A minute of acceptance of office by trustees was engrossed upon a trust disposition and settlement and signed by the trustees before two witnesses :—Held, that this was not a "deed" within the meaning of Schedule I. to the Stamp Act, 1891, and was not chargeable with a stamp duty of 10*s.* or with any stamp duty. Henderson's Trustees v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1913] S. Demise to Lessee for Ninety-nine Years if A, B, and C, or any of them, shall so long live—Definite or Indefinite Term.]—A lease for ninety-nine years if A, B, and C, or any one of them, shall so long happen to live, is not, for the purposes of the Stamp Act, 1891, a lease for an indefinite term. Such a lease requires to be stamped as a lease for the definite term of ninety-nine years. Mount-Edgcumbe (Earl) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 80 L. J. K.B. 503; [1911] 2 K.B. 24; 105 L. VIII. MARKETABLE SECURITY.

Debenture — Mortgage of Steamships to Trustees for Debenture-holders—Also Usual Debenture Trust Deed — Issue of Debenture Charging the Steamships — Exemption from Duty—"Instruments for the . . . disposition . . . of any . . . interest . . . in any ship."] —A company gave legal mortgages, duly registered, of three steamships to trustees for debenture-holders as a security for sums to be borrowed on the issue of debentures. The trustees also executed a debenture trust deed in the usual form. Debentures were then issued, in each of which the company covenanted to pay the registered holder thereof the amount for which it was issued, and did "hereby charge" with the payment of such sum the three steamships :—Held, that the substance of the transaction was the creation of negotiable securities, and that a debenture, one of the above-mentioned issue, although incidentally it gave the holder the benefit of the registered charge under the trust deed, was not an instrument for the sale, transfer, or other disposition of any interest in any ship within the second of the "General Exemptions from all Stamp Duties" in the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, but was liable to duty under the head of "Marketable Security " in the same schedule. Quære, whether the second exemption has any application to an " equitable interest." Deddington Steamship Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 81 L. J. K.B. 75; [1911] 2 K.B. 1001; 105 L. T. 482; 18 Manson, 373—C.A.

IX. SETTLEMENT.

See also Vol. XII. 370, 1355.

Policies of Life Insurance—Re-settlement—Pre-existing Deed of Covenant to Pay Premiums—Provision for Keeping up Policies—Assessment on Full Amount.]—In the year 1892 three persons—a father, son, and grandson—executed a settlement of certain freehold estates under which, subject to a joint overriding power of appointment given to them, they took successive life interests. By a deed of even date with the settlement certain policies effected by the grandson on his own life were assigned by him to trustees to be held upon the trusts of the settlement, and the son covenanted with the trustees that he would, during his life, if he survived his father, pay the premiums on the policies, and also that his executors or administrators would pay the same so long as his father should live, if he should die in the lifetime of his father. In 1894 a further re-settlement was made by the same parties, and an instrument was executed which contained no new provisions for keeping up the policies, but the son's covenants in the deed of 1892 remained applicable to them:—Held, that the deed of covenant of 1892 was a deed under which the policies were fortified by the son's covenants, which were operative from the date of such deed until the death of the grandson; that the instrument of 1894 was a " settlement " of the policy moneys within section 104, subsection 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and therefore chargeable with ad valorem duty; that, although there was no provision in that settlement for keeping up the policies, the provision in the deed of covenant of 1892 was a provision made for keeping up the policies within the meaning of sub-section 2 (a) of section 104, and that consequently the instrument of 1894 did not come within the proviso in that sub-section, and the ad valorem duty was assessable on the full amount of the policies and not merely on their value at the date of the instrument. Northumberland (Duke) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 81 L. Distress for Non-payment of Inhabited-house Duty—Goods of Third Person—Exemption—Implement of Trade.]—The appellant's husband had not paid income tax under Schedule A of the Income Tax Act, 1842, nor inhabited-house duty after demand by the collector. The latter, purporting to act under section 86 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880, levied a distress on the husband's premises, and seized a piano therein belonging to the appellant, a teacher of music who used the piano in her business:—Held, that, even assuming the piano to be an implement of trade, it was not exempt from distress under section 4 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, which applies to distress for rent only, and does not affect the rights of the Crown, which is not mentioned therein; that there is no common law exemption of such implements from distress for these taxes, and that under section 86 of the Act of 1880 the goods of third persons on the taxpayer's premises are liable to distress for these taxes, because they are charged on the land. Juson v. Dixon (1 M. & S. 601) applied. MacGregor v. Clamp, 83 L. J. K.B. 240; [1914] 1 K.B. 288; 109 L. T. 954; 78 J. P. 125; 58 S. J. 139; 30 T. L. R. 128 —D.

Goods on Approval—Right of Rejection.]—The defendants asked the plaintiffs to supply on approval a machine for making brushes, and agreed to pay carriage both ways if they rejected the machine within twenty-one days, and to pay for the machine, together with carriage one way, if they retained it. The plaintiffs on June 8 dispatched the machine on these terms, and the defendants on June 29 wrote rejecting the machine on the ground that though it was satisfactory they anticipated trouble with their hands in working it. In an action for the purchase price,—

Held, that the contract meant that the defendants had a right of rejection for reasons other than defects in the machine, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover. Berry & Co. v. Star Brush Co., 31 T. L. R. 157—D.

Sale of Coal—Delivery by Ship—"Cost of stevedoring to be paid by" Consignees—Consignees to Discharge Ship, Steamer Contributing to Cost of Same.—In a contract under which coals to be delivered by ship were sold to the Government of New South Wales the words "Cost of stevedoring to be paid by the Government" mean "so far as such cost is not provided by the ship in the way of tackle or steam or in money." In a contract of sale to the Government of New South Wales of coal to be delivered by ship the Government guaranteed to discharge the several vessels at not less than 500 tons per day, strike or no strike, "the cost of stevedoring to be paid by the Government and vessels to have free wharfage"; and it was also provided by the charterparty under which the coals were carried, but which created no privity as between the consignor and the Government, "Consignees to effect discharge of steamer irrespective of strike or labour trouble, steamer paying 1*s.* per ton towards cost of same":—Held, that, upon the construction of the contract of sale, the Government were entitled to retain the shilling per ton as against the consignor. White v. Williams, 82 L. Contract for Supply of Sleepers — Passing by Sellers to be Final—Conformity with Terms of Contract.—The appellants having committed a breach of contract made by their agents with the respondent in regard to delivery to a railway of teakwood sleepers reasonably fit for its purposes, relied in defence to an action for damages on a provision contained therein that the passing by the appellants at the port of shipment "is as usual final as regards both measurement and quality," and pleaded that the sleepers in question had been so passed in the impartial and honest exercise of their judgment by two experts employed by them for that purpose:—Held, that the passing relied on was not within the meaning of the contract. There had been no decision by the experts that the sleepers were in conformity with the contract, but merely that they were fit to be sent out as their employers' manufacture. Bombay Burmah Trading Corporation v. Aga Mahomed Khaleel Shirazee, L. R. 38 Ind. App. 169—P.C.

Sale of Floating Dock — Price Inclusive of Towage, Insurance, &c.—Sellers' Obligation as to Policies.—A floating dock was sold to the plaintiffs for 19,000*l.*, "which price includes cost of towing from Avonmouth to Brindisi, cost of insurance, and all fittings, strengthenings and towing gear, ropes, &c., necessary for the voyage. . . . Before the dock leaves, vendors agree to hand to purchasers Lloyd's policies of insurance for 16,500*l.* This insurance will be duly indorsed over to them, and they shall receive the full benefit of such policies":—Held, that under this contract the sellers were bound to give valid policies to the purchasers. Cantiere Meccanico Brindisino v. Constant, 17 Com. Cas. 182; 12 Asp. M.C. 186—Scrutton, J. Affirmed, 17 Com. Cas. 332—C.A.

Marine Insurance against "all risks"—Extent of Required.—By a contract in writing the defendants sold certain goods to the plaintiffs, and as the plaintiffs stipulated for "complete insurance against all risks" the defendants inserted in the margin of the contract the following words: "Insurance to be effected by us all risks." The defendants took out a policy covering the goods from Piræus to Antwerp for "850*l.* on 102 casks citrons (in brine). So valued. To pay average as customary." The policy contained an f.p.a. clause and the usual memorandum. There were clauses attached to the policy, including one which covered "all risks by land or water (if by sea, at current additional premium)" and a "held covered clause," which provided (inter alia) that in the case of circumstances which might cause a variation and (or) entire alteration in the risk as contemplated in the policy, a payment in respect thereof should be made by the assured. The citrons on their arrival at Antwerp were found to be considerably damaged, owing to their having been stowed on deck instead of under deck. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants for failing to insure the goods against all risks,—Held, on the true construction of the contract, that the defendants were only bound to cover all risks in the sense of the entire quantum of damage, and not to procure a policy covering the plaintiffs against all causes of accident. Vincentelli v. Rowlett, 105 L. T. 411; 16 Com. Cas. 310; 12 Asp. M.C. 34—Hamilton, J.

Hire-purchase Agreement — Instalments — Appropriation of Instalments as between Capital and Interest.—An agreement for the hire-purchase of certain furniture had indorsed on it an inventory of the furniture hired, with cash prices annexed, the summation of which amounted to 7,543*l.* The agreement stipulated for payment by the hirer of annual sums of varying amount, the total of which was 8,649*l.*, and further provided that the hirer might at any time become the purchaser of the furniture "by payment in cash of the hereon indorsed price, under deduction of the whole sums previously paid by the hirer to the owners." The hirer, who had in the course of several years paid in terms of the agreement sums amounting in all to 4,966*l.*, desiring to become the purchaser of the furniture, tendered to the owners the sum of 2,577*l.*, being the difference between the sums so paid and 7,543*l.*, the "indorsed price":—Held, that in view of the fact that in a contract of hire-purchase the instalments are calculated so as to provide for interest on so much of the capital as remains unpaid, the expression "whole sums previously paid" must refer to the portion of the sums paid attributable to capital, to the exclusion of the portion attributable to interest; and, accordingly, that the pursuer was not entitled to become the purchaser of the furniture on payment of the sum tendered. Taylor v. Wylie & Lochhead, [1912] S. b. Payment.

C.i.f. Contract — Terms "Net cash" — Buyer's Right of Inspection before Payment — Payment against Shipping Documents.] — A contract in writing provided for the sale of goods during successive years to be shipped to a port stated. The buyer was to pay for the goods at a given price and the goods were to be shipped to ports mentioned, "Terms net cash":—Held, that the seller was entitled to payment against shipping documents on delivery of the goods, or within a reasonable time, and need not wait until the goods had been landed, inspected, and accepted. Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell, 81 L. J. K.B. 42; [1912] A.C. 18; 105 L. T. 563; 17 Com. Cas. 55; 12 Asp. M.C. 80; 56 S. J. 50; 28 T. L. R. 42—H.L. (E.)

—— Payment by Cash against Documents — Seller not the Shipper of Goods — Tender of Documents after Loss of Goods — Validity of Tender — Appropriation of Goods to Contract — "War risk for buyer's account."]—When goods are sold by contract on c.i.f. terms, the contract of the seller is performed by delivery to the buyer, within a reasonable time from the agreed date of shipment, of documents, ordinarily the bill of lading, invoice, and policy of insurance, which will entitle the buyer on the arrival of the ship to obtain the delivery of the goods shipped in accordance with the contract, or, in case of loss, will entitle him to recover on the policy the value of the goods if lost by a peril agreed in the contract to be covered, and in any case will give him a rightful claim against the ship in respect of any misdelivery or wrongful treatment of the goods. It is therefore immaterial whether, before the tender of the documents, the property in the goods is in the seller or buyer or a third person. The seller, however, must be in a position to pass the property in the goods by the bill of lading, if the goods are in existence, but he need not have appropriated the particular goods in the particular bill of lading to the particular buyer until the moment of tender. Groom, Lim. v. Barber, 84 L. J. K.B. 318; [1915] 1 K.B. 316; 112 L. T. 301; 20 Com. Cas. 71; 12 Asp. M.C. 594; 59 S. J. 129; 31 T. L. R. 66—Atkin, J.

—— Declaration of War — Tender of German Shipping Documents — Obligation of Buyer.]—Under two c.i.f. contracts (made respectively between two English firms) the sellers sold to the buyers a quantity of horse beans, to be shipped from a port in China to Naples. Payment was to be in net cash in London on arrival of the goods at port of discharge in exchange for bill of lading and policy of insurance, but was to be made in no case later than three months from the date of the bill of lading; or upon the posting of the vessel at Lloyd's as a total loss. The sellers respectively shipped the beans on a German steamer for conveyance to Naples. War subsequently broke out between England and Germany, and the vessels entered ports of refuge and remained there. Three months after the date of the bill of lading the respective sellers tendered to the buyers the shipping documents—namely, in the one case the German bill of lading and an English policy, and in the other case the German bill of lading and a German policy. The buyers refused to accept the documents or to pay for the goods:—Held, that the tender of the documents was not, under the circumstances, a good tender; that the buyers were entitled to reject it, and that the sellers could not therefore claim payment against the documents. Esposito v. Bowden (27 L. J. Q.B. 17; 7 E. & B. 763) and Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines (71 L. J. Cas. 1; 31 T. L. R. 351—Scrutton, J.

—— Amount of Marine Insurance to be Effected Specified — Additional Honour Policies Effected by Sellers for Own Benefit — Payment by Underwriters — Right of Sellers or Buyers to Insurance Money.]—A contract for the sale of a cargo of Australian wheat, "including freight and insurance," contained a clause, "Sellers to give policies of insurance for 2 per cent. over the invoice amount, and any amount over this to be sellers' account in case of total loss only." The bills of lading passed from the original sellers, the plaintiffs, through the hands of various intermediate buyers and sellers to the ultimate purchasers, the defendants. Insurance policies on the cargo had been duly taken out by the plaintiffs, and passed, as part of the shipping documents attached to the bills of lading, to the defendants, and on the vessel being wrecked (but not becoming a total loss) payment thereunder was duly made by the underwriters. In addition to these policies the plaintiffs had effected "increased value" policies on the cargo, which were only honour policies, intending them to be for their own benefit only, and these were not handed over with the shipping documents:—Held (even assuming privity of contract between the plaintiffs and defendants), that the latter policies were not included under the obligation to insure annexed to the contract, and that the plaintiffs and not the defendants were entitled to the proceeds thereof. Strass v. Spillers & Bakers, Lim., 80 L. J. K.B. 1218; [1911] 2 K.B. 759; 104 L. T. 284; 16 Com. Cas. 166; 11 Asp. M.C. 590—Hamilton, J.

—— Right of Buyer to Reject — Bill of Lading — Transhipment of Goods — Through Bill of Lading — Tender of One Bill of Lading.]—By a contract dated May 5, 1909, L. & Co. sold to C. & S. a quantity of hemp on cost, freight, and insurance terms. Shipment was to be made from a recognised shipping port in the Philippine Islands by steamer or steamers, direct or indirect, to London between October 1 and December 31, 1909. Payment was to be made by cash in exchange for shipping documents. The original seller shipped the hemp at Manila to Hong-Kong on December 28 under a bill of lading to shipper's order at Hong-Kong, and sent a copy to the buyers in London attached to the seller's draft. He intended to tranship the goods at Hong-Kong and to make a contract there for their conveyance to London, but was unable to make such a contract till March 25, 1910, when the goods were shipped from Hong-Kong under a fresh bill of lading. The sellers subsequently tendered to the buyers as shipping documents the Hong-Kong bill of lading, and a policy of insurance covering the goods from Manila to London, the Manila bill of lading not being then in London. The buyers having rejected the goods on the ground that there had not been a good tender under the contract, the matter was referred to arbitration, and the umpire found that by mercantile usage it is the duty of the seller to provide by a contract of affreightment for the carriage of the goods from the port of shipment to the port of destination named in the contract, and held that the buyers were not bound to accept the goods:—Held, that the decision of the umpire was correct, whether it proceeded upon the ground that no contract for the carriage of the goods to London was made within the stipulated period, or upon the ground that the shipping documents tendered to the buyers, which did not include the Manila bill of lading, were not a good tender within the meaning of the contract. Landauer v. Craven, 81 L. Contract not in Writing Signed by the Party to be Charged—Contract not to be Performed within Space of One Year—Acceptance and Actual Receipt of Part of Goods by Purchaser.]—A contract for the sale of goods which is not in writing signed by the party to be charged therewith, and which is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof, is unenforceable under section 4 of the Statute of Frauds, notwithstanding that it comes within section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, by reason of the acceptance and actual receipt by the buyer of part of the goods so sold. Prested Miners Gas Indicating Electric Lamp v. Garner, 80 L. Sale of Goods Exceeding 10*l.* in Value—Rick of Hay on Vendor's Land—Oral Agreement to Purchase—Constructive Delivery and Receipt.]—The plaintiff verbally agreed to purchase from the defendant a rick of hay standing upon the defendant's land for 100*l.* By the terms of the contract the plaintiff was to be at liberty to send his men to tie and press the hay, and the defendant was to cart it to the nearest railway station. On the following day the defendant telegraphed to the plaintiff, "Don't send press; am writing," and followed this by a letter, in which he said that he had sold the hay to some one else, and asked the plaintiff "to be kind enough to give up possession." In an action by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract,—Held, that the contract was one to which the principle of constructive delivery and receipt under section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, applied; that the defendant's telegram and letter afforded evidence of such constructive delivery and receipt; and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to damages. Nicholls v. White, 103 L. Goods Sent on Approbation—Refusal to Give Seller's Price—Delivery of Goods to Third Person—Effect of Judgment without Satisfaction against Person to whom Goods Sent on Approbation.]—Goods were sent on approbation by the plaintiffs to B. B. refused to give the price asked by the plaintiffs and offered a less sum. While B.'s offer was being considered the goods were left in his hands. The plaintiffs declined to accept B.'s offer and requested the return of the goods. By this time B. had sold the goods to the defendant. The plaintiffs sued B. in respect of the goods, and his solicitor consented to judgment for 75*l.* Nothing having been recovered under the judgment against B., the plaintiffs sued the defendants to recover possession of the goods or damages for their detention:—Held, that by the form of the judgment obtained against B. the plaintiff had taken judgment for the price of the goods, that that judgment amounted to an affirmance of B.'s property in the goods, and therefore that the plaintiffs were now precluded from suing the defendants in respect of the goods. Brinsmead v. Harrison (L. R. 6 C.P. 584) held inapplicable. Bradley & Cohn v. Ramsay, 106 L. T. 771; 28 T. L. R. 388—C.A.

Sale or Return—Sub-transfer on Sale or Return—"Act adopting the transaction."]—Where a person who has received goods on sale or return delivers them to another person on sale or return he thereby does an "act adopting the transaction" within the meaning of section 18, rule 4 (a) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, so that the property in the goods passes to him. Kirkham v. Attenborough (66 L. J. Q.B. 149; [1897] 1 Q.B. 201) applied. Genn v. Winkel, 107 L. T. 434; 17 Com. Cas. 323; 56 S. J. 612; 28 T. L. R. 483—C.A.

Intention—Evidence.]—The junior partner in a London firm of diamond merchants, when the firm was in financial embarrassment, made an oral offer to the plaintiffs, who were diamond merchants abroad, to buy from them a certain parcel of diamonds at 180 francs per carat and to give a six months' bill. The offer was accepted on behalf of the plaintiffs, and the diamonds were sent by post to the purchaser's firm together with the bill for acceptance and an invoice marked "Settled by acceptance." The bill was never accepted, the senior partner repudiated the transaction, and a month later the junior partner committed suicide. Afterwards the senior partner executed a deed of assignment, and eventually a trustee in bankruptcy was appointed. The plaintiffs then brought an action against the trustee for the return of the diamonds. The defence was that the property in them had passed to the firm and therefore to the trustee. It was admitted that all similar dealings in diamonds were carried through on the credit of acceptances. The jury found that it was the intention of the parties that the property should not pass to the London firm until they had accepted the bill by signing it:—Held, that there was evidence on which the jury could properly so find, and that therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to the return of the diamonds and were not limited to proving in the bankruptcy. Saks v. Tilley, 32 T. L. R. 148—C.A.

Sale Obtained by Fraud—Pledge by Fraudulent Buyer—Action by Seller against Pledgee—Detinue—Burden of Proof—Larceny by a Trick.]—The plaintiffs, who were jewellers, delivered a pearl necklace to B. on a false representation by him that he had a customer for it. The delivery was on the terms of an approbation note "on sale or return, net cash." B. pledged the necklace with the defendant, who was a pawnbroker. Subsequently, on B.'s suggestion, the plaintiffs invoiced the necklace to him and received from him bills of exchange in payment of the price. The bills having been dishonoured, the plaintiffs sued the defendant for the return of the necklace or payment of its value:—Held, that, even if B. obtained the necklace by larceny by a trick, or if the effect of the sale or return transaction was to leave the property in the necklace in the plaintiffs until B. paid cash for it, yet the effect of the subsequent transaction of sale gave B. a title to the necklace, though a voidable title, and that notwithstanding the proviso in section 23 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, the burden of proof was on the plaintiffs to shew that the defendant took the necklace in bad faith or with notice of B.'s fraud. Whitehorn v. Davison, 80 L. J. K.B. 425; [1911] 1 K.B. 463; 104 L. T. 234—C.A.

Hire and Purchase — Agreement to Buy — Option — Pledge — Conversion — Measure of Damages.]—By section 25, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, "Where a person having . . . agreed to buy goods obtains, with the consent of the seller, possession of the goods . . . the delivery or transfer by that person . . . of the goods . . . under any sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof, to any person receiving the same in good faith and without notice of any lien or other right of the original seller in respect of the goods, shall have the same effect as if the person making the delivery or transfer were a mercantile agent in possession of the goods or documents of title with the consent of the owner." The owners of a motor taxicab let it to a motor company for twenty-four months at 15*l*. 12*s*. 2*d*. per month. The agreement provided that the hirers should pay 50*l*. on account of hire in advance, and should not re-let, sell, or part with the possession of the cab without the previous written consent of the owners. If the hirers should before the expiration of the period of twelve calendar months be desirous of purchasing the cab, they were to be at liberty to do so by making the amount of the hire paid equal to the sum of 42*l*. 11*s*. 6*d*. If they committed any breach of the clause of the agreement as to parting with the possession of the cab without the written consent of the owners, the latter were authorised to take possession of the cab and terminate the agreement. The hirers subsequently, without the consent of the owners, pledged the cab and certain other goods with the defendant under an agreement which provided that the goods were deposited as security for the payment of a sum of money advanced to them by the defendant. At the date of the agreement there was due to the plaintiffs from the company a sum of 58*l*. 9*s*. in respect of the hire of the cab, but the defendant received the cab in good faith and without notice of any right on the part of the plaintiffs. The defendant having refused to return the cab to the plaintiffs, they brought an action claiming the return of the cab or its value, and damages for its detention:—Held, that the hiring agreement did not impose upon the hirers an obligation to buy the cab, but merely gave them an option to buy it, and that they were therefore not persons who had "agreed to buy" goods within the meaning of section 25, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and could not confer upon the defendant a valid title to the cab. Held, further, that as the defendant had an interest in the cab the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover its full value, but only the sum of 58*l*. 9*s*., the amount of their own interest in it. Helby v. Matthews (64 L. J. Q.B. 465; [1895] A.C. 471) and Lee v. Butler (62 L. J. Q.B. 591; [1893] 2 Q.B. 318) considered. Belsize Motor Supply Co. v. Cox, 83 L. J. K.B. 261; [1914] 1 K.B. 244; 110 L. Fixtures—Hire-purchase Agreement—Equitable Interest in Land—Subsequent Equitable Mortgage without Notice — Appointment of Receiver for Equitable Mortgagees—Right of Vendor of Fixtures to Remove—Priorities.]—Under a hire-purchase agreement of November 11, 1910, contractors agreed to supply and erect on the freehold premises of a manufacturing firm a patent machine at the price of 237*l*. payable by annual instalments. In the event of default in payment of any instalment or any breach of the agreement the whole unpaid balance of principal and interest was immediately to become due, and the basis of the contract was that the machine should remain the sole and exclusive property of the contractors until the whole sum of 237*l*. had been paid, and that in the event of any default the contractors might enter on the premises and remove the machine. The machine was affixed to the freehold. In January, 1911, an incorporated company took over the assets and liabilities of the firm including their interest under the agreement. In December, 1911, the company issued first mortgage debentures charging all its undertaking and property as a floating charge. The debenture-holders had no notice of the agreement. Default was made in payment of instalments under the agreement, which by arrangement with the company were secured by promissory notes. The last note for 50*l*. payable on October 21, 1912, was not met. On October 18, 1912, three days before, a receiver and manager was appointed in an action by the debenture-holders to enforce their security, and he took possession of the premises. Upon summons by the contractors for leave to enter and remove the machine,—Held, that the contractors took under the agreement an equitable interest in land which had priority over the subsequent equitable mortgage of the debenture-holders, and that the contractors could therefore enter and remove the machine notwithstanding the appointment of the receiver. Allen & Sons, Lim., In re (76 L. J. Ch. 362; [1907] 1 Ch. 575), approved. Morrison, Jones & Taylor, Lim., In re; Cookes v. The Company, 83 L. J. Ch. 129; [1914] 1 Ch. 50; 109 L. T. 722; 58 S. J. 80; 30 T. L. R. 59—C.A.

Delivery Order—Document of Title—Delivery Order Created and Issued by Owner of Goods — Whether a "transfer" — Delivery Order not for Specific Goods.]—A delivery order was given by the defendants to F. for 2,640 bags of mowra seed, which formed part of a consignment of 6,400 bags. F. gave the defendants a cheque therefor and indorsed the delivery order to the plaintiffs, who took it in good faith and for valuable consideration. F.'s cheque having been dishonoured, the defendants refused to give delivery of the seed to the plaintiffs:—Held, first, that the delivery order was a document of title to the goods which had been "transferred" by the defendants to F. within the meaning of section 10 of the Factors Act, 1889, and section 47 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and having been transferred by F. to the plaintiffs, who took it in good faith and for valuable consideration, the defendants' right of lien as unpaid vendors was defeated; and secondly, that the delivery order was valid notwithstanding that it related to goods which were not specific. Capital and Counties Bank v. Warriner (1 Com. Representation that Goods are Suitable for Special Purpose.]—A purchaser buying goods on the recommendation of the vendor that they are suited to a special purpose, has a remedy by action for breach of contract, and not for tort, in negligently giving bad advice, if the goods prove unsuitable. Rowe v. Crossley, 108 L. Fitness for Purpose—Right to Reject—Rejection in Time—Measure of Damages.]—In January, 1907, M., who had contracted to supply a pump to a district council, ordered a pump for this purpose from B., and the pump was fitted up in May, 1907. It was a term of both contracts that the pump should lift a certain quantity of water per minute, and should be capable of being worked by a boy. Shortly after the pump was fitted up the district council complained to M. that this requirement was not satisfied by the pump, and he communicated with B., who replied that if the pump were properly fitted up it would be all right. In June, 1907, B. himself examined the pump, and reported to M. that he had put it right. Further complaints, however, were made by the district council, and in July and September M. sent workmen to examine the pump. Ultimately the district council, in December, 1908, rejected the pump, on the ground that it did not satisfy the requirement of being workable by a boy. M. refused to accept this rejection, and in January, 1909, sued the council for the price. Shortly after the raising of this action M. was informed for the first time by B. that a boy could not raise with the pump the specified quantity of water per minute, and that he had not understood that the pump must satisfy this requirement. Thereupon M., who had throughout intimated to B. that he would not pay for the pump until the district council had settled with him for it, at once intimated to B. that he rejected the pump as being disconform to contract, and that he proposed to settle the action with the council on the basis that the pump was not conform to contract:—Held, in actions between M. and B.—first, that in the circumstances M. had not accepted the pump; and secondly, that—as the delay in rejecting it was due to the representations of B. (on which M., not being skilled in pumps, was entitled to rely) to the effect that the pump was conform to contract—B. could not plead that the rejection was not in time. Held, further, that M. was entitled to recover as damages from B. (inter alia) the amount of the expenses incurred by him in the action against the district council. Munro v. Bennet, [1911] S. C. 337—Ct. of Sess.

Sale of Horse under Warranty—Rejection.]—A horse was sold with a warranty that it was a good worker and sound in wind, and the purchasers bargained that they should have a week's trial:—Held, that the contract was one of sale under warranty and not one of sale on approbation, and accordingly that the purchasers were entitled to reject the horse within the week if it was disconform to the warranty, but not otherwise. Cranston v. Mallow & Lien, [1912] S. C. 112—Ct. of Sess.

Horse Purchased for Stud Purposes—Verbal Representation by Seller of Soundness — Express Warranty.]—The plaintiff, requiring a stallion for stud purposes, inspected a horse the property of the defendant, a horse dealer. The plaintiff swore that while he was looking at the horse the defendant said to him: "You need not look for anything; the horse is perfectly sound. If there was anything the matter I would tell you." When the horse was delivered it was found to be affected by an incurable and hereditary disease of the eyes which rendered it totally unfit for the stud. In an action brought on an express warranty that the horse was sound and free from hereditary disease, the defendant denied that he spoke the above words or anything to that effect, or gave any warranty. The Judge, in charging the jury, said, "The question you have to try is, Did the defendant at the time of the sale represent to the plaintiff, in order that the plaintiff might purchase the horse, that the horse was fit for stud purposes and was sound?" And, after referring to the conflicting evidence, "There was direct contradiction—which of them do you believe? . . . Did the plaintiff act on that representation in the purchase of the horse?" And he left in writing to the jury (inter alia) the question, "Did the defendant at the time of the sale represent to the plaintiff, in order that the plaintiff might purchase the horse, that the horse was fit for stud purposes, and did the plaintiff act on that representation in the purchase of the horse?" The jury answered in the affirmative:—Held, that the words deposed to by the plaintiff as having been used by the defendant constituted an express warranty of the soundness of the horse: and that although the words "warrant" or "warranty" did not appear in the question submitted to the jury, that question, especially taken in connection with the Judge's charge, presented for the consideration of the jury all the elements of what constituted a warranty, and that their answer to it in the affirmative, shewing that they believed the plaintiff's evidence, was a clear finding of an express warranty. Schawel v. Reade, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 64—H.L. (Ir.)

Goods not According to Description — Resale — Breach of Condition — Non-warranty Clause.]—The appellants purchased from the respondents seed which was described as "common English sainfoin." It was subsequently discovered to be "giant sainfoin," which is different and of inferior quality. The appellants re-sold part of the seed and paid the purchasers from them the difference between the value of the seed sold and that of common English sainfoin. In the sold note the respondents declined to give any "warranty express or implied as to growth, description, or any other matters." In an action against the original sellers,—Held, that the appellants were entitled to be repaid by the respondents the amount of such difference as for a breach of warranty. Decision of the Court of Appeal (79 L. J. K.B. 1013; [1910] 2 K.B. 1003) reversed. Wallis v. Pratt, 80 L. J. K.B. 1058; [1911] A.C. 394; 105 L. T. 146; 55 S. J. 496; 27 T. L. R. 431—H.L. (E.)

Sale of Meat Unfit for Human Food—Conviction of Purchaser under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891—Breach of Implied Warranty—Liability of Vendor Salesman—Market Custom — Usage Overriding Law.] — By section 55 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, it is provided that evidence of a trade usage, if it be such as to bind both parties to a contract, may set aside ordinary rights and liabilities which might arise under the contract by implication of law. So where a butcher sought to make a market salesman liable for selling him bad meat, and pleaded that he had made known the purpose for which the meat was bought, and had relied upon the skill and judgment of the seller, it was held that these conditions would prima facie give the purchaser a remedy under section 14 of the same Act, but that the salesman was entitled to set up the defence that there was an implied usage amongst traders in the market to give no warranty in the sale of meat. Cointat v. Myham, 84 L. "Delivery as required"—Successive Instalments—Construction of Contract—"Merchantable quality."]—The expression "merchantable quality" in section 14, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, means goods saleable at the time the delivery is made, and not goods which can only be made saleable if some labour is expended on them. Jackson v. Rotax Motor and Cycle Co., 80 L. J. K.B. 38; [1910] 2 K.B. 937; 103 L. T. 411—C.A.

In October, 1908, the defendants, an English company who sell motor accessories, gave an order to the plaintiff, a manufacturer in Paris, for a large number of motor horns of different sizes and of different prices, "delivery as required." The goods were delivered in nineteen cases at various dates in May and June, 1909, the last delivery being on June 24. On the same day the defendants inspected the goods, and as the result of their inspection rejected them all (except those contained in one case which they had already re-sold) mainly on the ground that the goods were not merchantable. In an action by the plaintiff to recover the price of the goods,—Held, that, according to the true construction of the contract, it was to be treated as a separate contract in respect of each consignment; and that (subject to the exception of de minimis) the buyer had a right to insist that all the goods comprised in each consignment should be of merchantable quality, and if they were not, then to reject the whole consignment. Tarling v. O'Riordan (2 L. R. Ir. 82) followed. Ib.

E. PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

1. Time of Delivery.

See also Vol. XII. 529, 1390.

Delay in Delivery—Failure of Commercial Object of Contract—Right of Buyers to Refuse to Accept Delivery.—By a contract in writing 200 tons of cotton seed were sold for shipment from Bombay and certain other Indian ports to Hull via Suez Canal during August and September, 1910, at 6*l.* 15*s.* per ton net, free delivered in sound and merchantable condition to buyers' craft alongside. Shipment was to be by steamer or steamers, direct or indirect, with or without transhipment; and the bill of lading was to be proof of date of shipment in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Particulars of shipment were to be given within six days after the receipt of the shipping documents in this country. It was further provided that if the seed on arrival proved to be not as warranted, or was damaged or out of condition, it was to be taken with an allowance. The contract was to be void as to any portion shipped that might not arrive by the ship or ships declared against the contract. By notice in writing dated September 6, 1910, the sellers declared a shipment under the contract of 1,600 bags of cotton seed by the Othello under a bill of lading dated August 16, 1910. The Othello, which was a general ship, left Bombay with the cotton seed on board on August 18, 1910, intending to call at Karachi for further cargo. On August 22, 1910, when near Karachi, she stranded, and was not refloated till November 27, 1910. About 1,646 tons of her original cargo, including the cotton seed, were landed and stored at Karachi, and she returned to Bombay for repairs. On February 12, 1911, the Othello again left Bombay, having on board 1,540 tons of new cargo to replace a somewhat larger quantity of manganese ore originally shipped at Bombay, but jettisoned on the stranding off Karachi. Included in these 1,540 tons of new cargo was a further quantity of cotton seed which, being shipped in February, was available for and was used by the owners thereof to fulfil contracts made by other parties for January-February shipment. On the arrival of the Othello at Karachi on the second occasion she loaded the cargo, including the cotton seed in question, which had been left there, and on February 20 she sailed for Hull, where her cargo, including the cotton seed, was discharged on March 27, 1911, the cotton seed being carried under the original bill of lading. The buyers having declined to accept the declaration of shipment as a proper declaration in fulfilment of the contract, the dispute was referred to arbitration. No evidence was given in the arbitration to shew that the stranding of the Othello was due to negligence. The arbitrators found that there was no undue delay in the refloating of the vessel after the stranding, or in the execution of the repairs, and that the voyage was not unduly delayed by the loading of the further cargo at Bombay; that cotton seed purchased for August or September shipment would be seed of the old crop, and on arrival in the ordinary course would go into consumption before the new crop would be available; that when the new crop first comes on the market the value of seed of the old crop is at a discount as compared with the price of seed of the new crop; and, so far as the question was for them, the arbitrators found as a fact that the delay in delivery beyond the normal time for a voyage from Bombay to Hull was not due to any act or default of the sellers. They further found that the buyers had been prejudiced by the fact (but not further or otherwise) that the seed, being seed of the old crop, arrived at a time when it had to compete on the market with seed of the new crop. On these findings,—Held, that there had been no cancellation of the original shipment in August, 1910, so as to make the re-loading at Karachi in February, 1911, a new shipment, and as such not within the time stipulated for by the contract; that the loading of further cargo at Bombay in February, 1911, did not constitute a new voyage so as to vitiate the tender made by the sellers; that the mere fact that the seed when it arrived at Hull was exposed to a more highly competitive market than that which it was expected would be found was not sufficient to warrant a finding of fact that the commercial object of the contract was defeated; that therefore the sellers were entitled to call upon the buyers to accept delivery of the seed; but, semble, that, on the construction of the contract, the buyers would be entitled to damages for the delay in the delivery of the seed if it could be shewn that the delay had been caused by the negligent navigation of the Othello. Carver & Sassoon, In re, 17 Com. Cas. 59—D.

Contract to Build Ship—Date of Completion—Delay—Force Majeure.]—The defendants, an English firm of shipbuilders, contracted to build a ship for the plaintiff, a Roumanian merchant, and to deliver the same on or before a certain date. The contract contained a provision that if the ship was not delivered at the stipulated time the defendants should pay to the plaintiff as liquidated damages 10*l.* for each day of delay. There was also a clause to the effect that in calculating days of delay there should be excepted "only the cause of force majeure and/or strikes of workmen of the building yard where the vessel is being built or the workshops where the machinery is being made or at the works where steel is being manufactured for the steamer or any works of any sub-contractor." The plaintiffs were one hundred and seventy-five days late in delivering the ship. They attributed this delay to the following causes: First, the indirect effect of the coal strike of 1912, which, by causing general dislocation of trade, delayed the completion of other steamers on turn for building before the one under this contract; secondly, the breakdown of certain machinery, resulting from accidents, and not from the fault of any of the defendants' workmen; thirdly, bad weather, which prevented the work from proceeding; and fourthly, absence from work of their employees for the purpose of attending the funeral of the manager of the shipyard, visiting football matches, and taking certain holidays:—Held, that the indirect effect of the coal strike and the breakdown of machinery were causes of delay covered by the words "force majeure" in the exception clause, and that the defendants were entitled to an allowance in respect thereof. Held also, that bad weather and absence from work of employees were not such causes of delay. Matsoukis v. Priestman & Co., 84 L. "Shipment made or to be made, and bill or bills of lading dated or to be dated during December or January "—Whether Stipulation as to Date of Bill of Lading a Condition.]—A contract for the sale of beans, made in the form adopted by the London Corn Trade Association, contained the clause, "Shipment made or to be made, and bill or bills of lading dated or to be dated during December, 1909, and/or January, 1910." It also contained the clause: "Bill of lading to be considered proof of date of shipment in the absence of evidence to the contrary":—Held, that the stipulation that the bills of lading were to be dated during December, 1909, and/or January, 1910, was a condition of the contract, and therefore that the buyers were entitled to reject the beans where they were shipped in January, 1910, but the bill of lading tendered was dated February, 1910. General Trading Co. and Van Stolk's Commissiehandel, In re, 16 Com. Trivial Excess over Quantity Contracted for—Right to Reject Whole.]—On a sale of goods, delivery to the buyer of a quantity larger than that contracted for, where the excess is so small that reasonable business men would not regard it as a matter of importance, and where payment for the excess is not demanded by the seller, does not entitle the buyer to reject the whole of the goods under the provisions of section 30, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. Shipton, Anderson & Co. v. Weil Brothers & Co., 81 L. F.o.b. Contract—Transit—Route Involving Sea Transit—Notice by Seller to Buyer to Enable Buyer to Insure.]—By section 32, sub-section 3 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893: "Unless otherwise agreed, where goods are sent by the seller to the buyer by a route involving sea transit, under circumstances in which it is usual to insure, the seller must give such notice to the buyer as may enable him to insure them during their sea transit, and, if the seller fails to do so the goods shall be deemed to be at his risk, during such sea transit":—Held, by the Court of Appeal (Buckley, L.J., and Hamilton, L.J.; Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), that the seller is not bound to give notice to the buyer under the above sub-section where the buyer already has sufficient information to enable him to insure the goods in the ordinary way, and that the buyer's information is not necessarily insufficient for this purpose merely because he does not know the name of the particular vessel on which the goods are shipped; and, further, that where the contract itself contains sufficient information to enable the buyer to insure, it constitutes notice within the meaning of the sub-section. Held, also, by Vaughan Williams, L.J., and Buckley, L.J. (Hamilton, L.J., dissenting), that the above sub-section applies to an ordinary f.o.b. contract for the sale of goods. Wimble v. Rosenberg, 82 L. J. K.B. 1251; [1913] 3 K.B. 743; 109 L. Re-sale—Appropriation of Shipment to Contract—Knowledge of Sellers of Loss of Ship and Cargo at Time of Making Tender of Appropriation—Validity of Tender.]—By a contract in writing dated May 30, 1912, 6,000 tons of soya beans were sold by the respondents to the appellants for shipment from an Oriental port or ports during December, 1912, and/or January, 1913, by steamer direct or indirect via Suez Canal or Cape to Hull. Clause 3 provided that particulars of shipment with dates of bill or bills of lading, approximate weight, marks (if any), and numbers of bags were to be declared by original sellers not later than forty days from the date of last bill of lading. In case of re-sales, copy of original appropriation should be accepted by buyers and passed on without delay. Clause 10 provided that the contract was to be void as regards any portion shipped that might not arrive by the ship or ships declared against the contract. The respondents on September 9, 1912, purchased from the E. A. Co. under a similar contract an identical quantity of 6,000 tons of soya beans for shipment in December, 1912, and/or January, 1913. On February, 1913, the respondents received from the E. A. Co. a declaration and appropriation of a cargo of 6,400 tons of beans which had been shipped by the E. A. Co. per the steamship Canterbury. Later, on February 4, 1913, the respondents declared and appropriated this shipment to their contract with the appellants. The Canterbury, having started on her voyage, was wrecked, and founded on February 4, 1913, and the cargo was totally lost. The loss was not known to the E. A. Co. at the time of their declaration and appropriation, but the loss was known to the respondents at the time of their tender of declaration and appropriation to the appellants. The appellants contended that they were not bound to accept the tender per the steamship Canterbury, and the dispute was accordingly referred to arbitration:—Held, that a valid declaration and appropriation under the contract could only be made by the respondents, the sellers, in respect of goods which had been shipped and which were believed by them to be in existence at the date of the declaration, even though there had been a prior valid appropriation of the goods to them; that clause 10 of the contract only applied to absolve the seller when there had been a valid declaration; and that, as there had been no valid declaration and appropriation as between the respondents and appellants, inasmuch as the respondents knew of the loss of the ship at the time when they made their declaration and appropriation, clause 10 did not apply so as to render the contract void. Olympia Oil and Cake Co. and Produce Brokers Co., In re (No. 1), 84 L. C.i.f. Contract—Failure of Vendors to Insure—Safe Arrival of Goods—Right of Purchasers to Reject.]—The plaintiffs agreed to sell to the defendants twenty cases of French walnuts, c.i.f. Hull, on the terms thirty days net. The walnuts were shipped under a bill of lading, which was sent, together with the invoice, to the defendants. The plaintiffs did not, however, tender to the defendants a policy of insurance, and they had not in fact effected an insurance on the goods to Hull. The walnuts were delayed in transit, but ultimately arrived at Hull some time after the date at which, in the ordinary course, they would have arrived. The defendants having refused to accept them, the plaintiffs brought an action to recover the agreed price of the goods:—Held, that as no policy of insurance had been effected by the plaintiffs upon the goods to Hull, they had not been delivered in accordance with the contract, and the defendants were therefore entitled to judgment. Orient Co. v. Brekke, 82 L. Delivery by Instalments—Delivery of First Instalments—Part Payment of Price thereof—Vendor's Claim to Lien on Remainder of Goods.]—The defendants contracted to buy a quantity of onions from the plaintiff. After the arrival of the first shipment the defendants paid certain sums on account thereof, and the plaintiff refused to deliver the second and third shipments until after the balance of the price of the first shipment had been paid. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant to recover the balance of the price of the first shipment, the defendants counterclaimed for damages for non-delivery of the remainder of the goods:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover on his claim, but that he had no lien on the undelivered goods under sections 39 and 42 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, as the property in them had not passed to the defendants, and in the circumstances he was not entitled to refuse delivery, and that consequently the defendants were entitled to recover on the counterclaim. Steinberger v. Atkinson & Co., 31 T. Sale of Floating Dock—Price Inclusive of Towage, Insurance, &c.—Sellers' Obligation as to Policies.]—A floating dock was sold to the plaintiffs for 19,000*l.*, "which price includes cost of towing from Avonmouth to Brindisi, cost of insurance, and all fittings, strengthenings and towing gear, ropes, &c., necessary for the voyage. . . . Before the dock leaves, vendors agree to hand to purchasers Lloyd's policies of insurance for 16,500*l.* This insurance will be duly indorsed over to them, and they shall receive the full benefit of such policies":—Held, that under this contract the sellers were bound to give valid policies to the purchasers. Cantiere Meccanico Brindisino v. Constant, 12 Asp. Seller's Option to Cancel in Case of Prohibition of Export Preventing Shipment of Wheat to this Country—Partial Prohibition of Export—Non-delivery by Sellers—Effect of Partial Prohibition.]—A contract dated July 27, 1914, for the sale of 200 sacks of flour provided that "in case of prohibition of export, blockade, or hostilities preventing shipment or delivery of wheat to this country, the sellers shall have the option of cancelling this contract." On July 31, 1914, the export of wheat and flour was prohibited from twenty-one countries, including Russia, Egypt, and Roumania; but there was no similar prohibition from the United States, Canada, and the British East Indies, which were the principal sources of supply of wheat imported into this country. The price of wheat rose considerably in consequence of the prohibition. The sellers failed to deliver 112 sacks of flour, and claimed to cancel the contract:—Held, that in order that the clause in the contract should be brought into operation it was not necessary that there should be a total prevention of delivery of wheat to this country through prohibitions of export; it was sufficient if there was such a prohibition of export as caused one or more substantial sources of supply to be shut up, or which caused a source of supply to be shut up whereby a considerable rise in the price of wheat in this country was occasioned; and that as there was a prohibition of export of wheat from Russia, which was a considerable source of supply, and as the effect of the prohibitions had been to cause a considerable rise in the price of wheat, the sellers were entitled under the clause to cancel the contract. Ford & Sons, Lim. v. Leetham & Sons, Lim., 84 L. F. DISCHARGE AND BREACH OF CONTRACT.

1. Impossibility of Performance.

See also Vol. XII. 553, 1396.

Sale and Purchase of Sugar—Embargo on Export—Outbreak of War—Impossibility of Performance of Contract—Sugar Association's Rules—Right to Proceed to Arbitration.]—The plaintiff entered into two contracts for the purchase of a quantity of beetroot sugar f.o.b. at Hamburg. The contracts were made subject to the rules, regulations, and by-laws of the Sugar Association of London, and were registered with the London Produce Clearing House, Lim. Under those rules and regulations both vendors and purchasers of sugar register their contracts with the London Produce Clearing House, Lim., and a novation follows under which the Clearing House becomes the purchasers from the sellers and the sellers to the purchasers. The defendants Tolme and Runge entered into contracts by which they had sold a quantity of sugar to the Clearing House for delivery in August and that sugar had been appropriated by the Clearing House to the plaintiff's contract. The sugar in question had arrived at the shipping port of Hamburg and was free of all Customs formalities required prior to export, and was lying there stored in warehouse. On July 31, 1914, the German Government placed an embargo on the export of sugar. On the same day Tolme and Runge made a tender of the sugar and asked for shipping instructions. On August 4, 1914, war broke out between Great Britain and Germany. On August 7 the plaintiff refused to accept the tender, alleging that the original contracts were void and incapable of performance. The defendants claimed arbitration under rule 491 (b) of the Sugar Association's rules, which provided: "For the purposes of the war clause a contract against which a tender has been made shall be deemed a closed contract. Should the state of war prevent shipment or warehousing and/or passing of documents, then any party to the contract shall be entitled to appeal to the council for a decision which shall be binding on all concerned." The plaintiff then issued a writ claiming a declaration that the contracts were void and incapable of performance by reason of the embargo, or were illegal by reason of the war and the proclamation against trading with the enemy, and he further claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from proceeding to arbitration:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to either the declaration or the injunction asked for as the tender of the sugar by Tolme and Runge on July 31 was a good tender notwithstanding the embargo, and that thereupon it was the duty of the buyer to give practicable shipping or storing instructions; that the contract was to be deemed a closed contract under rule 491 (b), the object of which was to provide for a substituted fulfilment of the contract in the event of war making its fulfilment as originally intended impossible; and that there was nothing illegal in the parties contracting that a third party should give a binding decision in such an event, nor was there any illegality in the plaintiff taking steps to protect his property abroad as distinguished from taking steps to trade with the enemy. Jager v. Tolme, 31 T. L. R. 381—Sankey, J.

The plaintiffs entered into contracts for the purchase of 6,250 tons of German beetroot sugar for delivery in August, 1914, f.o.b. Hamburg. The contracts were made subject to the rules of the Sugar Association of London and of the London Produce Clearing House, Lim. Under those rules both vendors and purchasers of sugar register their contracts with the London Produce Clearing House, Lim., and when registered the contracts take effect as if the respective parties had contracted with the London Produce Clearing House, the Clearing House becoming by novation a buyer from every seller and a seller to every buyer. The defendants had also entered into contracts for the sale of a quantity of sugar, and the Clearing House allocated those contracts in performance of the contracts of purchase entered into by the plaintiffs. Tenders of the sugars to the plaintiffs were made on July 30 and 31, 1914, by the Clearing House, by giving to the plaintiffs notice that the sugars were ready for shipment at Hamburg, and giving particulars of the number of bags, marks, country of origin, and prices. The sugar in question had arrived in the free haven of Hamburg free of all Customs formalities. The plaintiffs on July 30 and 31 gave shipping instructions as regards 2,000 tons, but no instructions as to delivery were given with regard to the balance. The plaintiffs, as they were entitled to do under the rules, required that the tendered sugar should be re-sampled, analysed, and re-weighed, and these things had to be done by the sellers. On July 31 the German Government placed an embargo on the export of sugar from Germany, and on August 4 war was declared between Great Britain and Germany. In these circumstances the sugar could not be shipped in accordance with the shipping instructions. The plaintiffs claimed declarations that the contracts were incapable of performance and void by reason of the embargo, that they were discharged from further performance of the contracts, that the contracts were dissolved by reason of the war, and that they were under no liability to pay for the sugar:—Held, that the property in the sugar did not pass to the plaintiffs on tender of the sugar, but that, whether it did or not, the plaintiffs were entitled to the declarations which they claimed, as the contracts were incapable of performance and the further performance of the contracts was illegal as involving trading with the enemy; that rule 491*b* of the Sugar Association Rules, upon which the defendants relied, had no application; and that the plaintiffs were not bound to exercise to their own detriment the option which they had in order that the defendants might escape without loss. Grey & Co. v. Tolme (No. 2), 31 T. L. R. 551—Bailhache, J.

Requisition by Government — Liability of Sellers.]—By a contract of sale, dated September 2, 1914, the sellers sold to the buyers a parcel of wheat lying in warehouse on the terms "cash within seven days against transfer order." On September 4 the sellers were informed by the Admiralty that the wheat had been requisitioned by the Government, and on September 8 they received a written requisition. The buyers thereupon claimed damages from the sellers for non-delivery of the wheat, and the matter was referred to arbitration. Upon a Case stated,—Held, first, that, upon the true construction of the contract, the property in the wheat had not passed to the buyers; and secondly, that as the sale was a sale of specific goods, and delivery had been prevented by a lawful act of State—namely, the requisitioning of the goods—the sellers were excused from carrying out their contract. Shipton, Anderson & Co. v. Harrison Brothers & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 2137; [1915] 3 K.B. 676; 31 T. L. R. 598—D.

Sale of Ore—Suspensory Clause—War—Stoppage of Mine — Sellers' Right of Suspension.]—By certain contracts, made in March and November, 1914, for the sale by the defendants to the plaintiffs of a quantity of iron ore from a particular mine, it was provided that in the event of war, restraint of princes, or other occurrences beyond the personal control of the buyers or sellers, affecting the mine or the ships by which the ore was to be conveyed, the contract should, at the option of the party affected, be suspended. In consequence of the loss of the German market, owing to the war, the mine could not be worked at a profit, and it was therefore closed. There was also a great shortage of shipping, with a resulting rise of freights, and the Government requisitioned the class of vessel used for shipping the ore. For these reasons the defendants in February, 1915, gave notice to suspend delivery. In an action by the plaintiffs for a declaration that the defendants were not entitled to suspend the operation of the contracts,—Held, that in the circumstances the war was the effective cause of the stoppage of the mine, and the defendants were entitled, under the terms of the contract, to give notice suspending it, and therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to the declaration claimed. Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron and Coal Co. v. Macleod & Co., 31 T. L. R. 604—Bailhache, J.

2. Illegality.

Declaration of War — Tender of German Shipping Documents—Obligation of Buyer.]—Under two c.i.f. contracts (made respectively between two English firms) the sellers sold to the buyers a quantity of horse beans, to be shipped from a port in China to Naples. Payment was to be in net cash in London on arrival of the goods at port of discharge in exchange for bill of lading and policy of insurance, but was to be made in no case later than three months from the date of the bill of lading, or upon the posting of the vessel at Lloyd's as a total loss. The sellers respectively shipped the beans on a German steamer for conveyance to Naples. War subsequently broke out between England and Germany, and the vessels entered ports of refuge and remained there. Three months after the date of the bill of lading the respective sellers tendered to the buyers the shipping documents —namely, in the one case the German bill of lading and an English policy, and in the other case the German bill of lading and a German policy. The buyers refused to accept the documents or to pay for the goods :—Held, that the tender of the documents was not, under the circumstances, a good tender; that the buyers were entitled to reject it, and that the sellers could not therefore claim payment against the documents. Esposito v. Bowden (27 L. C.i.f. Contract — "Payment net cash in Liverpool in exchange for shipping documents" —Goods Carried in Enemy Ship—Tender of Documents after Outbreak of War—Right of Buyers to Refuse to Accept Documents.]—By a contract dated May 11, 1914, the claimants sold to the respondents "about 300 barrels June and/or July shipment Chilean honey per steamer . . . cost, freight, and insurance to Hamburg. . . . Payment: net cash in Liverpool in exchange for shipping documents on presentation of same." Both the claimants and respondents were English firms of merchants carrying on business at Liverpool. The honey was shipped by the claimants on June 28, 1914, at Penco on board the German steamship Menes, and by the bill of lading was to be carried from Penco to Hamburg, and there delivered to the claimants or their assigns. The bill of lading contained a condition that "all questions arising under this bill are to be governed by the law of the German Empire and to be decided in Hamburg." War was declared between Great Britain and Germany on August 4, 1914, and on August 5 a Royal proclamation was issued warning all persons carrying on business in the British dominions against trading in goods destined for persons resident, carrying on business, or being in the German Empire. On the same day a tender of the shipping documents was made on behalf of the claimants to the respondents, who, however, refused to accept the documents. The Menes had not arrived at Hamburg at the date of the tender of documents :—Held, that the respondents were entitled to refuse to carry out the contract, because to carry out the contract would be a direct violation of the proclamation, and therefore illegal. Duncan, Fox & Co. v. Schrempft & Bonke, 84 L. Error as to Substance of Articles Sold — Modern Imitations of Antique Furniture.]—A dealer in modern and antique furniture sold to a customer ten ribbon-backed chairs, which he described in a receipt for part payment of the price as a "set of antique mahogany chairs," but which proved not to be genuine antiques, but to be modern imitations. The price stipulated was a fair price for the articles actually sold. The seller gave no history of the chairs or guarantee that they were antique, but he made certain representations, held not to be fraudulent, which induced the buyer to believe that he was buying a set of old chairs :—Held, that there had been such misrepresentation as to the substance of the articles sold as to entitle the buyer to rescind the contract. Edgar v. Hector, [1912] S. Buyer Prevented from Fulfilling Contract by Failure of Seller to do his Part — Claim by Buyer for Damages.]—The plaintiff contracted with a mining company to remove waste rock then lying in the waste dump at the mine within a period of two years, provided that it did not exceed 50,000 tons, the company to provide a crusher, and the rock so crushed to be put on rails and made available for sale. The crusher provided was capable only of crushing three tons per hour, and as the company never did anything to put it in a condition to do more, the work, owing to the incapacity of the crusher, had to be stopped. The plaintiff claimed damages :—Held, that as it appeared from the written contract that both parties had agreed that something should be done which could not effectually be done unless both concurred in doing it, although there were not express words to that effect in the contract, it must be construed as meaning that each party had agreed to do all that was necessary to be done on his part for the carrying out of the work. The defendants had failed to provide an adequate crusher, and had therefore failed to carry out their part of the contract. Mackay v. Dick (6 App. Cas. 251) followed. Kleinert v. Abbosso Gold Mining Co., 58 S. Assent to Sub-sale.]—The plaintiffs, through one T. who was acting for them in the matter, bought three old boilers, which belonged to and were in the possession of a paper company. While the boilers still remained on the premises of the paper company T. sold them to H. for 60*l.*, on the terms that 20*l.* should be paid before the removal of the first boiler and the balance of 40*l.* by December, 1909; and in October, 1909, T., by letter, informed the paper company of the sale to H. Subsequently H. sold the boilers, which still physically were in the paper company's possession, to the defendants, and paid 10*l.* on account to T., but paid no more. There was no acknowledgment by the paper company to H. that they held the boilers on his behalf:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not precluded from setting up their right of lien as unpaid sellers by the fact that they had through T. informed the paper company of the sale to H. Poulton v. Anglo-American Oil Co., 27 T. Delivery Order — Document of Title — Delivery Order Created and Issued by Owner of Goods — Whether a "transfer" — Delivery Order not for Specific Goods.] — A delivery order was given by the defendants to F. for 2,640 bags of mowra seed, which formed part of a consignment of 6,400 bags. F. gave the defendants a cheque therefor and indorsed the delivery order to the plaintiffs, who took it in good faith and for valuable consideration. F.'s cheque having been dishonoured, the defendants refused to give delivery of the seed to the plaintiffs:—Held, first, that the delivery order was a document of title to the goods which have been "transferred" by the defendants to F. within the meaning of section 10 of the Factors Act, 1889, and section 47 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and having been transferred by F. to the plaintiffs, who took it in good faith and for valuable consideration, the defendants' right of lien as unpaid vendors was defeated; and secondly, that the delivery order was valid notwithstanding that it related to goods which were not specific. Capital and Counties Bank v. Warriner (1 Com. Delivery by Instalments—Delivery of First Instalments—Part Payment of Price thereof —Vendor's Claim to Lien on Remainder of Goods.]—The defendants contracted to buy a quantity of onions from the plaintiff. After the arrival of the first shipment the defendants paid certain sums on account thereof, and the plaintiff refused to deliver the second and third shipments until after the balance of the price of the first shipment had been paid. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant to recover the balance of the price of the first shipment, the defendants counterclaimed for damages for non-delivery of the remainder of the goods:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover on his claim, but that he had no lien on the undelivered goods under sections 39 and 42 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, as the property in them had not passed to the defendants, and in the circumstances he was not entitled to refuse delivery, and that consequently the defendants were entitled to recover on the counterclaim. Steinberger v. Atkinson & Co., 31 T. Duration of Transit—Constructive Delivery by Railway Company to Carters.]—Under a contract for the sale of two lifeboats the vendors were bound to deliver the boats at the purchasers' yard. The boats were dispatched by the vendors by rail, and arrived at a railway station adjacent to the purchasers' yard. Two days later a firm of carters, who were accustomed to cart goods consigned to the purchasers from that station to their yard, but who had no special instructions with regard to these particular boats, obtained delivery of one of the boats and carted it to the purchasers' yard. The carters were not able to take the other boat at the same time, but were to return for it later in the day. Before their return the railway company learned that the purchasers had suspended payment, and on the carters' return they refused to allow the second boat to be removed as they had decided to retain it in virtue of a lien to which they were entitled (under a general contract with the purchasers) over all goods of the latter in their possession for any balance due to the railway company. Thereafter on the same day the vendors notified the railway company to stop the boat in transitu. Subsequently, however, the railway company delivered the boat to the liquidator on the purchasers' estate without the price having been paid to the vendors. In an action by the vendors against the railway company for damages for delivering this boat in breach of the notice of stoppage, the defenders maintained that the boat was not in transitu when the notice was given in respect that the delivery of the first boat operated as constructive delivery of both, or otherwise that the defenders ceased to hold the second boat as carriers when they gave notice of their intention to enforce their lien:—Held, that the boat was in course of transit when the notice was given, and that the defenders were liable to the pursuers in damages. Mechan

Goods Purchased for Shipment Abroad—Transit in Stages—Goods Intercepted by Purchaser—Right of Unpaid Vendors.]—A purchaser of goods consigned them to a destination abroad, the transit being in several stages. At the end of one of such stages he intercepted the goods, and they thereafter remained in the custody of the carriers, who charged him warehouse rent in respect of them. The unpaid vendors having claimed to stop the goods in transitu.—Held, that the original transit had been terminated by the purchaser, and that the right of the vendors to stop the goods in transitu was therefore lost. Reddall v. Union Castle Mail Steamship Co., 84 L. Contract of Teacher with Managers—Notice of Determination by Local Education Authority — Dismissal on "Educational grounds" — Appeal to Board of Education—Jurisdiction.]—A local education authority, acting upon reports by Government inspectors of schools, instructed the managers of a non-provided elementary school to serve notice of dismissal on the head master on educational grounds, and the managers having refused to do so the authority served the notice themselves. The head master having applied for an injunction to restrain the local authority from acting upon the notice pending the result of an appeal by the managers to the Board of Education under the Education Act, 1902, s. 7, sub-s. 3:—Held, that, as the plaintiff did not deny that his dismissal was on educational grounds, but only questioned the sufficiency of the grounds, there was no case for the interference of the Court, and he was not entitled to an injunction. Mitchell v. East Sussex County Council, 109 L. Resignation of Teacher — Salary during Vacation.]—A teacher at the science, art, and technical schools of the local education authority of a county borough had in January, 1909, been appointed by the education committee at a yearly salary payable, and paid, monthly; and his engagement was subject to three months' notice, which could be given at any time by either party. The annual session of the schools closed at the end of July. Owing to a reorganisation of the staff the teacher was asked to send in his resignation. He did so on March 22, 1909, adding to the notice of resignation that it was to take effect on August 31, 1909. The education committee, however, gave a counter-notice to terminate his services on July 31, 1909, when the holidays began:—Held, that the teacher could not maintain an action for a month's salary for the month ending August 31. Hann v. Plymouth Corporation, 9 L. Dismissal of Teacher — Teacher's Statutory Right — Managers' Power of Dismissal — "Grounds connected with the giving of religious instruction" — Teacher's Religious Belief.]—The managers of an elementary Church of England school not provided by the local education authority gave notice to a school teacher to determine her employment under section 7, sub-section 1 (c) of the Education Act, 1902, "on grounds connected with the giving of religious instruction in the school." It was not alleged that any objection could be taken to the religious instruction given by the teacher, but it was alleged that she had ceased to be a member of the Church of England and was now a member of the Wesleyan Church:—Held, that it was necessary, in order that the dismissal might be valid under the section, not merely that the managers should think in their own minds that the ground of dismissal was one connected with the giving of religious instruction, but that the ground must be in fact such a ground. The alleged reason was not a ground connected with the giving of religious instruction, and the statute carefully avoids an enquiry into the religious belief of the teacher on the occasion of his appointment or dismissal. The Court therefore granted an injunction restraining the managers of the school from acting or purporting to act upon the notice purporting to dismiss the teacher from her employment. Smith v. Macnally, 81 L. A teacher in an elementary non-provided school has a statutory right to the position which he has acquired under the Education Act, 1902, unless and until the requirements of that Act with regard to his dismissal have been complied with. Ib.

Head Master—Managers—Validity of Appointment—Foundation Manager—Declaration of Membership of Church of England—Qualification — Churchwarden.] — The managing body of a non-provided elementary Church of England school was constituted by a Final Order under section 11 of the Education Act, 1902, which provided that the foundation managers should possess certain qualifications, and that no person should "be entitled to act as a foundation manager" until he had signed a declaration that he was a member of the Church of England. At a date when the managing body gave notice of dismissal to the head master three foundation managers, though in fact members of the Church of England, had not signed any such declaration. It was also alleged that these three persons had been invalidly appointed by persons not qualified so to do, and that their appointment was void. Schedule I. Part B, clause 3 of the Education Act, 1902, provides that "the proceedings of a body of managers shall not be invalidated . . . by any defect in the election, appointment, or qualification of any manager":—Held, first, that the words of the Final Order were not an absolute prohibition against any foundation manager acting until he has signed the required declaration; secondly, that Schedule I. B, clause 3, precluded the raising in this action of any objection as to the qualification of any manager, whether in respect of this declaration, or the validity of his appointment, or the authority of those who appointed him, and that such objections did not invalidate the proceedings of the managing body. Meyers v. Hennell, 81 L. Power of Head Master to Expel Pupil—Expulsion of Pupil—Right of Action by Parent of Pupil against Head Master.] — A scheme framed under the Endowed Schools Act, 1869, gave the head master of a school the power of expelling boys for any adequate cause to be judged by him. A boy having been expelled from the school by the head master for what the latter considered to be an adequate cause, the boy's father sued the head master, claiming damages for breach of implied contract:—Held, that the action failed inasmuch as the plaintiff was bound by the scheme and the head master had bona fide exercised the power of expulsion given thereby. Wood v. Prestwich, 104 L. Liability of Teacher—Order to Pupil to Poke Fire in Teachers' Room — Negligent Act of Teacher.]—A teacher in a provided elementary school not being well, and desiring some hot refreshment, told one of her pupils, a girl fourteen years of age, who was wearing a print pinafore, to go to the teachers' private room and poke the fire and draw out the damper. The pupil did as she was told, and as she was doing so her clothing was set on fire and she was burned and injured. The pupil had passed through courses of instruction in cookery and laundry work, and her parents on going to work had often left her to look after the house and the fire and to take charge of the children. The pupil brought an action for damages for personal injuries against both the teacher and the education authority:—Held, that the act of the teacher in sending the pupil to render the above-mentioned services was negligent, and that she was liable; and, further, that the negligent act of the teacher had been done within the scope of her employment as a servant of the education authority, and that the authority were also liable. Smith v. Martin, 80 L. Head Mistress's Right to Salary when Absent through Illness.] — The plaintiff, a married woman, was the head mistress of one of the defendants' schools. By the terms of her employment she was entitled in case of absence through illness to full pay for a month, after which time the defendants were entitled to take into consideration the circumstances of the case as to whether she was entitled to anything further:—Held, first, that "absence through illness" was not confined to a period of absence during actual illness, but included the period of convalescence and also absence occasioned by approaching illness; but secondly, that the absence of the plaintiff for a period of three months before her child was born because in the defendants' view it was not desirable that the elder school children should see the plaintiff in her then condition, was not absence through illness, and as such absence was due to the defendants' request they were liable for her salary during that period. Davies v. Ebbw Vale Urban Council, 77 J. II. ATTENDANCE OF CHILDREN.

See also Vol. XII. 644, 1408.

By-law—Non-attendance of Child at School—Reasonable Excuse.]—A by-law made by a local education authority under section 74 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, as amended by the Education Acts, 1876 to 1902, provided that "the parent of every child of not less than five years or more than fourteen years shall cause such child to attend school unless there be a reasonable excuse for non-attendance." The by-laws also provided that the following reason (inter alia) should be a "reasonable excuse"—namely, that the child is under efficient instruction in some other manner. On the prosecution of a parent for not causing a child of thirteen to attend school, it was proved that the child, who had attended Lamphey Council School, but had been removed owing to the punishment inflicted on the child, was being educated by a private teacher. The Justices dismissed the summons, holding as a fact that the education the child was receiving was efficient, the list of subjects taught by the private teacher being in their opinion almost the same as those taught at Lamphey School:—Held, that the Justices were entitled to find as a fact that the education the child was receiving was efficient, without deciding that it was as efficient as the child would have received in a public elementary school, or without regard to the standard of education (if any) corresponding to the age of the child prescribed by the minutes of the Board of Education. Bevan v. Shears, 80 L. J. K.B. 1325; [1911] 2 K.B. 936; 105 L. T. 795; 75 J. P. 478; 9 L. G. R. 1066; 27 T. L. R. 516—D.

—— Distance of School from Child's Residence — "Nearest road."] — A by-law made under the Elementary Education Acts provided that the parent of every child of not less than five, nor more than fourteen years of age, should cause such child to attend school unless there should be a reasonable excuse for non-attendance. It further enumerated certain "reasonable excuses," one of which was that there was no public elementary school open which the child could attend "within three miles, measured according to the nearest road, from the residence of such child":—Held, that the expression "nearest road" in the by-law was not confined to a highway or road along which traffic could pass, but included any route or track by which persons could get from place to place. Hares v. Curtin, 82 L. J. K.B. 707; [1913] 2 K.B. 328; 108 L. T. 974; 23 Cox C.C. 411—D.

Verminous Condition of Child.] — The fact that school authorities have excluded from school a child by reason of its verminous condition—such condition being capable of remedy by simple means—does not constitute a reasonable excuse for the non-attendance of such child at the school. Walker v. Cummings, 107 L. T. 304; 76 J. P. 375; 10 L. G. R. 728; 23 Cox C.C. 157; 28 T. L. R. 442—D.

Child not Sent to School on Account of Verminous Condition of other Children.] — Certain children under the care of the appellant were not sent to school by her on the ground that certain of the other children at the school had been suffering from ringworm and that another child was suffering from verminous head. In proceedings against her for failing to send the children to school she tendered the evidence of a doctor to shew the alleged dirty and verminous condition of children at the school, but the Justices refused to hear such evidence, and convicted the appellant:—Held, that the Justices ought to have heard the evidence of the doctor, and that the case must be remitted to them to hear it. Symes v. Brown, 109 L. T. 232; 77 J. P. 345; 11 L. G. R. 1171; 23 Cox C.C. 519; 29 T. L. R. 473—D.

Compulsory Attendance—Public Elementary School—Instruction in Cookery.]—The respondent's daughter was selected by the local education authority for special instruction in cookery. There being no facilities for teaching cookery in the L. school, which she ordinarily attended, she was required to attend a cookery centre at F. school, which was less than two miles from her residence. On a day when to his knowledge she was so required to attend the cookery centre, the respondent sent his child to L. school, to which she was refused admission. He was charged with having neglected to cause her to attend school on that day contrary to the by-laws of the local education authority:—Held, that by reason of the above facts and the provisions of sections 7 (sub-section 4) and 97 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, and the Code, instruction in cookery was instruction in elementary education in the case of the respondent's child, and compulsory, and that the cookery centre at F. school was part of the L. school for instruction in that subject, and that the respondent had neglected to cause his child to attend school accordingly. Bunt v. Kent, 83 L. J. K.B. 343; [1914] 1 K.B. 207; 110 L. T. 72; 78 J. P. 39; 12 L. G. R. 34; 23 Cox C.C. 751; 30 T. L. R. 77—D.

Duty of Parent to Cause Child to Attend School—Neglect of Duty by Parent—Reasonable Excuse—Beneficial Employment.]—A by-law made by a local education authority under section 74 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, for the purpose of requiring parents to cause their children to attend school, contained a proviso exempting a child, qualified in certain other respects, from attendance if the child was shewn to the satisfaction of the local education authority to be in beneficial employment. On the hearing of an information preferred by the local education authority under the by-law against a parent for not causing his child to attend school it was proved that the child was qualified in other respects for exemption under the by-law, and the parent stated that the child was in beneficial employment. After hearing the evidence the Justices dismissed the information on the ground that the local education authority had failed to shew that the child was not in beneficial employment, and that in their opinion the child was beneficially employed:—Held, that the question whether the child was or was not in beneficial employment was solely for the local education authority and could not be decided by the Justices, the onus of proof of such beneficial employment being on the parent of the child. Holloway v. Crow, 80 L. J. K.B. 153; [1911] 1 K.B. 636; 104 L. T 73; 75 J. P. 77; 9 L. G. R. 89; 27 T. L. R. 140—D.

Evidence of Insufficiency of Instruction Provided at Private School.]—Upon the hearing of a school attendance summons under section 11 of the Elementary Education Act, 1876, against the parent of a child who was attending a private school, evidence was admitted that the school consisted of a single room in close proximity to a factory, the noise of which was audible in the room; that the equipment of the school was not efficient or in accordance with the modern requirements of the Board of Education; that the ventilation was inadequate, and that there was no playground. There was also evidence that the children had been examined by an inspector of schools in reading and writing (including composition) and arithmetic, that the child in question was capable of receiving elementary instruction properly imparted, and had made little or no progress during the two years since she last attended a public elementary school: —Held, that, assuming the first-mentioned evidence as to the equipment, &c., of the school to have been irrelevant, the Court would not interfere with the finding of the magistrate; that the child was not being provided with efficient elementary instruction, as it appeared that he had applied his mind to that question, and there was nothing to shew that his finding was influenced by the irrelevant matter; and the attendance order made by the magistrate was accordingly confirmed. Shiers v. Stevenson, 105 L. T. 522; 75 J. P. 441; 9 L. G. R. 1137—D.

Non-compliance—Summons Adjourned—Evidence that Education of Children Inefficient when Summons Finally Heard.]—The parent of two children was summoned under section 12 of the Elementary Education Act, 1876, for non-compliance with an attendance order. The summonses were first heard on September 10, 1910, and were then adjourned for six months. On March 11, 1911, the parent was summoned under section 24 of the Elementary Education Act, 1873, to produce the children, but he did not do so, and the summonses were further adjourned until March 25. A week before that date the children were examined by the Director of Education, and were found by him to have been inefficiently educated. The evidence of this examination was admitted by the Justices at the hearing on March 25, on the ground that, as the education of the children was defective at that date, the inference could be drawn that it was defective when the summons was issued. The Justices convicted the parent:—Held, first, that the evidence as to the result of the examination of the children in March, 1911, was relevant, and in the circumstances was properly admitted; and secondly, that, although different Justices were sitting on the various days when the summonses were heard, the proceedings were regular, inasmuch as there was a complete re-hearing on each occasion. Rex v. Walton; Dutton, Ex parte, 9 L. G. R. 1231; 75 J. P. 558; 27 T. L. R. 569—D.

Defective or Epileptic Child — Effect of Medical Certificate.] — A medical certificate that a child is mentally defective is sufficient evidence of that fact within section 6 of the Education (Administrative Provisions) Act, 1909, and in the absence of evidence by the child's parent that the certificate is incorrect, or cross-examination of the medical practitioner giving the certificate, the Court must act upon the certificate and is not entitled by putting questions to form its own opinion as to the capacity of the child. Rex v. de Grey; Fitzgerald, Ex parte, 109 L. T. 871; 77 J. P. 463; 23 Cox C.C. 657—D.

Period of Education — Child Defective but Capable of Earning Living — Obligation of Parent—Reasonable Excuse.]—Section 11 of the Elementary Education (Defective and Epileptic) Children Act, 1899, enacts that a defective or epileptic boy or girl shall be deemed to be a child till the age of 16 years, and the period of compulsory education shall in the case of such a child extend to sixteen years, and such child shall not be entitled to total or partial exemption from the obligation to attend school:—Held, that the parent of a defective boy of fourteen years of age summoned for disobedience to an order, made when the boy was fourteen, that he should still attend a defective children's school till he was sixteen, was bound to obey the order, notwithstanding the circumstance that the boy had been certified by a factory surgeon as fit for work and was working as a piecer at a cotton mill for wages. Rennie v. Boardman, 111 L. The parent's excuses (1) that it had not been previously ascertained, in accordance with section 1 of the Act and before the boy had attained the age of fourteen years, that he was, by reason of mental or physical defect, incapable of receiving instruction at the ordinary public elementary schools, (2) that the parent had only consented to the boy attending the defective children's school until he was fourteen years of age, and (3) that at the date of the order the boy was living apart from him at a place outside the jurisdiction of the education authority who had obtained it were not reasonable excuses. Ib.

III. ACCIDENTS TO SCHOLARS.

Conveyance of Children to and from School —Accident to Child—Vehicle Provided with Consent of Education Authority—Liability of Education Authority.]—The school attendance officer of an education authority entered, with the consent of the authority, into a contract with a jobmaster for the conveyance of certain children to and from school. The appellant attended the school, but was not one of the children entitled to be conveyed to or from the school. She was nevertheless allowed by the attendance officer to be carried home from school in the vehicle, and while being so conveyed she sustained personal injuries, owing, as the jury found, to the negligence of the driver and the non-provision of a conductor for the vehicle. The jury also found that the appellant was carried by consent of the education authority:—Held, that the education authority were liable to the appellant on the ground that having provided a vehicle it was their duty to see to the safety of the children using it. Shrimpton v. Hertfordshire County Council, 104 L. Injury to Pupil at Technical Institute by Circular Saw.]—A local education authority provided and maintained a technical institute for the instruction of pupils at evening classes under a competent instructor, whose permission was required to be obtained by the pupils prior to the use by them of mechanical appliances. A pupil, nineteen years of age, with the permission of the instructor used a circular saw driven by electric power, and in so doing injured his hand. He had been shewn by the instructor how to use the saw, and had been in the habit of using it, and knew that it was dangerous. It was admitted that there was no recognised method of guarding or protecting such saws :—Held, that it was not the duty of the authority to provide a guard or protection for the saw, and that they were not guilty of negligence so as to be liable for the injury. Smerkinich v. Newport Corporation, 76 J. P. 454; 10 L. G. R. 959—D.

"Volenti non fit injuria."]—Apart from any question of negligence, inasmuch as the pupil knew and appreciated the risk he incurred in working the circular saw, and nevertheless asked for and obtained the permission of the instructor to use it, the doctrine Volenti non fit injuria was applicable. Ib.

Negligent Act of Teacher.] — A girl of thirteen was a pupil at a school of an education authority and under the care and instruction of one of the teachers. This teacher sent her to poke the fire and draw the damper in a room in which she and other teachers had their meals. In carrying out the teacher's order the girl's clothes caught fire and she was seriously injured :—Held, in an action for damages for negligence against the teacher and the education authority in which the jury had found a verdict for the plaintiff, that the teacher was liable in damages, and, further, that the negligent act of the teacher had been done within the scope of her employment as a servant of the education authority, who were therefore also liable. Smith v. Martin, 80 L. Provision of Furniture and School Apparatus — Efficiency of School.] — Two new schools were provided by persons other than the local education authority as public elementary schools under the provisions of section 8 of the Education Act, 1902, and were approved as necessary by the Board of Education. The promoters of one school supplied that school with furniture which the local education authority regarded as unsuitable and which was subsequently removed, while no furniture at all was supplied by the promoters to the other school. The local education authority supplied both schools with the desks and cupboards and other school furniture necessary to enable the schools to be carried on as public elementary schools. The sums paid for this purpose were surcharged by the Local Government Board auditor :—Held (Sir Samuel Evans, P., dissenting), that the obligation imposed upon a local education authority by section 7, sub-section 1 of the Education Act, 1902, to " maintain and keep efficient all public elementary schools within their area " included the obligation of providing these schools with desks, cupboards, and other school furniture necessary to enable them to be carried on as public elementary schools, inasmuch as the only duty imposed on the persons who provided the schools was to provide the school building, and not the necessary equipment. Rex v. Easton; Oulton, Ex parte, 82 L. National School—Site for School—General Educational Purpose—Education in Principles of Established Church — General Intention Coupled with Special Mode—Failure of Special Mode — Cy-près Doctrine — Scheme — Undenominational Education.] — A site conveyed under the School Sites Act, 1841, may be used for the secular education of poor persons as well as for their education in religious and useful knowledge. But the Act does not permit the dedication of the land for educational purposes in the sense that the site and the buildings erected thereon may be let at a rack rent and the rental value applied to those educational purposes :—So held by Cozens-Hardy, M.R., and Fletcher Moulton, L.J. By deed dated December 31, 1867, a donor conveyed a site under the School Sites Act, 1841, to trustees to be used for a school " for the education of children and adults or children only of the labouring, manufacturing, and other poorer classes " in a certain district, and directed that the school to be erected on the site should be conducted in connection with the National Society as a Church of England School. School buildings were erected on the site and the trustees carried on a Church school there for many years. Ultimately they were compelled to close the school for financial reasons. Swinfen Eady, J., having directed that a scheme should be settled for the management and regulation of the charity, the Attorney-General submitted a scheme under which, upon the failure of the trustees to carry on a Church school on the site, the property might be used by the local education authority for undenominational education upon the terms that the authority paid for all wear and tear caused by their use of the school and subscribed to its maintenance. The trustees contended that this provision was directly contrary to the terms of the deed, and that they should rather be allowed to let the school buildings at a rack rent and apply the rent for Church educational purposes :—Held, by the Court of Appeal (Buckley, L.J., dissenting), that the grantor had shewn a general underlying educational intention coupled with a special mode of giving effect to this intention by means of a Church school, and that, the special mode having failed, the Court ought to apply the cy-près doctrine by settling a scheme giving effect to the general educational intention, and which would therefore authorise the use of the school for undenominational education. Ib.

Medical Operation—Education Authority—Extent of Liability.] — Where an education authority under the Education Acts, 1907 and 1909, enters into an agreement with a medical association in regard to the performance of operations on school children, the education authority are not liable for the negligence (if any) of the persons performing the operation, provided that they engage competent professional persons to perform it. Davis v. London County Council, 30 T. Negligent Act of Teacher — Liability of Local Education Authority.] — A teacher in a provided elementary school not being well, and desiring some hot refreshment, told one of her pupils, a girl fourteen years of age, who was wearing a print pinafore, to go to the teachers' private room and poke the fire and draw out the damper. The pupil did as she was told, and as she was doing so her clothing was set on fire and she was burned and injured. The pupil had passed through courses of instruction in cookery and laundry work, and her parents on going to work had often left her to look after the house and the fire and to take charge of the children. The pupil brought an action for damages for personal injuries against both the teacher and the education authority :—Held, that the act of the teacher in sending the pupil to render the above-mentioned services was negligent, and that she was liable ; and, further, that the negligent act of the teacher had been done within the scope of her employment as a servant of the education authority, and that the authority were also liable. Smith v. Martin, 80 L. "Maintain and keep efficient"—Salaries of Teachers—Local Education Authority—Discrimination between Provided and Non-provided Schools—Jurisdiction of Board of Education.]—It is the duty of a local education authority to "maintain and keep efficient" all public elementary schools in their district, subject, in the case of non-provided schools, to the conditions specified in section 7, subsection 1 of the Education Act, 1902, and to the jurisdiction of the Board of Education to determine finally any question arising between the local education authority and the managers of a non-provided school. The duty to "maintain and keep efficient" a non-provided school is such a question, and lies within the jurisdiction of the Board. The Board is in the nature of an arbitral tribunal, and the Courts of law have no jurisdiction to hear appeals from its decisions, whether of law or of fact. The Board have no jurisdiction to decide abstract questions of law, but only to determine actual concrete differences as they may arise between the local authority and the managers. But if the Board fail to act judicially, or to determine the question which they are required by the Act to determine, then there is a remedy by mandamus or certiorari. Board of Education v. Rice, 80 L. J. K.B. 796; [1911] A.C. 179; 104 L. T. 689; 75 J. P. 393; 9 L. G. R. 652; 55 S. J. 440; 27 T. L. R. 378—H.L. (E.)

As a matter of law it is not true to say that a local authority are not entitled to differentiate between schools in respect of the scale of salaries. But if there be such discrimination, it is cogent evidence, in the absence of special circumstances, of an intention to starve the less favoured schools, and the Board must scrutinise such differentiation so as to prevent any lowering of efficiency in the schools for which less is done. Ib.

Managers—Local Education Authority.]—The managers in a non-provided school under the Education Act, 1902, are an independent body, and all that is given to the local education authority is a defined statutory power of interference with them. Although the managers can call on the authority to maintain the school and keep it efficient, the obligation of the authority carries with it no full power of management. The relationship between the two bodies is not that of principal and agent, but one of co-ordinate authorities, between which powers are distributed. Gillow v. Durham County Council, 82 L. J. K.B. 206; [1913] A.C. 54; 107 L. T. 689; 77 J. P. 105; 11 L. G. R. 1; 57 S. J. 76; 29 T. L. R. 76—H.L. (E.)

The managers of a non-provided public elementary school are, under sections 7, subsection 7 of the Education Act, 1902, entitled to appoint a caretaker and cleaner of the school and have their salaries paid by the local education authority. Ib.

Heritable Office—Principal Usher in Scotland—Fees from Grantees of Dignities of the United Kingdom.]—A title, dignity, or honour of the United Kingdom, created and conferred since 1707,—Held, not to be a title, dignity, or honour within the meaning of the charters and patents granted to the predecessors of the respondents as sole and principal ushers in Scotland, or within the statutes of the Scottish Parliament; and therefore that the respondents were not entitled to exact fees in respect of the creation of titles and dignities of the United Kingdom. Lord Advocate v. Walker Trustees, [1912] A.C. 95; 106 L. Land — Real Burden — Building Restriction — Construction — Validity.] — Land was conveyed to J. C. W., the respondent's predecessor in title, by a deed which contained the following clause: "under the declaration that it shall not be lawful to the said J. C. W. or his foresaids to sell or feu any part of the ground occupied as the lawn between the ground feued by me to W. M."—the appellant's predecessor in title—"and the present mansion house of E. Park excepting" under certain conditions as to building on the land therein set out, "which restriction shall also be a real burden affecting the said lands, and shall operate as a servitude in favour of the said W. M. and his foresaids in all time coming":—Held, that the clause did not operate to prevent any singular successor from building as he pleased on any part of the ground, and that in any case it was not sufficiently precise to create a real burden. Anderson v. Dickie, 84 L. Succession — Provision to Widow of "life rent and enjoyment" of House—Life Rent or Occupancy—Incidence of Burdens.]—A testator by his will directed his trustees to give to his widow the "life rent, use, and enjoyment" of his house, to pay her an annuity, to set aside a certain sum to provide for the same, to distribute the residue of his estate between his widow and his brothers, and, on the death of his widow, to divide the price of the house and the annuity fund, with any surplus revenue accrued thereon, among his brothers. On the death of the testator the widow entered into possession of the house:—Held, that the widow had a "life rent" and not a mere occupancy, and was liable to pay all rates and burdens on the property falling on the proprietor, and could not claim a right to be repaid by the trustees out of the testator's estate. Cathcart's Trustees v. Allardice (2 F. 326) disapproved. Mackenzie v. Johnstone, [1912] A.C. 743; 107 L. Street—Private Street—"Obstruction"—Road Belonging to Railway Company Subject to Public Right—"Road forming part of any railway."]—By the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, s. 4, sub-s. 31, "'Street' shall include any road, highway, . . . thoroughfare, and public passage or other place within the burgh used either by carts or foot passengers, and not being or forming part of any harbour, railway, or canal station. . . ." By the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, which refers to the Burgh Police Act of 1892 as the "principal Act," section 103, sub-section 6, "'Private street' shall, in the principal Act and in this Act, mean any street other than a public street." By section 104, sub-section 2 (d), ". . . Where any private street or part of such street has not . . . been sufficiently levelled, paved . . . and flagged to the satisfaction of the council, it shall be lawful for the council to cause any such street or part thereof . . . to be freed from obstructions and to be properly levelled, paved . . ." In an action by the appellants, a railway company, against the respondents for a declaration that a strip of ground acquired by the company was not subject to any of the provisions of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Acts, 1892 to 1903, it appeared that the ground formed half of a road or street and had been purchased in 1889 by the company for "extraordinary purposes" under section 38 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845. The company made no use of the ground until 1908, and it was never metalled or made up as a road, but it was admitted that it had been used by the public as a right of way for all purposes since the year 1841. In 1908 the company laid down a double line of rails on the ground which were an obstruction to the public right of way:—Held, that in the circumstances the road could not be taken to be "part of a railway" within the meaning of section 4 of the Act of 1892, but must be regarded as a "private street," and the rails were liable to be removed as "obstructions" within the meaning of section 104 of the Act of 1903. Glasgow and South-Western Railway v. Ayr (Provost), [1912] A.C. 520—H.L. (Sc.)

Superior and Vassal — Railway — Lands Purchased by Railway Company under Compulsory Powers—Statutory Title—Conveyance not Registered within Six Months—Right of Superior to Demand Casualty.]—A company acquiring land under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, holds by a statutory tenure, independent of the immediate superior of the vendor; but where the conveyance is not in the form prescribed by the Act, and has not been registered within sixty days from the last date thereof, in accordance with section 80 of the Act, it operates only as a common law disposition, and the company may be liable to pay a casualty at the suit of the superior. The date of delivery is not the last date of the conveyance within the meaning of the section. Caledonian Railway v. Heriot's Trust (Governors), 84 L. J. P.C. 171; [1915] A.C. 1046—H.L. (Sc.)

Trust — Liability of Trustees — Breach of Trust—Action by Assumed Trustees to Recover Loss to Trust Estate Caused by Negligence of Original Trustee—Mora—Contributory Negligence—Right of Pursuers to Represent Beneficiaries — Interest — Rate of Interest.] — A testator, who died in 1858, by his trust disposition and settlement gave to his son, on his attaining the age of twenty-five, an option to purchase his dwelling house. In 1870 the son, who acted as agent in the trust, being then about to attain the age of twenty-five, announced to the trustees his intention to exercise this option, and the trustees signed and delivered to him a disposition of the house in his favour, which was duly recorded. The trustees took no steps either in 1870 or for seventeen years afterwards to obtain payment of the purchase money, and the money never was paid. In 1887, the testator's widow being then the sole surviving trustee, the pursuers were assumed as trustees, and they endeavoured to make the son account for the trust estate, but subsequently ceased their efforts owing to the refusal of the widow to allow her son to be sued. In 1902, on the death of the widow, the assumed trustees brought an action of accounting against the son, but the action proved abortive by reason of his bankruptcy and death. Between 1887 and 1902 the son was in a position to make good the purchase money. In 1909 the assumed trustees brought an action against the beneficiaries of a deceased trustee to recover the purchase money alleged to have been lost to the trust estate through his negligence as trustee. The defenders pleaded mora as a bar to the action:—Held, that the plea of mora was not sustainable against the pursuers suing as trustees on behalf of the beneficiaries, and that the defenders were jointly and severally liable, to the extent of which they were respectively lucrati from the estate of the deceased trustee, for the price of the house, with interest thereon at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum from the death of the widow. Schulze v. Tod or Lee's Trustees v. Dun, [1913] A.C. 213; [1913] S. Will — Holograph Letter — Preference between Bequests Expressed—General Direction to Pay Debts—Legacy of Capital Sum.] —A testator by a holograph letter, which by the law of Scotland is a testamentary writing, instructed his solicitor to pay to the appellant A., a single lady, on the first of each month after his death, the sum of 12*l.* 10*s.*, being at the rate of 150*l.* a year. "But in lieu of this I would prefer that as soon as you conveniently can, that the sum of 3,000*l.* should be taken from my life insurance funds and paid over to her." The testator's trust disposition contained a general direction for payment of debts, and the insurance funds, after paying off the charges upon them, amounted to 1,900*l.*:—Held, first, that the trustees were bound to pay over the capital sum of 3,000*l.* to A., and had no option to decide whether she was to receive the monthly allowance or the capital sum; and secondly, that the direction that 3,000*l.* should be taken from the testator's insurance funds and paid to A. in the circumstances marked the legacy as demonstrative and not specific. Dawson v. Reid, 113 L. Accretions Caused by Recession of Line of Ordinary High Water—Ownership of.]—The decision of the House of Lords in Rex v. Yarborough (2 Bligh, N.S. 147) conclusively determines that where land is added to the seashore by the gradual and imperceptible action of natural causes, the owner of the land adjoining the accretions acquires in them a good title against the Crown, notwithstanding the existence of marks or bounds, or other evidence by which the former, or a former, line of ordinary high water can be ascertained. The real question in every such case of accretion is whether during the process of accretion the progress of the accretion can be ascertained. Att.-Gen. v. M'Carthy, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 260—K.B. D.

Riparian Proprietor—Foreshore—Accretion — Reclamation — Easement — Possession for Less than Period of Prescription.] — Land abutting on the seashore, though specifically measured in title deeds, is not excluded from the operation of the rule by which the increment caused by natural and gradual accretion from the sea is added to riparian lands; but where an addition to lands is caused artificially by the execution of works of reclamation the doctrine of natural accretion does not apply.

Att.-Gen. for Nigeria v. Holt & Co.; Same v. MacIver & Co., 84 L. J. P.C. 98; [1915] A.C. 599; 112 L. T. 955—P.C.

Where works on the foreshore, intended to protect the adjacent lands from the invasion of the sea, have been carried out by the occupier with the knowledge and assent of the Crown, the foreshore rights originally attaching to such land before the reclamation are not thereby destroyed. There may be an easement to store goods on the land of another person, but there can be no easement over a tenement which the owner of the dominant tenement claims as his own. A transfer of the dominium of lands cannot be effected by possession for a period short of the full requisite period of prescription, without the presumption of a lost grant. Ib.

Removing Shingle from Foreshore—Information by Surveyor of District Council.]—An information was laid under the Harbours Act, 1814, by the appellant "as surveyor for and on behalf of the urban district council of S." against the respondent for unlawfully taking shingle from a portion of the shores of the port from which, by an order of the Board of Trade, the taking or removing of shingle was prohibited. Section 21 of the Harbours Act, 1814, gives one moiety of the penalty to the Crown and the other to the informer. The Justices being of opinion that the district council could not, being a corporation, sue for the penalty as common informer, dismissed the information as not well laid :—Held, that the appellant was the party before the Court as informer, and that the information was well laid. Lake v. Smith, 106 L. Sale by Auction—Prior Agreement with Auctioneer as to Disposal of Proceeds of Sale—Subsequent Agreement by Seller with Purchaser to Set off Price of Goods Purchased against Debt—Refusal of Purchaser to Pay Price to Auctioneer—Action by Auctioneer to Recover Whole of Purchase Price—Equitable Defence of Set-off—Right of Purchaser to Surplus only of Total Amount Realised by Sale.]—The plaintiffs, who were auctioneers, were employed by F. to sell certain cattle for him by auction. Prior to the sale F. had given orders to certain of his creditors directing the plaintiffs to pay these creditors out of the proceeds of the intended sale, and the plaintiffs agreed to act upon these orders. Pending the sale F. had also become indebted to the plaintiffs for money lent and paid and for services rendered upon the terms that they should repay themselves out of the proceeds of the sale. The sale was held upon the condition (inter alia) that the price of any cattle bought was to be paid to the plaintiffs. Whilst the sale was proceeding an arrangement was entered into between F. and the defendant, to whom F. was indebted to a considerable extent, that the price of any cattle bought by the defendant might be set off against F.'s debt to the defendant, but this arrangement was not communicated to the plaintiffs either during, or directly after, the sale. The defendant bought a number of cattle at the sale, the purchase price of which exceeded the amount of F.'s debt to him, and being known to the plaintiffs was allowed to remove the cattle without having paid for them. Excluding the amount of the defendant's purchases, the plaintiffs received sufficient money to satisfy their lien for commission and charges in respect of the sale, but not sufficient to pay F.'s creditors or their own debt; but, including the amount of the defendant's purchases, the sale realised sufficient to satisfy all claims, leaving a small surplus. The defendant having refused to pay the plaintiffs the price of the cattle which he had bought, upon the ground that he was entitled to rely on the arrangement with F. as to set-off, the plaintiff brought an action to recover the whole of the price of the cattle bought by the defendant. Before action the defendant tendered and subsequently paid to the plaintiffs the difference between the amount of F.'s debt to him and the price of the cattle which he had bought :—Held, that the defendant was not entitled, under the circumstances, to set up as an equitable defence to the plaintiffs' claim the arrangement as to set-off made between him and F., inasmuch as such arrangement could not defeat the previous agreement between F. and the plaintiffs as to the disposition of the proceeds of the sale, on the faith of which agreement the plaintiffs had acted, and that the defendant was only entitled to be paid by the plaintiffs the surplus remaining after deducting from the total amount realised by the sale the debts owing to the other creditors, as well as what was owing to the plaintiffs in respect of F.'s debt to them and their commission and charges for conducting the sale, this surplus being the only amount which the plaintiffs would have been bound to pay over to F. Manley v. Berkett, 81 L. Will — Subsisting Annuities — Disentailing Deed—Re-settlement.]—A testator who died in 1892 devised certain freehold estates to the use of his son A. for life, and from and after the decease of A. to the use of his first and other sons successively, according to their respective seniorities in tail male with divers remainders over. He also charged his settled estates with the payment of certain annuities, some of which were still subsisting at the date of this summons. A. died in 1912, and his eldest son B. thereupon became tenant in tail in possession of the settled estates. In April, 1914, B. executed a disentailing deed which was duly enrolled, limiting the settled estates to his own use in fee-simple. Some days later he executed a settlement on his marriage of a part of the estates originally settled by the will to the use of himself for life, with remainders over :—Held, that, notwithstanding that there was no term limited to secure the annuities under the will nor any trust for their payment, the subsistence of the annuities gave rise to a compound settlement of the estates comprised in the re-settlement, consisting of the will, the disentailing deed, and the re-settlement. Trafford's Settled Estates, In re, 84 L. Trust for Accumulation of Income.] — A testator devised his real estate to his trustees to the use that they should receive the rents, profits, and annual income thereof until A. attained the age of twenty-seven years, paying to A. thereout during such time the annual sum of 400*l.*, and to accumulate the surplus, which should devolve upon the same uses as the property itself, and, subject thereto, to the use of A. during his life, with remainder over. A. had attained the age of twenty-four years at the date of the testator's death in 1910 :—Held, that A. was a tenant for life, or a person having the powers of a tenant for life, of the estate within the meaning of section 58, sub-section 1 (vi.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882. Llewellyn, In re; Llewellyn v.

Executory Gift Over—Infants.]—A testator by his will devised certain freehold property upon trust for his daughter for life, and after her death for her children who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry. The daughter died in July, 1910, leaving four children, the eldest of whom attained twenty-one in February, 1909:—Held, that the eldest child was entitled to the entirety of the rents until the next child attained a vested interest, and therefore was a person having the powers of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 58, sub-s. 1 (ii.). Walmsley's Settled Estates, In re, 105 L. Assignment of Life Estate by First Tenant for Life to Second Tenant for Life—Merger—Power of Sale.]—Where the first tenant for life of settled lands has assigned his life estate to the second tenant for life under the settlement, so that the life estate of the former has become merged in that of the latter, the power of sale conferred on a tenant for life by the Settled Land Acts can be exercised by the second tenant for life, notwithstanding the provisions of section 50 of the Settled Land Act, 1882. Assignment of Interest of — Powers under Settled Land Act not Assignable—Consent of Assignee for Value to—Death of Assignee—Devise—Who Assignee for Value.]—A testator who was tenant for life in possession of settled real estate, with remainder to his eldest son for life, with remainders over, purchased such son's reversionary life estate from the son's trustees in bankruptcy and assigned it to a trustee upon trust to be dealt with as he should direct to prevent a merger of his own life estate. By his will the testator devised this reversionary life interest to be held upon the trusts and limitations declared by his will of his real estates, which he devised to trustees during the life of his second son without impeachment of waste, upon trust to pay such annual sum for the benefit of such son as they should in their discretion think proper, so long as he should be under the age of twenty-five years, with all the powers vested in trustees by section 42 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, during the minority of an infant, and until he should attain twenty-five to accumulate the residue of such income; and upon further trust that when such son should attain twenty-five, if no act should have been done whereby the equitable life estate thereinafter given to him would have become vested in some other person, to permit him to receive the income during his life or until some act should be done whereby such life estate or some part thereof would, if belonging absolutely to him, have become vested in some other person; and on the failure in his lifetime of the trust declared in his favour the trustees were to continue in possession during the rest of his life and apply the income for his support and the support of the other persons therein mentioned in such manner as they should think proper. After the death of the testator his eldest son, as tenant for life, retaining his power of sale under section 50, sub-section 1 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, contracted to sell part of the settled real estates, with the consent of the trustees of the will as assignees for value within the meaning of section 50, sub-section 3 of that Act. The purchasers, however, contended the trustees were not assignees for value:—Held, that the trustees of the will were assignees for value within the meaning of section 50, sub-section 3 of the Act, whose consent was necessary and sufficient for the exercise of the power of sale preserved to the tenant for life by section 50, sub-section 1 of that Act; that section 50, sub-section 3 ought not to be confined to the actual assignee for value; but must be intended to extend to those who claimed under him, and that the trustees of the will were entitled to consent on the ground that they were for the moment, and might be during the whole existence of the assigned estate, entitled to the whole of the assignees's interest in it for the purpose of giving effect to the assignee's intention as shewn by his will, being invested during such period with full powers of management both under the Act and otherwise. Mountgarret and Moore's Contract, In re, 84 L. Conflicting Powers of Sale of Trustees and Tenant for Life—Consent of Tenant for Life.]—Where the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 56, requires the consent of the tenant for life to the exercise by trustees of their power of sale, a purchaser from the trustees is entitled to evidence that the tenant for life has in fact consented, but cannot insist on the concurrence of the tenant for life in the conveyance. Pope and Easte's Contract, In re, 80 L. Trust to Retain or Sell — Discretionary Power to Postpone—Tenant for Life—Power or Trust for Sale.]—A devise and bequest of real and personal property to trustees upon trust either to retain the whole or any part thereof or at such time and in such manner as the trustees should think fit to sell the same and invest the proceeds (which, with any part of the real and personal property for the time being remaining uninvested, were all thereinafter referred to as "the trust estate"), with a discretionary power to postpone the sale, the income until sale to be applied upon the same trusts as were declared of the income of the trust estate, and there being no subsequent gifts or expressions in the will which shewed any intention that the real estate should remain and be dealt with as such, amount to a trust or direction to sell within the meaning of section 63 of the Settled Land Act, 1882. Johnson, In re; Cowley v. Public Trustee, 84 L. On an application by a tenant for life for leave to sell heirlooms, the Court has to consider not only the interests of the tenant for life, but also the interests of other persons; and it is for the tenant for life to shew that the sale would be for the benefit of those to come after him. Where, therefore, it was only shewn that the sale of heirlooms would be for the benefit of the tenant for life, the Court refused the application. Sebright, In re; Sebright v. Brownlow, 56 S. Equitable Tenant for Life—Stone Quarries—Covenant to Fill up—Compensation for Breach—Casual Profit—Capital or Income.]—C. T. D., who died in 1891, by his will appointed the plaintiffs executors and trustees, and devised his residuary real estate upon trust to pay the net rents and profits thereof, including the produce of mines and quarries, to or permit the same to be received by the defendant T. B. D., and after the death of the defendant upon the trusts in the will mentioned. The testator gave the trustees powers of managing real estate and of determining what part of the produce of mines and quarries should be applied as capital or income. By lease dated February 7, 1898, which lease was determined on June 12, 1912, the defendant as tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, demised to lesees a quarry, part of the real estate. The lessees covenanted that when part of the quarry was exhausted they would fill it up fit for agricultural purposes "under a penalty to be recovered as rent in arrear or as liquidated damages by the lessor of 150*l.* an acre." The lessees left 2 a. 3 r. 5 p. uncovered in breach of their covenant, and arranged to pay at the rate of 150*l.* per acre in respect of this land a sum amounting to 416*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, which sum had been paid to the defendant. On a summons by the trustees asking whether the defendant was entitled to retain all or any part of such sum or whether it should be held by them as capital,—Held, following Lacon's Settlement, In re; Lacon v. Lacon (80 L. J. Ch. 610; [1911] 2 Ch. 17), that the defendant was entitled to retain such sum. Dealtry, In re; Davenport v. Dealtry, 108 L. T. 832—Eve, J.

Forfeiture Clause—Non-residence—Validity of Condition.]—A gift by a husband of his house to trustees in trust to allow his wife to reside in it rent free, she paying for repairs, insurance, &c., "and from and after the decease or second marriage of my said wife or of her ceasing to reside at the said dwelling-house" the same to fall into residue, does not prevent the wife from evacuating the house and exercising her power of leasing as tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, and receiving the rents received from such letting for her own use and benefit during her widowhood. Freme, In re; Samuel v. Freme, 56 S. J. 362—Neville, J.

Licensed Premises—Compensation Charges—Void Covenant in Lease—Best Rent not Reserved—Lease Void against Remaindermen.]—At the coming into operation of the Licensing Act, 1904, a public house comprised in a settlement had been leased to a brewery company for a term of fourteen years from 1902 at a rent of 150*l.* The Licensing Act, 1904, s. 3, imposed certain charges on licensed premises for a compensation fund and allowed a part of such charges to be deducted by the licence holder from his rent, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary. The tenant for life objected to these deductions and ultimately agreed to grant a new lease at the same rent if the company would pay the whole of the charges. In 1906 he executed a fresh lease to the brewery company for a term of twenty-one years at the rent of 150*l.*, the company covenanting to pay the rent without deduction and to pay all charges, including all payments to the compensation fund under the Licensing Act, 1904. The company in fact paid these charges for many years, though not legally obliged to do so. In an action by the remaindermen against the company for a declaration that the lease was not binding upon them,—Held, first, that the rent agreed to be paid was 150*l.* plus the amount of the deductions under the Licensing Act, 1904; secondly, that the rent actually reserved was 150*l.* subject to deductions; and thirdly, that the lease was not a valid lease under the provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1882, on the grounds (a) that it did not reserve the best rent that could reasonably be obtained, and (b) that it contained no valid covenant for the payment of the rent actually agreed upon. Pumford v. Butler & Co., 83 L. Power Contained in Settlement to Grant Leases—Lease Granted by Tenant for Life under the Powers Conferred by the Settled Land Acts—Rents of Mining Leases to be Set Aside as Capital Money—"Contrary intention."]—Under section 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, a portion of the rents of a mining lease are to be set aside as capital money unless a contrary intention appears in the settlement. If a contrary intention appears in the settlement section 11 is excluded, although the tenant for life grants the mining lease under the Act and not under the power contained in the settlement. Rayer, In re; Rayer v. Rayer, 82 L. Unopened Mines—Mining Leases—Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Proportion of Mining Rent to be Set Aside as Capital—"Contrary intention."]—A power in a will authorising trustees to let lands does not empower them to grant a lease of unopened mines. Where such a lease is granted under the provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 11, a gift by the will to the tenant for life of rents and profits is not sufficient evidence of a contrary intention to the provisions of the section, and does not entitle him to receive the full mining rents, and he is therefore only entitled to one fourth part thereof. Daniels, Setting Aside Part of Rent as Capital—Contrary Intention in Settlement—Tenant in Fee with Executory Gift over—Tenant for Life without Impeachment of Waste.]—A testator by his will gave to his wife his real and personal estate "absolutely in full confidence that she will make such use of it as I should have made myself and that at her death she will devise it to such one or more of my nieces as she may think fit" and in default to be divided equally among the surviving nieces. The widow granted mining leases under the Settled Land Act, 1882:—Held, that she was entitled to the whole of the rents and royalties, there being a sufficient expression of "a contrary intention" to exclude the application of section 11 of the Act. Hanbury's Settled Estates, In re (No. 2), 82 L. Opened or Unopened Mines—Right of Tenant for Life to Rents and Royalties under Leases—Leases Granted by Settlor—Leases Granted by Trustee of Settlement—Devise of Mines on Trust for Sale—Power of Postponement—Income till Sale to go as Income of Proceeds.]—An "opened" mine is a mine which is in course of being worked; and a mine may be being worked if a shaft has been sunk down to it and the mine is capable of being worked through the shaft whenever opportunity arises, though no coal has in fact been hewn. Semble, that mines which are part of seams other parts of which are being worked are "opened" mines, even if they have to be worked by following the seam by means of fresh pits. Morgan, In re; Vachell v. Morgan, 83 L. A testator gave all his real and personal estate on trust for sale, conversion, and investment, and to hold the investments, as to two equal fourth parts, on trust to pay the income to two persons during their lives. He declared that the sale and conversion might be postponed for so long as his trustees should think proper, and that the rents, profits, and income arising from unconverted parts of the estate should be paid and applied in the same manner as the income of the proceeds of sale and conversion; and he gave his trustees full powers of leasing. The testator owned valuable mining property, part of which had been leased by him in his lifetime by a lease which was still subsisting at his death. The trustee afterwards granted leases of the remaining mining property. Some of it had not been worked during the testator's life, though it had been intended ultimately to work it by a pit sunk by the lessees of the part leased by the testator. The remaining part of the land leased by the trustee had been worked during the testator's life. The working had been discontinued, but he had intended to resume it:—Held, that the tenants for life were entitled to the full rents and royalties under all the leases. Ib.

Costs and Expenses of Valuation—Reversion Duty—Increment Value Duty.]—A tenant for life of settled land may provide for the payment of increment value duty and reversion duty out of capital moneys. By virtue of section 39 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, coupled with section 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, a tenant for life may charge the settled estates with any reasonable expenses incurred by him in connection with the original site valuation thereof. Smith-Bosanquet's Settled Estates, In re (107 L. General Power of Appointment—Appointment of Life Estate—Sale by Tenant for Life—No Antecedent Estate or Charge—Trustees with Power of Sale of Instrument Creating the Power—Power of Sale Exhausted—Trustees for Purposes of Settled Lands Act.]—A testator by his will appointed trustees with power to sell his freehold estates, and gave his widow, who was made tenant for life thereunder, a general power of appointment by will. By her will she appointed the real estate to the use of G. for life, with remainder over in strict settlement. There was no subsisting estate or charge antecedent to the life estate created under the general power. G. having agreed to sell the property in exercise of his powers as tenant for life,—Held, that the limitations created by the exercise of the general power of appointment were not limitations under the testator's will, that the settlement under that will was therefore spent and the power of sale conferred on the trustees exhausted, and that in order to make a title trustees of the widow's will for the purposes of the Settled Land Act must be appointed. Gordon and Adams' Contract, In re; Pritchard's Settled Estate, In re, 83 L. Lands Settled Subject to an Annuity—Power of Sale in Trustees during Life of Tenant for Life—Sale by Tenant for Life under Land Purchase Acts—Death of Tenant for Life after Purchase Money Advanced — Remaindermen Absolutely Entitled—Payment out of Residue — Appointment of Trustees for Purposes of Settled Land Acts.] — Lands settled subject only to an annuity (not secured by a term) were, in the events that happened, limited to F. for life, with remainder to P. absolutely. By the settlement, the trustees were given a power of sale during the life of F. F. sold the settled lands under the Land Purchase Acts, and died after the purchase money had been advanced. The final schedule had been settled on the assumption that the residue would be paid to the trustees of the settlement. The annuitant objected, claiming to be put on the final schedule on the ground that the settlement was at an end :—Held, first, that, as a matter of form, an order should be made continuing the proceedings in the name of P.; and secondly, that the moneys in Court being capital moneys arising from the sale of the settled lands, which had been carried through by the tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, the Court had power to appoint trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts and to pay the residue to them to be held upon the trusts of the settlement. Semble, on the death of F. the trustees of the settlement ceased to be trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts. Mundy and Roper's Contract, In re (68 L. Sale by Tenant for Life—Compound Settlement — Conveyance of Land in England to Uses of Irish Settlement — Documents Comprised in Settlement and Prior to Commencement of Title — Trustees of Settlement Appointed by Irish Court—Purchaser's Right to Enquire into Source of Purchase Moneys of English Land.]—By a contract, made in 1911, for the sale of freehold hereditaments in England by a tenant for life acting under the powers of the Settled Land Acts it was provided that the title should commence with two mortgages of 1874. The settlement under which the vendor was tenant for life was a compound settlement, and comprised a series of documents commencing with a will of 1836 and ending with a re-settlement of 1902. Down to 1910 the lands subject to the settlement were all situate in Ireland. In that year the property contracted to be sold was conveyed to the uses of the compound settlement, the conveyances containing recitals that the present vendor, as tenant for life, had directed the application in the purchase of the property of capital moneys in the hands of the trustees arising from sales of settled estates in Ireland, and which by virtue of the compound settlement and the Settled Land Acts were liable to be so invested. The present trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts had been appointed by the High Court in Ireland in 1908. The present purchasers made requisitions for the production of the probate or office copy of the will of 1836; for the appointment of trustees of the compound settlement by the High Court in England; and for proof that the purchase moneys of the property now being sold had been duly acquired by the trustees by a proper sale of part of the settled estates. The vendor furnished an abstract of a disentailing deed of 1860, reciting the will of 1836, and informed the purchasers that the purchase moneys of the property on the purchase in 1910 had arisen from sales under the Irish Land Purchase Acts :—Held, that the requisition as to the will was precluded by section 3, sub-section 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881; that the purchase of land in England out of moneys subject to an Irish settlement did not make an appointment of trustees by the English Court necessary; and that the purchasers were not entitled to require more information as to the source of the purchase moneys than that afforded by the conveyance of 1910. Arran (Earl) and Knowlsden, In re, 81 L. Tenant for Life — Not Impeachable for Waste—Lease of Mansion House—Breach by Lessee of Covenant to Keep in Repair—Money Paid as Damages — Person Entitled.] — A tenant for life, not impeachable for waste, in 1888 granted, with the consent of the trustees of the settlement, a lease of the mansion house comprised in the settlement for twenty-one years, the lessee covenanting to keep the mansion house (which the lessor had put in repair) in good and substantial repair. The lessor died during the currency of the lease, and on its expiry the succeeding tenant for life, who also was not impeachable for waste, claimed and was paid a sum of money as damages for breach of the covenant :—Held, that section 53 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, had no application as the tenant for life was not exercising any power under the Settled Land Acts, but was only asserting his legal right under a covenant which ran with the land, and that the money must be taken to represent the damages which he had suffered, and was therefore not payable to the trustees of the settlement as capital money, but could be retained by him for his own benefit. Noble v. Cass (2 Sim. 343) applied. Mitchell v. Armstrong (17 T. Capital Money Arising from Sale of Leaseholds — Purchase of Annuity — Direction to Trustees to Pay Rates—Loss of Benefit—Condition Tending to Prevent Sale.]—A testator directed his trustees to permit his wife to occupy his leasehold house, they paying the rates, taxes, and outgoings in respect thereof. The widow having sold the unexpired term of the lease,—Held, that the purchase money must be invested in an annuity for the full term of the lease, which would be paid to the widow during her life and then fall into residue. Held, also, that the widow was not entitled to any compensation for the loss of the benefit given to her by the direction to pay rates, taxes, and outgoings. Trenchard, In re; Ward v. Trenchard (16 T. Heirlooms—Heirlooms Settled upon Corresponding Trusts to Land — Estate Duty — Succession Duty—Interest—Jointure—"Free from all deductions."] — Under a settlement made in 1889, whereby the Egmont estates and certain heirlooms were settled in strict settlement, the seventh Earl of Egmont became tenant for life and the eighth earl tenant for life in remainder. The seventh earl died in 1897, and no estate duty or succession duty was then paid upon the heirlooms. In 1897, the eighth earl, in exercise of a power contained in the settlement, granted to his wife during her life a yearly rentcharge "free from all deductions." Upon the death of the eighth earl in 1910, the Crown claimed payment of the duties which became payable on the death of the seventh earl, together with interest thereon. The trustees had in their hands investments representing capital moneys arising under the settlement, and also money representing rents accrued during the lives of the eighth and present earls:—Held, that as the tenants for life were liable to keep down interest on charges, the interest on both the succession duty and the estate duty on the heirlooms must be paid by the trustees out of the money representing income of the estate accruing during the lifetime of the two successive tenants for life; that capital money raised under the Settled Land Acts from other parts of the settled property might be expended in discharging incumbrances, including the estate and succession duty, on the heirlooms; and that according to the true construction of the settlement the succession duty on the jointure should not be deducted therefrom, but must be paid out of capital moneys. Egmont's (Earl) Settled Estates, In re; Lefroy v. Egmont, 81 L. Freehold Ground Rents — Costs of Survey and Notices to Repair — "Action taken for protection of settled land"—Power of Court to Order Costs to be Borne by Capital.]—A testator settled an estate consisting of a large number of small houses let on long leases at ground rents amounting to 2,100*l.* a year. The trustees incurred an expenditure of 1,100*l.* in having a survey taken and notices of repair served on all the tenants, which notices had been complied with:—Held, that, notwithstanding a direction contained in the will directing that the costs of the management of the estate should be paid out of income, the Court, in the circumstances, had power to order the trustees' costs to be borne by the capital, as being costs of proceedings taken for the protection of the estate under the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 36. Tubbs, In re; Dykes v. Tubbs, 84 L. J. Ch. 539; [1915] 2 Ch. 137; 113 L. T. 395; 59 S. J. 508—C.A.

Assignment of Life Interest — Surveyor's Costs—Tenant for Life Required to Exercise his Powers — Costs Incurred by Tenant for Life.] — A tenant for life assigned his life interest in settled estates to an insurance company, and it was provided that he should receive an annuity out of the estates, which annuity was to be forfeited if he refused or neglected to exercise his powers under the Settled Land Acts when reasonably requested to do so by the company. He also covenanted not to exercise his powers as tenant for life without the company's consent, and to do all things reasonably required by them in relation to the exercise of his powers. On being requested by the company to sell a part of the settled estate he consulted surveyors as to the sufficiency of the price offered, and claimed that their fees were payable out of capital moneys:—Held, that those fees were incurred by the tenant for life in relation to the proposed exercise of his power of sale and on account of his position as a trustee for all parties entitled under the settlement, and were payable out of capital moneys. Held, further, that when the company required the tenant for life to exercise his powers in the future he was entitled to obtain proper advice, but that he was not entitled to initiate a scheme for the exercise of his powers, and that if, when asked to exercise his powers, he was afforded, at the expense of the estate, reasonable information and advice, that fact would have an important bearing upon the question whether further costs were properly incurred by him. Hope, In re; Tarleton v. Hope, 28 T. L. R. 93—Warrington, J.

Costs of Proceedings for Recovery of—Proceedings Proposed to be Taken, but Subsequently Abandoned—Payment of Costs out of Capital.]—Section 36 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, empowering the Court to order payment out of capital of the costs of proceedings taken or proposed to be taken for the recovery of settled land, is not limited to proceedings proposed to be taken at the date when the order is made, but extends to proceedings formerly proposed to be taken, but never actually taken. Wilkie's Settlement, In re; Wade v. Wilkie,

Costs were incurred, at the request of a tenant for life, in connection with proceedings for the recovery of land alleged to be subject to the settlement; but on the advice of counsel the proceedings were abandoned:—Held, that the Court could make an order for the payment of the costs out of capital under section 36. Ib.

Semble, that the order could have been made apart from the Act. Ib.

Payment of Costs — Petition for Faculty Compromised — Protection of Estate.] — The costs of the petitioner and the fees and expenses of the Chancellor of the diocese of a petition for a new faculty made to the Ecclesiastical Courts by the lord of the manor, which petition alleged a lost faculty and also that the lord had exercised certain privileges of seating accommodation and burial in the south aisle of his parish church since the year 1740, and which was compromised, the lord being granted certain rights of seating and of burial, and of erecting memorial tablets in such aisle, were held to be costs for the protection of the settled land within the meaning of section 36 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and accordingly the Court could order such costs to be paid out of capital moneys. As to the costs of the vicar on such a petition, quære. Mosley's Settled Estates, In re, 56 S. J. 325—Neville, J.

"Incumbrance" — Repair of Highway.] — Whether a liability to repair a highway ratione tenuræ is an "incumbrance" within the meaning of section 21, sub-section (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, quære. Stamford and Warrington (Earl), In re; Payne v. Grey (No. 2), 80 L. A liability to repair a highway ratione tenuræ is not an "incumbrance" within the meaning of section 21, sub-section 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and trustees of a settled estate are not justified in using capital moneys in their possession in order to free the estate from the liability. Hodgson's Settled Estates, In re; Altamont (Countess) v. Forsyth, 81 L. b. Improvements.

Conversion of Land into Building Land—Erection of Estate Office.]—Where a settled estate is proposed to be developed as a building estate and it is found necessary to build an estate office on the estate for the purpose of the development, and the Court is satisfied that the erection of an estate office is necessary or proper in connection with the conversion of the land into building land or for securing the full benefit of such conversion, the Court will sanction the cost of the erection of the estate office out of capital moneys under the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 25, sub-s. xvii. De Crespigny Settled Estate, In re, 83 L. Coal Mines—Statutory Requirements—Payment out of Capital.]—The alterations in and additions to the plant and equipment of coal mines which are imposed upon mine owners by the Coal Mines Act, 1911, are improvements authorised by the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 25 (xix.) and (xx.), and may therefore be paid for out of capital money arising under the Act. Hanbury's Settled Estates, In re (No. 1), 82 L. Open Space—Golf Course and Club House.]—The construction of a golf club house and the laying out of a golf course held to be an improvement within the meaning of section 25, sub-section xvii. of the Settled Land Act, 1882, as being an "open space." De la Warr's (Lord) Settled Estates, In re, 27 T. Development of Estate—Golf Course—Disturbance of Agricultural Tenant—Compensation — Payment out of Capital Moneys.] — Capital money arising under the Settled Land Act, 1882, may not be expended in paying compensation to an agricultural tenant from year to year, under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, on terminating his tenancy, even though it be necessary to terminate his tenancy in order to effect a duly authorised improvement consisting in a golf course under the first-named statute. De la Warr's (Earl) Cooden Beach Estate, In re, 82 L. "Annual rental"—Carriage Drive—"Private road" — Footpaths — Fencing.] — The words "annual rental" in sub-section iv. of section 13 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, mean the total amount of the rents payable by the several tenants to the landlord or his agent; so that, if any part of the land is temporarily vacant, one is entitled for the purpose of applying the sub-section to treat it as producing the rent which a tenant occupying it usually pays. Deductions from the gross rental should be made for property tax, but not for mortgage interest, tithes, land tax, drainage rates, or rentcharge. Windham's Settled Estate, In re, 81 L. J. 1. Articles.

Tenant in Tail—Nature of Estate Settled—Post-nuptial Settlement — Usual Clauses in Settlement — Hotchpot Clause — Cross-remainders—Election.]—By marriage articles, B., the intended husband, being entitled as tenant in tail in remainder to three estates the M., W., and P. estates, covenanted to convey to trustees all real estate to which he was, or during the coverture should become, entitled in fee tail in possession or remainder for all such estate as he could convey therein. It was thereby declared that the trustees should stand seised of all such real estate on trust for B. for life with remainder to C., the intended wife, for life for her separate use without power of anticipation. And it was also declared that, after the said life estates, the trustees should stand seised of all such real estate with remainder to the child or children or remoter issue of the said intended marriage, or any or either of them, in such manner as B. should, by the settlement to be made, appoint. And it was further agreed that the settlement should contain all powers, provisions, clauses, and agreements as are usually inserted in marriage settlements as B. should by the settlement agree to. By post-nuptial settlement B., with the consent of the protector and the concurrence of C., disentailed the M. estate and conveyed it to the trustees of the articles, on trust after his own life estate to raise a jointure for C., and 2,000*l*. for portions for younger children as B. and C. should appoint, and, subject thereto, to the eldest son in tail. In execution of that power B. and C. jointly appointed the 2,000*l*. among three children, to be raised after the death of the husband, and in priority to the wife's jointure. By a subsequent disentailing deed B. disentailed the W. estate to his own use, and did not re-settle it. By his will he purported to leave it absolutely to C. B. died without disentailing the P. estate, and the next tenant in tail, the eldest son of the marriage, subsequently disentailed:—Held, first, that the articles settled a voidable estate in fee-simple in all the estates; that, as regards the M. estate, the effect of the disentailing deed and re-settlement was to capture the fee-simple of the estate for the trusts of the marriage articles, and that the settlement must be disregarded so far as it was inconsistent with the articles; secondly, that a hotchpot clause, and a clause providing for cross-remainders, should, in view of the provisions contained in the articles, be read into the articles; thirdly, that the attempt in the settlement to give the portions priority to the wife's life estate and to cut down her life estate to a jointure was void as being inconsistent with the articles; fourthly, that the W. estate was captured by the articles on the execution of the disentailing deed; fifthly, that the P. estate was not captured by the articles, the settlor having died without executing a disentailing deed, but that the eldest son who disentailed, if he elected to take under the settlement and articles, must bring in the P. estate as if he had disentailed it to the uses of the articles, and must also bring the value of his tenancy in tail in the M. estate into hotchpot. Blake v. Blake, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 343—Barton, J.

2. Covenants to Settle.

See also Vol. XII. 814, 1494.

Gift from Husband to Wife.]—There is no general rule that a covenant in a marriage settlement to settle after-acquired property cannot capture gifts from the husband to the wife. Ellis's Settlement, In re (78 L. J. Ch. 375; [1909] 1 Ch. 618), and Plumptre's Settlement, In re (79 L. J. Ch. 340; [1910] 1 Ch. 609), followed. Kingan v. Matier, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 272) not followed. Leigh-White v. Ruttledge, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 135—Barton, J.

A marriage settlement made in 1865 contained a covenant by the husband and wife separately to settle any sum or sums, stocks, or other personal estate exceeding in amount or value 200*l*. at any one time which should during the coverture "be given or bequeathed to, or in any manner vest in," the wife. In 1897 the husband, in consideration of natural love and affection, assigned absolutely to the wife a policy of insurance on his life for 6,000*l*. (with bonuses), and two mortgages for 500*l*. and 600*l*. respectively:—Held, these were captured by the covenant to settle. Ib.

Covenant to Settle any "interest in expectancy"—Prospective Interest under Limitation to Next-of-kin—Spes Successionis.]—By her will a testatrix gave a share of her residuary estate to her daughter W. for life, and directed that if W. died without issue the share was to go to W.'s next-of-kin as if she had not been married. The testatrix died in 1864, and in 1866 J., another daughter of the testatrix, married, and by her ante-nuptial settlement covenanted that any real or personal property of the value of 50*l*. or upwards to which she was then entitled "for any estate or interest whatsoever in possession reversion or expectancy" should be settled upon the trusts of the settlement. W. died in 1912 leaving J., who was then a widow, her sole next-of-kin :—Held, following Parsons, In re; Stockley v. Parsons (59 L. J. Ch. 666; 45 Ch. D. 51), that at the date of her marriage settlement J.'s prospective interest in W.'s share was of the nature of a mere spes successionis; and held, further, that, whether or not it was an "expectancy" within the meaning of the covenant, the covenant by J. to settle "any estate or interest . . . in expectancy" to which she was then entitled was too vague to be enforced. Mudge, In re, 83 L. J. Ch. 243; [1914] 1 Ch. 115; 109 L. T. 781; 58 S. J. 117—C.A.

Decision of Neville, J. (82 L. J. Ch. 381; [1913] 2 Ch. 92), reversed. Ib.

Wife's After-acquired Property — Contemporaneous Assignment of Part — Trust for Settlor—Contingent Interest Falling into Possession during Coverture.] — By a marriage settlement the wife covenanted to settle any property to which she should become entitled during the coverture. The wife was at the date of the marriage contingently entitled to her two brothers' shares in their parents' settlement funds. One of the brothers having died before attaining the age of twenty-one, she became entitled in possession, during the coverture, to one-half of his share :—Held, that such one-half share came within the covenant. Archer v. Kelly (29 L. J. Ch. 911; 1 Dr. & S. 300) followed. Williams' Settlement, In re; Williams v. Williams, 80 L. J. Ch. 249; [1911] 1 Ch. 441; 104 L. T. 310; 55 S. J. 236—Eve, J.

Money Received Subject to Covenant—Non-assignment to Trustees—Investment in Bonds—Bonds Followed—Statute of Limitations.] —In November, 1879, a sum of money was given to a wife, which was bound by a covenant of herself and her husband in their marriage settlement to settle her after-acquired property. The money was paid into the husband's banking account, upon which the wife had power to draw, and a month later part of it was invested in two Cape of Good Hope Bonds, which remained at the bank, the interest on them being credited to the account. The husband died in 1909 and the bonds came into possession of his executors. It was admitted that part of the money was represented by the two bonds, that they were bought for and belonged to the wife, and that they were in the husband's possession at his death. The trusts of the settlement were still subsisting for the wife and children of the marriage. Upon action by the trustees of the settlement to recover the bonds against the executors, who pleaded the Statute of Limitations,—Held, that the money the instant it was received became in equity subject to the trusts of the settlement, and that the bonds were therefore trust property which could be claimed by the trustees. Held also, that trustees of a marriage settlement are entitled to specific performance of a covenant to create a trust which is for the benefit of persons within the marriage consideration. Spickernell v. Hotham (Kay, 669) examined and explained. Pullan v. Koe, 82 L. J. Ch. 37; [1913] 1 Ch. 9; 107 L. T. 811; 57 S. J. 97—Swinfen Eady, J.

Yearly Rentcharge—Release—Second Mortgage to Secure 10,000*l.* to Widow after Death of Husband.]—A marriage settlement dated in 1884 contained a covenant for the settlement of the after-acquired property of the wife. The husband covenanted to secure to her a yearly rentcharge of 500*l.*, which he charged upon certain property. He subsequently executed a deed for that purpose. Some years later the wife released to her husband the rentcharge, and the husband mortgaged the property to the wife to secure the payment to her of 10,000*l.* This mortgage was subject to a first mortgage of even date. By his will the husband devised the property upon trust for his wife for life, with remainder to such son of his as should first attain twenty-one. After the death of the husband the widow, in exercise of her power as tenant for life, sold the property. The first mortgage was then paid off :—Held, that the widow was entitled to the 10,000*l.* with interest, and that the 10,000*l.* was not subject to the covenant to settle after-acquired property. Churchill v. Denny (44 L. J. Ch. 578; L. R. 20 Eq. 534) referred to. Biscoe, In re; Biscoe v. Biscoe, 111 L. T. 902—Joyce, J.

"May be entitled"—Residuary Interest under Subsequent Will.]—By an ante-nuptial agreement the husband agreed that he would forthwith execute a settlement "of all my share, property or interest, as well vested or accruing, to which I may be entitled under any will or settlement." The settlement was never made, but many years after the agreement had been executed the husband became entitled to residue under the will of his father :—Held, that such residue was not caught by the words of the agreement. Ridley's Agreement, In re; Ridley v. Ridley, 55 S. J. 838—Swinfen Eady, J.

Life Policy—Value.]—A marriage settlement contained a covenant to settle all real and personal property (if any) not thereinbefore settled to which the wife after the intended marriage or at any time during her then intended coverture should be or become entitled, either in possession, reversion, remainder, or otherwise, except jewels, &c., and except also any legacy or other property acquired at one and the same time not exceeding in amount or value the sum of 200*l.* The husband three years after the marriage effected an endowment policy for 500*l.* on his own life. He paid the premiums and died in 1909, and his wife received the money. There was one son surviving :—Held, that the value of the policy must be ascertained at the time it was effected, when it was not worth 200*l.*, and that the policy moneys were not caught by the covenant. Harcourt, In re; White v. Harcourt, 105 L. T. 747; 56 S. J. 72—Swinfen Eady, J.

Obligation to "make up" the Capital Held by Trustees to a Certain Sum — Whether Trustees Entitled to Receive Capital Sum Free of Death Duties.]—A father was a party to his son's marriage contract, which provided that a sum of 30,000*l.* should be vested in the trustees, to be made up as follows: First, by an immediate payment by the father of 20,000*l.*; secondly, by the appointment of the son to a share of a fund life-rented by the father, valued at the date of the contract at 6,250*l.*, but whose actual value could not be ascertained until the termination of the life-rent; and thirdly, by an obligation undertaken by the father binding his executors to pay to the trustees the sum of 3,750*l.*, or such other sum more or less as should "make up the sum of 30,000*l.* to be received by the trustees":—Held, that the father's obligation did not bind his estate to make good the total sum of 30,000*l.* free of all Government duties. Dundas' Trustees v. Dundas' Trustees, [1912] S. C. 375—Ct. of Sess.

Effect of Divorce—Property Coming to Wife after Decree Nisi but before Decree Absolute.]—A husband and wife by a marriage settlement covenanted to settle any property of the value of 200*l.* or upwards which the wife, or the husband in her right, should at any time become possessed of during the then intended coverture. A decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage was pronounced; but pending the decree being made absolute the wife became entitled under the will of her mother to property exceeding the value of 200*l.*:—Held, that the property came to the wife during the coverture and so was affected by the covenant in the settlement. Sinclair v. Fell, 82 L. J. Ch. 105; [1913] 1 Ch. 155; 108 L. T. 152; 57 S. J. 145; 29 T. L. R. 103—Warrington, J.

Hulse v. Hulse (40 L. J. P. 51; L. R. 2 P. & D. 259) and Norman v. Villars (46 L. J. Q.B. 579; 2 Ex. D. 359) applied. Pearson's Trusts, In re (26 L. T. 393; 20 W. R. 522), was in effect overruled by Norman v. Villars (supra). Ib.

Power of Appointment—Trust for Children in Default of Appointment—Forfeiture of Life Interest by Bankruptcy — Destination of Income until Appointment.] — Under a marriage settlement trust funds were settled upon the husband for life or until bankruptcy and subject thereto as he should appoint, and in default of appointment to the children of the marriage. The husband became bankrupt and had made no appointment. There were three children of the marriage, one of whom had issue:—Held, that a trust to accumulate income could not be read into the settlement, and therefore that until an appointment by the husband the income during the residue of his life went to the children of the marriage. Master's Settlement, In re, 80 L. J. Ch. 190; [1911] 1 Ch. 321; 103 L. T. 899; 55 S. J. 170—Eve, J.

Declaration of Trust—Farms—"Live and dead stock"—Whether Stud of Racehorses Included.]—A settlor, who had resettled his estates, made by a subsequent deed a declaration of trust that the trustees should be entitled to "the whole of the live and dead stock" to be found at his death on certain farms, and he afterwards removed to these farms a stud of thoroughbred racehorses. At the time of his death certain thoroughbred stock was on the farms:—Held, that the racehorses did not pass under the deed, as it must be construed as relating only to stock found in the ordinary way on the farms carried on as agricultural holdings. Cadogan Settled Estates, In re; Richmond and Gordon (Duke) v. Cadogan, 31 T. Settlement of Fund — Hotchpot Clause — After-acquired Property Clause — Trusts by Reference to those of Settled Fund—Treating Funds as Distinct for Purposes of Hotchpot Clause.]—By a marriage settlement a sum of 15,000*l.* belonging to the wife was settled on trust for the wife during the joint lives of herself and the husband and for the survivor for life, and on the death of the survivor on trust for the children of the marriage as the husband and wife or the survivor should appoint, and in default of appointment on trust for the children at twenty-one or marriage provided that no child who should take any part of "the said trust premises" under any appointment should be entitled to any share of the unappointed part without bringing the appointed part into hotchpot. In a later part of the settlement there was a provision for the bringing into settlement of the wife's other or after-acquired property, which was to be held on the trusts of the 15,000*l.* There was no express indication whether for the purposes of the hotchpot clause the 15,000*l.* and the property coming in under the after-acquired property clause were to be considered as one fund. There was a provision excepting from the after-acquired property clause property which, if taken by the wife, would go in satisfaction of the 15,000*l.* under the provisions of the instrument under which she took that sum. The husband and wife appointed the 15,000*l.* to a daughter on her marriage. A considerable amount of property had become subject to the settlement under the after-acquired property clause, and of this no appointment had been made:—Held, on the construction of the settlement, that the parties considered the funds to be distinct; that, apart from this, the Court could not treat them as amalgamated for the purposes of the hotchpot clause, since to do so would modify the trusts of the 15,000*l.*; and that the daughter was not bound to bring the 15,000*l.* into account in the division of the unappointed property. Cavendish Settlement, In re; Grosvenor v. Butler (No. 2), 81 L. Treating Original Settled Funds as Augmented by After-acquired Property for Purposes of Hotchpot Clause.]—By a marriage settlement certain funds were settled, subject to the life interests of the husband and wife, in trust for the children of the marriage as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and in default as the survivor should appoint, and in default in trust for the children of the marriage in equal shares at twenty-one or marriage, provided that no child who should take any part "of the said trust funds" under any appointment should be entitled to any share of the unappointed part without bringing the appointed part into hotchpot. The settlement contained a covenant to settle all after-acquired property to which the wife might become entitled, and the same was to be held upon such trusts, intents, and purposes, and subject to such of the powers, provisos, agreements, and declarations as had been declared by the settlement concerning the wife's fund. There were seven children of the marriage. In 1899 a joint appointment was made in favour of five of the seven children. Subsequently to this appointment a considerable sum of money became subject to the settlement under the after-acquired property clause, and both husband and wife died without having appointed this money and without having revoked or altered the appointment of 1899:—Held, that the settled funds and the after-acquired property fund must be treated as amalgamated and the hotchpot clause as applicable to both, and that the five appointees must bring their appointed shares into hotchpot before sharing in the unappointed money. Fraser Settlement, In re; Ind v. Fraser, 82 L. Limited Owners with Powers of Tenant for Life—Executors of Deceased Owner.]—A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees on trust to pay the income arising therefrom in equal shares to his children, and in the event of a child dying without issue, to divide his or her share of the income between the surviving children and the children of deceased children, who were to have their parents' shares. On the death of the last survivor of the children he directed the trustees to divide his estate in equal shares between his grandchildren or their descendants. A child of the testator dying leaving issue,—Held, that the child's share was payable to her executors till the death of the last surviving child. Also held, that the surviving children and the executors of the deceased child had the powers of a tenant for life with regard to the real estate. Johnson, In re; Johnson v. Johnson, 83 L. J. "Eldest son" — Exclusion of — Who Intended—Younger Son becomes Tenant for Life.] — The estate of an eldest son who attained the age of twenty-one years, but died a bachelor and intestate, in the lifetime of his father, and without having executed any disentailing assurance of the family property, was held entitled to share in the funds of the personalty settlement which were held by the trustees, in default of appointment, "upon the trusts following (that is to say), if there shall be but one child of the said intended marriage (other than such eldest or only son as aforesaid), in trust for that one child to be an interest vested in such child being a son at the age of twenty-one years or being a daughter at the age of twenty-one years or day of marriage which shall first happen. And if there shall be two or more children of the said intended marriage other than such eldest or only son as aforesaid then in trust for such two or more children in equal shares." Cavendish Settlement, In re; Grosvenor v. Butler (No. 1), 56 S. Younger Children — Estate Tail Barred by Eldest Son—Portions—Younger Son becoming Eldest Son — Exclusion.] — By a marriage settlement real estate was limited to uses under which W. became tenant for life with remainder to his first and other sons in strict settlement. By a settlement of personalty made on the same day it was declared that after the death of W. and his intended wife the trustees should stand possessed of the trust funds in trust for the children of the marriage "other than an eldest or only son or other son who before attaining the age of twenty-one years shall be or become the heir male or heir male apparent or" W., as W. and his wife should appoint. W.'s eldest son, who attained twenty-one, disentailed and resettled the estate and died before coming into the estate, so that a younger son, who attained twenty-one before the eldest son died, eventually succeeded to the estate:—Held, that the younger son was not excluded from a share in the settled personalty. Wrottesley's Settlement, In re; Wrottesley v. Fowler, 80 L. temporarily relinquishing her interest, the fund has not been dealt with, and nobody is injured by her previous action. Young, In re; Fraser v. Young, 82 L. J. Ch. 171; [1913] 1 Ch. 272; 108 L. T. 292; 57 S. J. 265; 29 T. L. R. 224—Swinfen Eady, J.

Legal Interests in Settled Realty—Omission of Words of Inheritance — No Evidence of Intention Dehors the Deed.] — By marriage settlement executed in 1843, reciting (inter alia) that the intended husband had agreed to make a suitable provision for the issue of the marriage and that he was to receive with his intended wife a marriage portion, certain lands, held under lease for ever, were (with others held for estates pur autre vie) conveyed to trustees and the survivor of them and the heirs of the survivor upon trust to permit the principal settlor to receive the rents and profits of the portion of the said lands conveyed by him for his life, then to permit the husband to receive the rents and profits of the whole for his life, then, subject to a jointure for the wife in case she survived, upon trust to permit the issue male, if any, of the intended marriage to receive the rents and profits in such shares as the husband, or the wife in case she survived him, should appoint, and in default of appointment, to permit the first and every other son and sons of the husband to receive the rents and profits in tail male according to seniority, and, in default of issue male, upon trust to permit the issue female, if any, of the intended marriage to receive the rents and profits in such shares as the husband or the wife, in case she survived him, should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to permit the issue female, if any, to receive the rents and profits as tenants in common and not as joint tenants, and, in default of all such issue, then upon trust to permit the right heirs of the husband to receive the rents and profits for ever. There was only one child issue of the marriage, a daughter, who duly entered into possession under the settlement, and subsequently sold the lands under the Land Purchase Acts. On a question arising as to the nature of the interest taken by the vendor :—Held, that from the provisions of the settlement it was clearly the intention of the parties that, in default of appointment, the issue female should take estates in fee-simple, and that the settlement should be treated as rectified accordingly, and the residue of the purchase money paid out to the vendor. Davis's Estate, In re, [1912] 1 Ir. Conveyance to Trustee of Equitable Interest in Freeholds, Copyholds, and Personalty Liable to be Laid out in Land—No Words of Limitation in Settlement.]—The rule that in an executed document the same words of limitation are necessary to convey an equitable estate in fee-simple as are necessary to convey a legal estate in fee-simple does not, having regard to the provisions of section 71 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, apply to personalty subject to a trust for investment in land; and the law was not altered in this respect by section 22, sub-section 5 of the Settled Land Act, 1882. Observations on that sub-section. Monckton's Settlement, In re; Monckton v. Monckton, 83 L. J. Ch. 34; [1913] 2 Ch. 636; 109 L. T. 624; 57 S. J. 836—Sargant, J.

By a settlement of 1908 a contingent equitable estate in fee-simple in freeholds, copyholds, and investments, and moneys held on the same trusts as capital moneys arising under the Settled Land Act, 1882, from the freeholds, was conveyed to a sole trustee without words of limitation, the habendum being obviously defective; though words of limitation occurred in the declaration of the beneficial interests. The trustee died in 1913 :—Held, that, as regarded the freeholds and, in the absence of any special custom, the copyholds, the trustee took a life estate only, and the limitations of the settlement had therefore determined. Irwin, In re; Irwin v. Parkes (73 L. But held that, as regarded the investments and moneys, the trusts of the settlement were still subsisting. Ib.

Equitable Fee-simple — Intention — Personalty.] — Although an equitable fee-simple does not pass as a rule without proper words of limitation, the intention of the whole deed must be taken into consideration, and accordingly, where the personalty was passed absolutely by the gift in the deed, the Court held that an intention had been shewn to pass the equitable fee-simple in the realty. Nutt's Settlement, In re; McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 84 L. Neglect of Duty — Omission to do Lawful Act Proper for Preserving Ship from Immediate Loss — Improper Look-out.] — The "neglect of duty" referred to in section 220 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, does not refer to the negligent performance of duty, but to the omission to perform the duty at all. Deacon v. Evans, 80 L. J. K.B. 385; [1911] 1 K.B. 571; 104 L. T. 99; 75 J. P. 162; 11 Asp. M.C. 550—D.

The master of a ship placed himself as look-out in a position from which any vessel within the half-mile area immediately in front of the stem was invisible to him, and through negligence or some other unexplained cause failed to notice the presence of another ship within a four and a half miles area immediately beyond the said half-mile area, with the result that the ships collided:—Held, that the master had not by neglect of duty omitted to do a lawful act—namely, place a look-out man in such a position as to be able to see at least one point on either side of the bow—proper and requisite to be done by him for preserving the ship from immediate loss, damage, or destruction within the meaning of section 220 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. Ib.

River Thames—"Master"—"Shall be on the bridge."]—Article 14 of the Thames By-laws, 1898, which provides that "the master of every steam vessel navigating the river shall be . . . on the bridge," must be construed with regard to the definition of "master" in article 4 as "the owner, master or other person . . . having or taking the command, charge or management of the vessel." And when a vessel is in charge of a compulsory pilot, article 14 does not forbid the voluntary but temporary absence of the master of the vessel from the bridge, when another competent officer is stationed there, and there are no special circumstances of difficulty, and no special matters within his knowledge of which he ought to be ready to inform the pilot. The Umsinga, 80 L. Fine Imposed on Master — "Expense caused . . . by the absence of the seaman" — Deduction of Fine from Wages Due to Seaman.]—A Chinaman serving as a seaman on a British ship deserted from the ship and entered the Commonwealth of Australia, leaving behind on board certain effects and wages due to him. The master of the ship was fined under section 9 of the Immigration Restriction Acts, 1901-1905, for permitting a prohibited immigrant to enter the Commonwealth:—Held, that the fine and the cost of the cable home to the owners of the ship in respect thereof were not "expenses caused to the master or owner of the ship by the absence of the seaman" within section 28, sub-section 1 (b) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, or "expenses caused by the desertion to the master or owner of the ship" within section 232 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and that therefore the master was not entitled to be re-imbursed out of the wages and effects of the Chinaman the amount of such fine and the cost of the cable home. Halliday v. Taffs, 80 L. J. K.B. 388; [1911] 1 K.B. 594; 104 L. T. 188; 11 Asp. M.C. 574; 75 J. P. 165; 27 T. L. R. 186—D.

Re-imbursement of "the expenses caused by the desertion to the master."]—The expenses which the master of a ship is entitled, under section 232 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and section 28 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, to be re-imbursed out of the wages or effects of a seaman who has deserted are confined to the expenses that are directly caused to the master or owner of the ship by the desertion, such as the excess of wages paid to a substitute engaged in place of the deserter at a higher rate of wages than that stipulated to be paid to the deserter, and other expenses due to the desertion, but they do not include damages for the detention of the ship by reason of the desertion. Deacon v. Quayle; Neate v. Wilson, 81 L. J. K.B. 409; [1912] 1 K.B. 445; 106 L. T. 269; 76 J. P. 79; 12 Asp. M.C. 125—D.

In determining whether any excess of wages has been paid by the master to the substitutes engaged in place of the deserters, an account, extending over the whole voyage, of the wages actually paid by the master as compared with the wages the master would have had to pay but for the desertion is not required to be taken, but merely an account extending over the period during which wages were paid to the substitutes engaged in place of the deserters, so that a master is entitled to be re-imbursed the excess of wages paid to the substitutes notwithstanding that there has been a saving of expenses through the non-engagement of substitutes for a certain period of time after the desertion. Ib.

Foreign-going Ship — Voyage "to end at such port in the United Kingdom or Continent of Europe (within home trade limits) as may be required by the master"—Complete Discharge of Cargo at Port within Home Trade Limits—Arrival of Ship at Port in United Kingdom — Bunkering for Another Voyage — Ship Required by Master to go to Another Port within Home Trade Limits.]—By an agreement a crew was engaged on a voyage within specified limits of time and space, which was "to end at such port in the United Kingdom or Continent of Europe within home trade limits as may be required by the master." Within the prescribed limits the ship arrived at Rotterdam, a port within home trade limits, where she finished discharging her cargo. The ship then proceeded to the Tyne, where she took on board 1,300 tons of bunker coals for another voyage. One of the seamen then claimed his discharge and wages on the ground that the voyage had ended there. The master refused to discharge the seaman upon the ground that the voyage was not completed, and subsequently required the crew to take the ship to Glasgow:—Held, that the fact that the ship took on board bunker coal to be used upon a subsequent voyage was not of itself sufficient to bring the voyage to an end, and that consequently the seaman was not entitled to his discharge in the Tyne. Haylett v. Thompson, 80 L. J. K.B. 267; [1911] 1 K.B. 311; 103 L. T. 509; 74 J. P. 480; 11 Asp. M.C. 512—D.

Signed Agreement for Wages—Oral Agreement for Payment of Extra Monthly Sum — Whether Extra Sum Recoverable.]—The plaintiff, who was a ship's steward, signed an agreement under sections 113 and 114 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, by which his wages were to be 10*l.* per month. For one or two voyages he was also allowed a commission of 5 per cent. upon the profits made by the bar of which he was in charge. The superintendent steward thereafter arranged with him that, instead of receiving a commission of 5 per cent. on the bar profits, he should be paid, in addition to his wages, a fixed sum of 5*l.* per month. This arrangement was not inserted in the agreement signed by the plaintiff. In an action by the plaintiff claiming 10*l.*, being the amount of such extra payment of 5*l.* for two months, the jury found that there was an agreement under which the plaintiff was to be paid the extra sum of 5*l.* per month:—Held, that as the jury found that the 5*l.* per month was due contractually, it was part of the plaintiff's wages and ought to have appeared in the agreement signed by him; and that as it did not so appear he was not entitled to recover. Thompson v. Nelson, Lim., Termination of Service by Reason of Wreck.]—An Atlantic liner left Southampton on September 20 on a voyage to New York, and shortly afterwards came into collision with another vessel. In consequence of the damage thereby caused to her she returned on the next day under her own steam to Southampton, and discharged her passengers and cargo, and after receiving temporary repairs there she proceeded to Belfast, and was there thoroughly repaired, and on November 29 she was able to proceed to sea. The owners having on September 22 discharged the crew and tendered them three days' wages, two members of the crew commenced proceedings against the owners claiming, under section 162 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, one month's wages as compensation for the damage caused to them by being improperly discharged. The plaintiffs had on September 16 signed articles by which they were to serve on board the ship for a voyage from Southampton to New York or other Atlantic ports trading as might be required until the ship returned to a final port of discharge in the United Kingdom for any period not exceeding twelve months, at monthly wages, and they had joined the ship on September 20. The defendants relied on section 158, which provides that "Where the service of a seaman terminates before the date contemplated in the agreement by reason of the wreck or loss of the ship . . . he shall be entitled to wages up to the time of such termination, but not for any longer period.": —Held (Kennedy, L.J., dissenting), that, inasmuch as the ship had by the damage caused to her by the collision been rendered incapable of continuing her voyage, the service of the plaintiffs had been terminated by reason of the wreck of the ship, and therefore the defendants were entitled to judgment. The Olympic, 82 L. J. P. 41; [1913] P. 92; 108 L. T. 592; 12 Asp. M.C. 318; 57 S. J. 388; 29 T. L. R. 335—C.A.

Suing for Wages in Court of Summary Jurisdiction — Decision "shall be final" — Appeal by Special Case.]—By section 164 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), it is provided that "a seaman or apprentice to the sea service, or a person duly authorised on his behalf, may, as soon as any wages due to him, not exceeding fifty pounds, become payable, sue for the same before a court of summary jurisdiction in or near the place at which his service has terminated, or at which he has been discharged, or at which any person on whom the claim is made is or resides, and the order made by the court in the matter shall be final." Certain seamen made claims upon the appellants, who were shipowners, for extra wages which had been promised to them by the captain of one of the ships of the appellants during the time that the ship was journeying from a foreign port to Southampton, and the Justices of Southampton allowed the claims. Upon the application of the respondents, however, the Justices agreed to state a Special Case for the consideration of the High Court:—Held, following the case of Westminster Corporation v. Gordon Hotels (77 L. J. K.B. 520; [1908] A.C. 142), that the judgment given by the Justices was final, and that there was no power to state a Case. Wills v. McSherry, 83 L. J. K.B. 596; [1914] 1 K.B. 616; 110 L. Declaration of War During Voyage—War Risk — Refusal to Continue Voyage — Additional Remuneration — Implied Authority of Master to Bind Owners.]—If circumstances arise during a voyage which were not in the contemplation either of the owners of the vessel or of the crew at the time the agreement of service was entered into—such as a declaration of war—and as a result the crew have reasonable cause for apprehending danger to life and limb, they are entitled to demand extra remuneration as a condition of continuing the voyage, and the master of the vessel has, in order to retain the services of the crew, implied authority from the owners to enter into an agreement on their behalf with the crew for the payment of such additional remuneration. Liston v. Detention of Ship in Enemy Port on Outbreak of Hostilities — "Loss" of Ship — Termination of Services of Seaman.] — By article 1 of the Hague Convention (No. VI.), 1907, where a merchant ship is in an enemy port at the outbreak of hostilities, "it is desirable" that it should be allowed to leave. By article 2, a ship unable to avail itself of this opportunity or not allowed to leave may not be confiscated, but may be detained by the enemy without compensation until the close of the war, or may be requisitioned by the enemy on payment of compensation. The defendant's ship was detained at Hamburg and not requisitioned on the outbreak of the war with Germany, and the crew interned:—Held, by the Court of Appeal (Swinfen Eady, L.J., and Bankes, L.J.; Phillimore, L.J., dissenting), affirming the decision of Rowlatt, J., that the service with the defendant of the plaintiff's husband, one of the crew, was not terminated by reason of the "loss" of the ship within the meaning of section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and that consequently the plaintiff, a person in whose favour an allotment note had been made by her husband, was entitled to recover from the defendant the sum allotted thereby out of her husband's wages in respect of the period succeeding the detention of the ship. Beal v. Horlock, 84 L. Attempting to Persuade Seaman to Refuse to Join "his ship" — Seaman Engaged, but Articles not Signed.] — C. was engaged at Whitby by the agent of the British steamship Japanese Prince to serve on board that steamer as a seaman, and was ordered to go to Middlesbrough to join the ship, the railway fare being advanced by the owners. C. went on board the steamer at Middlesbrough and his discharge book was taken and kept by an officer of the steamer. The next day C. was ordered to go to the Board of Trade offices to sign articles, and left the steamer with that object. Before C. signed the articles the appellant approached him and advised him not to go to sea on board the Japanese Prince. C. subsequently signed the articles, but in consequence of the appellant's advice did not proceed to sea, but remained on shore, leaving his discharge book and kit on board the Japanese Prince:—Held, that the Japanese Prince was C.'s ship notwithstanding that he had not signed the articles, and that therefore the appellant had been properly convicted under section 236, subsection 1 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, of attempting "to persuade a seaman or apprentice to neglect or refuse to join or proceed to sea in . . . his ship." Vickerson v. Crowe, 83 L. Ship Navigating within Compulsory Pilotage District—Ship Stopping Outside Port within Compulsory Pilotage District for Orders — Orders taken to her by Boat Coming out of Port—"Making use of any port in the district."]—Under section 11 of the Pilotage Act, 1913, "Every ship (other than an excepted ship) while navigating in a pilotage district in which pilotage is compulsory for the purpose of . . . making use of any port in the district . . . shall be either—(a) under the pilotage of a licensed pilot of the district; or (b) under the pilotage of a master or mate possessing a pilotage certificate for the district who is bona fide acting as master or mate of the ship." A ship, which was not an excepted ship, in the performance of her charterparty had to proceed to Dover to receive orders as to her port of discharge. She passed Dungeness and proceeded to Dover, where she stopped for half an hour about a quarter of a mile outside the end of the Admiralty Pier, when a boat came out of the port with orders for her to proceed to Hamburg, to which port she immediately proceeded. The London pilotage district extends to Dungeness, and the port of Dover is within that district. Neither the master nor the mate of the vessel held a pilotage certificate for the district:—Held, that the ship, by stopping outside the port of Dover for orders, was making use of that port within the meaning of section 11 of the Pilotage Act, 1913, and was therefore bound, while navigating in the London pilotage district for which pilotage is compulsory for the purpose of making use of a port in that district, to be under the pilotage of a licensed pilot of the district. Cannell v. Lawther, Latta & Co., 83 L. Delegation by Master of his Duty to Unpaid Pilot — Contributory Negligence.] — A pilot allowed to be in control of the plaintiff's ship by her master for his own convenience negligently ran her ashore off Barry, in the Bristol Channel. The pilot was a volunteer in the sense that he was not to be paid for piloting the ship until she reached Flatholm, which is beyond Barry. In an action brought by the shipowners against the pilot,—Held, that although the pilot was negligent, the master had no right to give up control of the vessel to an unpaid pilot, and was guilty of contributory negligence in so doing, and the owners therefore could not succeed in their action. The Bonvilston, 30 T. tion 620 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, to a certain maximum sum, which was less than the aggregate of the claims—it is not a defence to an action for the damages by one of the claimants that the defendant has paid into Court a sum of money sufficient to meet the proportionate part of the claim, which on a division of the above maximum sum amongst all the claimants according to the amount of their claims respectively would be due to the plaintiffs. The Court has no power to receive and distribute the fund rateably, and the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment, up to the maximum, for the full amount of their claim. Deering v. Targett, 82 L. Unseaworthy Ship—Liability of Owners—Master Servant of Owners.]—The plaintiffs shipped a cargo of cement on board a ketch for carriage from Northfleet to Fowey on the terms of a bill of lading dated June 17, 1913, which incorporated the conditions of a charterparty dated June 11, 1913. Both documents were executed by the master of the ketch, and contained no reference to the owners. In the course of the voyage the ketch sank, owing to its unseaworthy condition. The ketch belonged to two co-owners, of whom the defendant was the registered managing owner. There was no written document in existence containing the terms on which the ketch was worked, but it appeared from the evidence that it was worked on a system of thirds, under which the master kept two-thirds of the gross freights, and paid the crew and the costs of provisions and other expenses. The owners received the remaining one-third of the gross freights, subject to the deduction of harbour dues, towage, and brokerage, and they paid for the upkeep, repair, and insurance of the ship. The master engaged the crew, and he usually arranged the freights without consulting the owners beforehand. He could only be dismissed at the end of a voyage :—Held, that the master was not a bailee or hirer of the ship, but was the agent or servant of the owners, and that the defendant was therefore liable to the plaintiffs for the loss of the cargo of cement. Burnard v. Aaron (31 L. Sale of Ship before Execution of Contract—Both Sellers and Buyers of Ship Ready and Willing to Perform Charterparty—Refusal of Charterers to Load—Damages.]—By a charterparty of the kind known as a berth contract made between the claimants, owners of a ship, and the charterers, it was agreed that the ship should proceed to a certain port of loading and there load a complete cargo to be delivered at a certain port of discharge. Before the ship reached the port of loading the claimants sold her to a company with the benefit of the berth contract, and the purchasers declared that they accepted the execution of that contract. Notice was given on behalf of the claimants to the charterers that the sale had taken place, and that the buyers would carry out the terms of the berth contract with the charterers. The ship was tendered by the buyers at the port of loading to the charterers, but they refused to load on the ground that by the sale of the ship the claimants had put it out of their power to perform the berth contract, and that by the assignment of it their rights under it ceased. The claimants demanded damages from the charterers for refusing to load. The matter came before an umpire, who found as a fact that the ship was duly tendered under the berth contract, that the claimants and the purchasers were always ready and willing to fulfil that contract, and that the charterers had been guilty of a breach of contract, for which he assessed the damages :—Held, by Court of Appeal, that the findings of the umpire meant that the claimants were in fact able, and were also ready and willing, to fulfil the berth contract, not merely through the buyers of the ship, but personally; and that the charterers were not therefore entitled to refuse to load, and were liable in damages to the claimants for such refusal. Sorrentino v. Buerger, 84 L. Sub-charterparty — Loss of Freight by Collision — Bill of Lading Signed by Sub-charterers—Right of Sub-charterers to Sue for Bill of Lading Freight.]—The plaintiffs were the sub-charterers of the Ruggiero de Flores, which was damaged in a collision due to the negligent navigation of the defendants' ship. The owners of the Ruggiero de Flores recovered from the defendants a sum which included an amount for chartered freight. The present plaintiffs, who were not parties to the collision action, now claimed to recover from the defendants the difference between the charterparty freight and the bill of lading freight, which the Ruggiero de Flores was in course of earning at the time the collision took place. By the charterparty and sub-charterparty, which were practically in identical terms, the captain was to be under the orders of the charterers (or sub-charterers) as regards employment, agency, and other arrangements, but the charterers (or sub-charterers) were to indemnify the owners from all consequences or liabilities that might arise from the captain signing bills of lading. The cargo was shipped by the plaintiffs, and the mate's receipts were handed to the plaintiffs, who signed the bills of lading and gave the captain orders to deliver the cargo at a particular port, where, if the collision had not occurred, it would have been taken delivery of

by the plaintiffs' agent :—Held, that the plaintiffs had sufficient interest in and possession of the cargo to enable them to bring the action. The Okehampton, 83 L. J. P. 5; [1913] P. 173; 110 L. T. 130; 12 Asp. M.C. 428; 18 Com. Cas. 320; 29 T. L. R. 731—C.A.

Safe Port.]—A charterparty provided that a ship should "trade between any safe ports between Hamburg and Brest and the United Kingdom." The ship was ordered by the charterers to go to Craster, a port in the United Kingdom which was perfectly safe to make provided the sea were smooth, but which might become dangerous if a change of wind altered the conditions. At the time the vessel was ordered to Craster the sea was smooth :—Held, that the port was not a safe port within the meaning of the charterparty. Johnston v. Saxon Queen Steamship Co., 108 L. T. 564; 12 Asp. M.C. 305—Rowlatt, J.

The term "port" in a charterparty is to be taken in a commercial sense and has not the same meaning as that given to it by pilotage and revenue Acts. In the case of King's Lynn it means the dock at that place. The expression "safe port" in a charterparty means a port to which a vessel can get laden as she is and at which she can lay and discharge, always afloat. Hall Brothers Steamship Co. v. Paul, Lim., 111 L. Charterer to Pay all "dues"—Ship to Pay all "port charges" — Custom of Port of Santos.]—A charterparty contained the following clause : "The charterer paying all dues and duties on the cargo, and the steamer all port charges, pilotages, &c., as customary," and also provided that on arrival at Santos the steamer should discharge on the quay. At Santos a dock company has authority to enforce a tariff, being entitled (inter alia) to make a charge "for the use of the quay for loading and discharging goods and any merchandise." The plaintiffs' vessel having been discharged on to the quay, the charterers' agents at the port of Santos charged against the ship in accounts rendered the particular charge for cargo so delivered. In an action by the shipowners to recover the amount deducted, —Held, that the charge was not a "due" on the cargo, but a port charge falling on the steamer. Societa Anonima Ungherese di Armamenti Marittimo v. Hamburg South American Steamship Co., 106 L. "Consignees to effect discharge of cargo steamer paying 1s. per ton"—Sale of Cargo by Consignee—"Cost of stevedoring to be paid by" Purchaser — Right to Sum Payable by Steamer.] — The appellant had chartered a steamer to load a cargo of coal for Sydney. The charterparty contained the following clause : "Consignees to effect the discharge of the cargo, strike or no strike, steamer paying 1*s.* per ton of 20 cwt." Before the ship arrived the appellant sold the cargo to the Government of New South Wales on the terms (inter alia), "The Government to guarantee to discharge the vessel at not less than 500 tons per day, strike or no strike. The cost of stevedoring to be paid by the Government" :—Held, that the Government were entitled to retain the 1*s.* per ton payable as against the appellant. White v. Williams, 82 L. J. P.C. 11; [1912] A.C. 814; 107 L. T. 99; 17 Com. Cas. 309; 28 T. L. R. 521—P.C.

"Six or seven consecutive voyages during 1910."]—The plaintiffs chartered a ship under a charterparty which contained the following terms : "This charter to remain in force for six or seven consecutive voyages (in charterer's option) during 1910 . . . Steamers have liberty to load homeward cargoes to U.K. or Continent. Steamers to have liberty to dry dock." On the ship's arrival at the loading port for the first voyage the charterers were unable to load her owing to a strike, and, although she arrived on January 3, there would have been no cargo available until January 11. The ship accordingly did not load at that port, but proceeded to South Wales, where she loaded a cargo, which was carried to Italy, whence she returned to load under her original charter. The consequence was that she did not get home from her sixth voyage until after January 6, 1911, when the charterers purported to exercise their option to load for seven voyages :—Held, that the words "during 1910" were words of description and protection for both parties, the one being only bound to load, and the other only bound to supply, the steamer during 1910. Pope v. Bavidge (10 Ex. 73) not followed. Dunford v. Compania Maritima Union, 104 L. Cargo when Signed for to be at Ship's Risk until Shipped on Board.] — A clause in a charterparty provided as follows : "The cargo to be ordered by the captain as required, and when signed for to be at ship's risk until shipped on board . . . but in all other respects, the act of God, perils of the sea . . . are always mutually excepted." The cargo, which consisted of sleepers, was brought alongside the vessel in rafts. A number of the sleepers were lost after being signed for on behalf of the shipowner and before they were shipped on board through perils enumerated in the exceptions :—Held, that the expression "at ship's risk" meant that the sleepers were at the absolute risk of the shipowner during the period between their being signed for and their being shipped on board, the excepted perils not applying to that period owing to their being prefaced by the words "but in all other respects." Dampskibsselskabet "Skjoldborg" v. Calder, 106 L. T. 263; 17 Com. Cas. 97; 12 Asp. M.C. 156—Bray, J.

War Risks—Contract to Insure—By whom to be Effected.]—On September 17, 1912, the defendants chartered a Dutch steamer from the plaintiffs under a five years' time charterparty containing the clause, "War risk, if any required, for charterers' account. It is understood and agreed that value for war risk at all times to be based on values stated in owners' annual policy." By further clauses the plaintiffs were to provide and pay for the ordinary insurance and nothing in the charterparty was to be construed as a demise of the steamer, and the owners were to remain responsible for navigation, insurance, crew, and all other matters, as when trading for their own account. The defendants did not insure the steamer against war risks, and on September 21, 1914, she was sunk at sea by a German cruiser when she was on a voyage under the charter from Portland, Oregon, with a cargo of wheat for Ireland. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants for failure to insure against war risks,—Held, that the words "war risks, if any required, for charterers' account" meant that the charterers were to bear the cost of insurance against war risks if such insurance was reasonably requisite, but the insurance was to be effected by the owners and not by the charterers, and therefore the plaintiffs' action failed. Holland Gulf Stoomvaart Maatschappij v. Watson, Munro & Co., 32 T. "Commandeering."] —The plaintiffs, who were coal merchants, chartered from the defendant a Greek steamer for the purpose of carrying coal, the charter providing that "Should steamer be commandeered by the Greek Government this charter shall be cancelled." When the steamer was at Marseilles, the Greek Government, in consequence of mobilisation, issued directions to all Greek steamers at Marseilles laden with coal to proceed immediately to the Piræus. The defendant thereupon gave notice to the plaintiffs that the steamer had been commandeered and that the charter had come to an end. Owing to a question of repairs the steamer did not leave Marseilles immediately, and she was ultimately released and never left Marseilles. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendant for a declaration that the charterparty remained valid and binding upon him,—Held, that in the circumstances the steamer had been "commandeered" within the meaning of that word in the charterparty, as the Greek Government had issued directions that she should make the voyage home for Government purposes, and therefore the charterparty was cancelled. Capel & Co. v. Souledi, 32 T. L. R. 59—Atkin, J.

"Penalty for non-performance of this agreement, proved damages not exceeding estimated amount of freight" — Penalty not Limitation of Liability — Right to Sue for Damages Actually Sustained.]—By a charterparty dated June 5, 1914, the defendants agreed to provide the plaintiffs with a ship for three consecutive voyages from Goole to Oporto, to carry cargoes of coal at a fixed rate of freight per ton, the first voyage to begin in January, 1915. Clause 15 was as follows: "Penalty for non-performance of this agreement, proved damages not exceeding the estimated amount of freight." In January, 1915, the defendants refused to carry out the charter, with the result that the plaintiff was only able to secure vessels for the second and third voyages, but at increased freights. The plaintiff sued the defendants for breach of contract, claiming as damages the amount of freight, which he would have had to pay for the first voyage if he had been in time to secure a vessel, and the amount of the excess freights over chartered freight which he had to pay for the second and third voyages, together with extra insurance and rail freight caused by the defendants' breach of contract: Held, that the clause was a penalty clause and not a limitation of liability, and that the plaintiff could effect to claim the actual damage sustained by him, although exceeding the amount fixed by the clause. Harrison v. Wright (13 East, 343) followed. Jureidini v. National British and Irish Millers Insurance Co. (84 L. Date Specified for Termination of Hire—Retention of Vessel beyond Date Specified—Time Essence of Contract.]—By the terms of a charterparty a vessel was chartered from May 15-31, 1912, until October 15-31, 1912, at the rate of 615*l.* per current month, "hire to continue from the time specified for terminating the charter until her re-delivery to owners (unless lost) at a port on east coast of United Kingdom between the 15th and 31st October, 1912." On October 18, 1912, the vessed was at West Hartlepool, and upon that day she was despatched by the charterers on a voyage from which, to the knowledge of the charterers, it was impossible that she could return in time to be re-delivered to the owners by October 31. She was in fact re-delivered on November 20. The current rate obtainable for the vessel on October 31 was 900*l.* per month, and the owner sought to recover from the charterers damages for twenty days' detention of the ship calculated at the difference between the current rate and the chartered rate for the period in question: —Held, that the clause in the charterparty set out above indicated an intention on the part of the parties to make the time specified in the charter for the re-delivery of the vessel of the essence of the contract, and that as she was not re-delivered by October 31, the charterers had committed a breach of contract for which they were liable in damages at the rate claimed. Watson Steamship Co. v. Merryweather, 108 L. Loss of Time through Deficiency of Men, Repairs, &c., Preventing Working of Vessel for more than Forty-eight Running Hours—Payment of Hire to Cease until Ship in Efficient State to Resume Service—Deduction of Hire during the First Forty-eight Hours.]—A clause in a charterparty provided that "In the event of loss of time through deficiency of men or stores, repairs, breakdown of machinery, pumps, pipes, or boilers (whether partial or otherwise), collision or stranding, or damage preventing the efficient working of the vessel for more than forty-eight running hours, the payment of hire shall cease until she again be in an efficient state to resume her service." Time was lost from causes mentioned in the above clause for more than forty-eight hours :—Held, that the charterers were entitled to a cesser of hire for the whole of the time so lost, and not merely for the excess of that time over the first forty-eight hours. Meade-King, Robinson & Co. v. Jacobs & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1133; [1915] 2 K.B. 640; 113 L. T. 298; 20 Com. Cas. 288; 31 T. L. R. 316—C.A.

Time Charter — "Mutual exemptions" — Strike.]—In a time charterparty it was provided that "the owners and charterers shall be mutually absolved from liability in carrying out this contract in so far as they may be hindered or prevented . . . through strikes of any kind." The charterers ordered the ship to a port at which they knew a strike was prevailing, and where she stayed for about two months unable to load coal. The appellants claimed exemption from hire during this period :—Held (Lord Shaw dissenting), that the hire was payable inasmuch as the exemption only applied where a party to the contract was prevented from performing his part of the contract, which in the charterers' case was simply to pay the hire. Held also (Lord Shaw concurring on this point), that the charterers were not so prevented, as they might have taken the ship to a port where there was no strike. Brown v. Turner, Brightman & Co., 81 L. Option, when Exercisable — Shipowner's Right to Call on Charterers to Exercise Option.]—Under an ordinary cancelling clause in a charterparty the shipowner cannot require the charterer to exercise his option whether he will load or not before the ship has arrived at the port of loading, although the ship may be manifestly behind time or although the date for arrival may be actually past. Moel Tryvan Steamship Co. v. Weir, 79 L. Strike Clause—Charter to be Null and Void if Stoppage Lasts more than Six Days—Termination of Strike before Expiration of Six Days—Effect of Strike Continuing beyond the Six Days.]—A steamer was chartered to carry a cargo of coal from the Penarth Docks to Buenos Aires. The charterparty provided that "any time lost through riots, strikes, lockouts, or any disputes between masters and men occasioning a stoppage of pitmen, trimmers, or other hands connected with the working of the delivery of the coal for which the steamer is stemmed . . . or any cause beyond the control of the charterers not to be computed as part of the loading time. . . . In the event of any stoppage or stoppages arising from any of these causes continuing for the period of six running days from the time of the vessel being ready to load this charter shall become null and void." The steamer was ready to load in Penarth Dock on April 4, 1912, at 1 P.M. At that time the great national strike of colliers of 1912 was in full force, so that no coal arrived at Penarth Dock for shipment. The strike came to an end on April 9, but as certain repairing and clearing-up work had first to be done at the collieries as a consequence of the strike no coal arrived at Penarth Docks for shipment by the steamer until the morning of April 11, more than six days after she was ready to load. The charterers claimed the right to cancel the charter as the stoppage had continued for six running days from the time the vessel was ready to load :—Held, that the charterers were entitled to cancel the charter, as the stoppage was a stoppage due to the strike, notwithstanding that it had continued two days beyond the time at which the strike itself had come to an end. Gordon Steamship Co. v. Moxey, 108 L. Excepted Perils—Restraint of Princes—Detention of Greek Ship in Black Sea by Greco-Turkish War — Frustration of Adventure — Right of Charterers to Refuse to Load.]—The Greek steamer Andriana belonging to the plaintiff, was chartered by the defendants to proceed to a port in the sea of Azoff and there load a cargo of grain for the United Kingdom. Arrests and restraints of princes, rulers, and people were excepted by the charterparty. The Andriana arrived at Temriuk, her loading port, on October 1, 1912, and received some cargo. In view of the imminent probability of war the Turkish Government arrested all Greek vessels arriving in the Dardanelles after September 30, 1912, and war was declared between Greece and Turkey on October 18. The charterers on October 7 declined to continue loading as the ship was not in a position to carry out the charter, and on October 21 they purported to cancel the charter, but the plaintiff refused to accept that notice. The Andriana's lay days did not expire till October 22. The Turkish Government allowed laden Greek vessels to pass through the Dardanelles from October 16 to October 24, and unexpectedly they gave permission a second time for laden Greek vessels to pass through from November 12 to 19. As the Andriana, however, was not loaded she was unable to take advantage of that permission, and she was detained in the Black Sea till the close of the war. The plaintiff sued the defendants for breach of charterparty in not loading, and claimed damages for the detention of the ship during that period :—Held, that, inasmuch as on October 21, when the defendants purported to cancel the contract, an excepted peril—namely, restraint of princes—prevented the charter from being carried out by the vessel proceeding on her voyage, which restraint was likely to continue so long as to destroy the object of the commercial adventure, the defendants had not committed a breach of charterparty in not loading a cargo in the ship. The fact that unexpectedly the restraint was removed for a short time did not impose upon the defendants the duty of foreseeing that unexpected event and proceeding in the performance of an adventure which seemed hopelessly destroyed. The defendants were entitled to act upon reasonable commercial probabilities at the time they had to decide what to do. Embiricos v. Reid & Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 1348; [1914] 3 K.B. 45; 111 L. Liability of Shipowner for "damage to cargo occasioned . . . by improper opening of valves"—Valve Properly Opened, but Improperly Left Open.]—The plaintiffs chartered the defendants' steamship for the carriage of a cargo of grain from Sulina to London. The charterparty and bill of lading contained a clause exempting the defendants from liability for damage to the plaintiffs' cargo arising from ". . . perils, dangers and accidents of the sea or other waters of what nature and kind soever; . . . and all other accidents of navigation, and all losses and damages caused thereby . . . even when occasioned by negligence, default or error in judgment of the pilot, master, mariners or other servants of the shipowners." The clause also provided that "nothing herein contained shall exempt the shipowner from liability to pay for damage to cargo occasioned . . . by improper opening of valves, sluices and ports, or by causes other than those above excepted . . ." Whilst the defendants' steamship was lying at her moorings, loading the plaintiffs' cargo of grain under the charterparty and bill of lading, the circulating pump discharge valve in the side of the ship was properly opened by the defendants' engineers in order to prevent water freezing in the pipes. The engineers also opened the condenser doors for the purpose of draining water out of the pipes. The engineers, however, negligently omitted to close the condenser doors and the discharge valve when, owing to the loading, the discharge valve came near the water line. As the result, a quantity of sea water entered the ship and damaged the cargo. In an action for the damage caused thereby,—Held, that the words "damage to cargo occasioned . . . by the improper opening of valves," being in a commercial document, must be read in a business sense, and that so read they included the damage to cargo occasioned by the valve being improperly left open, and that therefore the defendants were liable. Mendl v. Ropner, 82 L. Restraint of Princes—Detention of Greek Ship in Black Sea by Greco-Turkish War—Frustration of Adventure—Right of Charterers to Refuse to Load.]—The Greek steamer Andriana, belonging to the plaintiff, was chartered by the defendants to proceed to a port in the sea of Azoff and there load a cargo of grain for the United Kingdom. Arrests and restraints of princes, rules, and people were excepted by the charterparty. The Andriana arrived at Temriuk, her loading port, on October 1, 1912, and received some cargo. In view of the imminent probability of war the Turkish Government arrested all Greek vessels arriving in the Dardanelles after September 30, 1912, and war was declared between Greece and Turkey on October 18. The charterers on October 7 declined to continue loading as the ship was not in a position to carry out the charter, and on October 21 they purported to cancel the charter, but the plaintiff refused to accept that notice. The Andriana's lay days did not expire till October 22. The Turkish Government allowed laden Greek vessels to pass through the Dardanelles from October 16 to October 24, and unexpectedly they gave permission a second time for laden Greek vessels to pass through from November 12 to 19. As the Andriana, however, was not loaded she was unable to take advantage of that permission, and she was detained in the Black Sea till the close of the war.
